That a lien may be fixed by the levy of an execution on lands which have been fraudulently conveyed by a debtor prior to the rendition of judgment against him, and that such lien may be made productive by a sale of the property under the writ without seeking the aid of chancery, as is held by some authorities (Smith v. Osgood, 46 N. H. 178; Burnett v. Handley, 8 Ala. 685; 1 Freeman, Executions, § 207), does not at all conflict with the idea that there is no statutory judgment lien on such property. We must discriminate properly between the statutory judgment lien and the lien acquired by virtue of an execution issued under a general judgment. As in the numerous cases cited by Mr. Freeman in note 1 to § 136 of his work on Executions, Mr. Herman, in his work on Executions, at page 265, says: "Where the judgment is a lien on lands, there can be no independent lien acquired by the issue of an execution. But where land is seized by virtue of a judgment which is no lien, the execution becomes a lien." As was said by the supreme court of Pennsylvania: "A lien is, indeed, a necessary and inseparable incident of seizure in execution, except where the execution is merely instrumental in enforcing a prior and superior lien by judgment. In such case it never was supposed by the legislature or the profession that a judgment and an execution on it had each a distinct and independent lien." Davis v. Ehrman, 30 Pa. 256. We maintain that there is no statutory judgment lien on lands which have been fraudulently conveyed before the rendition of judgment, the debtor no longer owning or being possessed or seised of such property, either in law or equity. Whether liens may be acquired by executions on judgments against such debtors, and in various other ways, it does not boot us here to discuss. We do not hesitate, however, to say that the method of attacking a fraudulent conveyance of land by levying an execution on same, and then proceeding to sell same under the writ, leaving the purchaser to contest the validity of the conveyance in an action of ejectment against the fraudulent vendee, is not to be encouraged. It is circuitous and cumbersome, and at last, leaves a cloud upon the record title, for a court of law can never cancel and set aside a fraudulent conveyance. As was held by this court in Sale v. McLean, 29 Ark. 612, quoting from syllabus: "Where a judgment creditor seeks to subject land which the debtor has conveyed fraudulently, the proper practice is to exhaust the process of the court.

and apply to a court of equity for aid before a sale." We are not without abundant and excellent authority to support the construction for which we contend. Section 13 of 1 & 2 Vict. chap. 110, provides, in effect, that "a judgment against any person shall operate as a charge upon all lands . . . of or to which such person shall, at the time of entering up such judgment, or at any time afterwards, be seised, possessed, or entitled for any estate or interest whatever at law or in equity," etc. The statute under consideration was modeled after this. In Beavan v. Oxford, 6 De G. M. & G. 492, at page 514, Lord Chancellor Cranworth says: "The question which was reserved for consideration in this case relates to the priority of three judgment creditors of the late Lord Oxford. . . . and the point is whether, by virtue of the statute of Elizabeth alone, or by virtue of it combined with the statutes of the present queen [Victoria], these judgment creditors have or have not a right against the parties claiming under a voluntary settlement executed by Lord Oxford in the year 1838." After holding that a judgment creditor is not a purchaser under the statute of 27 Eliz. concerning fraudulent conveyances, and not entitled to protection as such against a prior voluntary conveyance, the lord chancellor proceeds as follows: "Now, what did the legislature mean to do by that enactment? In the first place they meant to make the judgment directly operate as a charge; but a charge on what? I apprehend that there was no principle inducing them to mean, and that the words do not represent them as having meant, to give the judgment creditor any right except against his debtor; that is, the judgment was to have the effect of a charge on that which was the property of the debtor. That, I think, is manifest from the words used. The judgment is to operate on land of which the debtor is seised," etc. Other concurring opinions were delivered by the lord justices. The case is a very instructive one, and is an early and able vindication of the exact construction for which we here contend. See also Eyre v. M'Dowell, 9 H. L. Cas. 619. In Dolphin v. Ayloard, L. R. 4 H. L. 486, it is held that, "where a voluntary settlement has been made, subsequent judgment creditors of the settlor cannot acquire rights in derogation of it, which the settlor himself would not have possessed." At page 500 the lord chancellor said: "And it is quite settled that a judgment creditor can take no interest whatever, either legal or equitable, beyond what he acquires from the debtor,—such an interest in fact, as the debtor himself could give, and no other." Mr. Freeman, in the fourth edition of his work on Judgments, which is later than the second edition of his work on Executions, which he cites, says: "In some of the states a judgment is a lien against lands fraudulently conveyed for all purposes, and cannot be displaced in favor of any junior judgment or other lien, the holder of which first proceeds, either at law or in equity, to seek satisfaction out of the property so conveyed." "But," he continues, "we think the better rule is that one who has obtained judgment, and has not, by levy or otherwise, taken any further steps to obtain satisfaction out of property fraudulently transferred, has no lien thereon. . . . On the contrary, the creditor who first proceeds in equity to reach property fraudulently transferred thereby obtains a right to priority, to which the claims of other judgment creditors, whether prior or subsequent must yield precedence." 2 Freeman, Judgm. p. 640, § 350. In Re Estes, 3 Fed. Rep. 134, Judge Deady, after a most satisfactory review of authorities pro and con sums up the whole matter as follows: "In my own opinion, the lien of a judgment which is limited by law to the property of or belonging to the judgment debtor at the time of the docketing does not, nor cannot without doing violence to this language, be held to extend to property previously conveyed by the debtor to another by deed valid and binding between the parties. A conveyance in fraud of creditors, although declared by the statute to be void as to them, is, nevertheless, valid as between the parties and their representatives, and passes all the estate of the grantor to the grantee; and a bona fide purchaser from such grantee takes such estate, even against the creditors of the fraudulent grantor, purged of the anterior fraud that affected the title. . . . Such a conveyance is not, as has been sometimes supposed, 'utterly void,' but is only so in a qualified sense. Practically, it is only voidable, and that at the instance of creditors proceeding in the mode prescribed by law, and even then not as against a bona fide purchaser." See Re Estes, 6 Sawy. 459, 3 Fed. Rep. 134. Other authorities are Rapplee v. International Bank, 93 Ill. 396; Boyle v. Maroney, 73 Iowa, 70, 35 N. W. 145; Howland v. Knox, 59 Iowa, 46, 12 N. W. 777; Bridgman v. McKissick, 15 Iowa, 260; Black, Judgm. § 455; Smith v. Lind, 20 Ill. 27.

The learned counsel for appellant says that "appellant had a prior and paramount lien over appellee on all lands acquired by Brown before the rendition of appellee's judgments, although the title was fraudulently taken in the name of other persons," and he contends that this doctrine "is established by numerous cases in this court, beginning with Ringgold v. Waggoner, 14 Ark. 69, and ending with Stix v. Chaytor, 53 Ark. 116, 17 S. W. 707." With due deference, we think counsel are mistaken both as to what the law is and what we have decided. Brown, as we have endeavored to show, no longer had any interest, either legal or equitable, in lands, after he, as the owner in fee, had fraudulently conveyed them. Nor did he have any equity in lands purchased by him, and the legal title taken in the name of another, in order to defraud creditors. This was, in effect, the same as though the legal title had first been taken in the name of the debtor, and thereafter he had transferred same to another, to defraud creditors. Hence all we have said applies to such conveyances. But those authorities which hold that a judgment is a lien on the land which the debtor has previously conveyed in fraud of creditors, upon the theory that such conveyance is void, and is to be treated as though it never had been made, leaving the legal title still in the debtor, are not applicable to conveyances where the legal title never has been in the debtor; for, says Mr. Freeman: "If the transfer were treated as void, the title would remain in the person of whom the purchase was made; and this would be of no advantage to the creditors. The transfer must, therefore, be treated as valid, and as transmitting the legal title to the person named in the deed. This legal title cannot be reached by the levy of an execution against the debtor, because he has never owned it. The creditors must, therefore, resort to equity, except in a few states, where statutes have been enacted to enable them to reach it at law." 1 Freeman, Executions, p. 341, § 136. See also Smith, Eq. Rem. Cred. § 157, note 31, and numerous cases cited. The only theory for holding, under the statute, that a judgment is a lien upon lands to which the debtor never held the legal title, but which were purchased by him, and the title taken in the name of another, to defraud creditors is that of resulting trusts. But this theory is erroneous, for where a conveyance is made to defraud creditors a resulting trust never arises in favor of the fraudulent debtor. He has no interest thereafter that can be asserted either in law or equity. Heinz v. White, 105 Ala. 670, 17 So. 185; Proseus v. McIntyre, 5 Barb. 425; Vanzant v. Davies, 6 Ohio St. 52; Cutler v. Tuttle, 19 N. J. Eq. 549; Glidewell v. Spaugh, 26 Ind. 319. Where property is conveyed without consideration, with a view of defrauding creditors, no trust will result. 1 Beach, Trusts & Trustees, § 125; 1 Beach, Modern Eq. Jur. § 217; 1 Perry, Tr. § 151; Miller v. Davis, 50 Mo. 572; Baldwin v. Campfield, 8 N. J. Eq. 891; 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 14. As to our own decisions, while there are expressions in some of the cases which seem to support the contention of appellant, we cannot find that the question we have here, involving the priorities of judgment creditors, has ever been passed upon. In Ringgold v. Waggoner, 14 Ark. 69, Ringgold filed his complaint in chancery to set aside certain alleged fraudulent conveyances from John W. Waggoner to his brother, Edmond P., and from Edmond P. to one Burr. The complaint alleged, in substance, that Ringgold had sued John W. Waggoner at law for debt; that while this suit was pending, and before judgment, John W. sold to Edmond P. the land in controversy, and that Edmond P. in turn sold to Burr, and that all these conveyances were for the purpose of defrauding Ringgold; that Burr had been notified, before getting his deed from Edmond P., that he (Ringgold) had obtained judgment against John W. Waggoner, which was a lien upon the land in question, by reason of the fraudulent conveyance from John W. to Edmond P., and that he intended to have the land sold under his judgment as the property of John W.; that Burr in other ways had notice that the conveyance from John W. to Edmond P. was fraudulent; that, notwithstanding this notice, Burr had colluded with John W. and Edmond P. to enable John W. to defraud his creditors; that, the judgment at law in favor of Ringgold remaining unsatisfied, he had execution issued and levied upon the land as the property of John W. Waggoner, and same was sold under such execution, and he (Ringgold) became the purchaser thereof; and that one Hooper, acting under the authority of Burr, was then in possession. The prayer was for a cancellation of all the conveyances, and for possession, etc. Burr answered that he was an innocent purchaser. The court, discussing the character of the conveyance from John W. to Edmond P., said it, "as against the complainant, was void, and the judgment subsequently obtained by him became a lien upon the land as the property and estate of the fraudulent grantor; and the complainant, by his purchase of the land under execution, acquired a valid title to it as against the parties to the fraudulent conveyance." Continuing. Chief Justice Watkins said: "The only question in the case is whether the defendant, Burr, is entitled to be protected as an innocent purchaser;" and that was, indeed, true, for, the complaint being in equity to set aside fraudulent conveyances, it was not at all necessary for the decision of the case that the court should decide that complainant's judgment was a lien on the land, nor that he acquired a valid title, as against the parties to the fraudulent conveyance, by his purchase under execution. That was all true, even if the judgment was not a statutory lien. The creditor had an equitable lien. Stow v. Chaytor, 55 Ark. 116. If S. W. 707, was also a suit in chancery by a judgment creditor to set aside certain conveyances alleged to be fraudulent. So much of the case as is pertinent here relates to a purchase of land by Chaytor, he paying the purchase money, and having the lands conveyed to his wife, in order to defraud creditors. Speaking of this phase of the case, Judge Mansfield, for the court, said: "The purchase in the name of his wife can stand on no better footing, for the law regards it as, in effect, a conveyance from himself. . . . But where land is thus purchased by a husband and conveyed to his wife in fraud of his creditors, the latter would not be benefited by treating the conveyance to her as void, since the title would then remain in the grantor. And equity will therefore treat the wife in such case as a trustee for the benefit of the husband's creditors. . . . Applying this doctrine to the present case, an estate in the lands purchased of Peazel resulted to Chaytor on the execution of the deed to his wife. The estate which he thus acquired was subject to sale on execution under our statute, and the purchaser would have taken, not only the beneficial interest in the lands, but also the legal title. . . . It follows, necessarily, we think, . . . that the lands in controversy, while held by Mrs. Chaytor, were subject to a lien existing by virtue of the plaintiff's judgment. . . . Such a lien could not, however, be asserted against 'bona fide purchasers or encumbrancers.'" Here again it will be seen that it was wholly unnecessary to decide that an estate in the lands resulted to Chaytor on the execution of the deed to his wife, and that such estate was subject to execution under our statute, and that the purchaser thereunder acquired the legal title, and that the lands while held by Mrs. Chaytor were subject to a lien existing by virtue of plaintiff's judgment. These were not, in fact, germane to the issue, the only question before the court being, Was the conveyance, as between the creditor and his debtor, fraudulent, and, if so, still were certain parties innocent purchasers? If the court meant by these dicta to hold, where a purchase of land is made by a debtor, and the conveyance is made to his wife, at his instance, in order to defraud creditors, that an estate results to the debtor upon the execution of the deed to his wife, and that a judgment rendered at law after such conveyance is a statutory lien upon such land, then we do not hesitate to declare all such dicta as unsound, and we will not follow them. Where a fraudulent conveyance is set aside by creditors, and the land is thereafter sold to satisfy their claims, should there be any residue after paying their debts, such residue does not go to the debtor, but to his fraudulent vendee. This shows the debtor has no estate in the land upon such conveyance. Bump, Fraud. Conv. § 450, and authorities cited. We can easily see, as Judge Mansfield says, how the wife or the fraudulent vendee is held as a trustee for the creditors. But how she could be a trustee, so as to vest any estate, legal or equitable, in the debtor, is an altogether different matter. Probably both of these learned judges after all only had in view the equity which creditors have by proper proceedings to subject land which has been fraudulently conveyed to the payment of their debts. That creditors have such an equity is unquestioned, but they do not have it by virtue of the statute, but independent of it. Says Mr. Pomeroy: "In carrying out the general principle of trusts for the purpose of working ultimate justice and reaching property where the legal title has been parted with and is beyond the scope of legal process, a constructive trust is said to arise in favor of judgment creditors with respect to the property of their debtors, which has been transferred with the intent to defraud the creditors of their rights, or of which the legal title is vested in third persons with a like fraudulent intent, or which is of such a nature that it cannot be taken by execution upon judgments in legal actions." Continuing, in the note, he says: "The trust is in reality one in name alone. The creditor's right to reach the debtor's property is in no true sense an interest in that property; it is, at most only an equitable lien on the property." 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1057. Of the other cases cited,—McNeill v. Carter, 57 Ark. 579, 22 S. W. 94; Cohn v. Hoffman, 50 Ark. 108, 6 S. W. 511, and Wormser v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 49 Ark. 117, 4 S. W. 198,—not only is the question of priorities not involved, but in each of these there might be said to be some equity remaining in the judgment debtor, bringing the case within the express terms of the statute. Hershy v. Latham, 46 Ark. 542, and Apperson v. Ford, 23 Ark. 746, have no bearing that we can see, in favor of appellant's contention. After a careful analysis and comparison of our own cases and all the other authorities at our command, we are of the opinion that judgment creditors have no lien, by virtue of the statute, upon lands which have been fraudulently conveyed prior to the rendition of their judgments, and that at least the proper, if not the only, remedy for them in such cases is to go into equity to uncover such conveyances, and that the creditor who exercises superior diligence in that regard by first bringing his suit and proceeding to uncover such assets is entitled to the proceeds. This seems to us to be eminently just, for intrinsically one creditor's judgment, fairly obtained, and based on a valid claim, is as meritorious as another's. There is no merit in the mere time of rendition, for that depends often only upon the time of maturity of the debt. Besides, the one first in time is not prevented from being first also in diligence.

The chancellor held that appellee was entitled to the proceeds of the sale of the lands fraudulently conveyed prior to the rendition of the judgment of either party, but for different reasons than those we announce. In the view we have taken, it becomes unnecessary to discuss the reasons of the chancellor. The proceeds of the lands which were fraudulently conveyed after the rendition of the judgments he also gave to appellee, because of its superior diligence in first bringing its suit to uncover same. In this, we think, he was entirely correct, for the reason stated, and because in other respects the appellee showed far greater diligence.

Finding no reversible error, the decree of the Pulaski Chancery Court is affirmed.

Battle and Riddick, JJ., dissent.

COLORADO SUPREME COURT.

J. E. DAVIDSON et al., Appts.,

v.

I. W. JENNINGS et al.

(.....Colo.....)

1. An appeal by the owners of the property from a decision establishing a mechanic's lien can be maintained without joining other defendants, under Mills's Anno. Stat. § 1085, which provides that appeals may be taken by any person aggrieved.
2. The allowance of an attorney's fee, in addition to costs that would otherwise be allowed by law, to successful lien claimants, in pursuance of Sess. Laws 1893, chap. 117, p. 325, § 18, which provides for such allowance only to plaintiffs, is in violation of Bill of Rights, § 6, providing that courts of justice shall be open to every person, and that right and justice shall be administered without sale, denial, or delay.
3. The mere silence of a person owning a one-fourth interest in a mine, with respect to his lack of interest in a contract for work and materials made by lessees of the mine, will not estop him from denying that his interest is subject to a lien for such work and materials, although, as an employee of the lessees, he may have given directions as to the performance of such contract, where the nature of the interests of all parties clearly appeared upon the records.
4. An estoppel to deny liability under a contract made by others cannot be proved under a pleading which merely avers the execution of a contract.

(February 5, 1900.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Gunnison County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover for materials and labor furnished in working a mine and to establish a lien therefor. Reversed.

Statement by Goddard, J.:

This action was originally brought in the county court of Gunnison county by the appellees against the appellants and S. B. Outcalt, J. T. Clayton, and R. D. Smith, to recover against Outcalt, Clayton, and Smith for goods, wares, and merchandise furnished and labor performed in working the Vulcan mine, situate in Gunnison county, Colorado, and to establish and enforce a lien therefor against said mine. Judgments for the several amounts claimed were recovered in the county court against Smith, Outcalt, and Clayton, and they were declared to be liens against an undivided one-fourth interest in the mine. Davidson and Himebaugh, who held the title to this interest, appealed from that portion of the judgment which subjected said interest to the liens of plaintiffs, to the district court of Gunnison county. Motion to dismiss the appeal was denied, and a trial de novo had. The material

NOTE.—As to estoppel by silence when there is no duty to speak, see Knoedler v. Glaeuzer (C. C. A. 2d C.) 20 L. R. A. 733.
48 L. R. A.

facts disclosed by the evidence introduced are, in brief, as follows: On March 18, 1895, the then owners of the Vulcan mine leased the same, with an option to purchase, to one Frank Winters, until December 1, 1895, which lease was recorded in the office of the clerk and recorder of Gunnison county. On April 11, 1895, the lease was extended until April 1, 1896. On this date Winters assigned the same to one Spinney, and later Spinney assigned a one-half interest therein to R. D. Smith. Subsequently Outcalt acquired the other half, and about the middle of November, 1895, he and Smith commenced working the mine thereunder, and continued to work until about the 1st of March, 1896. Smith and Outcalt carried on their operations under the name Vulcan Mining Company or Vulcan Mine. Clayton was employed by them as bookkeeper, in which capacity he was acting during the times the goods were furnished and labor performed for which suit was brought; and in this capacity he issued orders upon which some of the merchandise was furnished, to which he signed the name of the company, adding to such signature, "by C." Also, at times during this period Clayton was at the mine, and, in the absence of Smith and Outcalt, gave directions in regard to the work and operations thereof. On April 6, 1895, he acquired the fee-simple title to an undivided one-fourth interest, and during the time the labor was performed and the materials furnished said interest stood of record in his name. He sold and conveyed this interest to Himebaugh and Davidson on March 2, 1896. The court below, inter alia, found that during the time the labor was performed and materials furnished "the record did not disclose that defendants Smith and Outcalt had any interest in said property; that no agreement existed between said defendants Clayton, Outcalt, and Smith for the working and development of said property for their joint benefit, and, as a matter of fact, said property was being operated for the benefit of Smith and Outcalt alone; that none of the parties performing labor or furnishing materials, on whose account it is sought to enforce a lien in this action against said property, had actual notice, during the period said labor was being performed and said materials furnished, for whose benefit or on whose account said mine was being worked or operated,"—and found, as a conclusion of law, that Clayton, by failing to notify the lien claimants or their assignors that he was not interested in the working and development of the mine, under the circumstances, was estopped from claiming that such persons have no lien against his interest, and that, as against his interest, a lien attached for the work performed and materials furnished, and, as Himebaugh and Davidson purchased this interest within the period in which the parties claiming liens might file their lien statement, they took such interest subject to said liens, and entered a decree establishing a lien on the undivided one-fourth interest in favor of the lien claimants, in the respective amounts found due them, together with attorney's fees and costs. To reverse this decree, Davidson and Himebaugh bring the case here on appeal.

Messrs. Brown & Nourse, Wolcott & Vail, and W. W. Field for appellants.

Mr. Sprigg Shackelford, for appellees:

There is no rule which requires the grounds of estoppel to be pleaded where there has been no opportunity to set up the plea.

Bigelow, Estoppel, 4th ed. pp. 668, 689, 5th ed. pp. 698, 699; Wood v. Jackson ex dem. Genet, 8 Wend. 9, 22 Am. Dec. 603; Henderson v. Keutzer, 56 Neb. 460, 76 N. W. 881; Isaacs v. Clark, 12 Vt. 692, 36 Am. Dec. 372; Donnelly v. San Francisco Bridge Co. 117 Cal. 417, 49 Pac. 559; Blood v. La Serena Land & Water Co. 113 Cal. 221, 45 Pac. 252; Goetz v. Goldbaum (Cal.) 37 Pac. 646; Churchill v. Baumann, 95 Cal. 541, 30 Pac. 770.

Goddard, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. Appellees assign cross error upon the overruling of their motion by the district court to dismiss the appeal to that court from the county court. The motion was based upon the ground that the appeal was taken by Davidson and Himebaugh alone, and from that part of the decree only that established the lien; the contention being that an appeal from the county to the district court can be taken only by the united action and concurrence of all the defendants to the suit in the county court. We do not think that this position is tenable. Section 1035. Mills's Anno. Stat. inter alia, provides: "Appeals may be taken to the district court of the same county, from all final judgments and decrees of the county court, . . . by any person aggrieved by any such final judgment or decree," etc. It will be seen that this statute provides that an appeal may be taken by any person aggrieved. Davidson and Himebaugh were affected by the judgment and decree only in so far as it established a lien against their property, and were not concerned with, or directly affected by, that portion which adjudged a personal liability against Smith, Outcalt, and Clayton. If it should be held that, as a condition to their right to have so much of the controversy as affected their rights tried de novo in the district court, it was essential that all the defendants in the county court should join in the appeal, or that, in case of the refusal of any to join, it was incumbent upon Davidson and Himebaugh to appeal the entire case, thereby necessitating their giving an appeal bond to answer for the personal judgment, it is manifest that they would, in the one event, have been deprived of their right to an appeal, and, in the other, they would have reaped no benefit from the submission of their case to the district court, even if successful in defeating the lien. The appeal, as taken, in no way disturbed the personal judgment against Smith, Outcalt, and Clayton, which determined their liability; nor was there any occasion for the district court, upon the trial of the question as to whether or not a lien existed against the property of appellants, to consider the personal liability of those parties. The court was therefore correct in so deciding, and refusing to dismiss the appeal.

2. Counsel for appellants contend that the judgment and decree are erroneous, in that the lien decreed against the property of appellants includes in addition to the principal and interest of the debt, and the usual costs, the allowance of attorney's fees to the respective lien claimants. These allowances were made in pursuance of § 18, chap. 117, p. 325, Sess. Laws 1893, which reads as follows: "In all suits for the foreclosure of liens provided for in this act in which the plaintiff shall obtain a judgment and decree of foreclosure against the property described in said lien there shall be taxed as costs, in addition to the costs already provided for in such cases, a reasonable sum as an attorney fee to be fixed by the court at the time of rendering such judgment and decree." It will be seen that this section imposes a penalty upon the defendant for exercising, in this class of cases, the common right of making a defense, which is accorded to every other litigant in the courts, by subjecting him to the payment of the plaintiff's attorney's fees if he is successful, without giving him (the defendant) a reciprocal right if he is victorious. As furnishing support for this character of legislation, we are referred to the following cases, wherein statutes allowing an attorney's fee to plaintiff in actions against railroad companies for the killing of stock have been held to be constitutional: Peoria, D. & E. R. Co. v. Dugan, 100 Ill. 537, 50 Am. Rep. 619; Kansas P. R. Co. v. Mower, 16 Kan. 573; Perkins v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 103 Mo. 52, 11 L. R. A. 426, 15 S. W. 320; Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Dey, 82 Iowa, 312, 12 L. R. A. 436, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 584, 48 N. W. 98. An examination of these cases discloses that the statutes there under consideration required the railroad company to fence its right of way, and provided penalties for the nonperformance of this statutory duty, —among them, an attorney's fee,— but no such reason underlies the legislation in question. The attorney's fee allowed by the foregoing provisions of our statute is not in the nature of a penalty for the violation of any statutory duty, but a punishment for the failure to pay the claim of the lienor, and cannot be sustained upon the principle announced in those cases. Its validity, therefore, depends upon whether it violates any provision of our Constitution. Section 6 of our Bill of Rights enacts: "The courts of justice shall be open to every person, and a speedy remedy afforded for every injury to person, property, or character; and that right and justice should be administered without sale, denial, or delay." In Durkee v. Janesville, 28 Wis. 464, 9 Am. Rep. 500, an act that exempted the city of Janesville from the payment of costs in any action brought against it to set aside any assessment or tax deed, or to prevent the collection of taxes in said city, was held to conflict with § 9, art. 1, of the Constitution of Wisconsin, which was substantially like the foregoing section of our bill of rights. Chief Justice Dixon, in discussing the construction and effect to be given to that provision, said: "It is obvious there can be no certain remedy in the laws, where the legislature may prescribe one rule for one suitor or class of suitors in the courts, and another for all others under like circumstances, or may discriminate between parties to the same suit, giving one most unjust pecuniary advantage over the other. Parties thus discriminated against would not obtain justice freely, and without being obliged to purchase it. To the extent of such discrimination, they would be obliged to buy justice and pay for it, thus making it a matter of purchase to those who could afford to pay, contrary to the letter and spirit of this provision. Certainty of remedy implies uniformity of remedy and equality of rights and privileges in all things respecting it, which can only be obtained by general laws, equally binding upon every member of the community. The language denotes that there can be but one remedy for all similar cases, which must operate upon all persons or parties alike, and be equally free and favorable to all." In South & North Ala. R. Co. v. Morris, 65 Ala. 193, a statute which imposed upon an unsuccessful appellant a reasonable attorney fee incurred by reason of taking an appeal from a decision rendered by a justice of the peace in a suit against railroad companies for damages to live stock, notwithstanding it gave the same right to both parties, was held to be in conflict with the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and § 14 of their Bill of Rights, which is identical with § 6 of ours. It is there said: "The clear legal effect of these provisions is to place all persons, natural and corporate, as near as practicable, upon a basis of equality in the enforcement and defense of their rights in courts of justice in this state, except so far as may be otherwise provided in the Constitution. This right, though subject to legislative regulation, cannot be impaired or destroyed under the guise or device of being regulated. Justice cannot be sold or denied by the exaction of a pecuniary consideration for its enjoyment from one, when it is given freely and open-handed to another, without money and without price. Nor can it be permitted that litigants shall be debarred from the free exercise of this constitutional right, by the imposition of arbitrary, unjust, and odious discriminations, perpetrated under color of establishing peculiar rules for a particular occupation. Unequal, partial, and discriminatory legislation, which secures this right to some favored class or classes, and denies it to others, who are thus excluded L. R. A.

ed from that equal protection designed to be secured by the general law of the land, is in clear and manifest opposition to the letter and spirit of the foregoing constitutional provisions." In Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Moss, 60 Miss. 641, a similar statute was adjudged unconstitutional, the court saying: "The right of appeal cannot be fettered and clogged with reference to the parties litigant, or the attitude they occupy as plaintiff or defendant. All litigants, whether plaintiff or defendant, should be regarded with equal favor by the law, and before the tribunals for administering it, and should have the same right to appeal with others similarly situated. All must have the equal protection of the law and its instrumentalities. The same rule must exist for all in the same circumstances." In Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255, an act of the legislature of Texas which provided that any person having a valid, bona fide claim for personal services or for damages, overcharges on freight, or claims for stock killed or injured by the trains of any railway company, that did not exceed $50, might present the same for payment by filing it with the station agent of such corporation in any county where suit might be instituted, and if, after the expiration of thirty days after such presentation, such claim had not been paid or satisfied, he might immediately institute suit thereon in the proper court, and if he should obtain judgment for the full amount of his claim, he should be entitled to recover the amount of such claim and all costs, and in addition thereto a reasonable attorney's fee, not to exceed $10, to be assessed or awarded by the court or jury trying the issue, was held to be unconstitutional. Mr. Justice Brewer, who delivered the opinion of the court, said: "The act singles out a certain class of debtors and punishes them, when for like delinquencies it punishes no others. They are not treated as other debtors, or equally with other debtors. They cannot appeal to the courts as other litigants under like conditions, and with like protection. If litigation terminates adversely to them, they are mulcted in the attorney's fees of the successful plaintiff; if it terminates in their favor, they recover no attorney's fees. It is no sufficient answer to say that they are punished only when adjudged to be in the wrong. They do not enter the courts upon equal terms. They must pay attorney's fees if wrong; they do not recover any if right; while their adversaries recover if right, and pay nothing if wrong. In the suits, therefore, to which they are parties, they are discriminated against, and are not treated as others. They do not stand equal before the law. They do not receive its equal protection. All this is obvious from a mere inspection of the statute." And, after a thorough and exhaustive review of all the cases bearing upon the subject, he held the act to be unconstitutional because it operated to deprive the railway companies of property without due process of law, and denied to them the equal protection of the law, in that it singled them out, of all citizens and corporations, and required them to pay, in certain cases, attorney's fees to parties successfully suing them, while it gave to them no like or corresponding benefit. To the same effect are Jolliffe v. Brown, 14 Wash. 155, 44 Pac. 149; Hocking Valley Coal Co. v. Rosser, 53 Ohio St. 12, 29 L. R. A. 386, 41 N. E. 263; State v. Fire Creek Coal & C. Co. 33 W. Va. 188, 6 L. R. A. 359, 10 S. E. 288, and others that might be cited.

In but few of the states are statutes allowing attorney's fees in this class of cases to be found. In California such legislation has been upheld by the supreme court, but in none of the cases has its constitutionality been presented, discussed, or determined. In the following cases its constitutionality was directly challenged and passed upon. In Grand Rapids Chair Co. v. Runnels, 77 Mich. 104, 43 N. W. 1006, a statute which allowed $5 attorney's fees as part of plaintiff's costs in a log-lien suit was held to be illegal and unauthorized, for the reasons stated in Wilder v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 70 Mich. 382, 38 N. W. 289; Schut v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 70 Mich. 433, 38 N. W. 291; Lafferty v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 71 Mich. 35, 38 N. W. 660. In Wilder v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 70 Mich. 382, 38 N. W. 289, the court, in discussing the question, says: "This inequality and injustice cannot be sustained upon any principle known to the law. It is repugnant to our form of government, and out of harmony with the genius of our free institutions. The legislature cannot give to one party in litigation such privileges as will arm him with special and important pecuniary advantages over his antagonist." In Randolph v. Builders' & Painters' Supply Co. 106 Ala. 501, 17 So. 721, the provision allowing attorney's fees was held to be in violation of § 14 of their Bill of Rights, which, as above stated, is identical with § 6 of ours, "in that it allows a fee to the plaintiff's attorney for prosecuting his suit successfully, whereas a like fee is not allowed the defendant's attorney in case the plaintiff fails in his suit, and on that account it is discriminative and class legislation." In Wortman v. Kleinschmidt, 12 Mont. 316, 30 Pac. 280, the constitutionality of the act was upheld by a divided court, the majority opinion being delivered by Blake, Ch. J. But we think the able dissenting opinion of De Witt, J., is better supported by reason and authority. In Ivall v. Wilis, 17 Wash. 645, 50 Pac. 467, a logger's lien act, which provided an attorney's fee for the person claiming the lien, was upheld; the court observing that such act was clearly distinguishable from the statute under consideration in Jolliffe v. Brown, 14 Wash. 155, 44 Pac. 149, which provided for an attorney's fee to plaintiff in case of recovery against the railway company for killing stock, and which was there declared unconstitutional because it did not provide for the payment of a like fee by plaintiff in case he should be unsuccessful, for the reason that the attorney's fee provided by the 48 L. R. A.

latter was compensation to plaintiff for expenditures necessarily made by him in the foreclosure of his lien, and allowable upon the same principle that costs are allowed. It is difficult to see how the designation of such fee as "costs" obviates the objection that it confers upon the plaintiff a right that is denied to defendant, and that it is an "attempt to grant special privileges and advantages to one class of litigants at the expense and to the detriment of another."

Appellees lay some stress upon the fact that Mr. Justice Brewer, in Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 660, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255, mentions, in the course of his discussion, that statutes giving special protection to laborers and mechanics have been upheld; but the reasons he gives for distinguishing the legislation there under consideration from such statutes apply with equal force to our act, to wit, that it does not aim to protect laborers and mechanics alone, but its benefits are conferred upon every individual, whether rich or poor, who has a claim of the character described. It extends the benefit to materialmen, contractors, and others who do not come within the reason that justifies such legislation for the protection of laborers or mechanics. While it is true that statutes extending the right to a lien to these other classes have been upheld, yet the principle upon which they have been sustained affords no support for extending to them the benefits of the provision under consideration. We are unable to perceive any reason why, in an action to enforce their claims for merchandise or material furnished in the erection of a house or for the development of a mining claim, they should be afforded any other or greater rights than are given other merchants who furnish provisions or supplies to persons for family consumption, or that their debtors should not have the same right to contest the justice of their claims upon the same terms and conditions as are afforded to other debtors by the general law of the land. It is no answer to say that the debtor may avoid the imposition of this additional cost by paying his honest debts, because the very purpose of the litigation he invokes is to determine whether he owes the debt or not. And it is immaterial whether he successfully defeats the larger part of the claim. He may nevertheless be mulcted in a sum which will deprive him of any benefit from the defense which he has legitimately established. It is also equally immaterial whether he interposes a vexatious defense, or makes an honest though unsuccessful one, or allows judgment to be taken against him by default; he is subjected to the same penalty. We think this character of legislation is prohibited by § 6 of our Bill of Rights, and that both upon principle and authority § 18 of the lien law is unconstitutional, and that the court below erred in allowing the attorney's fees complained of. This, however, if the only error, would not necessitate a reversal of the entire judgment, since the lien and judgment are affected only to the extent of the illegal excess.

3. The principal and controlling question presented by appellants' assignments of error is whether, under the pleadings and facts of this case, the court below erred in holding that a lien attached against Clayton's interest by reason of his connection with, and apparent interest in, the operations of the mine. A mechanic's or miner's lien is the creature of the statute, and attaches only by virtue of work being done or materials furnished under a contract express or implied, with the owner of the property upon which the lien is claimed; and the burden of proving such contract rests upon the party asserting it, and he must ascertain for himself that the party with whom he deals holds such a relation to the work being done, and the property upon which the same is done, as will entitle him to claim a lien for the work or material which he furnishes. Rico Reduction & Min. Co. v. Musgrave, 14 Colo. 79, 23 Pac. 458; Tritch v. Norton, 10 Colo. 337, 15 Pac. 680; Henry & O. Co. v. Fisher, 37 Neb. 207, 55 N. W. 643; Brown v. Cowan, 110 Pa. 588, 1 Atl. 620. In this case there is an entire absence of evidence tending to show that the mine was being worked under any contract or arrangement by virtue of which Clayton was in any way made liable for the labor performed or merchandise furnished, or that there existed any contract which directly or indirectly obligated him to pay for the same, or that the lien claimants or their assignors performed the work or delivered the merchandise sued for, relying upon his personal credit. But, on the other hand, it is clearly established that the property was being operated by Smith and Outcalt under a lease in which Clayton had no interest, and the labor was performed and the merchandise furnished exclusively for their use and benefit. This lease and its several assignments were of record in Gunnison county prior to and during the time the indebtedness herein sued for accrued, and were notice to all parties concerned that the same had been transferred, and then stood of record in the name of Smith and Spinney; and the lien claimants or their assignors, had they taken the precaution to inquire, could have readily ascertained that Spinney's interest had passed to Outcalt, and that, at the time of the transactions mentioned in the complaint, Smith and Outcalt, in the contemplation of the mechanic's lien statute, were the only "owners" of the property whose interest therein could be subjected to lien for their claims. Under these circumstances, it is clear that no lien accrued against Clayton's interest in the mine, in their favor, by virtue of any contract relation that they directly or indirectly held to him. This was evidently the conclusion reached by the court below, since it predicated the liability of Clayton, and the right to a lien against his interest in the property, solely upon the ground that he was cognizant of the work being done, and to some extent took part in its direction; and, having in some instances given orders for merchandise in the name of the company under which it was being operated, and failing to notify the parties dealing with the company of his true relation thereto, he is now estopped from claiming that such persons have no lien against his interest. We do not think that, under the circumstances of this case, such conclusion is justified. As we have seen, it was the duty of these lien claimants to ascertain with whom they were dealing, and for whose use and benefit they were performing labor and furnishing material. And, certainly, in the then condition of the record, Clayton had a right to presume that they had knowledge of the true state of the title, and of the facts that they could have ascertained by such inquiry as was suggested by the record. "Where the party's rights in property sufficiently appear of record, mere silence upon his part is no violation of duty." 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 13, note, Silence, and authorities there cited. But, aside from this, the question of estoppel was neither raised by the pleadings nor supported by the evidence. That the facts constituting an estoppel in pais must be specially pleaded is well settled. De Votie v. McGerr, 15 Colo. 467, 24 Pac. 923; Gaynor v. Clements, 16 Colo. 209, 26 Pac. 324; Prewitt v. Lambert, 19 Colo. 7, 34 Pac. 684. The complaint avers that Smith, Outcalt, and Clayton made and entered into an agreement with the parties performing labor upon the Vulcan mine, and that the goods, wares, and merchandise were supplied to defendants to be used for the working, preservation, and development of said Vulcan mine; thus predicated their right to relief as against Clayton upon direct agreements between him and the persons for whose labor and material the liens are claimed. The answer of these appellants denied these allegations, and any and all indebtedness on the part of Clayton. The parties went to trial upon these issues. The testimony wholly failing to show a contract of employment by Clayton, appellees undertook to show such a participation in the business as would raise an implied contract on his part. Not only was this testimony inadmissible under the issues formed by the pleadings, but it was, we think, clearly insufficient to raise any implied assumption. It, at most, disclosed acts on his part within the scope of his employment, and wholly failed to show that in any instance the parties performed the labor or furnished the materials relying upon his liability as a party in interest, or upon his personal credit, or that they were induced so to do by his acts or apparent connection with the business. To entitle a party to invoke the doctrine of estoppel, he must actually have been misled and induced to act to his prejudice by reason of another's conduct; he having on his part, exercised due diligence to ascertain the truth. In Moore v. Bowman, 47 N. H. 494, the doctrine is thus concisely stated: "To have this effect, however, the defendant must actually have been misled by the plaintiff's conduct, and induced thereby to change his position. If he is not so misled, . . . and with a reasonable use of means within his reach he might have ascertained the fact, he could not set up an estoppel. The truth is, the party setting up an estoppel is himself bound to the exercise of good faith and due diligence to ascertain the truth." Douglass v. Craig, 13 S. C. 371; 2 Herman, Estoppel, § 969. If it can be held that a lien can be created against the interest of an owner of property in this state, in the absence of any contract on his part, by reason of his conduct, it is manifest that the facts disclosed by this record are insufficient to work such a result. We are therefore of the opinion that, in the circumstances of this case, no lien was created against Clayton's interest in the mine, and the court below erred in adjudging a lien against such interest.

For the foregoing reasons, the decree of the court below is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to enter judgment in favor of appellants.

Gabbert, J., not participating.

Rehearing denied.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

T. H. McMILLAN, Plff. in Err.,
v.

R. B. HARRIS et al., Exrs., etc., of Sarah
M. Parsons, Deceased.

(.....Ga.....)

*1. One who bids at a public sale, not because of any desire to purchase, but merely for the purpose, either in his own interest or that of another, to run up the price, is not a "puffer," if, in case his bid is the last and highest, he can be compelled by the person conducting the sale to take and pay for the property; and this is so though, under an arrangement with another or others to whom the proceeds of the sale, or a considerable portion thereof, will ultimately go, he will not be compelled to keep and pay for the property.

2. Accordingly, it is neither contrary to law nor public policy for persons who will be entitled to the proceeds of land sold by an executor under a decree of court to engage a third person to run the property up to a specified price, with the understanding that, if it is knocked down to him, they will take it off his hands.

(February 28, 1900.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Chat-ham County to review a judgment compelling the successful bidder at a judicial sale to take the property allotted to him. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Denmark, Adams, & Freeman, for plaintiff in error:

Under the Code the court had full power to relieve Mr. McMillan, and it was its duty to do so if the sale, made under the process of its court, "was infected with fraud, irregularity, or error, to the injury of either party."

Ga. Code, §§ 4856, 5427; Johnson v. Dooly, 72 Ga. 297; Parker v. Glenn, 72 Ga. 638; Fears v. State, 102 Ga. 284, 29 S. E. 463.

The fact that the bidding complained of

*Headnotes by COUS, J.

NOTE.—For effect of preventing or checking bids upon the validity of sales at auction, see Herndon v. Gibson (S. C.) 20 L. R. A. 545, and note.

48 L. R. A.

was done in good faith and for a purpose regarded by Mr. Owens and the gentlemen representing the other half interest as lawful and proper, in advancement of the interests of their clients, cannot be material or important.

Harrison v. McHenry, 9 Ga. 164, 52 Am. Dec. 435.

Mr. McMillan had a right to this property at the lowest real bid without any inflation by anything like puffing.

Pennock's Appeal, 14 Pa. 446, 53 Am. Dec. 561; Staines v. Shore, 16 Pa. 200, 55 Am. Dec. 492; Peck v. List, 23 W. Va. 403, 48 Am. Rep. 398; Springer v. Kleinsorge, 83 Mo. 162.

An owner cannot employ a by-bidder, "for the purpose of preventing a sacrifice of the property," or its sale below a certain price.

Bennett's Benjamin, Sales, 6th ed. p. 454, 7th ed. p. 447; Veazie v. Williams, 3 Story, 611, Fed. Cas. No. 16,907; Story, Sales, 4th ed. §§ 482 et seq.; Tiedeman, Sales, § 165; Hartwell v. Gurney, 16 R. I. 78, 13 Atl. 113.

Puffing at a judicial sale vitiates the sale as completely as if the sale were not judicial.

Rorer, Judicial Sales, p. 44, § 77; Tiedeman, Sales, § 165.

Mr. Owens's conduct amounted to "puffing" under the definitions.

Locke v. Willingham, 99 Ga. 297, 25 S. E. 693; James v. Kelley, 107 Ga. 446, 33 S. E. 425; Coleman v. Maclean, 101 Ga. 304, 28 S. E. 861; Beavell v. Christie, 1 Cowp. 395; Veazie v. Williams, 8 How. 154, 12 L. ed. 1027; Crowder v. Austin, 3 Bing. 368; Robinson v. Wall, 2 Phill. Ch. 373; Wheeler v. Collier, Moody & M. 123; Green v. Baverstock, 14 C. B. N. S. 204; Rea v. Marsh, 3 Younge & J. 331; Mortimer v. Bell, L. R. 1 Ch. 10, 5 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 310; Peck v. List, 23 W. Va. 403, 48 Am. Rep. 398; Hinde v. Pendleton, Wythe (Va.) 146; National Bank of the Metropolis v. Sprague, 20 N. J. Eq. 159; Donaldson v. M'Roy, 1 Browne (Pa.) 346; Woods v. Hall, 16 N. C. (1 Dev. Eq.) 411; Flannery v. Jones, 180 Pa. 338, 36 Atl. 857; Bowman v. McClenahan, 20 App. Div. 346, 46 N. Y. Supp. 946; Miller v. Baynard, 2 Houst. (Del.) 559, 83 Am. Dec. 168; Baham v. Bach, 13 La. 287, 33 Am. Dec. 561; Towle

v. Leavitt, 23 N. H. 360, 55 Am. Dec. 195; Bateman, Auctions, pp. 131-134, 246; Bispham, Eq. 6th ed. § 209; 1 Warvelle, Vendors, pp. 254-256; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 934.

Mr. R. R. Richards, for defendants in error:

The law authorized Mr. Owens to bid.

The parties to an action may purchase.

Freeman v. Cooper, 14 Ga. 238; White v. Crew, 16 Ga. 416; Kilgo v. Castleberry, 38 Ga. 513, 95 Am. Dec. 406; Humphrey v. McGill, 59 Ga. 649; Pinkston v. Harrell, 106 Ga. 102, 31 S. E. 808; Rorer, Judicial Sales, 2d ed. §§ 170, 782; Pugh v. Highley, 152 Ind. 252, 44 L. R. A. 392, 53 N. E. 171; 2 Sugden, Vendors, 8th Am. ed. 689.

So may a cotenant in partition sale.

Freeman, Cotenancy & Partition, § 165; Pewabic Min. Co. v. Mason, 145 U. S. 349, 36 L. ed. 732, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 887; Baird v. Baird, 21 N. C. (1 Dev. & B. Eq.) 524, 31 Am. Dec. 399.

So may an heir at law or a devisee at administrator's or executor's sale, and that, too, at his own sale, if the executor or administrator is one of the heirs or devisees.

Anderson v. Butler, 31 S. E. 183, 5 L. R. A. 160, 9 S. E. 797; Pennock's Appeal, 14 Pa. 446, 53 Am. Dec. 562; Rigg v. Schweitzer, 170 Pa. 549, 33 Atl. 116; James v. Kelley, 107 Ga. 446, 33 S. E. 425; Rorer, Judicial Sales, 2d ed. § 426.

The policy of the law forbids, as conducive to fraud and inimical to fair dealing the purchase by masters, trustees, executors, administrators, guardians, and all others, at their own sales, as also all agents, public or private, who are concerned in selling whether such purchase be direct or indirect.

Rorer, Judicial Sales, § 413.

In sales directed by a court of chancery, the whole business is transacted by a public officer, under the guidance and superintendence of the court itself.

Blossom v. Milwaukie & C. R. Co. 3 Wall. 207, 18 L. ed. 46; Pewabic Min. Co. v. Mason, 145 U. S. 361, 36 L. ed. 736, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 887; Pinkston v. Harrell, 106 Ga. 102, 31 S. E. 808.

Under our system any party may bid who does not come within the reason and spirit of the law which prohibits a vendor to become the purchaser at a judicial sale.

It is difficult to see how a public sale between competing bidders could ever be sustained if one may insist that he was taken by surprise and prejudiced because he had not been informed of the amount to which bidders would run the property.

Barling v. Peters, 134 Ill. 606, 25 N. E. 770.

Two or more parties interested in the result of a judicial sale may lawfully combine to purchase on joint account, for the honest purpose of preventing a sacrifice of the property, or for any other purpose, lawful in its nature, not designed to stifle competition or chill the sale.

White v. Crew, 16 Ga. 416; Buckner v. Chambliss, 30 Ga. 653; Pennsylvania Transp. Co.'s Appeal, 101 Pa. 576; Hopkins v. Ensign, 122 N. Y. 144, 9 L. R. A. 731, 25 48 L. R. A.

N. E. 306; Thames v. Miller, 2 Woods, 564, Fed. Cas. No. 13,860; James v. Fulcro, 5 Tex. 512, 55 Am. Dec. 744; Gulick v. Webb, 41 Neb. 706, 60 N. W. 13; Jenkins v. Hogg, 2 Treadway, Const. 821; Phippen v. Stickney, 3 Met. 387; Kearney v. Taylor, 15 How. 494, 14 L. ed. 787; Wicker v. Hoppock, 6 Wall. 94, 18 L. ed. 752; Reagan v. Bishop, 25 S. C. 585.

It could hardly be considered a fraud for a competent bidder to bid what property was worth, to keep it from being sacrificed to a bidder who was trying to get it at less than it was worth.

Richards v. Holmes, 18 How. 148, 15 L. ed. 306; Smith v. Black, 115 U. S. 308, 29 L. ed. 398, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 50; Pewabic Min. Co. v. Mason, 145 U. S. 349, 36 L. ed. 732, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 887; James v. Kelley, 107 Ga. 446, 33 S. E. 425; Pennock's Appeal, 14 Pa. 446, 53 Am. Dec. 562; Rigg v. Schweitzer, 170 Pa. 549, 33 Atl. 116; Anderson v. Butler, 31 S. C. 183, 5 L. R. A. 166, 9 S. E. 797; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 505.

There is a solid distinction to be made between the bid of an irresponsible puffer secured, by the power that controls the sale, from liability for his bid, and the bid of a responsible party to the record at a judicial sale, with which he can be and should be made to comply for the benefit of others interested in the proceeds of sale as well as he.

Allen v. Gillette, 127 U. S. 595, 32 L. ed. 274, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1331; Smith v. Arnold, 5 Mason, 414, Fed. Cas. No. 13,004.

A sale by an administrator will not be set aside by discharging the purchaser because one interested in the estate employs a puffer, without the knowledge of the administrator or auctioneer.

East v. Wood, 62 Ala. 313; Locke v. Wilingham, 99 Ga. 297, 25 S. E. 693.

Messrs. A. C. Wright and George W. Owens also for defendants in error.

Cobb, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Stoyell C. Parsons and Elizabeth Catharine Maas, by her father, as next friend and guardian, brought suit in the superior court of Chatham county against the executors of the last will and testament of Sarah M. Parsons and others, alleging in their petition that they were joint owners of certain described realty in the city of Savannah, and praying that a certain deed alleged to be a cloud upon the title of petitioners might be delivered up to be canceled, and that the executors take charge of the realty, and dispose of the same for the benefit of petitioners. When the case came on for a hearing, a decree was entered, providing that the trust deed referred to be set aside and canceled, and that the executors "take charge of and dispose of the property set out in said petition in accordance with the terms of compromise as agreed on," and to this end advertise the property in a designated way for sale at public outcry before the door of the courthouse of Chatham county during the legal hours of sale to the highest bidder, and report the sale to the court for confirmation. The sale was had in the manner prescribed in the decree, and on the day fixed in the advertisement the property was sold in several parcels, and knocked down to different purchasers. The executors reported the sale to the court, when it appeared that one of the parcels had been knocked down to T. H. McMillan, the plaintiff in error, for the sum of $14,000. In answer to the rule nisi calling upon him to show cause why the sale should not be confirmed, McMillan set up that the price at which the property was knocked down to him was the result of "puffing" or "by-bidding" at the sale, done at the instance of parties owning an interest in the property, and in fraud of his rights as purchaser; that the property was run up by the owners thereof without his knowledge by bids that were not real or genuine, but made for the purpose of puffing the property, and that such conduct rendered the sale illegal, and released him from his obligation to pay for the property. After hearing the evidence, the judge held that sufficient cause had not been shown to authorize him to refuse to confirm the sale, and an order was passed confirming the sale, and directing McMillan to pay the amount of his bid into the hands of the executors. To this ruling McMillan excepted, assigning as error that the decision of the judge was contrary to law and the evidence, that the evidence required a finding that the sale was puffed, and was therefore illegal. It appears from the evidence that the petitioners in the original proceeding, Miss Maas and Dr. Parsons, were, under the will of Sarah M. Parsons, entitled each to a one-half interest in the property involved in the present case. Mr. Owens was an attorney at law representing Miss Maas. Mr. Seabrook was an attorney at law representing Dr. Parsons. Mr. Owens was at the sale, and made several bids on the property; one of these bids being immediately before the bid of McMillan, at which the property was knocked down to him. Mr. Owens was not bidding in his own interest. He was bidding for his client by authority given him to bid such an amount as, in his discretion, would be necessary to prevent the property from being sold at a sacrifice. It also appears that Mr. Owens and Mr. Seabrook, representing their respective clients, had agreed that the property should not be sold for less than $13,000, and that, in pursuance of this agreement, Mr. Owens became a bidder at the sale; and it is to be inferred from the testimony that, if the property had been knocked down to him, the purchasers would have been neither himself nor Mr. Seabrook, but their respective clients. It also appears that out of the proceeds of the sale different items of costs and expenses connected with the litigation were to be paid by the executors; the amount of such items which were due and unpaid at the date of the hearing of the petition brought to confirm the sale being more than $250. The auctioneer who conducted the sale was one of the executors, and it appeared that neither in his capacity as auctioneer nor as executor did he have any connection whatever with the arrangement made between Mr. Owens and Mr. Seabrook, and there was no reason whatever why he could not, if the property had been knocked down to Mr. Owens, have treated him as the purchaser, and invoked the aid of the court to that end. It appeared distinctly from the testimony that, if there was any puffing or by-bidding, neither the auctioneer nor the executors had any connection with the same, and that it was done without their consent, knowledge, or authority.

48 L. R. A.

The controlling question to be determined is whether the conduct of Mr. Owens in entering into the arrangement with Mr. Seabrook to bid on the property in behalf of their respective clients so as to prevent its sacrifice, and bidding at the sale for that purpose without the expectation of becoming a purchaser himself, was of such a character as to authorize the court to declare that McMillan was misled, and that for that reason the sale was void, and should be set aside. To properly determine this it is necessary to investigate the law of sales at auction, and determine who is a puffer at an auction, and what conduct would amount to puffing so as to invalidate the sale. There is no decision of this court bearing directly upon this question. The presence at auction sales of persons who bid for the purpose of inflating the value of the property in behalf of those interested in the sale is a matter at the present time of very common occurrence, and has been from the time that auction sales were first known. This practice has brought about many controversies which resulted in numerous cases, and the effect of such conduct has been discussed by many judges and text writers. A person of the character referred to is usually denominated a "puffer," but he is sometimes referred to as a "by-bidder," "capper," "decoy duck," "white bonnet," or "sham bidder." The first time that this question seems to have come before the English courts, so far as the reported cases are concerned, was in the case of Walker v. Nightingale, 4 Bro. P. C. 193, which was decided in 1726. It was held by the house of lords in that case that a puffer could not recover compensation for his services, since they were contrary to good faith. The next case in point of time was Beauwell v. Christie, 1 Cowp. 395, which was decided by the court of King's bench in 1776. This was a decision by Lord Mansfield, and, as it was rendered prior to our adopting statute, it is controlling authority in this state. Thorn-ton v. Lane, 11 Ga. 500. For this reason it is necessary to examine that case with some care. An action was brought against an auctioneer, for selling a horse at the highest price bid for him, contrary to the owner's express direction not to allow him to go under a larger sum named, and it was held that such an action would not lie, but that it would have been otherwise if the owner had directed the auctioneer to put the horse up at a particular price, and not lower.

The opinion of Lord Mansfield in the case was as follows: "The matter in question is in itself of small value, but in respect of the principles by which it must be governed it is a question of great importance. Since the trial I have mooted the point with many who are not lawyers, upon the morality and rectitude of the transaction. The question is whether a bidding by the owner of goods at a sale under these conditions, namely, 'that the highest bidder shall be the purchaser, and if a dispute arise, to be decided by a majority of the persons present,' is a bidding within the meaning of such conditions of sale. There is no express undertaking on the part of the defendant, nor is it, as has been ingeniously said, a direction that there should be no bidding under £15, which might be fair; but the direction given to the defendant is 'not to let the horse go under £15,' which implies there might be a bidding under that sum. The question, then, is whether the owner can privately employ another person to bid for him. The basis of all dealings ought to be good faith; so, more especially in these transactions, where the public are brought together upon a confidence that the articles set up to sale will be disposed of to the highest real bidder. That could never be the case if the owner might privately and secretly enhance the price by a person employed for that purpose; yet tricks and practices of this kind daily increase, and grow so frequent that good men give in to the ways of the bad and dishonest in their own defense. But such a practice was never openly avowed. An owner of goods set up to sale at an auction never yet bid in the room for himself. If such a practice were allowed, no one would bid. It is a fraud upon the sale and upon the public. The disallowing it is no hardship upon the owner; for, if he is unwilling his goods should go at an under-price, he may order them to be set up at his own price and not lower. Such a direction would be fair. Or he might do as was done by Lord Ashburnham, who sold a large estate by auction. He had it inserted in the conditions of sale that he himself might bid once in the course of the sale, and he bid at once £15,000 or £20,000. Such a condition is fair, because the public are then apprised and know upon what terms they bid. In Holland it is the practice to bid downwards. The question, then, is, Is such a bidding fair? If not, it is no argument to say it is a frequent custom. Gaming, stockjobbing, and swindling are frequent. But the law forbids them all. Suppose there was an agreement to abate so much, which is the case where goods are sold by one person in the trade to another, they abate sometimes 10 to 15 per cent. Such an agreement between the owner and a bidder at sale by auction would be a gross fraud. What is the nature of a sale by auction? It is that the goods shall go to the highest real bidder. But there would be an end of that if the owner might privately bid upon his own goods. There is no contract with the auctioneer. He is only an agent between the buyer and seller. He may fairly bid for a third person who employs him, but not for the owner. In this case there is another fraud put upon the public. For by the catalogue the goods are described to be 'the goods of a gentleman deceased, and sold by order of the executor.' Upon this representation many people would attend to bid on a supposition that the goods were necessarily to be sold at all events, whether valuable or not valuable; whereas they might have their suspicions if they were the property of persons living. Horses, or any other species of property, belonging to persons that are dead, are not so likely to be faulty as those which are parted with by persons in their lifetime. We all remember the sale of a gentleman's wines, where vast quantities had been sent in belonging to other persons, and all sold at a very high price, under an idea they were his. The consequence was, most of the buyers were taken in. Therefore, upon full consideration, I am of opinion that a bidding by the owner in the manner contended for, and agreeable to the directions given in this case, would have been a fraud upon the sale; and, consequently, that this action against the defendant as auctioneer cannot be maintained."

48 L. R. A.

In Howard v. Castle, 6 T. R. 642, the decision of Lord Mansfield in Beaucl v. Christie was followed by Lord Kenyon. In Wheeler v. Collier, Moody & M. 123, a sale at which there were two puffers was held to be void, and Lord Tenterden stated that the inclination of his mind was that the employment of only one puffer would avoid a sale. In Crouder v. Austin, 3 Bing. 368, it appeared that the vendor of a horse stationed his servant to join in the bidding at a public auction, and the servant bid up to £23 after a bona fide bidder had bid £12. It was held that the sale could not be enforced against a subsequent bidder. In Green v. Barrackstock, 14 C. B. N. S. 204, it was held that upon a sale of goods by auction, where the highest bidder is to be the purchaser, the secret employment of a puffer on behalf of the vendor is a fraudulent act and vitiates the sale. In that case Byles, J., said: "The sale is vitiated by the fraud, and void, unless the vendee, with knowledge of the fact, has acted upon it so as to deprive himself of the right to complain. This has been the law of England, and, indeed, of the whole of Europe, for a very long time indeed. It was a law of universal application even before the Christian era." The decisions of the common-law courts of England have been almost without exception in line with the decision of Lord Mansfield in Beaucl v. Christie. The principle at the foundation of this decision was, that for one to offer his property at public outcry to the highest bidder, and then secretly arrange with another to bid on the property in his behalf, with the distinct understanding that he was not to incur any liability on his bid,—was a fraud upon the right of those who attended the sale in good faith expecting to come into competition with others like themselves who really desired to purchase the property on the best terms possible. The reason for the rule was the palpable fraud upon bona fide bidders. Strange as it may seem, the English court of chancery did not follow the rule laid down by Lord Mansfield, but, on the contrary, in a number of decisions this rule was criticised, and the fraud incident to puffing at auctions was not only tolerated, but approved of, by that court. In Conolly v. Parsons, which will be found reported in a note in 3 Ves. Jr. 625,—a decision rendered in 1797,—Lord Chancellor Loughborough found great fault with the conclusion reached by Lord Mansfield, and also with the reasoning which led him to that conclusion. According to the rule in that case, unlimited puffing was allowable. While the decision last referred to was not followed by the court of chancery in all of its bearings, that court held on different occasions that the mere fact that one puffer was employed to prevent a sacrifice of the property would not be such a fraud as would vitiate the sale when it was otherwise free from infirmity. In Mortimer v. Bell [L. R. 1 Ch. 10] 5 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 310, it was held by Lord Chancellor Cranworth that the rule said to exist in equity, allowing one puffer to be employed, without notice, to prevent a sale at an undervalue, is abstractly less sound than the rule at law, which declares such employment to be fraudulent; and rests only on the authority of decisions in lower branches of the court. See also, in this connection, Flint v. Woodin, 9 Hare, 618; Robinson v. Wall, 2 Phill. Ch. 372; Smith v. Clarke, 12 Ves. Jr. 477. The conflict between the rule laid down by the common law and the chancery courts of England was finally settled by an act of Parliament which provided that, "whenever a sale by auction of land would be invalid at law by reason of the employment of a puffer, the same shall be deemed invalid in equity as well as at law."

In the case of Peck v. List, 23 W. Va. 338, 48 Am. Rep. 398, which is one of the leading American cases on the subject, the English decisions above referred to, as well as many others by the English common law and chancery courts, are collected and commented on in the opinion of Mr. Justice Green. We have referred to such of those decisions as we deem necessary to the present discussion. The decision of Lord Mansfield must be treated as binding authority in this state, as there are none of our own decisions in conflict with the rule he there lays down. Attention was called in the argument to the fact that the record in the case of Locke v. Willingham, 99 Ga. 297, 25 S. E. 693, disclosed that certain charges of the trial judge bearing upon the subject under consideration in the present case were under review, and that the effect of the ruling in that case, which was merely a head-note, that no error of law was committed, was to approve of the charges made by the trial judge. We have examined the record in that case, and we find that the charges of the judge under review were not only not in conflict with the rule laid down by Lord Mansfield, but seem to have been in accord therewith. The following decisions and authorities will show the rulings of some of the American courts on this subject: 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 934, pp. 1336, 1337; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 304, 305; Benjamin, Sales, 7th ed. §§ 470 et seq.; 1 Warvelle, Vendors, p. 254; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 293; Bispham, Eq. § 209; Tiedeman, Sales, § 163; Rorer, Judicial Sales, p. 44; Bateman, Auctions, p. 131; 1 Wait, Act. & Def. p. 482; Story, Sales, § 482; Veazie v. Williams, 8 How. 134, 12 L. ed. 1018; Flannery v. Jones, 180 Pa. 338, 36 Atl. 856; Bowman v. McClenahan, 20 App. Div. 346, 46 N. Y. Supp. 945; Pennock's Appeal, 14 Pa. 446, 53 Am. Dec. 561; Hartwell v. Gurney, 16 R. I. 78, 13 R. I. 113; Reynolds v. Dechaums, 24 Tex. 174, 76 Am. Dec. 101; Davis v. Petroay, 3 Head, 667, 75 Am. Dec. 789; Miller v. Baynard, 2 Houst. (Del.) 559, 83 Am. Dec. 168; Jenkins v. Hogg, 2 Treadway, Const. 821; East v. Wood, 62 Ala. 313; Woods v. Hall, 16 N. C. (1 Dev. Eq.) 411; National Bank of the Metropolis v. Sprague, 20 N. J. Eq. 159; Hinde v. Pendleton, Wythe (Va.) [145] 354; Curtis v. Aspinwall, 114 Mass. 187, 19 Am. Rep. 332; Springer v. Kleinsorge, 83 Mo. 152; Toole v. Leavitt, 23 N. H. 360, 55 Am. Dec. 195; Staines v. Shore, 16 Pa. 200, 55 Am. Dec. 492.

An examination of the authorities above cited, as well as of many others which might be cited, will show that the conclusions reached by the American courts on this question are far from being uniform. Some have followed the rule laid down by Lord Mansfield, others the rule announced by Lord Loughborough; and still others are not in exact accord with either, but are modifications of one or the other. It is not possible to reconcile the American decisions on this subject, and it would not be profitable to undertake to do this, even if it were possible. We may lay it down as a rule without exception that the employment of a puffer at an auction sale is such a fraud as will vitiate the sale. Such being the rule, the question now to be determined is, Who is a puffer? Mr. Justice Green, in Peck v. List, cited above, thus defines a puffer: "A puffer, in the strictest meaning of the word, is a person who, without having any intention to purchase, is employed by the vendor at an auction to raise the price by fictitious bids, thereby increasing competition among the bidders, while he himself is secured from risk by a secret understanding with the vendor that he shall not be bound by his bids." This definition will be found to have been approved by several of the text writers and many of the judges in the authorities and decisions above cited. It is directly in line with the ruling made by Lord Mansfield in Beazwell v. Christie. In order to constitute one who bids at a sale a puffer, it is not only necessary that he shall be employed by the owner of the property which is being sold, or by some person having an interest therein, but it must appear that the person employing the puffer was so interested in the auction or act of selling that there could be made with him a binding agreement by which the person bidding incurs not the slightest risk of being called on to comply with the terms of any bid that he may make. If he be employed by the owner of the property, and the owner has complete control of the auction and the auctioneer, as was the case in Beawell v. Christie, then no one would question that he was a puffer, within the meaning of the law, and his employment would amount to a fraud upon the real bidder. If he be employed by a person interested in the property, although not the sole owner, and such person has complete control over the auction, so that he could entirely relieve him from all responsibility for the bid he would make, then a person employed under such circumstances would be a puffer, within the principle of the ruling made in Beawell v. Christie. The rule is thus stated by Mr. Justice Green in Peck v. List, before referred to: "But it is obviously unimportant whether the by-bidder is employed by the owner of the land or by some one else having a pecuniary interest in the auction about to be made, and who stands in such a relation to it that he can make good his assurance to the by-bidder that he shall not be held responsible for his bid if it happen to be the highest bid made. The real essence of the fraud is not that the owner is bidding for the property, but it consists in the fact that a by-bidder pretending to be a bona fide bidder deceives honest bidders, raises the price of the property by fictitious bids increasing competition, while he himself has good reason to believe and does believe that he is secure from any risk of being held personally liable for his bids. It is immaterial from whom he derives this assurance of immunity, provided the party giving the assurance expressly or impliedly has the power, either legally or practically, to make good the assurance." "It makes no difference that such puffer or by-bidder was employed to prevent a sacrifice of the property, and was directed to bid it up, to a fixed price only; nor does it make any difference that the property only sold at a reasonable price." In many of the cases it is said that a person employed by the owner to secretly bid upon the property would be a puffer; in still others it is said that a person so employed by the vendor would be a puffer; in still others it is stated that a person so employed by the seller would be a puffer; and in still others it is declared that a person employed by those who are pecuniarily interested in the property would be a puffer. In dealing with this subject the terms "owner," "vendor," "seller," and "person pecuniarily interested in the property or its proceeds" are to be given the same meaning, and they all refer to one who, without regard to what may be his peculiar interest in the property, must have absolute control of the auction sale, and is at liberty of his own volition to discharge any bidder from liability on account of his bid. If the person conducting the sale can, notwithstanding the agreement of one who has a larger interest in the proceeds of the sale, hold the bidder responsible for the amount of his bid, then a person employed by the person having such larger interest in the proceeds would not be a puffer within the meaning of the law. Bidding by such a person would not be fraudulent, and therefore the sale would not be affected by the employment of such a person. An auctioneer is the agent of the person who directs him to make the sale. The sale is, therefore, controlled by one who directs the auctioneer. When an auction sale is declared by the auctioneer to be without reserve, this is, in effect, a statement that the person who directs the auctioneer to make the sale, no matter what his interest in the property may be, has empowered the auctioneer to sell the property to the highest bidder, and that the person directing the auctioneer will not himself bid upon the property, or employ others to do so in his behalf. Where the auctioneer puts up property without any statement as to the conditions of sale, the bidders have a right to presume that the sale is to be without reserve. The owner, vendor, seller, or person interested in the sale, whatever we may call him, that is, the person who has directed the auctioneer to sell the property, and who will be compelled to make good to the bidder the acceptance of a bid by the auctioneer, is not allowed to secretly bid at the sale. He may bid, however, if public notice be given of the fact, so that other bidders may know that they are coming into competition with the person who has control of the sale. The mere fact that a person is pecuniarily interested in property which is being sold at auction does not preclude him from becoming a bidder, and this is true of judicial sales as well as private sales. No matter what interest a person may have in the proceeds of the sale or in the property which is going to be sold at public outcry, either at private auction or judicial sale, his right to become a bidder at the sale is well recognized by numerous decisions of this court, as well as of other courts in this country, provided the sale is not under his control. See, in this connection, Freeman v. Cooper, 14 Ga. 238; White v. Crew, 16 Ga. 416; Buckner v. Chambliss, 30 Ga. 652; Kilgo v. Castleberry, 38 Ga. 512, 95 Am. Dec. 406; Kearney v. Taylor, 15 How. 494, 14 L. ed. 787; Richards v. Holmes, 18 How. 143, 15 L. ed. 304; Pewabic Min. Co. v. Mason, 145 U. S. 349, 36 L. ed. 732, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 887; Blossom v. Milwaukee & C. R. Co. 3 Wall. 196, 18 L. ed. 43; Smith v. Black, 115 U. S. 308, 29 L. ed. 398, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 50; Allen v. Gillette, 127 U. S. 589, 32 L. ed. 271, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1331; Baird v. Baird, 21 N. C. (1 Dev. & B. Eq.) 524, 31 Am. Dec. 399; Gulick v. Webb, 41 Neb. 706, 60 N. W. 13; Phippen v. Stickney, 3 Met. 384; Pennsylvania Transp. Co's Appeal, 101 Pa. 576; Thames v. Miller, 2 Woods, 564, Fed. Cas. No. 13,860; Twin-Bick Oil Co. v. Marbury, 91 U. S. 587, 23 L. ed. 328. Such being the right of one who is interested in the property sold or in the proceeds of the sale, who is himself not conducting the sale, and who has not such control over the sale as that he can make a binding agreement with a bidder that he will not be held responsible for his bid, it cannot be a fraud for such person to employ one to bid at a sale in his behalf, even though the fact that the bidder is bidding in behalf of one interested in the property is not disclosed to the other bidders. The law charges everyone who attends an auction sale, no matter what its character, whether resulting from a private agreement or from a judgment of a court, that anyone interested in the proceeds of the sale or in the property, and who has no absolute control over the sale, may become a competitor with any other person at the sale, and bid for the property, and such a person is under no obligation to disclose to others his intention to bid; and therefore the employment by such a person of another to bid in his behalf, without disclosing that he is representing the person so interested, could not, in any sense, be a fraud upon other bidders. It is true that the law prohibits certain persons from acting as agents of such a person. A sheriff cannot become a bidder at his own sale as agent for another (Harrison v. McHenry, 9 Ga. 164, 52 Am. Dec. 435; Coleman v. Maclean, 101 Ga. 303, 28 Ga. 861); though it has been held that a sheriff acting as auctioneer at an administrator's sale may make one bid for a person interested in the property to be sold, if he discloses the fact that he is bidding for another, and if his authority is limited to making one bid, and he have no discretion to do otherwise (James v. Kelley, 107 Ga. 446, 33 S. E. 425.)

48 L. R. A.

The matter may thus be summed up: If a person who has such control of an auction sale that he, of his own volition, can release a bidder from all responsibility for his bid, employs another, upon an understanding of that character, to bid at the sale, without disclosing for whom he is bidding, for the purpose of preventing the property from selling at a sacrifice, or for the purpose of making the same bring more than its actual value, the bidding by one or more persons under such employment is such a fraud upon the real bidders that the sale will be declared void at their instance. The only lawful way in which such a person can prevent a sacrifice of the property sold is to fix a minimum price, of which public notice shall be given, or make public the fact that he, either by himself or by others, will be a bidder at the sale. On the other hand, the mere fact that the person is interested in the property to be sold, or in the proceeds of the sale, will not preclude him from either bidding himself or from procuring another to bid, either openly or secretly, in his behalf, without regard to what the agreement may be with such bidder, if the one employing such bidder has not himself such control of the sale that he could absolutely release the bidder from all responsibility growing out of his having participated in the sale in that capacity. Applying the principles above announced to the facts of the present case, Mr. Owens was in no sense a puffer, and the 48 L. R. A.

sale was not, for any reason set up by the plaintiff in error, invalid.

Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

STATE of Georgia, Plff. in Err.,
v.

CENTRAL OF GEORGIA RAILWAY COMPANY et al.

(.....Ga.....)

- *1. The competition, the defeating or lessening of which par. 4, § 2, art. 4, of the Constitution (Civ. Code, § 5800), so far as applicable to railroad companies, was designed to prevent, was competition between lines of railroad, viewed with reference to their general business in and through the territory traversed by them, and not competition which might incidentally exist at mere points or particular places. A combination of railroad lines, whatever the form adopted for bringing it about, is not violative of this paragraph of the Constitution, even though it might lessen or defeat competition at some point or points, if, as a general result of the combination, the public at large, as distinguished from the people of special or particular communities, was in consequence benefited.
2. Whether or not the combination of any two given lines of railroad would be contrary to this paragraph of the Constitution is a question which cannot be settled under any rule of universal application, but one which must be determined in each case upon its own peculiar facts and circumstances.
3. The present record discloses that there was ample evidence to uphold an adjudication that the consolidation of the two lines of railroad involved did not defeat, and was not intended to defeat, competition, in the sense in which that word is used in the above-mentioned paragraph of the Constitution, and also that such consolidation neither encouraged nor tended to encourage monopoly.

(January 31, 1900.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Putnam County to review a judgment in favor of defendants in a proceeding to set aside a contract looking toward the consolidation of certain railroad companies. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. M. Terrell, Attorney General, J. S. Turner, S. T. Wingfield, and W. H. Burwell, for plaintiff in error:

The right to forfeit charters carries with it the right to enjoin ultra vires acts, or to set the same aside.

2 Cook, Corp. § 635; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Com. 97 Ky. 675, 31 S. W. 476; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S.

*Headnotes by LEWIS, J.

NOTE.—For restrictions on consolidation of parallel or competing railroads, see State ex rel. Nolan v. Montana R. Co. (Mont.) 45 L. R. A. 271, and note.

677, 40 L. ed. 849, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 714; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1093; Atty. Gen. v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 35 Wis. 524; 10 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 897.

Section 5800 of the Code, ¶ 4, § 2, art. 4, of the Constitution makes the common law, so far as relates to the purchase of one corporation by another corporation, a part of the Constitution.

See Small's Debates of the Convention of 1877. As to what is the common law, see Central R. Co. v. Collins, 40 Ga. 583.

The purchase of the Eatonton branch by the Middle Georgia & Atlantic was contrary to law, null, and void. While under the charter the Eatonton branch might buy or sell, no such authority belonged to Middle Georgia & Atlantic.

East Line & R. River R. Co. v. Rushing, 69 Tex. 313, 6 S. W. 834; Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co. 101 U. S. 71, 25 L. ed. 950.

The Middle Georgia & Atlantic Railway Company could not legally buy stock in another road.

Central R. Co. v. Collins, 40 Ga. 583; Hazlehurst v. Savannah, G. & N. A. R. Co. 43 Ga. 13.

The general assembly could not confer upon the Middle Georgia & Atlantic Railway Company authority to buy stock.

Ga. Code, §§ 5800, 5780; Hamilton v. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. 49 Fed. Rep. 424; Langdon v. Branch, 37 Fed. Rep. 449, 2 L. R. A. 120; Central R. Co. v. Collins, 40 Ga. 583; Ellington v. Beaver Dam Lumber Co. 93 Ga. 53, 19 S. E. 21.

The two roads were competing roads, and for that reason the sale was void.

The right to construct, or aid in the construction of, branch roads does not carry with it the right to purchase roads already constructed.

Campbell v. Marietta & C. R. Co. 23 Ohio St. 168; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Morris, 67 Tex. 692, 4 S. W. 156.

These roads are competing lines.

Central R. Co. v. Collins, 40 Ga. 583; Langdon v. Branch, 37 Fed. Rep. 448, 2 L. R. A. 120; Hamilton v. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. 49 Fed. Rep. 424; Clarke v. Central R. & Bkg. Co. 50 Fed. Rep. 338, 15 L. R. A. 683; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. State, 72 Tex. 404, 1 L. R. A. 849, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 335, 10 S. W. 81; State ex rel. Leese v. Atchison & N. R. Co. 24 Neb. 143, 38 N. W. 43; East Line & R. River R. Co. v. State, 75 Tex. 434, 12 S. W. 690; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Southern P. R. Co. 41 La. Ann. 970, 6 So. 888; State v. Vanderbilt, 37 Ohio St. 590; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Com. 97 Ky. 675, 31 S. W. 476; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 677, 40 L. ed. 849, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 714; Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 139 U. S. 24, 35 L. ed. 55, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 478; Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co. 101 U. S. 71, 25 L. ed. 950; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Com. (Pa.) 4 Cent. Rep. 495, 7 Atl. 368; East St. Louis Connecting R. Co. v. Jarvis, 92 Fed. Rep. 735, 34 C. C. A. 639.

The fact that rates have not been changed does not affect the question.

Pearsall v. Great Northern R. Co. 161 U. S. 48 L. R. A.

S. 648, 40 L. ed. 839, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 705; State ex rel. Watson v. Standard Oil Co. 49 Ohio St. 137, 15 L. R. A. 159, 30 N. E. 279; Richardson v. Buhl, 77 Mich. 632, 6 L. R. A. 465, 43 N. W. 1102; Stockton v. Central R. Co. 50 N. J. Eq. 52, 17 L. R. A. 102, 24 Atl. 964.

Equity may interfere by injunction, and may appoint a receiver.

Columbian Athletic Club v. State ex rel. McMahan, 143 Ind. 98, 28 L. R. A. 727, 40 N. E. 914; Stockton v. Central R. Co. 50 N. J. Eq. 52, 17 L. R. A. 102, 24 Atl. 964.

Messrs. Lawton & Cunningham, Thomas G. Lawson, J. R. Lamar, and H. A. Jenkins for defendants in error.

Lewis, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought in Putnam superior court, by and in the name of the state of Georgia, against the Central of Georgia Railway Company, the Middle Georgia & Atlantic Railway Company, and the Eatonton Branch Railroad. It was founded upon an executive order which was issued in the early part of the year 1899 upon a petition filed by certain citizens of Putnam county with the governor; the main purpose of the petition being to procure an executive order directing the attorney general to institute suit in the name of the state to set aside a certain contract of sale, under which the two last-named roads were purchased by the Central of Georgia Railway Company on the 31st of December, 1896, upon the ground that this contract of sale was in violation of article 4, § 2, par. 4, of the Constitution of this state. In the petition it was substantially alleged that these two companies (the Middle Georgia and the Central) were competing lines, and the effect of this purchase by the Central was to destroy competition, and to create a monopoly in the business formerly enjoyed by both corporations. It was especially charged that there was great competition between the two companies at Milledgeville and at Machen; and several points were designated in the petition, along the Middle Georgia & Atlantic Railway, where it was alleged that the result of the contract of purchase by the Central was to defeat competition at such places, and created in most of them a monopoly in the Central. The Central, through its counsel, filed an answer to the petition, specifically denying its allegation that the purchase of the Middle Georgia was designed, or had any tendency whatever, to defeat or lessen competition or to produce monopoly within the meaning of the Constitution; alleging that the two roads were never rivals or competitors, in the sense contemplated by the Constitution, and that the effect of the contract of purchase was really of vast benefit to the public interests, the same having resulted in the reduction of passenger and freight rates, in the better equipment of the road, and in superior accommodations to its patrons and the public generally. This case came on to be heard before his honor, Judge Hart, at chambers, on September 11, 1899, upon the prayer of the petition that the holding and operation of the Eatonton Branch and the Middle Georgia by the Central directly or indirectly be enjoined, and that until the final hearing of the case a restraining order be granted, prohibiting the further operation of these two railroads by the Central, and that a receiver be appointed to take charge of the two roads and all the corporate property belonging to them, and to hold, operate, and manage the same under the direction of the court, in order that competition may be preserved and the public interests protected until the two roads are operated by their respective corporations as separate properties. On the 18th of September, after hearing argument of counsel, the judge below, having held up his decision until that date, passed an order refusing the injunction and receiver as prayed for, to which plaintiff in error excepted, and assigns the same as error in its bill of exceptions.

In 1889 what was known as the Eatonton & Machen Railroad Company was incorporated by an act of the legislature, with authority to build and operate a line of railway from Eatonton to Machen, and to extend the same in either direction to Savannah and Atlanta. See Acts 1889, p. 227. At the same session of the legislature (see page 281) the name of the corporation was changed to the Middle Georgia & Atlantic Railway Company. During the year 1890 this line had been completed between the towns of Eatonton and Machen, and had been graded north of Machen nearly to Covington. In 1893 the road had been completed to Covington, and was being operated from Eatonton to that point. In 1893 there were in Eatonton two separate and independent lines of railway, namely, the Middle Georgia and the Central; the latter, through its receiver, operating the Eatonton Branch under a lease made many years previous. It appears from the record that the line from Eatonton to Milledgeville, known as the Eatonton Branch Railroad, was completed about the year 1852, and this branch has never been under any separate or independent operation; but upon its completion the Central Railroad & Banking Company of Georgia leased the same, and it went into the hands of the receiver of the Central, by whom it was operated until October, 1893, when, under an order of the United States circuit court, this branch railroad was allowed to withdraw, and did withdraw, its line from the control of the receiver, upon the showing made to the court by the receiver that this branch was not earning its operating expenses and annual rental. Upon assuming control of its road, the Eatonton Branch Railroad immediately entered into contract with the Middle Georgia & Atlantic, by which the latter corporation was to operate its line temporarily; the net proceeds to be divided between the two corporations on a mileage basis. The Middle Georgia & Atlantic then began to run its trains from Milledgeville to Covington. On the 1st day of June, 1896, the Middle Georgia & Atlantic purchased by deed of conveyance the railroad and corporate franchises of the Eatonton Branch, and then became the owner of the line from Milledgeville to Covington, until it sold out its road and franchises to the Central of Georgia on December 31, 1896. The affairs of the Central Railroad & Banking Company became liquidated under the receivership, and a reorganization perfected, by which all the property and franchises of that corporation passed into the custody and control of the new corporation, the Central of Georgia Railway Company. It owned and operated a line of railway from the city of Atlanta to the city of Savannah, via Macon, and from Gordon, in Wilkinson county, to Milledgeville, in the county of Baldwin, besides other lines.

1, 2. The suit in this case, and the relief therein sought, is based upon the following provision in the state Constitution, embodied in § 5800 of the Civil Code: "The general assembly of this state shall have no power to authorize any corporation to buy shares or stock in any other corporation in this state or elsewhere, or to make any contract, or agreement whatever, with any such corporation, which may have the effect, or be intended to have the effect, to defeat or lessen competition in their respective businesses, or to encourage monopoly; and all such contracts and agreements shall be illegal and void." The case necessarily involves the vital question as to what is a proper construction to be placed upon this language in the Constitution. Did the convention, in framing that instrument, intend to enact any new law or declare any new principle in connection with contracts touching the defeat or lessening of competition, or the production or encouragement of monopoly? If so, what is that new principle? Can it be gathered from the words employed as to what sort of competition or monopoly is meant? We are left absolutely in the dark, so far as provisions in the Constitution are concerned, as no language whatever is used therein to throw any light on, or give explanation touching, the matter. We are not, however, in absolute darkness as to the general principles of law that have been in existence from time almost immemorial touching contracts of this nature; that is, principles relating to the protection of the people against contracts preventing competition or creating monopolies. The common law has always abhorred a monopoly, and has encouraged competition in all legitimate businesses of the people, whether followed by individuals or corporations. The purpose of such law is patent. One great object it has in view is to prevent such combination in trade, traffic, or other business as to concentrate it under one management, and so place it under such control of one person, company, or corporation, as to enable them unreasonably to oppress their patrons by exacting payment of extortionate and exorbitant prices. Such contracts are usually designated as those in restraint of trade, and are referred to in § 3668 of the Civil Code as "contracts in general in restraint of trade."

But it does not follow that the law ever intended to defeat all combinations that might be made in the business affairs of life, or to declare null and void all contracts that might in some particulars have a tendency to lessen competition or to restrain trade. It requires no argument to show that such a rigid construction, instead of being demanded by public policy, would in many instances work with great injury to the public, and seriously affect the prosperity of a country. Competition may be so unreasonable as not only to result in disaster to the competitors, but also in injury to the public. For instance, three competitors may be engaged in the same line of business, in the fair conduct of which the public in a given community or section of the country is vitally interested. Public patronage may not be sufficient to sustain them all. Each one is engaged in an earnest contest for the mastery of the situation. One may be more powerful than the others, and, on account of financial ability, may reduce charges for accommodations, conveniences, or necessities furnished the public lower than the actual expense of operating the business, and in this way succeed in an extermination of the other two competitors; and this for the direct purpose of securing a monopoly, and raising prices to an exorbitant and oppressive amount. Now, suppose the two weaker institutions should make such an arrangement or combination as to place the business of both under one management, and under the control of such an owner as would have the ability to compete with the remaining enemy in the field; would any court of law or equity declare such a contract void, though made for the purpose of destroying competition between the parties thereto? Numerous other illustrations might be given of unreasonable competition that might prove injurious to the public interests. By virtue of § 2176 of the Civil Code, such unreasonable competition, in the case of railroads, is provided against by requiring a new road constructed under the provisions of the act to be at least 10 miles from the one already constructed. When an effort, therefore, is made by a state to set aside contracts of this character on account of public policy, the vital test is whether or not such a contract is injurious to the public interests. In the text-books and decisions touching the common law on this subject we can find no well-settled definition of "restraint of trade," and it would perhaps be impracticable to give any certain definition of the term which would be of universal application to every case that might arise involving the question of the validity of such contracts. The difficulty grows out of the fact of failure in the law-making power, to specify what acts and agreements shall constitute restraint of trade, monopoly, trusts, etc. Spelling, in his work on Trusts and Monopolies, enters into a discussion on this subject, and on page 224 he uses the following language: "The fatality of any legislation which does not circumstantially define what shall constitute restraint of trade, but leaves it to the courts to determine the question by reference to the common law, is this: There is no settled or accepted legal definition of restraint of trade at common law. The rule of public policy which must be violated by an agreement in restraint of trade is a variable and indefinable quantity. As an English judge once said: 'It is an unbridled horse, which, when you have once mounted it, you know not whether it will go, or where it will land you.' The Federal judges especially have assumed such liberal discretion in the interpretation of the rule as to indicate that there is in fact no rule, but that each decision should turn upon the exigencies, environment, and circumstances of the parties and the subject-matter. In other words, there is no pole star to guide the judicial mind, but each judge evokes from his own breast a proper decree upon the facts as presented in each case." See also the subject discussed in Clark on Contracts, p. 446.

In the case of Leslie v. Lorillard (decided by the New York court of appeals Oct. 16, 1838) 110 N. Y. 519, 1 L. R. A. 456, 18 N. E. 363, Gray, J., in discussing this question, on page 533, 110 N. Y., 461, 1 L. R. A., and page 366, 18 N. E., says: "When, therefore, the provisions of agreements in restraint of competition tend beyond measures for self-protection, and threaten the public good in a distinctly appreciable manner, they should not be sustained. The apprehension of danger to the public interests, however, should rest on evident grounds; and courts should refrain from the exercise of their equitable powers in interfering with and restraining the conduct of the affairs of individuals or of corporations, unless their conduct, in some tangible form, threatens the welfare of the public." The decision in that case was to the effect that a certain agreement of a steamship corporation to buy out a competing line, which line, for a consideration, agreed to discontinue running vessels between certain ports, was not void as in restraint of trade. The reason for that ruling was evidently based upon the idea that the facts and circumstances of that particular case did not show that the public interests were injuriously affected. In the case of Nester v. Continental Brewing Co. 24 L. R. A. 247, it was held: "The true test of the illegality of a combination to restrict business is its effect upon the public interests." 161 Pa. 473, 29 Atl. 102. In Spelling on Trusts & Monopolies, p. 158, it is declared: "But, since the public interest is the controlling consideration in this class of cases, the rule against restrictive contracts by public servants does not extend beyond or in conflict with public welfare. Therefore a court will not declare a contract between common carriers illegal merely because it gives monopoly, where it does not appear that the public is injured, or that either party to the agreement has exercised any function exclusive of public rights." And again on p. 75, § 52, he says that "courts are not governed by any hard and fast rule in determining whether a particular contract is in restraint of trade, and amenable to the rule of public policy rendering such contracts invalid; the test being whether the restriction is reasonable and necessary to the party's protection, the public interest being constantly kept in view." On page 76 the author advances the idea that it is not strange that decisions upon apparently similar facts are variable, and that it is almost impossible to deduce general abstract rules from them: that the courts have an almost unlimited range of discretion in deciding upon the facts of each case as presented, whether the restriction be reasonable and necessary, or inimical to the public interest, because calculated to stifle competition and lead to extortion and oppression. In Fowle v. Park, 131 U. S. 97, 33 L. ed. 67, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 658, Chief Justice Fuller, in discussing the question as to when the restraint of trade or the lessening of competition becomes invalid, in his opinion, says: "Public welfare is first considered, and if it be not involved, and the restraint upon one party is not greater than protection to the other requires, the contract may be sustained. The question is whether, under the particular circumstances of the case, and the nature of the particular contract involved in it, the contract is or is not unreasonable." See also Re Greene, 52 Fed. Rep. 118, where the reasonableness of such a contract is made to depend on whether it is more injurious to the public than is required to afford a fair protection to the party in whose favor it is secured. The court recognizes there that no precise boundary can be laid down as to when and under what circumstances the restraint would be reasonable, and when it would be excessive. See also Ellerman v. Chicago Junction R. & Union Stockyards Co. 49 N. J. Eq. 217, 23 Atl. 287-300. The same doctrine touching the effect such contracts have upon the public has been more than once recognized by this court. It will be noted that the words cited above from § 3668 of the Civil Code refer to contracts in general restraint of trade. It does not undertake to declare contracts in partial restraint of trade void. In Holmes v. Martin, 10 Ga. 503, it was decided: "A contract in general restraint of trade is void; but if in partial restraint of trade, only, it may be supported, provided the restraint be reasonable, and the contract founded on a consideration." Lumpkin, J., in delivering the opinion in that case, on page 505, says: "The reason assigned for this difference is, that all general restraints tend to promote monopolies, and to discourage industry and enterprise and just competition, whereas the same reason does not apply to special restraints. On the contrary, it may even be beneficial to the public that a particular place should not be overstocked with persons engaged in the same business." In the case of Western U. Teleg. Co. v. American U. Teleg. Co. 65 Ga. 160, 38 Am. Rep. 781, a contract between a railroad and telegraph company, vesting in the latter the exclusive right to use or occupy the right of way of the former for the erection and operation of its telegraph business, was held to be void. It will be seen that, although that decision was made since the Constitution of 1877, it was not based upon the provision in that Constitution against such contracts, but upon the common law, it being ruled that they were in general restraint of trade, tending to create monopolies, and were thus against public policy. This question was discussed in the case of Rakestraw v. Lanier, 104 Ga. 188, 30 S. E. 735, by Justice Little. The contract in that case involved a restraint upon one of the parties from following his occupation at a given place. Justice Little, in his opinion, on page 194, 104 Ga., and page 738, 30 S. E., says: "It is, however, satisfactorily established that, as a matter of law, such a contract is to be upheld, if the restraint imposed is not unreasonable, is founded on a valuable consideration, and is reasonably necessary to protect the interest of the party in whose favor it is imposed, and does not unduly prejudice the interests of the public." Further, on page 195, 104 Ga., and page 738, 30 S. E., he says: "In determining, however, whether such a contract is reasonable, the court will consider the nature and extent of the trade or business, the situation of the parties, and all the other circumstances." Authorities could be multiplied, sustaining the position that at common law the test as to whether agreements relating to a restraint of trade, or, what is the same thing, to lessening competition and encouraging monopoly, is whether or not the public interests have been injuriously affected. But we think the above citations are quite sufficient to establish the doctrine.

The above doctrines of the common law have been repeatedly applied by the courts of this country to transactions between railroad companies. The first time the question was before this court as to whether one railroad could purchase the controlling interest in a competing line, and thus destroy the competition that formerly existed between them when they were operated as independent lines, was in the case of Central R. Co. v. Collins, 40 Ga. 582. The Central Railroad & Banking Company, chartered to build a railroad from Savannah to Macon, and the Southwestern Railroad Company, which was chartered to build a railroad from Macon to the Chattahoochee river, were about to purchase from the city of Savannah 12,383 shares of stock in the Atlantic & Gulf Railroad Company, which was chartered to build a road from Savannah to Bainbridge. It was alleged that the purpose of these two companies was to use the stock thus purchased to affect the management of the Atlantic & Gulf Railroad. An action was brought to enjoin the purchase of this stock, and payment therefor, and that the two railroad companies be forever prohibited from voting the stock, and from controlling the Atlantic & Gulf road, to the detriment of the interests of complainants and the people of Georgia. There seems to have been no doubt in the case that these two roads were competing lines, each terminating at the seaboard, and penetrating at their extremities and by their connections the distant southwest, competing for the traffic and travel in that region of the country. On page 583 (Syl., point 6) it was decided: "It is a part of the public policy of the state, as indicated by the charter of several railroads from the seaboard to the interior, to secure a reasonable competition between said roads for public patronage, and it is contrary to that policy for one of said roads to attempt to secure a controlling interest in another; and any contract made with that view will be set aside by a court of equity, as illegal, beyond the objects of the charter, and contrary to the public policy of the state." The decision was evidently based upon the common-law doctrine that contracts or agreements producing monopoly or lessening or defeating competition were void. It will be noted that that decision was rendered prior to the Constitution of 1877. It will be observed that Robert Toombs was of counsel for the complainants in that case, and, as such counsel, contended for the doctrine of the common law as therein enunciated. As a member of the constitutional convention of 1877, he is reputed to have drawn up this section of the Constitution now under consideration. In construing this section of the Constitution with reference to defeating or lessening competition and encouraging monopoly, the question naturally arises as to what was the nature of the competition and monopoly, the question naturally arises as to self uses no explanatory language, and there is really nothing in the language employed to give these words any different meaning than what was almost universally recognized by judiciaries and legislatures for ages. In construing a Constitution, a safe rule is to give its words such significance as they have at common law, especially if there is nothing in the instrument to indicate an intention by its framer that the language in question should have a different construction. We think, therefore, that the purpose of the Constitution was to declare no new principle. What is therein declared with reference to corporations is equally applicable to individuals. It will be noted that the provision is addressed to the general assembly of the state, and declares that body shall have "no power to authorize any corporation in this state or elsewhere," etc. There was a reason for applying the principle to corporations and not individuals; for the legislature could not authorize an individual to do an act against public policy, whereas the powers which corporations exercise are governed by the stipulations in their charters, and franchises conferred upon them by the law-making power. At common law a corporation could not make such contracts as contemplated by the Constitution, without special grant of power. The object of the Constitution was to restrict the legislature in this particular, and our judgment is that in this provision of our Constitution it was simply declaratory of the common-law principle recognized in the Collins Case; the purpose being to make that principle, so far 48 L. R. A.

as corporations were concerned, the organic law of the state, and thus put it beyond the power of the legislature to grant any rights or privileges to corporations inconsistent with its terms. Another proper rule to be observed and duly considered in the interpretation of a Constitution is to determine what construction the legislative department of a state thereafter placed upon such provisions, in enacting laws in relation thereto. The legislature of the state has, in several railroad acts passed since the adoption of the Constitution, authorized the purchase, sale, lease, or consolidation of connecting railroads, but has added provisos that such contracts shall not be made with competing lines. See Acts 1880-81, p. 165, § 15, where the proviso to this purchasing power is added, that "no railroad shall purchase a competing line of railroad, or enter into any contract with a competing line of railroad calculated to defeat or lessen competition in this state." See also Acts 1892, p. 49, § 13, where similar power is given, with a like proviso, which prevents the railroads from making such contracts with a competing line of railroad, calculated to defeat or lessen competition. These provisions of law are embodied in §§ 2173 and 2179 of the Civil Code. In 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 931, it is held: "A constitutional provision is to be construed with reference to the principles of the common law," and the common law will be upheld in the absence of an apparent contrary intention. It is also stated that "a contemporaneous legislative exposition of a constitutional provision is entitled to great deference." See numerous authorities cited in the text.

It will thus be seen that the policy of this state is the same that exists in some other states of this Union where there are constitutional and statutory provisions prohibiting the consolidation of competing lines. In the case of Cumberland Valley R. Co. v. Gettysburg & H. R. Co. (decided by the supreme court of Pennsylvania in 1896) 177 Pa. 519, 35 Atl. 952, it was decided, in effect, that railroad companies whose roads approach their point of connection almost at right angles are not competing lines. This question as to what constitutes competing lines of railway, within the meaning of the law, was discussed in the case of State ex rel. Nolan v. Montana R. Co. 21 Mont. 221, 45 L. R. A. 271, 53 Pac. 623, where it was ruled that two roads were competing lines when their relation to one another was such as to enable them to cut rates to principal or terminal points. Hunt, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, on page 234, 21 Mont., page 279, 45 L. R. A., and page 627, 53 Pac., declares: "The true rule is that whether two railroads are parallel or competing is a question of fact,—of physical fact. . . . Exact parallelism, however, is not what is included in the meaning of the words of the Constitution forbidding consolidation of parallel railroads. A reasonable construction must obtain. . . . We should say that by parallel railroads are meant railroads running in one general direction, traversing the same section of the country, and running within a few miles of one another throughout their respective routes. They may or may not be competing. That depends upon their termini and their commands of traffic." Again, on page 236, 21 Mont., page 280, 45 L. R. A., and page 628, 53 Pac., he says: "Whether lines of road are competitive or not depends upon the business of the companies, the conduct of the roads by their authorities, their channels of traffic, and generally—nearly always—upon whether the roads extend for transportation from and to the same points along their routes." There is nothing in the record in this case to indicate that the Central and Middle Georgia roads are competing lines, in the light of above authorities. The Central purchased a branch road from Gordon to Milledgeville. There it connects with the Middle Georgia. For nearly fifty years has the Eatonton Branch been chartered, and yet at no time has it been operated as an independent road. On the contrary, it was leased and operated by the Central as a continuation of this branch line from Gordon to Milledgeville, and on to Eatonton. In the Collins Case, 40 Ga. 633, the relation of this Eatonton Branch to the Central was considered and discussed by this court. It was there held that the Southwestern, Waynesboro, and Eatonton roads were feeders to the Central; their interests were in harmony; and both the public and the stockholders of each road were interested in their acting in concert. If, then, it was treated not as a competitor at that time, we cannot see upon what theory or method of reasoning it can be contended that a further extension of this branch, not in the direction of the Central's line, nor within its territory, but to a point within the territory of a competing line, namely, the Georgia Railroad, would make the line a competitor of the Central. It was also decided in the Collins Case that a line termed then the Waynesboro Line, which connected with the Central at Millen, and ran to Augusta, was not a competing line of the Central, but a feeder, yet it was doubtless true that when the Central purchased that line it necessarily lessened competition at Millen. But, on the other hand, it increased competition at Augusta after its absorption by the Central, by giving another direct line from that point to the seaboard. There is nothing, however, in this case, from the location of these two roads, the Central and Middle Georgia, and the direction which each ran from their connecting point at Milledgeville, being almost at right angles, to indicate that they were competing lines, in any legal sense of that word.

It is insisted, however, that Milledgeville was a competitive point for these roads and the Georgia road, and the purchase by the Central of the Middle Georgia had the effect of lessening this competition. But it by no means follows that, because the number of competitors in a given business is diminished, competition is thereby lessened, to the injury of the public. The facts in the record really show that prior to this contract of purchase the Georgia Railroad and the Middle Georgia acted in concert and harmony, by some sort of arrangement or understanding they had with reference to the transportation of through freight, and that the competition then was really between these two roads, on the one hand, and the Central, on the other. It would seem, therefore, that the effect of the purchase was simply to transfer the competition to the Middle Georgia and Central, on the one part, and the Georgia Railroad, on the other. It is further contended that at Machen the Middle Georgia crossed the Central,—that road having purchased and operating the road from Macon to Athens, which passes through Machen,—and the effect of the purchase was to diminish competition at Machen. On the other hand, there is overwhelming testimony in the record to show a very marked increase of competition created by this consolidation of the two roads in question in Covington, and that this competition was increased at the various stations along the line of the road between Machen and Covington; and the testimony seems conclusive that the general interests of the public along the line of this branch road from Milledgeville to Covington were benefited by its consolidation with the Central. Besides, it seems that the sale of its road by the Middle Georgia was an absolute necessity. It was then in a run-down condition. Its roadbed was in such a fix as to render transportation over the same absolutely dangerous to life and property. Citizens interested in its traffic, it seems, petitioned the railroad commissioners to have the road put in good order, and proceedings in court were actually instituted for this purpose. It appears that over a quarter of a million of dollars were lost by the owners of this road, and its president swore on this trial that they could not run it safely to life and property, owing to its physical condition, and that the sale of it to somebody became absolutely necessary. It appears that an effort was made to sell it to the Georgia Railroad, which declined to become the purchaser. Then the Central was approached, became the purchaser, and at once commenced the operation of the road. Its condition was thereafter greatly improved, to the general satisfaction of its patrons throughout the entire length of the line. We quote the following from the learned opinion of Judge Hart, embodied in his decision in this case: "They [meaning the Middle Georgia] were then charging four cents per mile as their passenger tariff, and the maximum freight charges the railroad commission would allow. Immediately after the purchase by the Central, passenger tariff was reduced to three cents per mile, and the freight tariff, where changed, was reduced from 2 to 50 per cent. The roadbed was put in good and safe condition. Its equipment is full and complete, and the service is generally satisfactory to its patrons. No one complains that the road is not now giving a better, safer, and cheaper service than when the Middle Georgia was operated as an independent line. Scores of affidavits were read on the hearing, and, with remarkable unanimity, affiants asked that there might be no breaking up of the present system by the appointment of a receiver. The court is of the opinion that the purchase has been beneficial to every business, every shipper, every person living on its line, except perhaps to the merchants of Shady Dale, who had their freights delivered to their free of charge from the depot of the Central, or individuals at Milledgeville who had free passes given them as an inducement to route their freight over a particular line. It was competition, no doubt, at these two points which induced these concessions; but the people as a whole have been benefited both in convenience and safety in travel, as well as in saving of freight and passenger tariff. It is susceptible of proof that in reduced freight charges the people of Eatonton and Putnam county save annually over $20,000. A lumber dealer in Covington swears that he saves annually $1,800 on the single item of lumber handled by his firm." We have read this voluminous record of evidence entirely through, and can say, from the facts developed on the trial, that the above conclusion of Judge Hart touching the beneficial effects of this purchase by the Central to the public at large along the line of this branch road was fully authorized.

In determining whether this contract defeated or lessened competition within the meaning of the Constitution, we must look at its effects in the light of all the facts and circumstances of the case along the entire line of the road in question. The evidence in this case tends to establish the fact that the traffic at Machen and Shady Dale, where it is claimed competition was lessened, does not exceed 2.6 per cent of the traffic on the whole line; and yet the people of that community reap the same advantage in the reduction of freight and passenger tariff as the people along the road from one end of the line to the other. It is the policy of this state, both in its Constitution and its statutes, to prevent a railroad from purchasing a competing or rival line whenever the effect of such a purchase would be to defeat or lessen competition; but, in considering whether or not a transaction has had this effect, we must look at the results in their entirety, and the effect upon the general public interested in the traffic of the road along its line. If that general effect be to increase competition to a far greater extent than it has been diminished at particular points, it cannot, with reason, be said that competition has been defeated or lessened. In point of fact, it has actually been increased. But it is insisted in this case that if competition be lessened anywhere,—it matters not what may be the general effects upon the public, and it matters not whether any loss has accrued to anyone from an increase of charges for transportation of freight or passengers,—the Constitution has been violated, and the contract is therefore void. It is true that the doing of an illegal act cannot be justified upon the plea that no harm has resulted, but it is perfectly legitimate to look at the purposes for which a law is enacted, in determining its true intent and meaning. The object of the law against defeating or lessening competition was to prevent it being placed in the power of one, whether individual or corporation, to so control rates of trade and traffic as to increase them to an unreasonable amount. If a transaction, therefore, instead of having such a result, has an opposite effect, it furnishes, to say the least of it, a strong argument that the law has not been violated; and the argument becomes more overwhelming when there is nothing in the environment and business of the parties to place them in the position of rivals or real competitors. As Judge Hart has correctly said in his opinion: "It is the declared policy of this state to prohibit railroads from purchasing competitive or rival lines, but it is also its declared policy to encourage the great trunk lines to buy, build, and operate branch or feeding lines. Both policies are equally wise. The former is to prohibit contracts in restraint of trade. The latter is to build up our great, undeveloped interior. Railroads should be prohibited from doing the first, and should be encouraged to do the last." There is nothing in the Constitution indicating any hostility whatever to the extension of lines of railway by the construction or purchase of branch roads or the purchase of connecting lines. On the contrary, under § 5799 of the Civil Code, it is provided that, in the event the charter of any corporation was altered or amended, such corporation should hold its charter subject to the provisions of this Constitution. The object of that was to subject such corporations to the taxing power of the state, although exempted therefrom under their original charters. But so jealous was the convention in protecting the rights of the railroads to construct, operate, or control branch roads, that it was provided that section should not extend to any amendment for the purpose of allowing any existing road to take stock in, or aid in the building of, any branch road. It would seem manifest, therefore, that the following provision in the Constitution with reference to preventing the general assembly from giving power to any corporation to make a contract to defeat or lessen competition, or to buy shares of stock in any other corporation, had no reference whatever to the purchase, ownership, and control of branch roads; and they therefore could not have been regarded as competing lines to the main roads with which they might make connection. As the result of this policy, great trunk lines have been extended in this country half across the continent. Doubtless, in the purchase of connecting lines and branch railroads, competition was lessened at given points. But the general effect of these consolidations and connections has really been to increase competition; has added greatly to the public convenience, and furnished greater and more commodious facilities for traveling; has operated to reduce the cost of transportation; has brought remote parts of the country in close proximity, as it were, to each other; has developed resources that would otherwise have remained dormant, by opening up the markets of the world to the products of the land; and has generally contributed to work to the welfare and prosperity of the people. Even if we are incorrect in our position that the provision in the Constitution with reference to defeating competition or encouraging monopoly is only an embodiment of the common law upon the subject, and if it contains a new principle unknown to the common law, then the clause in question is evidently not self-acting, for no light is thrown upon the new meaning intended to be given the words used. It would follow, therefore, that appropriate legislation would be necessary to carry into effect such a new principle, whatever it might be. Under the provisions of § 5803 of the Civil Code, it is provided that the general assembly shall enforce the provisions of this article by appropriate legislation. In this case, then, the courts would be constrained to decide that the appropriate legislation contemplated is embodied in the general railroad acts, to which we have above referred, where the purchase, sale, lease, or consolidation of connecting railroads is allowed, providing the contracts were not made between competing lines. So at last the judiciary would be driven to the necessity, whenever the contest was made, in determining whether or not such contracts were legal, of deciding the question as to whether they were between competing lines, and not simply lines that had competing points where competition was lessened to a degree insignificant when compared to its increase at various other points, and the benefits to the public generally along the line of transportation. When the state appeals to the courts in such matters, she occupies the position of a representative of the public, whose rights if they have been infringed upon by a violation of the Constitution or the laws, will be zealously protected by the courts. For the same reasons courts should deny her prayer, if it appeared on trial that granting the relief sought would be productive of greater injury to the public than the wrongs of which complaint is made.

3. There was ample evidence in this case to authorize the conclusion of the judge below that the consolidation of the two lines of railroad involved did not defeat, and was not intended to defeat or lessen, competition, or to encourage monopoly, in the sense in which those words were used in the Constitution; that these roads were not competing lines; and that the public interests were in no wise injured by their consolidation. The judgment of the court, therefore, refusing an injunction and the appointment of a receiver, is affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

FIDELITY & CASUALTY COMPANY of New York, Appt.,

v.

Hannah M. SITTING.

(181 Ill. 111.)

1. The burden of proof that death by accident was within an exception in an accident insurance policy is upon the insurer after proof of accidental death.
2. The attempt of a traveling salesman to get upon a train which is already in motion is not, as matter of law, a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, within the meaning of an exception in an insurance policy.
3. A voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger within the meaning of an insurance policy does not mean simply a voluntary performance of the act which results in injury, but also that it is performed with a consciousness of the danger, or that the danger is so apparent that a man of ordinary intelligence would, under the circumstances, necessarily know it.

(October 13, 1899.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Court, First District,

NOTE.—For voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger within the meaning of insurance policy, see Fidelity & C. Co. v. Chambers (Va.) 40 L. R. A. 432, and note.

48 L. R. A.

affirming a judgment of the Superior Court for Cook County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on an accident insurance policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John A. Post and John B. Brady, for appellant:

When the verdict of a jury is against the weight of the evidence this court and the supreme court, when it has passed upon the facts, have again and again set aside verdicts.

Bishop v. Busse, 69 Ill. 403; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Chambers, 71 Ill. 519; Booth v. Hines, 54 Ill. 363; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Shannon, 43 Ill. 338; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Willard, 31 Ill. App. 436; Chicago v. Lavelle, 83 Ill. 482; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Herring, 57 Ill. 59.

If a proof of a fact is so preponderating that a verdict against it would be set aside by the court as contrary to the evidence, then it is the duty of the court to direct the verdict.

Tefft v. Ashbaugh, 13 Ill. 602; Abend v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 111 Ill. 202, 53 Am. Rep. 616; Doane v. Lockwood, 115 Ill. 490, 4 N. E. 500; Pennsylvania Co. v. Backes, 133 Ill. 255, 24 N. E. 563; Ward v. Chicago, 15 Ill. App. 98.

The test now most frequently employed in exercising the right to direct a verdict is whether a different verdict would not be set aside as contrary to the evidence. If such is the case, a verdict should be directed.

Phillips v. Dickerson, 85 Ill. 11, 28 Am. Rep. 607; Simmons v. Chicago & T. R. Co. 110 Ill. 340; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. O'Conner, 115 Ill. 254, 3 N. E. 501; Bartelott v. International Bank, 119 Ill. 259, 9 N. E. 898; People v. People's Ins. Exchange, 126 Ill. 406, 2 L. R. A. 340, 18 N. E. 774; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Snyder, 128 Ill. 655, 21 N. E. 520; Dechert v. Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. 17 Ill. App. 74; Wood v. Illinois C. R. Co. 23 Ill. App. 370; Knight v. Gaultney, 23 Ill. App. 376; Miller v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 24 Ill. App. 326; Hosmer v. Teller, 27 Ill. App. 488; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Adler, 28 Ill. App. 102, Aff'd in 129 Ill. 335, 21 N. E. 846; Roden v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 30 Ill. App. 354; Edwards v. Hushing, 31 Ill. App. 223; Spannagle v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 31 Ill. App. 460; Huschle v. Morris, 31 Ill. App. 545; Duggan v. Peoria, D. & E. R. Co. 42 Ill. App. 536.

When the policy distinctly stated that the appellant company did not insure nor intend to cover a "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger," the appellant did not intend to cover and pay for injuries that deceased might receive while rushing into the face of danger and attempting to mount an express train, a train that was built especially to get up quick speed and to make rapid stops.

Smith v. Preferred Mut. Acci. Asso. 104 Mich. 634, 62 N. W. 990; Williams v. United States Mut. Acci. Asso. 133 N. Y. 366, 31 N. E. 222.

If the danger was obvious, the exposure thereto voluntary and unnecessary, and the death of the assured ensued in consequence, the case may fairly be held to be within the exemption in the policy.

Tuttle v. Travellers' Ins. Co. 134 Mass. 175, 45 Am. Rep. 316; Morel v. Mississippi Valley L. Ins. Co. 4 Bush, 535; Sawtelle v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co. 15 Blatchf. 216, Fed. Cas. No. 12,392; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Jones, 30 Ga. 541, 7 S. E. 83; Bean v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. 50 Mo. App. 459.

Messrs. Thornton & Chancellor, for appellee:

"Voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger" has been defined by our courts to be a willing or wilful assumption of the risk, knowing the risk; it means,—a wilful, conscious assumption of the risk of danger; i. e., it was done voluntarily, with full knowledge of the danger through which the deceased lost his life.

Accident insurance is issued and accepted for the purpose of indemnity against accident and death caused by accidental means, and the language of such policy should be construed with that purpose in view.

Healey v. Mutual Acci. Asso. 133 Ill. 556, 9 L. R. A. 371, 25 N. E. 52; Rockford Ins. Co. v. Nelson, 65 Ill. 420; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Monks, 52 Ill. App. 627; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Eggmann, 58 Ill. App. 21; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Morain, 48 L. R. A.

140 Ill. 117, 29 N. E. 869; Elgin, J. & E. R. Co. v. Raymond, 148 Ill. 241, 35 N. E. 729.

Two theories were advanced in this case. One by the plaintiff that Herman Sittig met his death by coming in contact with the ticket office, and the other by the defense that he attempted to get upon a moving train of cars, and, in his attempt lost his footing and fell under the train, and was thereby killed.

There was evidence in the case on both of these theories, and it was for the jury to say, from all the evidence in the case, which of these theories was the correct one.

Matson v. Taylor, 35 Ill. App. 549; McMalon v. Sankey, 35 Ill. App. 41; Brandt v. McEntee, 53 Ill. App. 467; Garretson v. Becker, 52 Ill. App. 255; Selover v. Osgood, 52 Ill. App. 260; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Harmes, 52 Ill. App. 649; Wallace v. Buckingham, 34 Ill. App. 38; Scharf v. People, 34 Ill. App. 400.

Carter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellate court has affirmed a judgment recovered by appellee in the superior court of Cook county against appellant on a policy of accident insurance. The insured, Herman C. Sittig, was accidentally killed while attempting to board a suburban train of the Illinois Central Railroad Company. The appellate court, in stating the case, said: "The evidence tends to show that he reached the neighborhood of the steps of the station platform just after the train had started; that he threw his valise on the platform of the car, seized the railing, and attempted to climb on, but either lost his hold and fell after being carried some distance, or else was knocked off and killed by coming in contact with a small building used as a ticket office, which stood very near the track, and distant about 140 or 150 feet from the station platform." The evidence shows that this is a fair statement of the accident. The insured was a traveling salesman, and so described in the policy, which stated that "this insurance covers injuries received in travel by regular passenger or mail trains." The policy also contained this clause: This insurance does not cover . . . voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger; and the contention of the appellant is that the insured met his death by exposing himself voluntarily to unnecessary danger, and that for that reason the judgment cannot be sustained. So far as the assignment of error embraces the question of fact involved in the decision of the appellate court, such decision is, by virtue of the statute, final, and we shall not, therefore, follow appellant's counsel in their argument upon the facts. But at the close of the evidence the defendant asked the court to instruct the jury to find a verdict for the defendant, and took an exception to the court's refusal to give the instruction, and thus the legal sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the judgment is presented to us for decision.

There was sufficient evidence to sustain the conclusion that after the insured had secured a secure footing upon the steps of the car, and was holding to the hand rail, and about to draw himself upon the platform of the car, he was struck with such force upon the side and back of his head by the ticket-office building, as the train passed it, as to break his neck and knock him under the train. He was a traveling salesman, but what was the particular emergency or necessity for his effort to board this particular train after it had started does not appear from the evidence. Nor does it appear that he knew of the ticket-office building, or its close proximity to the track or to the moving cars. The trainmen testified that the train, after starting, had moved from 100 to 125 feet, and was going at a speed of from 8 to 10 miles an hour, when the insured attempted to get aboard, but other witnesses testified to a less degree of speed. There was testimony, also, that someone called to the insured, as he was about to make the attempt to board the train, not to do so, but whether or not this warning was heard by the insured does not appear. The death by accident insured against by the policy having been proved, it devolved on the defendant to prove a violation by the insured of the condition, or, rather, that by his act he brought himself within the exception in the policy relied on to avoid payment. This exception, as applicable to this case, was, in substance, that, although accidental, death caused by voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger was not insured against. To relieve the company from liability, it was necessary to establish two facts: First, that the exposure to danger was voluntary on his part; and, second, that it was unnecessary.

The term "voluntary exposure" does not mean simply that the act of attempting to get aboard of the moving train was voluntary, or was consciously and intentionally performed, but also that the insured was conscious of the danger to which he was then exposing himself, and voluntarily assumed it, or that the danger was so apparent that a man of ordinary intelligence would, under the circumstances, necessarily have known it. One may voluntarily do an act exposing himself to great danger, which danger he does not apprehend and which is not obvious. In such a case it could not be said that he voluntarily exposed himself to danger. If he does not know of the danger, how can it be said that he voluntarily assumes it or exposes himself to it? Mere failure to observe ordinary care would not, as in an action for negligence, defeat a recovery on the contract. This view of the law is not controverted by appellant. Indeed, the trial court, at appellant's request, instructed the jury that the words "voluntary exposure," as used in the policy, implied conscious, intentional exposure,—something which he was willing to take the risk of; that it meant a willing or wilful assumption of the risk knowing the risk,—a wilful, conscious assumption of the risk of danger. As before said, there was no evidence whatever that he knew of the proximity of the ticket-office building, or had any reason to believe that he was exposing himself to the danger of coming in contact with any such object before he could get within the car. His experience, strength, and activity may have been such, so far as the evidence shows, that there was less danger to him in mounting a car going at the speed mentioned by the witnesses than there would be to many persons in mounting a car at the moment of starting, and it would be an unreasonable rule to adopt to hold, as a legal proposition, that a traveler who steps upon the platform or steps of a moving car of a railway train voluntarily exposes himself to unnecessary danger, though it may be conceded he is guilty of negligence in so doing. There are doubtless few trainmen whose duty it is to alight at station platforms who do not board the train after it has started. In doing so it certainly could not be said, as a matter of law, that they thus incur obvious danger. At what rate of speed, then, must the train be moving before it can be said that an attempt to get aboard would be obviously dangerous? All reasonable minds would agree that it would be obviously dangerous to attempt to climb upon a passing railway train going at full speed, or at a high rate of speed, and in a proper case, doubtless, the jury would be so instructed; but it does not follow that it would be proper to so instruct the jury in a case where the train had not, after starting, proceeded beyond 100 or 125 feet, and had acquired only such speed as shown by the evidence in this case. The question in such a case is one of fact, and not of law, and in the case at bar the question of fact has been conclusively settled against the appellant. It would be to usurp the province of the jury and of the courts below, and to do what by statute we are forbidden to do, should we reverse this judgment on this contention of appellant.

Many cases have been cited, but in most of them the provisions of the policy were different, or the facts found were materially different, from those in the case at bar. Thus, in Tuttle v. Travellers' Ins. Co. 134 Mass. 175, 45 Am. Rep. 316, in addition to a provision similar to the one here under consideration, the policy required the insured to use all due diligence for his personal safety and protection. But we need not review the cases which were decided upon questions of fact or upon dissimilar provisions of the insurance contract. Here we are asked to declare, as a matter of law, against the conclusive finding of facts to the contrary, that the insured voluntarily exposed himself to unnecessary danger; this, too, notwithstanding there is no evidence, direct or circumstantial, to which we have been referred, whether such exposure was necessary or not. For one to leap into a turbulent stream, rush into a burning building, or do any other hazardous thing to save human life, would be a voluntary exposure to danger but not to unnecessary danger. So, too, many emergencies in the lives of men occur where the most urgent necessity requires their presence at some particular place at some particular time, and where to miss a train would involve serious consequences. In such a case a voluntary exposure to danger might not be unnecessary. The presence of a physician or surgeon at some critical period in the illness or injury of a human being might be necessary to save life, and it might be necessary for him to expose himself to danger to reach his patient, or in some other respect to perform his professional duty. The necessity implied in the provision of the policy does not mean only that which is unavoidable or inevitable, but also any object or purpose which men of moral responsibility and prudence would regard as of such serious importance in the performance of duty as to demand or justify the incurring of risk or danger to accomplish it. Whether the jury, and finally the appellate court, decided the question of fact correctly, we cannot inquire, but it is clear that the trial court did not err in refusing to give to the jury the instruction to find for the defendant.

It is also urged that the trial court erred in refusing certain other instructions, but we are of the opinion no error was committed in that regard.

The judgment must be affirmed.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

Eliza GIBSON, Appt.,
v.

Harold C. MEGREW et al., Assignees of Masonic Mutual Benefit Society.

(.....Ind.....)

A member of a mutual benefit society cannot be compelled to pay an assessment, where his contract does not provide that he shall pay assessments or make any provision as to nonpayment, except that his certificate shall be forfeited therefor.

(March 6, 1900.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Marion County in favor of defendants in a proceeding brought to compel the levying of an assessment to pay a claim under a certificate in the Masonic Mutual Benefit Society. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Carson & Moore, for appellant:

The liability of a member of the Masonic Mutual Benefit Society of Indiana is to pay the amounts named in his certificate of membership on levy of proper assessments therefor, and such payment is not voluntary with the member.

The demurrer admits the incorporation as alleged.

There is absolutely nothing in the plan, purpose, or contract of the society, now an insolvent, to differentiate it from any other mutual insurance company.

The character of an association is to be determined from its essential structure, and not from the use of disjointed words.

Bankers' & M. Mut. Ben. Asso. v. Stapp, 77 Tex. 517, 14 S. W. 168; McCorkle v. Texas Benev. Asso. 71 Tex. 152, 8 S. W. 516.

The contracts made by "beneficial" societies are given the same effect as ordinary insurance contracts.

Holland v. Taylor, 111 Ind. 121, 12 N. E. 116; Presbyterian Mut. Assur. Fund v. Allen, 106 Ind. 593, 7 N. E. 317.

NOTE.—As to liability of member of benefit society to action for assessments, see Ellerbe v. Barney (Mo.) 23 L. R. A. 435, and note; and Lehman v. Clark (Ill.) 43 L. R. A. 649. 48 L. R. A.

If, in point of fact, the society is an insurance company, pure and simple, its charter must be the appropriate body of insurance law.

There has never been any question in this state relative to the liability of a member of a fire insurance company organized under the act of 1852 to payment of an assessment properly levied.

Howard v. Whitman, 29 Ind. 557; Boland v. Whitman, 33 Ind. 64; Embree v. Shideler, 36 Ind. 423; Clark v. Manufacturers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 130 Ind. 332, 30 N. E. 212.

The entire plan of the society was based upon the idea of the payment by surviving members of post-mortem assessments to meet losses.

The common-law obligation of a member of a mutual insurance society, independent of the form of his obligation or the precise character of the expressed promise, is to respond to an assessment for losses.

The solvency of the assessment company depends upon the legal right of such company to collect assessments from its members.

In the case of the old line company, the point of view whence the law looks at the contract of insurance is that of the policy holder, it bringing into being the necessary conditions to secure a performance of the contract. A like attitude in the case of the assessment company will require a holding that assessments properly levied are enforceable legal demands.

The legal liability of the member to respond to assessments appears from a consideration of the trilateral relationship obtaining in the assessment company. Each member is not only an assured, but is an insurer of the other members. He also has relation to the corporation as an entity, and is bound to contribute to the expenses of its existence.

Lion Mut. Marine Ins. Asso. v. Tucker, L. R. 12 Q. B. Div. 187; Re Albion Assur. Soc. L. R. 12 Ch. Div. 239; Carlton v. Southern Mut. Ins. Co. 72 Ga. 371; Dettra v. Simon, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 342; Dettra v. Kestner, 147 Pa. 566, 23 Atl. 889.

Where a person becomes a member of a assessment insurance company, his obligation as an insurer is to contribute to the extent necessary for the payment of the losses accruing to the other members, unless the statute under which the incorporation is had, or the mutual agreements of the members, restricts or limits such liability.

Rundle v. Kennan, 79 Wis. 492, 48 N. W. 516; Macklem v. Bacon, 57 Mich. 334, 24 N. W. 91.

The constitution and by-laws of the society, the application for membership therein, and the certificate of membership issued by the society, together, constitute an express agreement on the part of the member to pay assessments.

Ellerbe v. Barney, 119 Mo. 632, 23 L. R. A. 435, 25 S. W. 384; McDonald v. Ross-Lewin, 29 Hun, 87; Fulton v. Stevens, 99 Wis. 307, 74 N. W. 803.

When an assessment insurance society goes into voluntary insolvency it is the function of the court having jurisdiction of the trust to cause an assessment upon the members to be levied sufficient to meet losses, and, for this purpose, the court succeeds to the powers of the directors.

Vanatta v. New Jersey Mut. L. Ins. Co. 31 N. J. Eq. 15; Com. v. Massachusetts Mut. F. Ins. Co. 112 Mass. 116; Dettra v. Kestner, 147 Pa. 566, 23 Atl. 889; Capital City Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Boggs, 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 394; McDonald v. Ross-Lewin, 29 Hun, 87; Wood v. Standard Mut. Live Stock Ins. Co. 154 Pa. 157, 26 Atl. 103; Howard v. Whitman, 29 Ind. 557.

Where a corporation makes an assignment for the benefit of its creditors, under a voluntary assignment law, the assets of the corporation are in custodia legis, the same as if a receiver were the officer.

Lewis v. Glenn, 54 Va. 947, 6 S. E. 866; Glenn v. Williams, 60 Md. 935; 5 Thomp. Corp. §§ 6469, 6470; 3 Thomp. Corp. §§ 3537, 3550, 3551, 3553; Boeppler v. Menouen, 17 Mo. App. 447.

Messrs. Chambers, Pickens, & Moores, for appellees:

This contract contains no express promise to pay assessments. Such payment is voluntary.

Nonpayment terminates membership.

Rood v. Railway Pass. & Freight Conductors' Mut. Ben. Asso. 31 Fed. Rep. 64; Lehman v. Clark, 174 Ill. 288, 43 L. R. A. 648, 51 N. E. 222.

Liability is only against one who continues to assert his membership.

After insolvency proceedings it is too late to assess.

Re Protection L. Ins. Co. 9 Biss. 188, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,444.

Jordan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant, Eliza Gibson, petitioned the Marion circuit court in behalf of herself and others, to order appellees, as the assignees or trustees of the Masonic Mutual Benefit Society, of the state of Indiana, to levy and collect assessments from all persons who had been members thereof within the past 48 L. R. A.

six years. The demand of the petitioner was that such an assessment, under the order of the court wherein such trust was pending, be made by the appellees as would create a sum sufficient to pay all death losses remaining unpaid, together with accrued interest thereon, and all costs of collecting such assessments, etc. A demurrer was sustained to the petition, and judgment was rendered against appellant for costs. The only error assigned is predicated upon this ruling and judgment.

The petition discloses substantially the following facts: Appellant is the beneficiary under a certificate or policy of insurance numbered 12,009, in class 4, issued by the said Masonic Mutual Benefit Society on the life of her husband, James H. Gibson, bearing date of July 15, 1887, whereby the said society agreed, in consideration of the representations made in the application for membership, and the sum of $6 in hand paid, and the further sum of $1.80, to be paid to the secretary of the society by James H. Gibson, upon due notice to him of the death of a member, to pay to appellant, upon the death of her said husband, after satisfactory evidence of his death had been furnished, the sum of 70 cents for every member of the first class, 75 cents for every member of the second class, 95 cents for every member of the third class, and the sum of $1.60 for every member of the fourth class belonging to the society at the time of the death of said James H. Gibson; provided that the aggregate amount of benefits payable under such policy or certificate should not exceed the sum of $2,500. It is alleged that said James H. Gibson, while a member of said company, performed all and singular the agreements and promises made by him in his application for insurance, and has complied with all of the terms and conditions contained in his said certificate, and has complied with all the provisions of the society's constitution and by-laws. It further appears that said Gibson, while a member of the society, and in good standing therein, died, on June 24, 1897, previous to the assignment of the society, as hereinafter mentioned. Upon his death it is averred that appellant became entitled, upon the conditions contained in said certificate of insurance, to receive the benefits therein named to the full amount of $2,500; which claim was, on the — day of September, 1897, approved by said society's board of directors, and a partial payment to the amount of $100 was made to appellant, leaving the remainder of her said claim still due and unpaid. On January —, 1898, the society, being insolvent, made an assignment, under the assignment laws of this state, to appellees, for the benefit of all its creditors. It further appears that the Masonic Mutual Benefit Society of Indiana was organized at the city of Indianapolis, Marion county, Indiana, on August 5, 1869, and the articles of association under which it was organized were recorded in the recorder's office of Marion county, Indiana. The object of the association, as declared in these articles, was to give financial aid and benefit to the widows, orphans, and dependents of deceased members. The names and residences of the incorporating members, together with a description of the seal, are all given or stated in said articles. In addition to the articles of association, the constitution and by-laws, etc., adopted by the society, are also set out, and made a part of the petition. This appeal may be said to present two questions: First. Is there, under the terms and provisions entering into the contract or policy of insurance issued by the society to a member, such an absolute undertaking upon his part to pay the stipulated assessments or premiums as will render him personally liable to the company for such payment, and which the latter can enforce by an action? Second. In the event that such liability exists, did the right to make an assessment and enforce it, as demanded by appellant, pass to appellees in and by virtue of the assignment made by said society?

The obligation imposed upon a holder of a certificate of insurance in this society must be determined by an interpretation of its own terms and provisions, regard being had, however, to the law under which the society was created, and to the terms and provisions of its constitution and by-laws which may have any bearing thereon. The petition refers the incorporation of the society in question to an act of the legislature of this state approved December 20, 1865, which act authorizes the organization of mutual life insurance companies. This statute appears to be supplemental to one approved June 17, 1852, which provided for the organization of mutual fire insurance companies. The supplemental act authorized the creation of mutual life and accident companies under the same conditions and subject to the same duties and liabilities, so far as applicable, as were provided by the fire insurance statute, to which it was supplemental. Vide, Burns's Rev. Stat. 1894, §§ 4876-4895, incl.; Rev. Stat. 1881, §§ 3745-3763; Horner's Rev. Stat. §§ 3745-3763. Appellant's counsel insist that this society was incorporated under the authority of § 4895, supra. The terms and provisions of its articles of association, and the method employed for its incorporation, and the provisions of its constitution and by-laws clearly demonstrate, we think, that counsel, in their insistence, are mistaken. That its organization was not, neither was it intended to be, founded upon these statutes, we think is evident. The very terms and provisions of its articles of association, and the recording thereof, respond to the requirements of the statute concerning voluntary associations; and there can be no doubt, we think, but what it was intended to be organized in compliance with the provisions of that statute. Davis's Revision 1876, p. 923; Burns's Rev. Stat. 1894, § 4583. Section 4583 of this statute authorizes the adoption of rules and regulations by associations organized thereunder for the government of their officers and members, but, aside from this, there is nothing in the statute to enlighten us in the decision of the question involved in this appeal.

Each applicant for membership was required to subscribe to a written application, wherein, among other things, he agreed to abide by the constitution and by-laws of the association and any amendments thereafter made, and further agreed therein to accept and abide by whatever rules, regulations, and modifications which might be adopted or made by the board of directors regulating or governing assessments or the payment of mortuary claims in accordance with the provisions of the constitution and by-laws of the society. It was further agreed and stipulated in the application that any certificate issued thereon should be upon the following express conditions and agreements: "First. That this contract shall be void if the party to whom it is issued shall die in consequence of a duel. . . . Second. If the insured shall die by his own hand or act. . . . Third. No agent of the society is authorized to make, alter, or discharge contracts or waive forfeitures. Fourth. By his acceptance of the certificate to be issued hereon, said member expressly consents that any and all physicians shall testify fully as witnesses touching any matter confided to them. . . . Whenever a certificate held by a member who has paid all assessments in full shall become a claim by death, after having been in force three full years, the society shall not contest its payment on account of the incorrectness of any statement in the application. . . . Fifth. Should the board of directors reject any claim, no suit thereunder shall be sustained in any court unless the same be commenced within one year after such rejection. . . . Sixth. The said member, by his acceptance of said certificate, agrees that, in case of his death, any unpaid balance due from him to the reserve fund, or from the assessments or otherwise, as provided by the constitution of the society, shall be deducted from any payment made thereunder; but nothing herein contained shall be held to constitute a waiver of the forfeiture for nonpayment of assessments, as provided in said constitution or by-laws." The certificate or policy of insurance issued by the society to an applicant upon the acceptance of his application in part is as follows: "This certificate of membership witnesseth that the Masonic Mutual Benefit Society of Indiana, in consideration of the representations made to it in the application for membership, which, by reference, is made a part hereof, and the sum of six dollars to it in hand paid, and the further sum of — dollars to be paid to the secretary of the society by the said —, upon due notice to him of the death of a member of the society, as provided in the by-laws of the society, such payment to be made on or before the last day of the month in which such notice is issued or sent to him, the society does promise and agree with the said — (insured), his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, well and truly to pay to — beneficiary, or, in case of the previous death of the person or persons to whom this certificate is made payable, within ninety days after satisfactory evidence of the death of the said — (insured) has been presented to and approved by the board of directors of said society, the sum of seventy cents for every member of the first class, the sum of seventy-five cents for every member of the second class, the sum of ninety-five cents for every member of the third class, and the sum of one dollar and sixty cents for every member of the fourth class belonging to the society at the time of the death of the said — (insured); provided, the aggregate amount of benefits payable under this certificate shall not exceed the sum of $2,500. This certificate is issued and contract made upon the following express conditions and agreements: First. If the said — (insured) shall be expelled from any Masonic lodge or other Masonic body, such expulsion shall work expulsion from this society; or in case he shall, without the consent of the president and secretary of the society previously obtained in writing, engage in any military or naval service whatever in time of war or rebellion, or in case he shall die by his own hand, or by the hands of justice, or in violation of the laws of any country where he may reside, or by or from the effects of intemperate habits, or from delirium tremens induced by intemperate habits, then, or in either case, this certificate shall be null and void. Second. No agent of this society shall have power to waive or alter any conditions or terms expressed in this certificate of membership, or to give any receipt for money that shall bind the society, except as herein provided. Third. By his acceptance of this certificate, the said — (insured) expressly consents that any and all physicians shall testify fully as witnesses touching any matter confided to them by him at any time material to the rights of the parties under this certificate, and that upon the discovery of any untruth or deception in his application for membership by him made the society may cancel and annul this certificate. In witness whereof," etc.

Section 1 of article 6 of the constitution adopted by the society divided the members thereof into seven classes, according to age. Sections 2 and 3 of the same article provide as follows: "Sec. 2. When an assessment has been made by the board of directors, it shall be the duty of the secretary to send, or cause to be sent, by mail, to the last known postoffice address of each member, a notice containing the amount and date of payment of such assessment; and the notice so sent shall be deemed and taken to be a lawful and sufficient demand for the payment of such assessment. The secretary may authorize the local agent in the city or town where the member resides to act for him in serving such notice, either personally or by mail, which notice so sent or served by such local agent shall be deemed and taken to be a lawful and sufficient notice for the payment of the assessment so called for and required." "Sec. 3. A member failing to pay his assessment by the last day of the month in which such notice is sent shall forfeit his certificate of membership, and all benefits thereunder; but a member, after so forfeiting his membership for nonpayment of assessments, may be reinstated by the board of directors within thirty days after such forfeiture by paying all arrearages, and furnishing a certificate of good health from a medical examiner of the association, subject to the approval of the medical director."

Section 1 of article 8 provides: "Upon the death of a member of the society each member shall be assessed, and shall pay to the secretary of the society a sum according to the class of which he is a member and the amount of the certificate held by him, as follows." Here follows a schedule of assessments to be made upon different amounts of insurance and ages of the insured, the amounts ranging from $500 to $2,500, and the ages from twenty-one years to seventy-five years. This section contains the following proviso: "Provided, that the board of directors shall determine the number of assessments to be collected during any one month; and provided, further, that upon the death of a member his certificate shall be charged with, and there shall be deducted therefrom, an amount equal to one assessment for each death occurring in the society prior to the death of such member on which payment has been made by such member."

Section 13 of the by-laws reads as follows: "Sec. 13. When an assessment has been made by the board of directors, it shall be the duty of the secretary to send or cause to be sent, by mail, to the postoffice address of each member, a notice containing the amount and date of payment of such assessment. The notice so sent shall be deemed and taken to be a lawful and sufficient demand for the payment of each assessment. The secretary may authorize the local agent in a city or town where the member resides, or any special agent of the society, to act for him in serving notices of assessments, either personally or by mail, which notice so sent or served shall be deemed and taken to be a lawful and sufficient notice for the payment of the assessment so called for and required. Any member failing to pay his assessment by the last day of the month in which such notice is issued shall forfeit his certificate of membership, and all benefits thereunder; but a member, after so forfeiting his membership for nonpayment of assessments, may be reinstated by the board of directors within thirty days after such forfeiture by paying all arrearages and furnishing a certificate of good health from a medical examiner of the association, subject to the approval of the medical director." The certificate of insurance issued by the society to a member recites that it is in consideration of the representations made in the application for membership and the sum of $6 cash in hand paid, and the further sum of — dollars, to be paid to the secretary of the society by the assured upon due notice to him of the death of a member, as provided in the by-laws of the society, such payment to be made on or before the last day of the month in which the notice is issued or sent. The certificate does not, by its own terms, declare what will be the result of the nonpayment by the insured in the event he fails to pay all subsequent assessments to be made upon the death of a member. It was stipulated, however, in the application, which by reference is made a part of the certificate of insurance, that the latter should be issued upon certain enumerated conditions, among which it was provided that, in case of the applicant's death, any unpaid balance due from him to the reserve fund or from assessments or otherwise, as provided by the constitution of the society, should be deducted from any payment made thereunder. It was declared, however, that nothing therein contained should be held to constitute a waiver of the forfeiture for nonpayment of assessments, as provided in the constitution or by-laws.

The law is well settled that when a person enters into an association he must acquaint himself with its constitution and by-laws, as these are considered important factors in testing his rights, duties, and liabilities. Supreme Lodge K. of P. v. Knight, 117 Ind. 489, 3 L. R. A. 409, 20 N. E. 479; Supreme Council, O. of C. F. v. Forsinger, 125 Ind. 52, 9 L. R. A. 501, 25 N. E. 129; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 108. In the application for membership in the case in question the applicant expressly agrees to abide by the constitution and by-laws of the society as they then exist or as they may be changed by subsequent amendments. Consequently, there can be no question but what the constitution and by-laws enter into and form elements of the contract of insurance issued by the society to a member, and therefore the contract of insurance is to be considered along with the society's constitution and by-laws, so far as the latter are pertinent to the question involved. The object in construing a written contract is to ascertain, as far as possible, the intent of the contracting parties. So, in this case, the principal question involved must be solved by an interpretation, under the settled rules of the law, of the intent of the contract as it existed between the society and the insured members in respect to the liability of the latter for the payment of mortuary assessments. Section 2 of article 6 of the constitution, as we have seen, provides for notifying a member of a death assessment when made. Section 3 provides in terms, in effect, that the failure to pay the assessment within the time therein stated shall result in the forfeiture of the defaulting member's certificate, and of all benefits thereunder, except the right of reinstatement is reserved, subject to the conditions provided. Section 13 of the by-laws combines the provisions embraced in the above-mentioned sections of the constitution. These provisions of the constitution and by-laws, as previously stated, must be considered as elements which enter into and form a part of the contract of insurance. They are virtually all of the provisions of the constitution and by-laws which can be said to have any bearing upon what the society and its insured members, under the contract, contemplated in regard to the enforcement of the payment of subsequent assessments which were to be levied upon the death of a member. We discover nothing, either in the application, certificate issued thereon, or the constitution or by-laws, which can be construed or interpreted as an absolute promise upon the part of the assured to pay these assessments, or which can be said to create the relation of creditor and debtor between a member and the society in respect to such assessments. The parties to the contract of insurance were apparently content to provide only in regard to future assessments that, after notice thereof, the failure to pay any such assessment within the stipulated time should ipso facto terminate the contract of insurance, and result as a forfeiture of all rights, money paid, and benefits thereunder, except the reserved right to reinstatement. That this should be the inevitable result of a nonpayment of an assessment was no doubt deemed to be the most efficient means of coercing or inducing the payment upon the part of the members of the assessments levied. That this result must follow the nonpayment of assessments, under the plain provisions of the constitution and by-laws, is certainly not a debatable proposition. The question of forfeiture, under the circumstances, was not a matter merely within the option of the society, but necessarily followed from the force and effect of the constitution and by-laws. These were as binding and controlling upon the officers of the association as they were upon its members.

We have seen that the act concerning voluntary associations under which the society in question was organized is silent in regard to the payment of assessments or withdrawal of members of such association, and hence this statute can cast no light upon the interpretation of the contract, as it apparently has left the whole matter to be controlled by the constitution and by-laws of the association. It cannot, in reason, be asserted that there is anything in the provisions of the society's constitution or by-laws, or the application or certificate in question, which can be construed into an agreement upon the part of the assured that, after the forfeiture of all of his rights and benefits has taken place, he would continue as a member of the society for the payment alone of assessments, and that the latter might be enforced against him by suit after all of his rights and benefits under the contract had been terminated and destroyed. The assessments provided for were made to pay the losses occasioned by the death of a member, and, when collected through the agency of the society, the money did not belong to it, but went into a fund to pay the beneficiaries of the deceased member or members. While it is true that the society in controversy was a mutual benefit society, the object of which was to give financial aid and benefit to the widows, orphans, and dependents of a deceased member, still that fact does not render it any the less a life insurance association, operating under the assessment plan it adopted. Courts have, as a general rule, treated such societies as life insurance companies, applying to them and the policies which they issue the principles pertinent to the contracts of life insurance. 2 May, Ins. 3d ed. § 550a. The contract of an ordinary life insurance company under its contract of insurance wherein the assured is required to pay, at the time stated, the premium as provided, and wherein it is also provided that a forfeiture of the contract shall result in the event of the nonpayment of such premium, is considered, in a legal sense, to be a unilateral contract. The premium or assessment to be paid, in order to continue the risk, under such circumstances, is held not to constitute an indebtedness against the insured in favor of the company. The payment of such premium or assessment is considered as a condition precedent, upon the performance of which the company, under its contract, continues to carry the risk as originally assumed. As a general rule, under such contracts, in the absence of anything to the contrary, the insured has the right to elect whether he will continue to pay his premiums or assessments as they become due, or forfeit the contract. He must make his election after notice of the assessment within the time fixed for the payment, or suffer the loss of membership, and thereby terminate his rights and the liability of the company or society under the contract of insurance, save and except, as heretofore stated, the right of reinstatement, when the same is expressly reserved, as in the case at bar, or except any other right which may have been expressly reserved from the effect of the forfeiture. 2 May, Ins. 3d ed. § 341a; Rood v. Railway Pass. & Freight Conductors' Mut. Ben. Asso. 31 Fed. Rep. 62; Worthington v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. 41 Conn. 372, 19 Am. Rep. 495; Goodwin v. Massachusetts Mut. L. Ins. Co. 73 N. Y. 480.

As a general proposition, this same doctrine applies to mutual benefit societies. The main feature of the plan adopted by such insurance societies is that death losses are to be paid by voluntary contributions upon the part of its surviving members. Accordingly, the society, on the death of a member in good standing, levies an assessment upon the surviving members in good standing. Such assessment, which is in the nature of the premium exacted in ordinary life companies, when paid by the member within the time provided, serves to continue his policy in full force and effect until it may be forfeited by the nonpayment of some subsequent assessment. That the levy of such assessments, as a general rule, do not serve to make the insured member a debtor to the society, so as to authorize the latter to enforce the payment thereof by suit, is well settled by the authorities. Lehman v. Clark, 174 Ill. 279, 43 L. R. A. 348, 51 N. E. 222; Clark v. Schromyer (Ind. App.) 55 N. E. 785; Re Protection L. Ins. Co. 9 Biss. 188, Fed. Cas. No. 11,444; 2 Bacon, Ben. Soc. § 357; Niblack, Mut. Ben. Soc. § 276; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Merchants' Each. Mut. Bencv. Soc. 72 Mo. 146; Com. v. Wetherbee, 105 Mass. 149; Rood v. Railway Pass. & Freight Conductors' Mut. Ben. Asso. 31 Fed. Rep. 62. The rule applicable to the question is well and aptly stated by Bacon in his work on Benefit Societies, supra. In § 357 the author says: "In a contract of life insurance there is generally no absolute undertaking of the insured to pay the premiums or assessments, and consequently no personal liability therefor. The payment of the premiums or assessments is only a condition precedent of the liability of the company. The insured does not promise to pay the premiums, and the company only promises to pay if it has received the agreed consideration. Therefore the insured may pay or not, as he pleases. He has the perfect right to do either, and need give no excuse for his choice. If he does not pay, the contract is ended. It follows, therefore, that the premium or assessment is only a debt when there is an absolute promise to pay embodied in the contract." Whether or not such absolute promise to pay is embodied in the contract is a question of construction. We have examined Ellerbe v. Barney, 119 Mo. 632, 23 L. R. A. 435, 25 S. W. 384; New Era Life Asso. v. Rossiter, 132 Pa. 314, 19 Atl. 140; Dettra v. Kestner, 147 Pa. 566, 23 Atl. 889; Rundle v. Kennan, 79 Wis. 492, 48 N. W. 516; Fulton v. Stevens, 99 Wis. 307, 74 N. W. 803; McDonald v. Ross-Lewin, 29 Hun, 87; and other cases,—which it is claimed support appellant's contention; but these, with the exception of Ellerbe v. Barney, are, under the facts, distinguishable from the case at bar, and do not sustain appellant's view. The distinguishing feature, in the main, in the above cases, is that the contracts therein involved contain a promise upon the part of the assured to pay the assessments. No such element can be said to enter into the contract under consideration. It is true that the holding in Ellerbe v. Barney, 119 Mo. 632, 23 L. R. A. 435, 25 S. W. 384, fairly supports the insistence of appellant. The action in that case was instituted by the receiver of the Masonic Mutual Benefit Society of Missouri, which association had been operated as a life insurance company under the assessment plan. The controversy was as to whether the insurance policies issued by it to its members contained a promise on the part of the latter to pay the assessments. The majority of the court held that the policy or contract of insurance issued by the society must be so construed, and that the assessments were collectible by suit. Chief Justice Black and Justices Brace and Burgess dissented. The dissenting opinion, prepared by the chief justice, is, in our judgment, more convincing in its reasoning, and is better fortified by authorities, than is the majority opinion. It may perhaps be said that an irreconcilable conflict exists between the holding in Lehman v. Clark, 174 Ill. 279, 43 L. R. A. 348, 51 N. E. 222, and Ellerbe v. Barney, 119 Mo. 632, 23 L. R. A. 435, 25 S. W. 384. The court in the latter case, however, seems, in our opinion, to have made the mistake of considering that the death assessments levied by the society were in the nature or character of society dues, and therefore a member could not escape the payment thereof by terminating his membership. That the assessments, under the provisions of the contract in this case, cannot be so viewed or considered, is a proposition too plain to be controverted. In Lehman v. Clark, 174 Ill. 279, 43 L. R. A. 648, 51 N. E. 222, the receiver of the Masonic Benevolent Association of Central Illinois sued to recover of its members assessments in order to pay death losses which had accrued while the association was a going concern. The society in that case, and also the facts and questions involved, may be said to be substantially identical with the particular association and questions involved in this appeal. It was held in a well-considered opinion in that case that an insurance contract in a benevolent association, wherein a provision is made for a forfeiture of all payments and benefits by reason of the nonpayment of assessments within the time stated therein, is unilateral in its obligation, and that the right or remedy of the association upon the default of a member in paying his assessments is to declare a forfeiture, and that its right to sue and recover the assessment could not be maintained by it nor by its receiver. This decision was followed by our own appellate court in Clark v. Schromyer (Ind. App.) 55 N. E. 785. To reiterate what we have previously stated, it is evident, we think, that when the policy or contract of insurance involved in this case is considered along with the society's articles of association, its constitution and by-laws, and the application for membership, there is nothing which can, in reason, be interpreted as an agreement or obligation upon the part of its insured members to pay the mortuary assessments, such as would thereby constitute them debtors of the society, and hence authorize it to enforce the payment of the assessments by suit. If the contracts involved herein could be said to be doubtful in respect to the interpretation of the question presented thereunder, and thereby be open to the application of the doctrine of practical construction, it is possible that the acts of the society's governing officers in the administration of its affairs for a period of almost thirty years might disclose that it, through its officers, had placed a construction upon the question in issue in this case wholly incompatible with the construction or interpretation for which appellant now contends. As the society, under the contracts in dispute, was not authorized to sue, and thereby recover of its members unpaid assessments, certainly it cannot be claimed that the appellees, who are but its assignees, are invested with any greater rights than it was in respect to enforcing by suit the payment of the assessments in controversy. It follows, therefore, and we so conclude, that appellant, under her petition, is not entitled to any relief, and the demurrer thereto was properly sustained.
18 L. R. A.

The judgment is affirmed.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT (Division 1).

William H. SMITH, Respt.,
v.

ST. LOUIS & SAN FRANCISCO RAILWAY COMPANY et al., Appts.

(151 Mo. 397.)

1. An action against receivers of a railroad company appointed by a Federal court, for injuries caused by the company's negligence before their appointment, cannot be maintained in a state court without permission of the court which appointed them.

2. A railroad company is not bound to use the same degree of care in employing a wiper or fire puller to work in a roundhouse that is necessary in employing an engineer or hostler.

3. A railroad company is not liable to an employee for injuries caused by the incompetence of a coemployee, because of NOTE.—The duty of a master with respect to the employment of his servants.

I.—continued.

I. General principles.

- a. Nature and extent of the master's duty stated.
- b. Duty considered as creating an exception to the doctrine of common employment.
- c. Standard of care obligatory upon the master in regard to the selection of his servants.
- d. What constitutes an incompetent servant.
- e. Plaintiff's recovery dependent upon proof of master's actual or constructive knowledge of co-servant's unfitness.
- f. Duty to inquire into the fitness of a servant at the time he is hired.

- g. Duty of the master to keep himself informed as to the fitness of a servant already in his employment.

II. Probative value of various facts as tending to show culpability on the master's part.

- a. Incompetence of servant.
- b. Race and color of delinquent servant.
- c. Appearance and manner of the servant while testifying.
- d. Language of delinquent servant himself indicating recklessness of character.
- e. Minority.
- f. Previous experience of the servant.
- g. Acts of negligence prior to the accident.
- h. Act of negligence which caused the accident.

its negligence in employing him, if his incompetence was not with respect to acts for the performance of which he was employed.

4. The head hostler in a roundhouse, who has no power to hire or discharge anyone, is the fellow servant of a fireman on an engine, so that his knowledge of the incompetence of a wiper, and that he attempts to move engines without authority, will not charge the railroad company with liability for injury to the fireman through the wiper's negligently moving an engine.

(July 12, 1899.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Newton County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

II.—continued.

1. Temporary unfitness at the time of the accident.
2. Derelictions of duty subsequent to the injury in suit.
3. Disclaimer of fitness by delinquent servant himself.
4. Specific statements as to unfitness made by coemployees of delinquent servant.
5. Reputation of delinquent servant.
 1. Admissibility, generally.
 2. Reputation not evidence of actual unfitness.
 3. Nicknames as evidence against the master.
6. Length of the period during which the unfitness has continued.
7. A promise by the master to discharge the delinquent servant.

III. Duty to employ an adequate number of servants.

- a. Generally.
- b. Whether the master has performed his duty.

I. General principles.

a. Nature and extent of the master's duty stated.

The obligations of a master to see that the servants hired by him possess the qualifications, mental, moral, and physical, which will enable them to perform their duties without exposing themselves and their coemployees to greater dangers than the work necessarily entails, are, in their broad features, similar to the obligations which are incumbent upon him with regard to the other agencies of his business. It is manifest, however, that in their specific application to human beings, the general principles which define the nature and extent of those obligations must assume a shape somewhat different from that which they bear in their relation to the lower animals, or to inorganic instrumentalities. It is in fact apparent that the duty of a master to use care in hiring servants is very closely associated with, if not a special form of, his duty to adopt a safe system in the conduct of his business; that is to say, the duty of seeing that the unreasonable agencies employed by him perform their functions properly while they are in their normal condition. This conception emerges in statements like that which we find in a recent case, that "the law will not allow an employer, whose duty it is to provide reasonably safe appliances, to escape liability by employ-

Statement by Marshall, J.:

Damages for personal injuries. The petition alleges that the defendant company is, and at the times therein stated was, a railroad company; that on the 23d of December, 1893; the defendants, Reinhart, McCook, and Wilson, were appointed receivers of said railroad company by the United States circuit court for the district of Kansas; that at the city of Monett "the company had a roundhouse, turntable, switch yards, and coal chutes, where engines are cleaned, repaired, watered, coaled, and made ready to be used by defendant's agents, servants and employees; that plaintiff was, on the 20th day of October, 1893, and prior thereto, an employee and in the service of the defendant railway company as locomotive fireman on a passenger engine numbered 56, on said railroad, running between Monett, Missouri, and Neo-ing incompetent or unsuitable persons to discharge it." Donnelly v. Booth Bros. & H. I. Granite Co. (1897) 90 Me. 110. 37 Atl. 874.

The essential distinctions suggested by these considerations render it proper to treat the cases dealing with the duty of hiring servants as a distinct division of the general subject separate from the discussion of the duty to furnish a safe place of work and safe appliances.

The rule established by the cases to be reviewed in this chapter may be stated in formal terms as follows:

The hiring or retention of a servant whose unfitness for his duties, whether it arise from his want of skill, his physical and mental qualities, or his bad habits, is known, actually or constructively, to the master, is culpable negligence for which the master must respond in damages to any other servants who may suffer injury through that unfitness.

That the master is not absolved by the mere fact that the servant hired was helpful and prudent, where, as a matter of fact, he was unable to perform his duties properly owing to his ignorance and want of skill, and the injury resulted from that incompetency, was long ago settled in Wright v. New York C. R. Co. (1838) 28 Barb. 80, and does not seem to have been since disputed.

The plaintiff is rightly nonsuited where there is no evidence tending to prove that the employees, whose retention is alleged to be culpable, had ever shown any lack of skill or efficiency in the performance of their duties before the accident occurred in which the plaintiff was hurt. Curran v. Merchants' Mfg. Co. (1881) 130 Mass. 374, 39 Am. Rep. 457.

That the master is not liable for injuries caused by the negligent act of an incompetent servant, where that act was not one of those which he was authorized to do, see Southern Cotton-Oil Co. v. Devond (1804; Tex. Civ. App.) 25 S. W. 43.

The essential ground upon which the rule is based is "that the master impliedly contracts that he will use due care in engaging the services of those who are reasonably fit and competent for the performance of their respective duties in the common service." Snow v. Houston & R. Co. (1804) 8 Allen, 441, 85 Am. Dec. 720.

b. Duty considered as creating an exception to the doctrine of common employment.

It is important to note that the above rule was originally introduced into Anglo-American law, and is still frequently referred to by the courts, as an exception to the doctrine which desha, Kansas; that on the said 20th day of October, 1893, said engine No. 56 was taken out of defendant's roundhouse by its employees at the usual time, preparatory to going out on its run, and placed on the coal-chute track in the switch yard, at the usual and customary place for putting an engine that is shortly to go out on its run, and that shortly thereafter plaintiff took charge of said engine, as it was his duty to do, while it was standing on said track as aforesaid, and immediately began performing the duties required of him as such fireman in and about getting said engine ready to take out passenger train numbered 1, going west, and that while plaintiff, in the discharge of his said duties, was examining the ash pan on said engine, to see if it had been properly cleaned, and was stooping over in front of the main drive wheel of said engine in the usual and customary and most convenient position for making such examinations, one Grant Sheldon, who was in the employ and service of said defendant railway company as an engine hostler, and who was an ignorant, incompetent, reckless, and unskilful servant, all of which the said defendant railway company well knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence might have known, got upon said engine, with the knowledge and permission of defendant, and, in the discharge of the usual and customary work and duty of an engine hostler, recklessly, carelessly, and negligently, and without ringing the bell, sounding the whistle, or giving any other warning, quickly and suddenly started said engine forward, and ran the same against the plaintiff, thereby throwing him down with his left hand upon the track rail in front of one of the drive declares a master to be exempt from responsibility for injuries caused to one servant by the negligence of another.

From this point of view, it may be enunciated thus:

"While a railroad company is not responsible to one employee for an injury resulting from the mere negligence or incompetence of a co-employee in the same general employment, it is liable in such case where the company has been guilty of negligence in the employment of, or, after notice, continuing in employment, the negligent or incompetent employee, thereby conducing to the injury." Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Collarn (1881) 73 Ind. 261, 38 Am. Rep. 184.

"Though we have said," remarked Alderson, B., in a leading English case, "that a master is not in general responsible to one servant for an injury occasioned to him by the negligence of a fellow servant while they are acting in one common service, yet this must be taken with the qualification that the master shall have taken due care not to expose his servant to unreasonable risks. The servant, when he engages to run the risks of his service, including those arising from the negligence of fellow servants, has a right to understand that the master has taken reasonable care to protect him from such risks by associating him only with persons of ordinary skill and care; and the object of the plea in this case is to show that the defendants had discharged this duty, the omission to discharge which might have made them responsible to the deceased. The plea therefore appears to us not to be open to the objection insisted on." Hutchinson v. York, N. & B. R. Co. (1850) 5 Exch. 341, 19 L. J. Exch. N. S. 296, 14 Jur. 837.

It would be a work of supererogation to attempt to cite all the cases in which this conception emerges. The following will suffice out of many hundreds that might be mentioned: Morgan v. Vale of Neath R. Co. (1864) 5 Best & S. 710, L. R. 1 Q. B. 149, 35 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 23, 13 L. T. N. S. 564, 14 Week. Rep. 144; Wiggett v. Fox (1850) 11 Exch. 832, 2 Jur. N. S. 955, 25 L. J. Exch. N. S. 188; Tarrant v. Webb (1856) 18 C. B. 797, 25 L. J. C. P. N. S. 261; Bartonshill Coal Co. v. Reid (1858) 3 Macq. H. L. Cas. 266, 4 Jur. N. S. 767; Searle v. Lindsay (1861) 11 C. B. N. S. 429, 31 L. J. C. P. N. S. 106, 8 Jur. N. S. 746, 5 L. T. N. S. 427, 10 Week. Rep. 89; Hall v. Johnson, 3 Hurlst. & C. 589, 34 L. J. Exch. N. S. 222, 11 Jur. N. S. 180, 11 L. T. N. S. 779, 13 Week. Rep. 411; Wilson v. Merry (1868) L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. App. Cas. 326, 19 L. T. N. S. 30; Walker v. Bolling (1853) 22 Ala. 294; Alabama & F. R. Co. v. Waller (1872) 48 Ala. 459; Tyson v.

South & North Ala. R. Co. (1878) 61 Ala. 554, 32 Am. Rep. 8; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Thomas (1868) 42 Ala. 672; Hogan v. Central P. R. Co. (1874) 49 Cal. 129; Stephens v. Doe (1887) 73 Cal. 26, 14 Pac. 378; Congrave v. Southern P. R. Co. (1891) 88 Cal. 360, 26 Pac. 175; Keith v. Walker Iron & Coal Co. (1888) 81 Ga. 49, 7 S. E. 166; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Swett (1867) 45 Ill. 197, 92 Am. Dec. 206; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Taylor (1873) 69 Ill. 461, 18 Am. Rep. 626; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Sullivan (1872) 63 Ill. 293; Columbus, C. & I. Cent. R. Co. v. Troesch (1873) 68 Ill. 545, 18 Am. Rep. 578; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Durkin (1875) 76 Ill. 395; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Rush (1877) 84 Ill. 570; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Keefe (1868) 47 Ill. 108; United States Rolling Stock Co. v. Wilder (1886) 116 Ill. 100, 5 N. E. 92; Thayer v. St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. (1864) 22 Ind. 26, 85 Am. Dec. 409; Chicago & G. E. R. Co. v. Harney (1867) 28 Ind. 28, 92 Am. Dec. 282; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Collarn (1881) 73 Ind. 261, 38 Am. Rep. 184; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Stupak (1886) 108 Ind. 1, 8 N. E. 630; Hugh v. New Orleans & C. R. Co. (1851) 6 La. Ann. 496, 54 Am. Dec. 565; Satterly v. Morgan (1883) 35 La. Ann. 1166; Poirier v. Carroll (1883) 35 La. Ann. 699; Beaulieu v. Portland Co. (1860) 48 Me. 201; Donnelly v. Booth Bros. & H. I. Granite Co. (1897) 90 Me. 110, 37 Atl. 874; Cayser v. Taylor (1857) 10 Gray, 274, 69 Am. Dec. 317; Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp. (1842) 4 Met. 49, 38 Am. Dec. 339; Curran v. Merchants' Mfg. Co. (1881) 130 Mass. 374, 39 Am. Rep. 457; New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Hughes (1873) 49 Miss. 258; Howd v. Mississippi C. R. Co. (1874) 50 Miss. 178 (192); McDermott v. Pacific R. Co. (1860) 30 Mo. 116; Harper v. Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. (1871) 47 Mo. 567, 4 Am. Rep. 353; Nash v. Nashua Iron & Steel Co. (1882) 62 N. H. 406; Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Devinney (1867) 17 Ohio St. 197; Weger v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1867) 55 Pa. 460; Walton v. Bryn Mawr Hotel Co. (1894) 160 Pa. 3, 28 Atl. 438; Boatwright v. Northeastern R. Co. (1886) 25 S. C. 128; Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Elliott (1860) 1 Coldw. 611, 78 Am. Dec. 506; Knoxville Iron Co. v. Dobson (1881) 7 Lea, 367; Dallas v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. (1884) 61 Tex. 196; Baird v. Dunn (1895) 33 N. B. 156; Bossout v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. (1890) 32 N. Y. S. R. 884, 10 N. Y. Supp. 602; Pennsylvania Co. v. Roney (1883) 89 Ind. 453, 46 Am. Rep. 173.

Any charge is erroneous which does not distinguish clearly between the liability of the defendant by reason of negligence in furnishing proper apparatus or in the employment of com-wheels of said engine, the said wheel passing over said band, mashing and mangling his hand, causing plaintiff great pain and suffering, and causing him to lose a great deal of time, and rendering it necessary to have his hand amputated above the wrist joint, to his damage in the sum of $25,000; that the defendant railway company negligently and carelessly employed and retained in their employ, and required and permitted to work about and handle the engine aforesaid, as hostler, the said Grant Sheldon, well knowing, or by the exercise of reasonable care might have known, that he was ignorant, reckless, unskilful, and incompetent to perform the duties of such hostler, and to handle said engine, and that by reason of the carelessness and negligence of the said defendant railway company in employing and retaining in their employ and permitting to handle said engine the said Grant Sheldon, and by reason of the ignorance, recklessness, unskilfulness, and incompetency of the said Grant Sheldon, the plaintiff was recklessly run upon by said engine, and thrown down and injured and damaged as aforesaid." The second count of the petition is the same as the first, except that, after alleging the character of the company, and that it had the roundhouse, turntable, etc., at Monett, it is further averred, "And that defendants, J. W. Reinhart, John J. McCook, and Joseph C. Wilson, are the duly appointed and qualified receivers of said railroad as aforesaid, in possession thereof, and operating same as aforesaid," and except, further, that it is charged that the engine was in a defective and dangerous condition. The answer of the company admitted the appointment of the receivers, denied the allegations of the petipetent coservants, and his nonliability for a want of proper care on the part of the fellow servant at the time of the accident. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Willie (1880) 53 Tex. 318.

One necessary corollary from this rule is that a complaint which on its face shows that the injury in suit was caused by the act of a fellow servant is insufficient, unless it avers negligence in respect to the selection or retention of that servant. Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. v. Dalley (1886) 110 Ind. 75, 10 N. E. 631; Lawler v. Androsoggin R. Co. (1873) 62 Me. 463, 16 Am. Rep. 492; Collier v. Steinhart (1875) 51 Cal. 119; Boyce v. Fitzpatrick (1881) 80 Ind. 527; Bogard v. Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. (1884) 100 Ind. 491; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Stupak (1886) 108 Ind. 1, 8 N. E. 630; Albro v. Agawam Canal Co. (1850) 6 Cush. 75; Dow v. Kansas P. R. Co. (1871) 8 Kan. 642; Pilkinton v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. (1888) 70 Tex. 226, 7 S. W. 805; Kindel v. Hall (1896) 8 Colo. App. 63, 44 Pac. 781; McDermott v. Pacific R. Co. (1860) 30 Mo. 115; Southwest Improv. Co. v. Andrew (1880) 86 Va. 270, 9 S. E. 1015, and the cases cited above in this section.

After a trial on the merits, it is too late for the defendant to object that the question whether it had placed a competent man in charge of the work was not raised by the pleadings. Such a case comes under the rule that, where pleadings would have been amendable of course in the court below, the amendment will be considered as having been made. Trainor v. Philadelphia & E. R. Co. (1890) 137 Pa. 149, 20 Atl. 632.

In Summersell v. Fish (1875) 117 Mass. 312, an action for personal injuries caused by the fall of a derrick, which was being raised under the direction of the defendant's foreman, the declaration alleged that the defendant negligently raised the derrick; and the plaintiff's counsel stated in his opening that he made no question of the foreman's competency. No evidence was put into the case tending to show that the foreman was incompetent, except such inferences as might be drawn from the manner in which he directed the raising of the derrick; and there was no evidence of any want of care on the part of the defendant in employing the foreman. Held, that plaintiff's counsel was rightly prevented from arguing at the trial that the foreman was incompetent, and that the defendant knew his incompetency, or with due care might have known it, and that the injury in suit resulted from that incompetency.

In Kersey v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. (1883) 79 Mo. 362, it was held that the incompetence of another employee is immaterial if his incompetence or negligence had nothing to do with the injury.

A petition alleging that the employment of a fellow servant was careless and negligent, and that in consequence thereof an incompetent servant was taken into the company's service, who caused the injury by his incompetency, is a sufficient allegation of the negligence of employment. Galveston Rope & Twine Co. v. Burkett (1893) 2 Tex. Civ. App. 308, 21 S. W. 958.

A complaint is sufficient, charging death of the baggage master through the act of the conductor, alleging that he was not a careful, skilful, and attentive conductor for a passenger train, which was known to defendant, and that the death of plaintiff's intestate was caused by such conductor's negligence. Kerlin v. Chicago, P. & St. L. R. Co. (1892) 50 Fed. Rep. 185.

Another necessary corollary from the rule above stated is that it is error to take the case from the jury where there is evidence that there was negligence in the selection or retention of the coservant, whose act caused the injury. Brickner v. New York C. R. Co. (1870) 2 Lana. 506.

A statement of plaintiff's counsel, in an action by an employee, showing that the injuries complained of were occasioned by a coservice, is not sufficient to show that there is no cause of action. It must also appear by the affirmative testimony of the employer that the latter was a competent person for the position he occupied, or that necessary appliances were furnished by the employer. Haley v. Western Transit Co. (1890) 78 Wis. 344, 43 N. W. 16.

Another corollary to the above rule is that the defendant is not entitled to an unqualified instruction that the plaintiff cannot recover if he was injured by his own carelessness or that of his fellow servants. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Cook (1897) 16 Tex. Civ. App. 386, 41 S. W. 665.

In many of these cases, in which the existence of the duty is in a sense a factor. It is of no practical importance, as the investigation centers itself upon the single question whether the delinquent servant was or was not one of those for whose negligence the master must answer. Cases of this class will not be particularly considered here.

c. Standard of care obligatory upon the master in regard to the selection of his servants.

As in the case of the other agencies of the master's business, the question whether he has performed his duty with respect to the employ-tion, and pleaded contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. The receivers adopted the answer of the company, and then pleaded that no permission to sue them had been applied for or granted by the United States circuit court for the eastern district of Missouri, or any court having jurisdiction of their receivership.

The facts developed on the trial were, substantially, that about 6:40 P. M. on the 20th of October, 1893, the plaintiff, while in the employ of the company as a locomotive fireman, went to his engine, which was standing on what is called the "coal-chute track," at Monett, Missouri, to prepare to go out on his run. He lit the lamps on the engine, and, finding that the engine did not have enough coal, he left the engine, and went to the roundhouse, which was 40 or 50 feet distant, and asked for more coal. Then he returned to the engine, opened the valve that lets oil into the lubricator, opened the cylinder cocks, and then stooped down within 4 or 5 feet of the cylinder cocks, with his hands on his knees, and with his head and shoulders under the main rod, which connects the drive wheels of the engine, and which communicates the power to the wheels, to examine the ash pan under the engine. While he was in the position described, the engine started forward. No bell was wrung or whistle sounded. The main rod struck him on the head, and he lost his balance, and, to save himself from falling, he threw out his left hand upon the track rail, and one of the drive wheels ran over it, injuring it so that amputation became necessary. After his hand was run over, he raised up, and, as the gangway of the engine passed him, he saw a man getting off of the engine on the oppoment of servants is sometimes considered with reference to the general standard furnished by the supposed conduct of a man of average prudence and intelligence under the circumstances, and sometimes with reference to the actual qualifications of the servant hired.

The former standpoint is apparent in the doctrine that an employer is in no case held to an undertaking to select absolutely competent and careful servants. The rule requires of him no more than the exercise of reasonable care in either case,—such care only as men of reasonable and ordinary prudence exercise; and that when he has done this he cannot be held responsible for injuries which result from the incompetency of the servants so selected. Holland v. Tennessee Coal, I. & R. Co. (1890) 91 Ala. 444, 12 L. R. A. 232, 8 So. 524.

"The extent of the undertaking is that the company will exercise reasonable care in the selection of an employee, and, if his incompetency is discovered, it will dismiss him from its service." Columbus, C. & I. Cent. R. Co. v. Troesch (1873) 68 Ill. 545, 18 Am. Rep. 578.

The phrase "reasonable care" also occurs in Wright v. New York C. R. Co. (1858) 28 Barb. 80; Chicago & G. E. R. Co. v. Harney (1867) 28 Ind. 28, 92 Am. Dec. 282; Rogers v. Ludlow Mfg. Co. (1887) 144 Mass. 198, 59 Am. Rep. 68, 11 N. E. 77.

"The duty of a railway corporation is to exercise due, that is ordinary, care, in the selection and employment of its servants and agents, having respect to their particular duties and responsibilities, and the consequences that may result from their want of competence, skill, or care in the performance of their duties." Baulec v. New York & H. R. Co. (1874) 59 N. Y. 356, 17 Am. Rep. 325.

The following phrases are quoted as being synonymous with "reasonable care":

"Reasonable care, prudence, and discretion." Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Nuckols (1895) 91 Va. 193, 21 S. E. 342.

"Ordinary care." Lindvall v. Woods (1891) 44 Fed. Rep. 855; Ex parte Johnson (1883) 19 S. C. 492.

In Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels (1882) 107 U. S. 454, 27 L. ed. 605, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 932 the court said that "ordinary care in [regard to] the selection and retention of servants and agents implies that degree of diligence and precaution which the exigencies of the particular service reasonably require," and approved a charge containing the words "proper and great care," and declined to accept the suggestion of defendant's counsel that "ordinary care in the employment and retention of railroad employees means only that degree of diligence 48 L. R. A.

which is customary, or is sanctioned by the general practice or usage which obtains among those intrusted with the management and control of railroad property and railroad employees."

In Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Collarn (1891) 73 Ind. 261, 38 Am. Rep. 134, the two adjectives, "reasonable" and "ordinary," are coupled together.

In Alabama & F. R. Co. v. Waller (1872) 48 Ala. 459, it was said the master is bound to use "due or reasonable" care and diligence the exercise of "ordinary" care and diligence not being sufficient to absolve him from liability. But the ruling suggests a distinction which does not seem to be warranted by the authorities.

In Slizer v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. (1872) 7 Lans. 67, the expression was used, but this was obiter, and is in any case too strong, as the above authorities show.

The latter is observable in the statements that the master is bound to provide servants that are "fit and competent." Ardeaco Oil Co. v. Gilson (1869) 63 Pa. 146.

"Efficient." Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Ampey (1896) 93 Va. 108, 25 S. E. 228 (not error to substitute this word for "competent" in an instruction).

"Of competent skill and prudence." Wonder v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (1870) 32 Md. 411, 3 Am. Rep. 143.

But not "absolutely competent and careful servants." Holland v. Tennessee Coal, I. & R. Co. (1890) 91 Ala. 444, 12 L. R. A. 232, 8 So. 524.

A blending of the two produces the more complete formula that a master is bound to exercise reasonable or ordinary care in the selection and retention of sufficient and competent servants. Matthews v. Bull (1897; Cal.) 47 Pac. 773. Compare Rogers v. Ludlow Mfg. Co. (1887) 144 Mass. 193, 59 Am. Rep. 68, 11 N. E. 77; Tonnese v. Ross (1890) 58 Hun. 415, 12 N. Y. Supp. 150; Thompson v. Ross (1890) 58 Hun. 608, 12 N. Y. Supp. 151 (same facts); Laning v. New York C. R. Co. (1872) 40 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417; Brown v. The D. S. Sage (1872) 1 Woods, 401, Fed. Cas. No. 2,002.

In instructing a jury this extended statement should, it seems, always be used; for otherwise the jury might be led to suppose that the master was an insurer of the servant's competency. Lewis v. Emery (1896) 108 Mich. 641, 66 N. W. 569 (condemning the charge that "the law imposes upon every man that runs a sawmill the duty to employ reasonably skillful employees"); Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v.

site side, and called to him for assistance, but the man paid no attention to him. He says that he knew the man's face, having seen him around the roundhouse, but did not then know his name; that the man was Grant Sheldon. The track on which the engine was standing had a slight grade towards the west, and the engine was a medium quick starter; that is, if "everything was tight," with the lubricator turned, and the cylinder cocks open, the engine would start without any steam being turned on, when on a grade of this character. The plaintiff testified that, if the steam is turned on, it would necessarily escape from the cylinder cocks, and that no steam escaped from this engine. Grant Sheldon was employed as a wiper or fire puller in the roundhouse, and prior to the accident had never been employed as a hostler. The employees at the roundhouse rank—First, foreman, who in this case was J. R. Randall; second, head hostler, who was Peter Stringer; third, second hostler; fourth, third hostler; and fifth, wipers or fire pullers, whose duties are to perform manual labor cleaning engines, and who are expressly prohibited by the rules of the company from moving an engine, either in or outside of the roundhouse, except in the immediate presence of a hostler. Sheldon, although not a hostler, had, before the accident, moved an engine in the yard, without the presence of a hostler. As to Sheldon's competency, the testimony is as follows: Charles Andrews said he had heard complaints among the boys about the way he handled engines, and that the boys were afraid to haul fire under him; that he had complained to Stringer about him, but could not say whether it was before the accident

Schwabbe (1892) 1 Tex. Civ. App. 573, 21 S. W. 706, disapproving the statement that a railway company is bound to "furnish competent and qualified men to handle its engines and trains."

d. What constitutes an incompetent servant.

Incompetency connotes the converse of reliability in all that is essential to make up a reasonably safe person, considering the nature of the work and the general safety of those who are required to associate with such person in the general employment. Maitland v. Gilbert Paper Co. (1897) 97 Wis. 476, 72 N. W. 1124, remarking that a person may be competent to do the particular acts required of a fireman, yet be so careless in respect to obeying the rules that prohibit him from interfering with appliances not connected with his work as to render him an exceedingly dangerous and incompetent person to be associated with.

The servant should be discharged for the same measure of negligence which would have unfitted him for the original employment. Harper v. Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. (1869) 44 Mo. 438, holding erroneous an instruction that, if the servant employed by the defendant was competent at the time of the original employment, then defendant would not be liable for his negligent acts, unless his subsequent negligence was known to his employer, and was also gross in its character.

The fact that a steamboat engineer is licensed is prima facie evidence of his competency, but does not justify his retention after his master becomes aware that by his habitual carelessness and recklessness he is endangering the lives of the other employees on board. Walker v. Bolling (1853) 22 Ala. 294.

Whether a servant is competent is primarily a question for the jury. Devine v. Tarrytown & I. Union Gaslight Co. (1880) 22 Hun, 26.

The most obvious kind of unfitness is that which arises from the absolute incapacity to perform the duties required, whether it be that his physical powers are reduced by some bodily defect below the standard usually found in persons of his age.

The incapacity of a yardmaster charged with the duty of having cars needing repairs run in upon repair tracks to discharge such duty in person, may be inferred from the fact that he had only one arm. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Davis (1890) 91 Ala. 487, 8 So. 552.

The fact that a person is nearsighted does not necessarily render him incompetent to be engineer of a locomotive, if he can see with glasses, and uses them. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Harrington (1884) 62 Tex. 597.

48 L. R. A.

It is not negligence to employ, for the purpose of testing a boiler for broken stay bolts, an inspector who is partly deaf in one ear, but whose hearing is good enough to determine whether a bolt struck with a hammer is sound or broken. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Du Bois (1895) 65 Ill. App. 142.

Another obvious kind of unfitness is that the employee is too old. Harvey v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1882) 88 N. Y. 481, where the court remarked upon the fact of a switchman's being only fifty-six years old as one which was favorable to the master.

Where the incompetency relied upon is the old age and defective vision of an engineer, and his ignorance of the road, it is error to admit evidence going to show that, after the accident complained of had occurred, he ran his train a distance of several miles without a brakeman, and ditched his engine. Such evidence may show negligence after the accident, but is not proof of the alleged defects. Ransler v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. (1883) 30 Minn. 215, 14 N. W. 883.

An employee who is too young to be entrusted with the work may be for that reason unfit.

See infra, II., e.

There may also be unfitness in the fact that the employee has not received a sufficient general education. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Thomas (1868) 42 Ala. 672 (switchman incompetent who cannot read the timetable of the train); Taylor v. Western P. R. Co. (1873) 45 Cal. 323 (same point).

Or has not had adequate training and experience in the work to be done. See infra, II., f.

Or has contracted vicious habits which diminish his physical and mental efficiency and render him less trustworthy, the most common kind of incompetency under this head being that caused by intemperance. Michigan C. R. Co. v. Gilbert (1881) 46 Mich. 176, 9 N. W. 243; Campbell & Z. Co. v. Roedger (1894) 78 Md. 601, 28 Atl. 901; Gilman v. Eastern R. Corp. (1865) 10 Allen, 233, 87 Am. Dec. 635; Brickner v. New York Cent. R. Co. (1870) 2 Lans. 515; Huntingdon & B. T. R. & Coal Co. v. Decker (1877) 84 Pa. 419; Kean v. Detroit Copper & Brass Rolling Mills (1887) 66 Mich. 277, 33 N. W. 395; Nelson v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. (1885) 85 Mo. 599; Maxwell v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1884) 85 Mo. 95; Williams v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1891) 109 Mo. 475, 18 S. W. 1098; Laning v. New York C. R. Co. (1872) 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417.

Intemperate habits may be proved under an allegation of injuries caused by the unskillful to the plaintiff. David Loftin testified that he had heard the fire pullers complain, in the presence of Stringer, that Sheldon was not competent to handle an engine, but could not say that this was before the accident. James H. Coyle testified that one night Sheldon backed an engine into another engine, and broke the brake beam out of it, and knocked the fellow over that was underneath it; that this occurred a week or two before the accident to the plaintiff; that he complained to Stringer about Sheldon, because he would stop an engine, and then the engine would start up and roll away; that he heard Charlie Stringer complain to Peter Stringer about Sheldon, and Peter told him to block the engine good before he went under it, and told Coyle to do likewise; that he could not say exactly whether this was before or after the plaintiff got hurt. The plaintiff's counsel asked the witness Charles Andrews the following question:

"Q. What was Mr. Stringer's habits there in regard to being temperate or intemperate when at work?"

The defendant objected, the court overruled the objection, and the defendant duly excepted. The witness answered:

"A. I have seen him drinking—what I would call somewhat intoxicated."

Again, the witness David Lofton was asked:

"Q. You may tell how Mr. Stringer was regarded there as to being a safe and competent man to handle an engine prior to the time of this injury."

The defendant again objected, the court overruled the objection, the defendant saved its exception, and the witness answered:

act of a coservant. Lyons v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1886) 39 Hun, 385.

Or under a general allegation of negligence. Huntingdon & B. T. R. & Coal Co. v. Decker (1877) 84 Pa. 419; Hobson v. New Mexico & A. R. Co. (1886; Ariz.) 11 Pac. 545.

The question whether the delinquent servant was bright and intelligent is too general to be admissible in relation to the issue of his unfitness to act as helper of a car repairer. The witnesses should be interrogated with a view to showing what his duties were, and what was his capacity, as inferred by the witnesses from seeing him perform the same kind of duties. Latreuille v. Bennington & R. R. Co. (1891) 63 Vt. 336, 22 Atl. 656.

But it is also laid down that "incompetency exists, not alone in physical or mental attributes, but in the disposition with which a servant performs his duties; . . . and that, although he may be physically and mentally able to do all that is required of him, his disposition toward his work, and toward the general safety of the work of his employer, and to his fellow servants, makes him an incompetent man," as where he habitually neglects his duties. Coppins v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1890) 122 N. Y. 557, 25 N. E. 915, Affirming (1888) 48 Hun, 292; Cameron v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1895) 145 N. Y. 400, 40 N. E. 1; Smith v. E. W. Backus Lumber Co. (1896) 64 Minn. 447, 67 N. W. 358.

See also infra, II., g.

It has been held that negligence of a railroad company in retaining a brakeman in its employ is not to be inferred where the only evidence on the point is that he was slow and lazy, and that the company knew this, but the same witness testifies that he was always careful about his work (Corson v. Maine C. R. Co. (1884) 76 Me. 244); but this ruling seems contrary to principle and authority, if it is meant to be taken as expressive of a general principle. There are many kinds of work in which the safety of other servants would be constantly imperiled by a want of alertness and activity.

The question whether the delinquent servant was competent for the duties he was performing when the accident occurred must be determined with reference to that time, and not to the time when he first assumed the duties. Harvey v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1882) 83 N. Y. 481, denying the unfitness of the servant to act as switchman where for three months previous to the injury he had had exclusive control of the switches for twelve hours every day, and, so far as the evidence discloses, he had performed this duty to the satisfaction 48 L. R. A.

of the company, and without fault or neglect on his part.

Evidence that the delinquent servant was not competent to take charge of an engine five years before the accident is irrelevant. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. McKeney (1886; Tenn.) 1 S. W. 500.

A verdict for the plaintiff should be set aside where the only evidence that the delinquent servant was addicted to intemperate habits referred to a period four years previous to the accident. Zumwalt v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (1889) 35 Mo. App. 661.

But evidence tending to show the servant's accustomed disobedience to orders and habitual drunkenness, and his reputation for unfitness, is competent, though it relates to a time two years before the accident. Huntingdon & B. T. Mountain R. & Coal Co. v. Decker (1876) 82 Pa. 119.

e. Plaintiff's recovery dependent upon proof of master's actual or constructive knowledge of coservant's unfitness.

As was indicated in the general statement of principle in the first section of the present chapter, the liability of the master for injuries caused by the unfitness of a servant is limited by a doctrine analogous to that which prevails with respect to other agencies, the doctrine; namely, that actionable negligence is predicated only of cases in which the master either hired the delinquent servant with a knowledge of his unfitness, or retained him in the service after notice of such unfitness. The language used by the Supreme Court of the United States is that the plaintiff must show, not only the incompetency, but that "the defendant failed to exercise proper care and diligence to ascertain his qualifications and competency prior to his appointment, or failed to remove him after his incompetency had come to the notice of some agent or officer of defendant having the power to remove the servant." Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels (1882) 107 U. S. 454, 27 L. ed. 605, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 932.

Under ordinary circumstances a master is allowed a reasonable time to discharge the servant after his inefficiency has become known. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Stupak (1889) 123 Ind. 210, 23 N. E. 246 (finding that defendant knew of servant's careless habits the day before the accident does not warrant entry of judgment that master's retention of him was negligent).

This ruling was made the basis of a late decision, that a special verdict, including a finding that the master knew of the servant's

"There was a good deal of complaint against him."

The testimony shows that Randall, the foreman, alone had power to employ and discharge men, and that the head hostler had no such power, and that, in case anything went wrong, Stringer had no power to act, but had to send for Randall, who was alone authorized to act for the company at the roundhouse. Grant Sheldon testified that prior to the accident he was a wiper, and that he never had moved an engine, as he knew the rules of the company forbade his doing so; that when the plaintiff called for coal he was 15 or 20 feet outside of the roundhouse, and shortly afterwards he saw the engine start west towards the coal chute; that he supposed there was a hostler on the engine, and he ran to help get the coal, and when he stepped on the step he saw there was nobody in the cab; that he heard somebody halloo, and he got upon the engine, and stopped it; that he did not start the engine, and was not on it when plaintiff was hurt. Peter Stringer, the head hostler, testified that Sheldon was a wiper or fire puller, and that the rules of the company positively prohibited a wiper or fire puller to move an engine under any circumstances, and that he never heard of Sheldon moving an engine until after plaintiff was injured, and that he (Stringer) had no power to employ or discharge men, but was simply the head hostler at night, and got his orders from Randall. J. F. Randall testified that he was the foreman, and alone had power to employ and discharge men; that Sheldon was employed as a wiper, and was prohibited by the rules of the company to move an engine under any circumstances. At the close of the unfitness before the accident, but not stating how long before the accident that knowledge was acquired, does not warrant the entry of a judgment for the plaintiff. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Breedlove (1894) 10 Ind. App. 657, 38 N. E. 357.

On the one hand, therefore, a verdict for the plaintiff will always be upheld where there is adequate proof that the master knew of the delinquent servant's incompetency before the time when the accident happened. Walker v. Bolling (1853) 22 Ala. 294; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Jewell (1867) 46 Ill. 99, 92 Am. Dec. 240; Chicago & G. E. R. Co. v. Harney (1867) 28 Ind. 28, 92 Am. Dec. 282; Nordyke & M. Co. v. Van Sant (1884) 99 Ind. 188; Cincinnati, H. & I. R. Co. v. Madden (1892) 134 Ind. 462, 34 N. E. 227; Kansas P. R. Co. v. Salmon (1875) 14 Kan. 512; Union P. R. Co. v. Young (1878) 19 Kan. 488; Poirier v. Carroll (1883) 35 La. Ann. 699 (under Louisiana Code, art. 2320, providing that a master is liable for damages by servants which he might prevent); Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Hoover (1894) 79 Md. 253, 25 L. R. A. 710, 29 Atl. 994; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Gilbert (1881) 46 Mich. 176, 9 N. W. 243; New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Hughes (1873) 49 Miss. 258; Huffman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1883) 78 Mo. 50; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Myers (1881) 55 Tex. 110; Kerlin v. Chicago, P. & St. L. R. Co. (1892) 50 Fed. Rep. 185; Rosa v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1881) 2 McCrary, 233, 8 Fed. Rep. 544; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Davis (1893) 4 Tex. Civ. App. 468, 23 S. W. 301.

See also the cases with reference to incompetency arising from intemperate and other bad habits, in the preceding section, and those reviewed in the following sections, which all assume the existence of the rule stated in the text.

Since evidence that the master knew of the servant's unfitness is always competent, error cannot be predicated of the fact that the court admitted it at a certain stage on the trial, simply because it proves to be irrelevant as to the issue finally taken. Altee v. South Carolina R. Co. (1884) 21 S. C. 550.

The same rule holds under Cal. Civ. Code, § 1971, providing that an employer must in all cases indemnify an employee for losses caused by the former's want of ordinary care, although under § 1970 he is not liable unless he neglected to use ordinary care in the "selection" of the negligent employee. Gier v. Los Angeles Consol. Electric R. Co. (1895) 108 Cal. 129, 41 Pac. 22.

A case which seems to be wholly opposed to the general current of authority is Texas & N. 48 L. R. A.

O. R. Co. v. Tatman (1895) 10 Tex. Civ. App. 434, 31 S. W. 333, where it was held, for reasons which are not explained in the opinion, that the mere fact that a railroad company knows that its servants are negligent and careless will not render it liable to one for injuries inflicted on another by such negligence. This ruling is certainly wrong unless the court intended to make a distinction between habitual and isolated acts of negligence. See infra, II. g.

On the other hand, in the absence of evidence that he possessed such knowledge, the master is, as a matter of law, deemed to be free from culpability. Reiser v. Pennsylvania Co. (1892) 152 Pa. 38, 25 Atl. 175; Mulhern v. Lehigh Valley Coal Co. (1894) 161 Pa. 270, 28 Atl. 1087 (a case under the mining law); Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kelly (1874; 24 U. S. App. 103, 63 Fed. Rep. 407, 11 C. C. A. 260; Union P. R. Co. v. Milliken, 8 Kan. 447; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Faber (1885) 63 Tex. 344 (1889) 77 Tex. 153, 8 S. W. 64; Conrad v. Gray (1895) 109 Ala. 130, 10 So. 398; St. Louis Press Brick Co. v. Kenyon (1893) 57 Ill. App. 640.

A special verdict which does not find, as facts, that the delinquent servant was incompetent, and that the master knew of his incompetency, will not support a judgment for the plaintiff. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Tohill (1895) 143 Ind. 49, 41 N. E. 709.

In this instance, as in the case of the other instrumentalities of the business, the knowledge or ignorance contemplated by the law connotes the situations in which the master could or could not, by the exercise of due care, have ascertained the servant's unfitness. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Doyle (1877) 18 Kan. 58; Cameron v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1894) 77 Hun, 519, 28 N. Y. Supp. 898; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Gurley (1883) 12 Lea, 46; Blake v. Maine C. R. Co. (1879) 70 Me. 60, 35 Am. Rep. 207.

An allegation that the master knew of the delinquent servant's incompetency is sustained by proof that it ought to have been known. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Doyle (1877) 18 Kan. 58.

A verdict for the plaintiff will not be set aside where one of the plaintiff's co-servant's gave evidence that the delinquent servant had been intoxicated in the master's presence, while engaged in his duties, and another that he had been so drunk on one occasion as to be compelled to leave his work and go home, and the superintendent testified that he had seen the servant drunk several times, and did not state that these were not times when the servant plaintiff's case, and again at the close of the whole case, the defendants separately demurred to the evidence. The court overruled the demurrer, and defendants excepted.

Defendant asked, and the court refused to give, the following instructions: "(3) The court instructs the jury that notice to or knowledge by a fellow servant of plaintiff of the incompetency of Grant Sheldon is not notice to the defendant railway company; and notice to the head hostler or crew foreman of the defendant of the incompetency of Sheldon was not of itself notice to said defendant, unless said head hostler or crew foreman had power to employ or discharge said Sheldon. (4) The court instructs the jury that plaintiff and Grant Sheldon, under the evidence in this case, were, at the time of the injury, fellow servants with each other, and plaintiff cannot recover for any negligent act of said Grant Sheldon, and that the only ground on which plaintiff can recover is that the defendant railway company was negligent in employing said Sheldon, or was negligent in retaining him in its employ, after notice to it that he was habitually careless and incompetent to perform the duties he was employed or directed to perform, or after it might have learned of such alleged incompetency or carelessness by the use of reasonable care." At the instance of the plaintiff the court gave the following instruction: "The court instructs the jury that any foreman for the master, though not the head foreman, is vice principal as to a servant, if he has the control of the work in which the servant is engaged, and is the person intrusted by the master with authority to direct the servant how, when, and where to work. You are therefore instructed that was at his work. McPhee v. Scully (1895) 163 Mass. 216, 39 N. E. 1007.

In Chapman v. Erie R. Co. (1874) 55 N. Y. 579, evidence that a negligent servant had been in the habit of drinking daily many times, and had become somewhat dissipated, and that he was intoxicated on the night of the accident, was held sufficient, in connection with testimony that the master's representatives had been accustomed to daily intercourse with him and had seen him in drinking places, and on some occasions when he drank, and that one of them had reprimanded him for drinking, to justify a verdict against the master, though the evidence was somewhat in conflict.

Evidence that a servant was intoxicated as often as two or three times a week for a period of nearly two years before the accident, during which he had been working for the defendant, and that the latter's superintendent was at the place of work every other day, was held to make a question for the jury as to the master's knowledge, or means of knowledge, of the servant's habits. Tonnese v. Ross (1890) 58 Hun, 415, 12 N. Y. Supp. 150.

A verdict finding negligence of the employer in failing to learn of an engineer's habit of intoxication was sustained in Hilts v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. (1885) 55 Mich. 437, 21 N. W. 878, where there was a special finding that he had been intoxicated, or under the influence of liquor, three times when running his engine.

See also the cases cited under the following sections, i. f, and g.

But it is obvious that the responsibilities which arise out of the employment of a rational living creature as an industrial agency must in some respects be essentially different from those which attend the use of an inorganic instrumentality, or of an animal which, for juridical purposes, is regarded as a mere chattel devoid of reasoning capacity. This difference is reflected in the nature of the master's obligations with regard to ascertaining the qualifications of his servants, both at the time they are hired and while they are at work.

1. Duty to inquire into the fitness of a servant at the time he is hired.

Although an employer is to a great extent entitled to act upon the assumption that instrumentalities purchased from persons whose business it is to manufacture them are in a sound condition when they are first put in use, he clearly would not be justified in acting upon the assumption that a servant who seeks a position is qualified for it. It is therefore well established that, where the service in which the servant is employed is such as to endanger the lives and persons of coemployees, the master, upon engaging such servant, is required to make reasonable investigation into his character, skill, and habits of life. Western Stone Co. v. Whalen (1894) 151 Ill. 472, 38 N. E. 241; s. p. Mann v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. (1883) 81 N. Y. 495; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Nuckols (1895) 91 Va. 193, 21 S. E. 342; Chicago & G. E. R. Co. v. Harney (1867) 28 Ind. 28, 92 Am. Dec. 282; Alabama & F. R. Co. v. Waller (1872) 48 Ala. 459.

Except where the work is of a simple kind, which anyone of fair intelligence and requisite physical ability is competent to perform. Timm v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1893) 98 Mich. 226, 57 N. W. 116 (loading ties on a handcar).

Whether the master at the time of engaging the servant, or afterwards, ought to have inquired whether he was experienced or not, or should have taken notice, under all the facts, of the probability that he was not, nothing being said on the subject by either party,—is a question for the jury. May v. Smith (1893) 92 Ga. 95, 18 S. E. 360.

This investigation need not necessarily assume the form of questioning an applicant for work as to his competency. An omission to do this is negligence only when there is no better source of information at hand, and cannot be imputed as culpable where information is sought from the applicant's former employer. Gier v. Los Angeles Consol. Electric R. Co. (1895) 108 Cal. 129, 41 Pac. 22.

It is competent to show what the servant's previous record with other employers has been, as it is for the jury to say whether such facts might not have been known to the master, if he had made proper inquiry. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Camp (1895) 31 U. S. App. 213, 65 Fed. Rep. 952, 13 C. C. A. 233.

On the other hand, the employer's duty is fully discharged if "he makes careful inquiry into the habits and competency of the men employed, and upon such inquiry believes, and has reason to believe, them sober and competent and careful." Moss v. Pacific R. Co. (1872) 49 Mo. 167, 8 Am. Rep. 126. See Indiana Mfg. Co. v. Millican (1882) 87 Ind. 87; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Henthorne (1896) 43 U. S. App. 113, 73 Fed. Rep. 634, 19 C. C. A. 623; Fine v. Sillery (1893) 73 Hun, 549, 26 N. Y. Supp. 181.

It is not the duty of the master to ascertain the qualifications of a servant "as a fact," for the imposition of such an obligation would be tantamount to a requirement that his qualifications should be warranted. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Morrissey (1891) 45 Ill. App. 127.

if you believe, from the evidence, that, prior to the injury of plaintiff, Peter Stringer had control and direction of the men engaged in performing the work in and about the round-house in Monett, Missouri, and was intrusted by the defendant with authority to direct the said persons so working for said defendant when and where to work, then the knowledge of Peter Stringer would be the knowledge of the defendant."

There was a verdict for the plaintiff for $2,637 against all the defendants personally, and after due steps the defendants appealed to the St. Louis court of appeals, which court transferred the case to this court. The trial took place at the December term, 1895, and afterwards, at the May term, 1896, on motion of the plaintiff, and notice to defendants, the court amended the judgment nunc pro tunc so as to provide that the judgment should be entered against the defendant company, and that such judgment be certified to the defendant receivers, "to be satisfied out of any fund that may be liable to same."

Mr. L. F. Parker, for appellants:

The presumption is that the railway company exercised due care in Sheldon's selection and employment, and that it had no knowledge of his incompetency or lack of skill.

1 Bailey, Master & Servant, § 1418; Blake v. Maine C. R. Co. 70 Me. 60, 35 Am. Rep. 297; Roblin v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 119 Mo. 476, 24 S. W. 1011.

The evidence is not sufficient to show that Sheldon was either incompetent or unskilful. Dysart v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 145 Mo. 88, 46 S. W. 751.

Carelessness and inattention on the part

An employer is also bound to institute affirmative inquiries in order to ascertain the qualifications of a servant whom he promotes to a position for which special qualifications are demanded, unless the servant has given proof of his capacity in some similar position. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Guyton (1888) 115 Ind. 450, 17 N. E. 101. There the court, in commenting upon the evidence which was held to justify the jury in finding the defendant liable for the negligence of a conductor whom it had promoted without the usual examination, said: "It should be remembered that Stice [the conductor] had served the company as brakeman until quite recently before the unfortunate accident, and while his service as brakeman is not to be disregarded in determining his competency to act in the more responsible position of conductor, it does not follow, without more, that because he was an efficient and competent brakeman, and fit for promotion, he was also competent to take charge of and run a wild train."

It should be noted that, where the injury in suit is one resulting, not from the unfitness of a fellow servant, but for the unskilfulness of the plaintiff himself, the obligations of the master as to inquiry are determined upon another footing.

Some of the cases involving this feature have been made to turn upon the principle (which is not here discussed at length) that, if a person of apparently full age and complete understanding undertakes certain duties, he is presumed to appreciate and accept the risks incident to those duties. This principle is the basis of the doctrine that an employer who is hiring a man twenty years of age is not bound to examine him as to his experience and capacity with a view to ascertain whether he needs instruction as to the dangers of the work. O'Neal v. Chicago & I. Coal R. Co. (1892) 132 Ind. 110, 81 N. E. 669; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Adams (1886) 105 Ind. 151, 5 N. E. 187.

Another theory is that, by applying for work, a servant holds himself out as possessing competent knowledge and skill, and that, if these qualifications are lacking, any injury which results from his unfitness is to be attributed to his own fault. Huber v. Jackson & S. Co. (1895) 1 Marv. (Del.) 374, 41 Atl. 92.

But these principles cease to be applicable where a servant hired for one kind of work is directed to perform some other requiring special skill.

Thus, the act of a foreman in directing a common laborer employed to break stone and drill holes, to draw a charge from a blast, without ascertaining what his knowledge or experience is, constitutes negligence as matter of law. Vitto v. Farley (1895) 15 Misc. 153, 36 N. Y. Supp. 1105.
48 L. R. A.

On the duty to instruct servants, see also note to James v. Rapides Lumber Co. (1898; La.) 44 L. R. A. 33.

g. Duty of the master to keep himself informed as to the fitness of a servant already in his employment.

The consequences of the essential difference between the situations in which the master is utilizing the work of human beings and of other appliances are still more conspicuous when we come to consider his duties with regard to keeping himself informed as to the fitness of servants after their employment. That he is bound to do this, so far as it can be accomplished by proper supervision and superintendence, is well settled. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Henthorne (1896) 43 U. S. App. 113, 73 Fed. Rep. 634, 19 C. C. A. 623; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Nuckols (1895) 91 Va. 193, 21 S. E. 342; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Collarn (1881) 73 Ind. 261, 38 Am. Rep. 134; Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels (1883) 107 U. S. 454, 27 L. ed. 605, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 932; Holland v. Tennessee Coal, I. & R. Co. (1890) 91 Ala. 444, 12 L. R. A. 232, 8 So. 524; and the cases cited under the following sections.

A plea that the company had exercised ordinary care and diligence to secure a skilful engineer who was reputed to be careful and skilful, and supposed to be such at the time of the collision, is not good, as "supposed" means no more than "believed." Alabama & F. R. Co. v. Waller (1872) 48 Ala. 459.

But the rule of conduct based upon the physical law that inorganic appliances are constantly tending to deteriorate with use finds no analogy in cases where it is a question whether the master should have known of a servant's unfitness.

On the contrary, when suitable and competent persons have been employed, good character and proper qualifications may be presumed to continue, and the master may rely on that presumption until notice of a change. Blake v. Maine C. R. Co. (1879) 70 Me. 60, 35 Am. Rep. 297; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Dolan (1875) 82 Mich. 510; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Gilbert (1881) 46 Mich. 176, 9 N. W. 243; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Stupak (1889) 123 Ind. 210, 23 N. E. 246.

In Chapman v. Erie R. Co. (1874) 55 N. Y. 579, the defendant complained of the following charge: "But if, after a competent and proper of another servant is one of the assumed risks of the service.

Core v. Ohio River R. Co. 38 W. Va. 456, 18 S. E. 596.

No causal connection was shown between the allegation of negligence on the part of the railway company and the injury.

Harvey v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 88 N. Y. 481; 1 Bailey Personal Injuries, § 1446.

Notice of the incompetency of a fellow servant must be had by one who has authority in the premises to bind the master.

Reiser v. Pennsylvania Co. 152 Pa. 39, 25 Atl. 175; Wabash Western R. Co. v. Brow, 31 U. S. App. 192, 65 Fed. Rep. 941, 13 C. C. A. 222; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Collarn, 73 Ind. 261, 38 Am. Rep. 134.

A receiver cannot be sued, as such, in any other tribunal than the one by which he is appointed, without first securing permission of that court.

Beach, Receivers, 2d ed. pp. 697, 698; Barton v. Barbour, 104 U. S. 126, 26 L. ed. 672; Turner v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 74 Mo. 602; Heath v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 83 Mo. 617; Fullerton v. Fordyce, 121 Mo. 1, 25 S. W. 587.

An exception to this rule, as to suits against receivers appointed by courts of the United States, is made by act of Congress March 3, 1887, 24 Stat. at L. p. 554, as to a cause of action "in respect of any act or transaction" of the receivers; but as to all other actions the rule remains the same.

The injury to plaintiff occurred before the receivers were appointed, and created no cause of action against them.

Decker v. Gardner, 124 N. Y. 334, 11 L. R. A. 480, 26 N. E. 814; Pringle v. Wool-

person is employed for such a duty, his habits become such that it is unsafe to trust him any longer in that capacity, the company are bound to use, through their proper officers, such reasonable care and diligence in ascertaining what the man is, after he is employed, as they would be in his original employment." The court of appeals upheld the objection, saying: "Good character and proper qualifications, once possessed, may be presumed to continue, and I see no reason why a principal may not rely upon that presumption as to these personal qualities until he has notice of a change, or knowledge of such facts as would be deemed equivalent to notice, or at least such as would put a reasonable man upon inquiry. The charge permitted the jury, without restriction or limit, to determine what particular supervision or watchfulness was necessary to exonerate the defendant from the charge of negligence. They might require periodical investigations, or an efficient detective system. They were at liberty to adopt any rule, and might adopt one which would practically make the defendant a guarantor of the correctness of every act of its employees. We have been referred to no authority for such a doctrine, and it would be manifestly unjust to adopt it." The court held that reasons for inspection of machinery or implements are not applicable to the case of an employee, and said: "If competent when employed, additional experience would naturally render him more so, and while his habits might change for the worse, there is no such depravity in human nature as in law requires special vigilance on the part of the employer to prevent it."

Even after a notification that the servant has become unfit for his duties, the master is not ordinarily bound to discharge such servant without an investigation into such charge, unless such notice is accompanied by such evidence as leaves no doubt of the truth of such charge. A rule that would require the master to discharge a servant, careful and competent when employed, without investigation, upon a charge of carelessness, is deemed to be a harsh one, and would often result in great injustice to employees. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Stupak (1889) 123 Ind. 210, 23 N. E. 246. In that case the material charge against the defendant was that, with notice of the negligence and carelessness of an engineer, it carelessly and negligently retained him in its service. The court said: "The jury found that the appellant had knowledge of the careless habits of Pool before the day on which the injury occurred, but this does not authorize us to say, 48 L. R. A.

as a matter of law, that it negligently retained him in its service after such knowledge."

All that the master is required to do when his attention is directed to circumstances indicating a diminution in the servant's efficiency is to make careful and frequent investigation as to the fact, if he retains him in his service. Whether he performs this duty is a question for the jury to pass upon. Michigan C. R. Co. v. Gilbert (1881) 46 Mich. 176, 9 N. W. 243.

II. Probative value of various facts as tending to show culpability on the master's part.

a. Incompetence of servant.

The principle that the gravamen of the action is negligence, that is, the employment of an unfit servant with knowledge, actual or constructive, of his unfitness (see supra, I. c) involves the corollary that a complaint is demurrable which merely alleges that it was the master's duty to employ careful and skillful servants, and that he failed to select those that were competent. A want of care and diligence in the selection should also be charged. Moss v. Pacific R. Co. (1872) 49 Mo. 167, 8 Am. Rep. 126.

That the gravamen of the action is negligence in the selection of the servant, see also Stevens v. San Francisco & N. P. R. Co (1893) 100 Cal. 554, 35 Pac. 165.

As a general rule the master's knowledge must be proved by independent evidence, and cannot be inferred from the mere fact of the servant's unfitness, supposing that to be proved or admitted. Roblin v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. (1893) 119 Mo. 476, 24 S. W. 1011 (incompetency said to be not even prima facie proof of negligence in employing the servant); Thomas v. Herrall (1890) 18 Or. 546 23 Pac. 497.

An instruction is erroneous by which the master's liability for the negligence of a servant is made to hinge upon his competency alone. The essential question is whether the master used ordinary care to procure a competent person. Tarrant v. Webb (1856) 18 C. B. 797, 25 L. J. C. P. N. S. 261.

It is error to charge a jury that if a servant did not possess some indispensable qualification for his duties, this of itself showed the master to have been negligent, for it may be that all reasonable precautions were taken to ascertain his competency for the place, and that the master was nevertheless deceived. Taylor v. Western P. R. Co. (1873) 45 Cal. 323.

The only authority which distinctly countenances the doctrine that proof of the servworth, 90 N. Y. 502; Arnold v. Suffolk Bank, 27 Barb. 424; Re Dexterville Mfg. & Boom Co. 4 Fed. Rep. 873; Hiles v. Case, 9 Biss. 549, 14 Fed. Rep. 141; Central Trust Co. v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 30 Fed. Rep. 895; Easton v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 38 Fed. Rep. 12; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Green Bay, W. & St. P. R. Co. 45 Fed. Rep. 664; Finance Co. of Pennsylvania v. Charleston, C. & C. R. Co. 46 Fed. Rep. 508.

Messrs. W. Cloud and J. T. Burgess, for respondent:

Where the master gives to a person power to superintend, control, and direct the men engaged in the work, such person is, as to the men under him, a vice principal, and a foreman who has charge of a gang of men, with power to direct their movements, is such vice principal. In this case Peter Stringer was night foreman of defendant's roundhouse and yard, and in control of same; and notice to him of the incompetency and recklessness of said Sheldon to handle engines was notice to defendant company.

Dayharsh v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 103 Mo. 570, 15 S. W. 554; Schroeder v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 108 Mo. 322, 18 L. R. A. 827, 18 S. W. 1094; Bradley v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 138 Mo. 293, 39 S. W. 763; Loe v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 57 Mo. App. 350.

Sheldon was incompetent to handle engines, and defendant knew of the same, or by the use of ordinary care could have known it; and yet, after knowing that fact, still it permitted him to so handle engines under protest from the company's employees.

Williams v. Missouri P. R. Co. 109 Mo. 475, 18 S. W. 1098; Francis v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 127 Mo. 658, 28 S. W. 842.

ant's unfitness renders it necessary to submit to the jury the question whether the master was negligent in Skerritt v. Scallan (1877) 1 Ir. Rep. 11, C. L. 389 (unskilful construction of scaffold), where the jury had specially found, among facts, that the delinquent co-servant was incompetent, but that the defendant was not aware of it, and the trial judge directed a verdict for the defendant. A new trial was awarded on the ground that the question whether the master had used due care in the selection of the servant had not been submitted to the jury. Dowse, B., did not express a decided opinion as to whether the onus of proving negligence still lay on the servant after the incompetency of the delinquent servant was shown. Palles, C. B., held that the onus of disproving negligence was transferred by such evidence to the master, adopting the theory of Deasy, B., in Murphy v. Pollock (1863) 15 Ir. C. L. Rep. 224, that, as the mode and circumstances of the employment were matters peculiarly within the knowledge of the master, evidence showing that the delinquent fellow servant had started an engine after the plaintiff's decedent, who was killed by its exploding, had suggested that there was something wrong with it, was sufficient to be submitted to the jury on the question of his incompetency. Fitzgerald and Hughes, B. B., intimated an opinion to the contrary, but held that, at all events, it was not evidence of negligence in selecting the servant.

In Minnesota it has been held that proof that the servant was incompetent at the time of his employment casts upon the master the burden of disproving negligence. Crandall v. McIlrath (1877) 24 Minn. 127.

This rule, however, is subject to a qualification analogous to that which, in the case of injuries caused by inanimate agencies, is created by the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

An instruction which declares, without qualification, that negligence in hiring a servant cannot be inferred merely from the fact of his incompetency, is erroneous, as there may be a degree of incompetency which, of itself, might justly be regarded by the jury as imparting notice. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Gurley (1883) 12 Lea, 46. Compare II. g. infra, as to acts prior to accident.

Another qualification also arises in practice from the fact that "the testimony by which the incompetency of a servant is established may be such as to warrant the inference that the master had notice of his incompetency, or that he omitted to make such inquiries as common prudence would have dictated." Murphy v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. (1879) 71 Mo. 202. 48 L. R. A.

In one case it was said that, in the absence of evidence as to the exercise of any care in his selection, proof that a servant who had been in the service but two or three weeks was incompetent when employed need not be supplemented by proof of the company's knowledge of his incompetency, the presumption that the employer had done his duty being overcome by proof that the servant was incompetent; and the general rule was laid down as follows: Where one competent at the time of his employment becomes incompetent, or indulges in a habit which renders him incompetent during its indulgence, notice of the incompetency or of the habit must be brought home to the company, or the incompetency or habit must be so notorious as to charge the company with knowledge; but when the incompetency does not arise after the employment, but existed at the time, proof of notice is not necessary. Lee v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1891) 87 Mich. 574, 49 N. W. 909.

b. Race and color of delinquent servant.

Notice of a servant's want of competency for the duties of a brakeman cannot be imputed to an employer from the fact that he is a negro. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Christman (1886) 65 Tex. 369. The court said: "The competency or incompetency of no one to perform a given duty, in the absence of some law so declaring, can be made to depend on color or race; but in each case this must depend upon intelligence to know, and ability and disposition to perform, the duties pertaining to any given position. Proof of facts which show the non-existence of such intelligence, ability, or disposition must be made by the party who asserts its nonexistence. The law does not presume it because the person whose qualities may be the subject of investigation may be of one or another race or color; nor is a jury at liberty to infer it from such fact. If, however, this were not true, and the rule were that a jury might infer that a person was an unsuitable person for brakeman from the fact that he was a negro, then such inference would have to be based on the fact that all negroes are wanting in intelligence, ability, or disposition to perform faithfully and safely the duties of brakeman. If this were true, the appellee would stand charged with knowledge of their unfitness, and, knowing that the brakemen on his train were negroes, would be held to have voluntarily assumed such risks as result from such incompetency. The invocation of such a rule would be suicidal to the appellee's case."

Evidence of the general reputation of an employee showing unfitness for the duties assigned the employees, and specific acts of negligence or of incompetency on the part of such employee, with evidence of knowledge thereof on part of the master, is competent to go to the jury.

Grube v. Missouri P. R. Co. 98 Mo. 330, 4 L. R. A. 776, 11 S. W. 736.

Allowing a person, not having the qualifications, to handle an engine, renders the company responsible for the negligence of the foreman in allowing such person to handle the engine, from which an injury results.

Harper v. Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. 47 Mo. 567.

Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. This proceeding against the receivers

c. Appearance and manner of the servant while testifying.

That the appearance and manner of the servant while testifying do not constitute circumstances from which, apart from other evidence, a jury ought to be allowed to infer that he was unfit for his duties, is a rule no less comfortable to principle than to authority.

In Corson v. Maine C. R. Co. (1884) 76 Me. 244, the court held that if the jury undertook to decide that a person was unfit to be employed as a brakeman on account of what they saw, or supposed they saw or could read, in his face and manner while testifying before them as a witness, they fell into a very grave error, and said: "As well might a jury find a man guilty of murder because in their opinion they could see guilt in his face. The law does not recognize physiognomy as an art or science sufficiently reliable to found a verdict upon,—not even against a railroad corporation." In Keith v. New Haven & N. Co. (1885) 140 Mass. 175, 3 N. E. 28, the court declined to rule that the appearance and conduct of a car inspector in the presence of a jury, when considered together with other testimony tending to show his unfitness, might not be legally sufficient to satisfy them that he was an incompetent person. In Peaslee v. Fitchburgh R. Co. (1890) 152 Mass. 155, 25 N. E. 71, it was argued that the jury had a right to determine from the appearance of a witness that he was so manifestly incompetent that the defendant was negligent in employing him as engineer. The court said there was nothing in the exceptions to show that there was anything in his appearance that would justify such an inference, and that it could not be presumed that there was. Keith v. New Haven & N. Co. (1885) 140 Mass. 175, 3 N. E. 28, was distinguished on the ground that there was other evidence of incompetency in that case, while in the case at bar the only evidence of incompetency was the single act of negligence.

But it would seem that, even in cases where there is corroborative evidence, the risk that injustice may result from such a doctrine in its practical operation is very considerable.

Men who, as employees, may be perfectly efficient, often appear to great disadvantage as witnesses, when under the influence of the nervous embarrassment which is apt to be produced in a greater or less degree by the unfamiliar surroundings of a courtroom. At the very most, it is submitted, a jury should not be allowed to draw any conclusions from their view of a witness, except in the most extreme cases of glaring mental and physical defects which appointed by the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Missouri is without any permission or authority from that court, and hence cannot be maintained. The cause of action did not arise or accrue while the receivers were in charge of and conducting the business, and therefore the plaintiff does not come within the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887 (24 U. S. Stat. at L. p. 554). The accident complained of occurred on the 20th of October, 1893, and the receivers were not appointed until December 23, 1893. Receivers are officers of court to hold and manage property which is in the registry of the court, and persons having any claim to property so situated must submit their claims to the court that has obtained jurisdiction over the res, and the court will not permit its officers to be sued in any other tribunal without its any reasonable person would concede to be incompatible with efficiency. But even in these cases, it would, upon general principles, be necessary to show by independent testimony that the defects existed at the time of the accident. It is difficult, therefore, to see why, if that testimony must ultimately be relied upon, the jury should be permitted at all to consider the demeanor and appearance of the delinquent servant on the witness stand. The obvious perils of the doctrine applied by the Massachusetts court do not seem to be counterbalanced by the consideration that the circumstances which it introduces into the case possess some probative force.

d. Language of delinquent servant himself, indicating recklessness of character.

In a suit against a railroad company by a brakeman, to recover damages for injuries received while coupling cars, evidence that the engineer, shortly before, had declared to the plaintiff that he "would as soon run over him as not," is admissible as bearing upon the question whether the company selected an unsuitable man for engineer, but the jury should be charged that, if the malice of the engineer toward the plaintiff was the cause of the injury, there could be no recovery. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Willie (1880) 53 Tex. 318, 37 Am. Rep. 756.

e. Minority.

The fact that the delinquent servant was a minor is an important, though not decisive, element in the inquiry. Its evidential weight depends upon the character of the work to be done, the servant's previous experience, and his actual age.

Incompetency for the duties of telegraph operator cannot be inferred from the mere fact that the servant was seventeen years old, when it is also in evidence that he has discharged his duties efficiently for a year, and that young men are generally better operators than old ones. Sutherland v. Troy & B. R. Co. (1891) 125 N. Y. 737, 26 N. E. 609.

The mere fact of employing a boy twelve years old for the purpose of running an elevator is not evidence from which a want of care in selecting a servant can be inferred. Smillie v. St. Bernard Dollar Store (1891) 47 Mo. App. 402 (dissenting. Thompson, J.).

A statute empowering mine owners to employ boys of a certain age does not create a presumption that any boy of that age is fit for his duties, but it is still permissible for the jury to consent. This is not only a law of comity among courts, but is a jurisdictional necessity, for it is manifest that two courts could not, acting separately, successfully manage the property, or harmoniously distribute it. Beach, Receivers, Alderson's ed. §§ 229-240; Kerr, Receivers, 2d ed. pp. 196 et seq. The petition does not aver that the consent or permission of the United States circuit court to sue its receivers was asked or obtained before this action was begun, and there is a total lack of any evidence of such steps having been taken. The action cannot, therefore, be maintained, and the judgment against the receivers, or, as amended, that the judgment against the company be certified to the receivers, is reversed.

2. The case made against the defendant company by the pleadings is that it employed Grant Sheldon as a hostler at its roundhouse consider the boy's size, age, previous experience, strength, and intelligence, and the fact that he was kept at his post thirteen hours a day. Carlson v. Wilkeson Coal & Coke Co. (1898) 19 Wash. 473, 53 Pac. 725.

The mere fact that the servant is under fourteen years of age will not justify the inference that he is incompetent, where the duties to be performed are of a simple character, such as repeating to the engineer of the hoisting machinery above a quarry the signals received from the men in the quarry. Rickett v. Stephens (1890) 133 Pa. 538, 19 Atl. 410 (evidence that such work was done by boys).

1. Previous experience of the servant.

Whether the master is chargeable with negligence on the ground that he should have seen that the servant's previous experience was not such as to qualify him for the duties to which he was assigned is a question the answer to which is obtained by considering two variable factors, viz., the character of the duties, and the extent of the servant's experience in the same or similar duties. It is manifest that a question dependent upon factors which may assume such indefinitely diverse forms as these is pre-eminently one for the jury.

What time or training is requisite to make one a competent engineer is a question of fact solely. Hence it is error to instruct a jury that "proof of the employment of one who had always been a manual laborer or a mule driver to run a steam engine raises a presumption of negligence of the master, without showing that he had actual notice of the servant's antecedents." Joch v. Dankwardt (1877) 85 Ill. 331.

This instruction, which follows the rule formulated in Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, § 193, was, however, approved by the court, arguendo, in Harper v. Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. (1871) 47 Mo. 567, 4 Am. Rep. 353.

The commentator, therefore, can do little more than indicate the broad category under which the cases fall, and state the effect of the rulings under each head.

In some cases the propriety of requiring that the servant shall have had some practical experience, or been in a position in which he had an opportunity of observing others do the work, is too manifest to be a matter of doubt.

If the employment demands special knowledge or experience, only men of special knowledge and experience should be employed. Holland v. Tennessee Coal, I. & R. Co. (1890) 91 Ala. 444, 12 L. R. A. 232, 8 So. 524.

It is negligence to intrust the handling of a dangerous material, like dynamite, to inexperienced workmen. Stewart v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. (1889) 54 Hun. 638, 8 N. Y. Supp. 19 (verdict for plaintiff warranted by evidence that the foreman in charge for the day was a stone mason with an imperfect knowledge of the properties of dynamite).

at Monett, knowing that he was unskilful, and incompetent to handle an engine, or that it might have ascertained that fact by the exercise of ordinary care; and that the plaintiff, a locomotive fireman in the defendants' employ, was injured, while in the discharge of his duty, by the carelessness of said Sheldon in starting the engine to which plaintiff was attached as such fireman, without ringing the bell or sounding the whistle. This is the substance of the first count. The second count is the same, except that it contains an averment that the engine was in a defective or dangerous condition; but, as there is no evidence to support that averment, and no instructions were asked by the plaintiff predicated a right to recover upon the defective or dangerous condition of the machinery, the plaintiff must be regarded as having abandoned that count. We will replied workmen. Stewart v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. (1889) 54 Hun. 638, 8 N. Y. Supp. 19 (verdict for plaintiff warranted by evidence that the foreman in charge for the day was a stone mason with an imperfect knowledge of the properties of dynamite).

The master may properly be found negligent where common laborers, engaged in stowing stone posts in a schooner, were charged with the duty of securing the platform, and allowed to select the gear, without instruction, and there is no evidence that they possessed the requisite skill, intelligence, or care. Donnelly v. Booth Bros. & H. I. Granite Co. (1867) 90 Me. 110, 37 Atl. 874.

On the other hand, negligence on the master's part is not established where the only testimony as to incompetency is that of the delinquent servant himself, who admitted on cross-examination that he had never done any wiring of holes loaded with dynamite, and had not had charge of deep drilling and dynamite blasting with electricity, but also testified that he knew how it ought to be done. O'Neill v. O'Leary (1895) 164 Mass. 387, 41 N. E. 602.

The incompetency of a servant may arise from the fact that he has not worked at the employment for several years, as well as from unfamiliarity with it. Curran v. A. H. Stange Co. (1898) 98 Wis. 508, 74 N. W. 377.

But if the work may be well done by the unskilled and inexperienced, it cannot be said that the master is lacking in the measure of care he owes to other employees, if he employs unskilled and inexperienced men upon it. Holland v. Tennessee Coal, I. & R. Co. (1890) 91 Ala. 444, 12 L. R. A. 232, 8 So. 524.

It is not negligence to employ other employees to employ a man twenty-two years of age, physically and mentally qualified for the business, to assume the active duties of brakeman, merely because he has not yet had experience. Gorman v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. (1889) 78 Iowa, 509, 43 N. W. 803.

Complaint by a yard switchman, charging incompetency of the fireman through failure to understand signals, and alleging his inexperience, is sufficient as to the allegation of his incompetency. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Eckols (1894) 7 Tex. Civ. App. 429, 26 S. W. 1117.

A verdict for the plaintiff has been set aside where the evidence showed that such fellow servant was an intelligent man, that the duties of a signalman and a switchman which he was discharging when the accident occurred were so simple that, according to the testimony of one witness, they could be learned in one or two days, or, according to the testimony of another therefore treat the case as resting upon the first count only. The evidence wholly failed to support the allegation that Sheldon was employed by defendant as a hostler. On the contrary, all the evidence shows that he was employed as a wiper or fire puller, and that the rules of the company positively prohibited a wiper or fire puller to move an engine under any circumstances, except in the immediate presence and under the direction of a hostler who was on the engine. The plaintiff produced some evidence that on at least one occasion before this accident Sheldon did move an engine, and backed it into another engine; but there is no evidence that the company, or any of Sheldon's superior officers, knew of this fact, and, on the contrary, the head hostler and the foreman both testify that they never knew of Sheldon moving an engine at any time before the accident. The plaintiff's witnesses Andrews, Loftin, and Coyle testify to hearing or making complaints against Sheldon, and that the fire pullers were afraid to go under the engine when he was moving it, but none of them would swear that this occurred prior to the accident to the plaintiff; and when it is remembered that the plaintiff was injured on the 20th of October, 1893, and that the trial at which this testimony was introduced took place on the 3d of January, 1896, the inability of the witnesses to locate these "talks" among "the boys," as to whether they were before the accident or afterwards, is easily understood. The witness Coyle also testified to hearing complaints made to Stringer, the head hostler, about Sheldon, but he was unable to state whether this was before or after the accident; he finally saying: "I do not know for certain. It was witness, in two or three weeks; and that, previous to the accident he had been employed for three weeks in the yard and one week in the duties of switchman and signalman. Deverill v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (1866) 25 U. C. Q. B. 517.

Between these two extreme predicaments lie those in which some experience is admitted to be necessary, and the question presented is whether that which the servant has had is sufficient to qualify him for his duties. The following cases will indicate the views taken by the courts as to a variety of circumstances.

In Bunnell v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. (1882) 29 Minn. 305, 13 N. W. 120, there was held to be sufficient evidence to sustain a verdict for the plaintiff where the testimony showed that the man hired as a foreman of carpenters had been in the defendant's employ only about four months before the accident caused by his negligence; that for three years before that time he had been in the insurance business; that he had never learned the carpenter's trade, and had, in all, never worked more than twelve weeks as a carpenter.

In Gibson v. Northern C. R. Co. (1890) 22 Hun, 280, a car inspector, who failed to discover and note a defect, was thirty-four or thirty-five years old, and had worked for three or four months in a railroad yard in Ireland, putting brasses into freight cars, but, with this exception, had been employed as a common laborer, and was not a mechanic, and was without knowledge of machinery up to the time of entering the service of the defendant. He worked in the defendant's carpenter shop, repairing cars, putting in brasses, bolting, and putting in boxes, and assisting in the shop, from one to two years, and was then made car inspector. His evidence showed clearly that he understood the details of his business, and appeared to have been given intelligently. It was held that negligence in employing him as a car inspector was not shown.

Incompetency to act as flagman for an approaching train at night-time may be properly found where the servant had had scarcely any experience as brakeman or flagman, had not been instructed as to the rule requiring the use of torpedoes, and had never flagged a train except once before, on which occasion he had been found fault with by defendant's conductor, and discharged for disobedience. Mann v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. (1883) 91 N. Y. 495.

Whether a railway company is liable for an injury caused by the unskillfulness of a yard conductor in turning a switch is for the jury, where the tracks are so complicated that without experience in the operation of the switches, mistakes would be likely to be made, and the delinquent servant's duties as yard conductor only occasionally required him to turn the switches, and before his appointment to that position he had been engaged in coupling cars. O'Loughlin v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1895) 87 Hun, 538, 34 N. Y. Supp. 297.

The fact that a man is competent for the general duties of a locomotive engineer will not excuse a railway company for an accident caused by his lack of knowledge and experience as to the road at the place where the accident occurred. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Patton (1894; Tex. Civ. App.) 25 S. W. 339. Affirmed in (1894; Tex.) 26 S. W. 978, where, however, this point was not discussed.

In Wright v. New York C. R. Co. (1858) 28 Barb. 80, the court expressed its dissatisfaction with a verdict finding that a man was not competent to act as engineer of a night train on the line between Rochester and Niagara, where the evidence was that he had served as an engineer some four years, and had been in the employ of the defendant nineteen months, but not on the section of the road in question; that he had, however, as engineer, run over the road a dozen times in the nineteen months, and had ridden on the cars at other times; and that he had run up to the bridge with a freight train, the night before; and several witnesses of the defendant, engineers, also state facts tending strongly to show that such an acquaintance with a road was amply sufficient. The court of appeals held that the man was certainly competent. (1862) 25 N. Y. 502.

The competency of a fireman to act as engineer on a run between stations is for the jury where the evidence is that he had been in the employment of the defendant several years, part of the time as a fireman, and at two different periods of about six months each had served as an extra engineer in charge of freight trains, but never as a regular engineer; that he had been over the section of the road on which the accident occurred about twenty-four times in all, in his service as an engineer, the last time about a month before the accident; that he had never inspected the switches or side tracks at the point where the accident occurred, so as to learn their exact location, and knew nothing on that subject except what he had noticed when he passed over them, and had been told by others; that he had had no experience in running an engine disabled as was the one which caused the injury, and had never observed the effect of such disability upon the holding power of an engine or the ability of those in charge of it to stop it; and that he had been examined when promoted to the posion or about that time, to the best of my knowledge—about. It might have been prior to that, and it might have been afterwards, but it was about that time." When the evidence is analyzed, therefore, it amounts to this: That Sheldon was not employed as a hostler, as charged in the petition, but was employed as wiper or fire puller, and was prohibited by the rules of the company from moving an engine, except when a hostler was on the engine directing him; that neither the head hostler nor the foreman had ever heard of Sheldon moving an engine before the accident; that Sheldon did move an engine once before the accident, but neither the head hostler nor the foreman ever heard of it; that the fire pullers and wipers complained about Sheldon, and at least one of them spoke to the head hostler about Sheldon, but it does not appear that this was before the accident; that Peter Stringer was the head hostler, and directed the men around the roundhouse as to what work they should do, but that he had no power to employ or discharge anyone, and, if anything unusual occurred, he had to report to, and act under the orders of, Randall, who was the foreman and master mechanic, and whose office was within a few feet of the roundhouse, and who alone had power to employ or discharge the men.

The case was put to the jury by the court upon instructions which authorized a recovery by the plaintiff if the defendants employed Sheldon, and permitted him to move engines around the roundhouse or yards at Monett, and if Sheldon was unskilful or incompetent, and the defendant knew it, or by the exercise of reasonable care could have ascertained it, or kept him in its employ afftion of engineer, but not upon that subject. O'Laughlin v. New York C. & H. R. E. Co. (1887) 9 N. Y. S. R. 384.

The negligence of the railway company is for the jury where the evidence is that the accident occurred on the first occasion when he had charge of a train in the night-time; that, prior to the accident, he had had little or no experience as engineer, except such as he derived from making a few short trips by day-light; that he had also acted for a short time as fireman on day trips, and that the accident, a collision, might have been prevented if he had not neglected his duty to light the head-light. Newell v. Ryan (1886) 40 Hun, 286.

A railroad engineer is presumably a competent person to inspect an engine to see if it is in such repair as to prevent the escape of fire. Menominee River Sash & Door Co. v. Milwaukee & N. R. Co. (1895) 91 Wis. 447, 65 N. W. 176.

The principle governing the liability of a railway company for injuries caused by the incompetency of a fireman who has been temporarily permitted to handle an engine for switching, and similar work, has been formulated as follows:

"Railroad companies are not required to employ skilled engineers as firemen; and, if it is the prevailing custom of engineers to leave the firemen in charge of their engines when switching or similar work is to be done, then it is to be presumed that brakemen, when they engage or continue in their employment, do so with the knowledge of the custom, assuming the additional hazard that the custom involves, and can be entitled to compensation from the company for injury caused by a fireman's incompetent management of an engine only when his fitness was below what ought to be required of firemen." Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kelly (1894) 24 U. S. App. 103, 63 Fed. Rep. 407, 11 C. C. A. 260. A requested instruction in this case, "that firemen after a certain period of service as firemen are promoted to engineers," was held objectionable because it assumes that such promotions of firemen to engineers were of uniform or at least customary occurrence "after a certain period of service as firemen," without regard to the capacity, habits, and temper of the particular individuals. The court says: "There was no proof of such custom; none such, of course, has ever prevailed."

One who has served as a fireman for a long time, and on several occasions has run an engine in a switchyard, is not to be deemed incompetent to act as engineer on a train in such yard because he is not regularly engaged as an engineer. Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Dunn (1894) 48 L. R. A.

138 Ind. 18, 36 N. E. 702, Rehearing Denied in (1894) 138 Ind. 28, 37 N. E. 546.

Permitting a fireman who has been employed as a brakeman for six months and as a fireman for twenty months, and who has handled an engine more or less, to operate a switch engine in coupling cars, is not negligence which will render the company liable for injuries to a switchman by starting the engine too suddenly. Thompson v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1890) 84 Mich. 281, 47 N. W. 584.

In Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Thomas (1893) 90 Va. 205, 17 S. E. 884, a railroad company was held liable where the engineer in charge allowed a flying switch to be made by an inexperienced fireman, who had only been in service three or four weeks and never on a railroad before, and the conductor (a vice principal as to such matters in Virginia) knew he was running the engine.

Unfitness for the duty of handling a switch-engine is not proved where the servant had had two years' experience as fireman, and during that time had frequently been intrusted with switching. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. McKeney (1886: Tenn.) 1 S. W. 500.

It is not negligence to promote a fireman to the post of engineer after he has been one year in the service, where the evidence is that two years' experience as fireman with the opportunities thus obtained, for learning an engineer's duties, is generally considered sufficient to qualify the fireman for those duties, and the representative of the railway company had good reason to suppose, from the familiarity with his work shown by the fireman in question, that he had had considerable previous experience under other employers. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Berry (1887) 67 Tex. 238, 5 S. W. 817.

Incompetency to act as engineer is not established where the servant has been fireman for four years, during which time he has frequently taken charge of the engine while the regular engineer was sick; and it also appears that from three to five years' service as fireman is all that is customarily required of a fireman before he is promoted. Rohlin v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. (1893) 119 Mo. 483, 24 S. W. 1011.

In Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Beatty (1895) 13 Ind. App. 604, 40 N. E. 753, 42 N. E. 284, a verdict for the plaintiff was sustained where the evidence tended to prove that the delinquent servant, an engine wiper, had some experience as a brakeman, and had, in other places, as well as in the defendant's yard, acted as hostler in running engines on switches to and from roundhouses, but had never had any er it knew or might have known of his incompetency, and if Sheldon's incompetency or unskilfulness caused the injury to the plaintiff, and that, if Peter Stringer, the head hostler, had authority to direct the men in their work around the roundhouse, he was a vice principal, and his knowledge was the knowledge of the company. The instructions did not fit the issues, in that they did not require the jury to find that Sheldon was employed as a hostler. They simply required the jury to find that Sheldon was employed by the defendant, without specifying in what capacity, and then to find that the defendant permitted Sheldon to run engines around the roundhouse and yards; and, in order to carry knowledge of Sheldon's acts to the company, so as to draw the inference of a permission from the company, the fact that Stringer had the right to direct the men around the roundhouse as to what work they should do was declared by the court to make Stringer a vice principal, so that his knowledge was the knowledge of the company; but neither this instruction, nor any other instruction given to the jury, required them to find that even Stringer knew that Sheldon had ever run an engine before the accident, or that Stringer had ever permitted Sheldon to do so. And the jury, if so required, could not have so found, for, as above pointed out, the evidence shows only one occasion prior to the accident when Sheldon ever moved an engine, and there is no evidence whatever that even Stringer ever heard of it, but, on the contrary, Stringer testified positively that he never had heard of it, and never had given him permission to do so, but that, on the contrary, the rules absolutely prohibited him from doing so.

other experience as a fireman or as an engineer; and the appellee introduced testimony tending to prove that, in order to qualify a man to handle engines in taking them to and from a roundhouse, he should have good judgment, and also two years' experience as a fireman, under the direction and supervision of a competent engineer.

Evidence which merely goes to show that a servant has been employed in an inferior capacity will not justify the inference that the master was negligent in employing him in a much higher capacity in the same line of business. Edwards v. London & B. R. Co. (1865) 4 Fost. & F. 531; S. P. Haskin v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1873) 65 Barb. 129, holding that the promotion of a car-coupler to the place of conductor in a yard is not of itself evidence of negligence, where his experience in the inferior positions has been such as to qualify him for the higher.

g. Acts of negligence prior to the accident.

(This and the following section should be compared with those dealing with the parallel case of the prior satisfactory and unsatisfactory operation of inanimate agencies.)

That neither evidence of one, nor of several, acts of negligence committed by a servant before that which caused the injury in suit is competent to show that the latter act was negligent, is perfectly plain upon general principles, and is not disputed. Hatt v. Nay (1887) 144 Mass. 186, 10 N. E. 807; Connors v. Morton (1894) 160 Mass. 333, 35 N. E. 860; Baltimore Elevator Co. v. Neal (1886) 65 Md. 438, 5 Atl. 338.

It has also been laid down broadly in several cases that a single prior act of negligence is incompetent as evidence to prove the unfitness of the servant. Gallagher v. Piper (1864) 16 C. B. N. S. 669, 13 L. J. C. P. N. S. 329; Chapman v. Erie R. Co. (1874) 55 N. Y. 579; Holland v. Southern P. Co. (1893) 100 Cal. 240, 34 Pac. 666; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Dunn (1894) 138 Ind. 18, 36 N. E. 702, 37 N. E. 546; Dallas City R. Co. v. Beeman (1889) 74 Tex. 291, 11 S. W. 1102; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Myers (1881) 55 Tex. 110 (rule assumed arguendo); McKeever v. Homestake Min. Co. (1898) 10 S. D. 590, 74 N. W. 1053 (verdict rightly directed for defendant where the servant had made only one mistake during twelve years).

That notice of the prior act must in some way be brought home to the master before it can become a factor bearing upon the question of his negligence follows from the general principles stated supra, I. e. See Mulhern v. Le-48 L. R. A.

high Valley Coal Co. (1894) 161 Pa. 270, 23 Atl. 1087.

The receipt of information that the servant has been guilty of such an act is said merely to impose on the master the obligation of using ordinary care in investigating the cause of the accident and the competency of the servant, and acting with reference to his retention or discharge as reasonable prudence would dictate in view of the facts ascertained. If these facts prove to be such that a careful man would have considered himself justified in retaining the servant, no fault can be imputed to the master. Baulec v. New York & H. R. Co. (1872) 62 Barb. 623. Affirmed (1874) 59 N. Y. 356, 17 Am. Rep. 325. In the opinion delivered in the lower court it was denied that "intelligent men of good habits who are engineers or brakemen or switchmen on railroads must inevitably be discharged . . . for the first error or act of negligence."

Though undoubtedly notice of the servant's lapse, if it is at all serious, will impose upon the master and his representatives the obligation of exercising increased vigilance in observing the servant's conduct afterward. Chapman v. Erie R. Co. (1874) 55 N. Y. 579.

This doctrine, however, holds good to its full extent only in cases where the act of negligence was casual or accidental. Baulec v. New York & H. R. Co. (1874) 59 N. Y. 356, 17 Am. Rep. 325, where the plaintiff was held to have been rightly consulted. The court said: "An individual who by years of faithful service has shown himself trustworthy, vigilant, and competent is not disqualified for further employment, and proved either incompetent or careless, and not trustworthy, by a single mistake or act of forgetfulness and omission to exercise the highest degree of caution and presence of mind. The fact would only show, what must be true of every human being, that the individual was capable of an act of negligence, forgetfulness, or error of judgment. This must be the case as to all employees of corporations until a race of servants can be found free from the defects and infirmities of humanity. A single act may, under some circumstances, show an individual to be an improper and unfit person for a position of trust, or any particular service, as when such act is intentional and done wantonly, regardless of consequences, or maliciously. So the manner in which a specific act is performed may conclusively show the utter incompetency of the actor, and his inability to perform a particular service. But a single act of casual neglect does not, per se, tend to prove the party to be careless and imprudent, and unfitted for a position requiring

The case presented therefore does not show that the company employed Sheldon as a hostler, or that it ever permitted him to run an engine, or ever heard of his doing so, before the accident, and that the rules prohibited his moving an engine. Sheldon was employed as a wiper or fire puller, and there is no pretense that he was incompetent to do that work. There was, therefore, no evidence upon which to predicate the instructions given for the plaintiff. The third instruction given for the plaintiff lacked the essential element of requiring the jury to find that Stringer knew of Sheldon's incompetency to move an engine, and that Stringer permitted him to do so; and the jury could not so find because there was no evidence whatever adduced upon which the jury could have so found, but the evidence was all to the contrary. The instructions were further erroneous in that, while not being consistent with the issues as to Sheldon's employment as a hostler, and not specifying in what capacity Sheldon was employed, and assuming that there was evidence that defendant permitted him to move engines, and while declaring that, because Stringer directed the work of the men around the roundhouse, he was a vice principal, and without requiring the jury to find that Stringer had any knowledge that Sheldon ran engines, or that he was incompetent, it was declared that Stringer's knowledge was the knowledge of the company.

It might be sufficient now to say that, if all the knowledge that Stringer is shown by this record to have had is assumed to have been possessed by the company, it would not make out a case against the defendant, for it would amount only to this: That Sheldon care and prudence. Character is formed and qualities exhibited by a series of acts, and not by a single act. An engineer might from inattention omit to sound the whistle or ring the bell at a road crossing, but such fact would not tend to prove him a careless and negligent servant of the company. The company is only charged with the duty of employing those who have acquired a good character in respect to the qualifications called for by the particular service, and no one would say that a good character acquired by long service was destroyed or seriously impaired by a single involuntary and unintentional fault. In Walker v. Bolling (1853) 22 Ala. 294, Phelan, J., declares that the master will be responsible for the negligence of a general manager in employing or retaining incompetent subordinates.

The incompetency of a fireman for the duties of an engineer cannot be predicated on the ground that he failed, while the train was running between stations, to notice a signal to stop, given from the rear of the train. Core v. Ohio River R. Co. (1893) 38 W. Va. 456, 18 S. E. 596.

The mere fact that a yard master had sent an engine upon the track when a coming train was overdue does not conclusively show that the company was negligent in keeping him in its service, since he might have had information showing that the train would not arrive for some time. Michigan C. R. Co. v. Gilbert (1881) 46 Mich. 176, 9 N. W. 243.

It must necessarily be subject to a qualification similar to the one noted above in discussing the evidential weight of the servant's incompetency, since even a single careless act may sometimes be of such a nature as, not only to indicate that the servant is unfit for his duties, but that the master will be culpably negligent if he does not discharge him immediately after the delinquency comes to his knowledge. See Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Guyton (1888) 115 Ind. 450, 17 N. E. 101, putting the case of carelessness so extreme as to allow two trains to meet while running in opposite directions on the same track.

In another case it was said that, although a single act of a locomotive engineer in running a train 12 miles in forty minutes, while the schedule time is one hour, and a portion of such distance at 40 or 45 miles an hour, in daylight and without accident or injury to anyone, did not necessarily show him to be unfit or reckless of the lives of employees at work upon the track, yet this inference might perhaps have been justifiable if it had been shown that the want of accident on such run was due more to chance or good fortune than the management 48 L. R. A.

of the engine and the actual condition of the road; and that men working upon the track could not have been easily seen or had time to escape after being warned of the approach of the train. Holland v. Southern P. R. Co. (1893) 100 Cal. 240, 34 Pac. 686.

Especially is it legitimate to draw the inference of unfitness where the dereliction of duty was one which the physical qualities of the servant rendered extremely probable.

The negligence of a railway company is for the jury, where it has retained in its employ as a night operator a boy eighteen years of age, who a few months before the accident had gone to sleep while on duty. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Camp (1895) 31 U. S. App. 213, 65 Fed. Rep. 952, 13 C. C. A. 233.

Nor is there any difficulty in holding that, when proof of the commission of a negligent act is accompanied by proof that the delinquent servant had a reputation for recklessness (see infra, II. m.), and this reputation was known to the master, a verdict for the plaintiff is warranted. Mexican Nat. R. Co. v. Mussette (1894) 86 Tex. 708, 24 L. R. A. 642, 26 S. W. 1075.

In regard to the question whether the plaintiff is entitled to introduce evidence that the delinquent servant had been guilty of several acts of negligence prior to the time of the accident in suit, the courts are not unanimous. The doctrine which seems to be the most logical, and which is sustained by a considerable array of authorities, is that such evidence is competent to establish the unfitness of the delinquent servant. Gier v. Los Angeles Consol. Electric R. Co. (1895) 108 Cal. 129, 41 Pac. 22, and other cases cited below, which clearly assume the correctness of this rule.

Of course the prior acts put in evidence must be such as fairly to import negligence in the doer, before the further question whether they indicate unfitness can be considered. Thus, evidence that a locomotive fireman who had caused an accident while running a locomotive had on another occasion run an engine faster than in the judgment of another engineer was proper, and at still another time, while running a locomotive, had struck a car in coupling to it with force which the witness considered excessive,—is insufficient to raise a question of fact as to the competency of such fireman. Marrinan v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1897) 13 App. Div. 439, 43 N. Y. Supp. 608.

Such evidence is also admissible to establish the negligence of the master, on the ground that he retained the servant in his employ after he or his representative had obtained actual was employed as a wiper or fire puller; that he was prohibited by the rules from moving an engine; that he never had moved an engine before the injury to plaintiff; and that he was not ordered or given permission to do so on that occasion, or given permission to do so at any other time prior to the accident. This is what the evidence shows was the knowledge of Stringer. It wholly fails to show any knowledge on Stringer's part which would impose a liability on the defendant. In Dysart v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 145 Mo., loc. cit. 88; 46 S. W. 752, Williams, J., said: "Plaintiff and the engineer were fellow servants. . . . It was essential to plaintiff's case . . . to show, not only the incompetency of the engineer, but also, that defendant failed to exercise reasonable care in employing and retaining him in its service. Roblin v. Kan- sas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 119 Mo. 476, 24 S. W. 1011. 'There is no dispute as to this proposition of law; namely, that the master must use ordinary care in employing and retaining competent and suitable servants. This is a personal duty devolved upon the master, and he is liable for a failure to perform this duty, resulting in an injury to a fellow servant.' Williams v. Missouri P. R. Co. 109 Mo. 482, 18 S. W. 1098. It is equally well established that the burden is on the plaintiff seeking to recover for injuries caused by the negligence of a fellow servant to show want of proper care on the part of the master in employing or retaining the latter. Roblin v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 119 Mo. 476, 24 S. W. 1011. If there was a failure to make this proof, then, without reference to any other questions in the case, the instruction, which re-knowledge of the specific acts of negligence. Coppins v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1890) 122 N. Y. 557, 25 N. E. 915 (servant absent from his post several times a month); Sutton v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1892) 50 N. Y. S. 514, 21 N. Y. Supp. 312; Wood v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1898) 32 App. Div. 606; Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Ruby (1871) 38 Ind. 204, 10 Am. Rep. 111; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Pierce (1894) 87 Tex. 144, 27 S. W. 60 (brakeman had frequently gone to sleep while at a switch, and failed to throw it); Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Patton (1888; Tex.) 9 S. W. 175 (careless handling of engine in making coupling); Wabash W. R. Co. v. Brown (1895) 31 U. S. App. 192, 65 Fed. Rep. 941, 13 C. C. A. 222.

In Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Ruby (1871) 38 Ind. 204, 10 Am. Rep. 111, the court said: "We think that it is well settled, not only by the authorities, but in reason and on principle, that for the purpose of showing that the officers of a railroad company had not exercised due care, prudence, and caution in the employment, or in retaining in service of careful, prudent, and skillful persons to manage and operate such road, and for the purpose of charging such corporation with notice of the incompetency of its employees, it may be shown that such employees had been guilty of specific acts of carelessness, unskillfulness, and incompetency, and that such acts were known to such officers prior to the employment of such agents, or that such employees had been retained in such service after notice of such acts."

Such evidence is also admissible to establish the master's negligence on the ground that those acts were so frequent that he would have learned of their commission if he had exercised proper vigilance in supervising the conduct of his servants. Michigan C. & R. Co. v. Gilbert (1881) 46 Mich. 176, 9 N. W. 243.

A verdict for plaintiff on this ground was held proper in Whittaker v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. (1891) 126 N. Y. 544, 27 N. E. 1042. Affirming (1890) 34 N. Y. S. R. 822, 11 N. Y. Supp. 914 (habitual violation of rules); Wall v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (1889) 54 Hun. 454, 7 N. Y. Supp. 709 (engine negligently handled in yard on numerous occasions); Daly v. Sang (1895) 91 Wis. 336, 64 N. W. 997 (acts of negligence extending over two weeks).

"The law will not go so far as to hold a railroad corporation to such an extreme of circumspection as to compel it to note, at its peril, every lapse of its employees, where no notice thereof is directly communicated, and where the circumstances are not such as to afford a reasonable inference of the derelict conduct of the employee having become known to the employer prior to the act which gives origin to the action for damages." Huffman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1883) 78 Mo. 50 (where an engineer had several times run his engine at excessive speed, but in remote rural districts).

For different reasons other courts have declined to adopt this doctrine in its entirety. The cases are reviewed in the following cases:

In Pennsylvania it has been held that character for care must be proved by evidence of general reputation, and not of special acts. Fraxler v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1860) 38 Pa. 104, 80 Am. Dec. 467. The court referred to Greenl. Ev. §§ 461-469, for the general principle, and said: "Character grows out of special acts, but is not proved by them. Indeed, special acts do very often indicate frailties or vices that are altogether contrary to the character actually established. And sometimes the very frailties that may be proved against a man may have been regarded by him in so serious a light as to have produced great improvement of character. Besides this, ordinary care implies occasional acts of carelessness, for all men are fallible in this respect, and the law demands only the ordinary."

This decision, however, has been strongly condemned by other courts. (Baule v. New York & H. R. Co. (1874) 59 N. Y. 356, 17 Am. Rep. 325; Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Ruby (1871) 38 Ind. 204, 10 Am. Rep. 111.) The reasoning upon which it is based will clearly not bear analysis. The real question to be decided is, not whether the commission of several negligent acts is inconsistent with the hypothesis of fitness for the duties of a position, but whether that commission may not sometimes be consistent with the hypothesis of unfitness.

In Massachusetts it is laid down categorically that the character or reputation of a servant as a careful or careless man, either generally or in any department of business, cannot be shown by introducing evidence of particular acts, and by trying the question whether those acts were severally careless or done with due care. To do this, it is said, would introduce a multiplicity of issues of which the parties ordinarily could not have previous notice, and which it would be impracticable properly to try. Hatt v. Nay (1887) 144 Mass. 186, 10 N. E. 807; Connors v. Morton (1894) 160 Mass. 333, 35 N. E. 860.

The importance of the consideration here emphasized seems to us unduly exaggerated. No such difficulties of procedure seem to have sulted in a nonsuit, was entirely proper." The case then before the court was much stronger for the plaintiff than the case at bar, for there the employee complained of as incompetent was employed as an engineer, and it was shown that on a prior occasion he backed the engine when the signal was to go ahead, and it was further shown that his reputation was bad among the employees of the road with respect to care and caution; but there was no evidence that the company ever heard of these matters, nor that it was guilty of want of ordinary care in employing or retaining him. So the judgment was affirmed. The law imposes a duty upon the master to exercise ordinary care in employing competent and suitable persons to transact the master's business committed to their care; and the degree of care required of the master varies with the nature of the duties to be performed by the servant. The master is required to exercise greater care in the employment of a railroad engineer than in the employment of a brakeman or track hand. Wood, Mast. & S. 2d ed. § 418; Bailey, Master's Liability, p. 54. So the master must exercise ordinary care in retaining servants in his employ, and, if he retains a servant who has proved himself incompetent to the knowledge of the master, the master will be liable. But this is the extent of the master's duty to a fellow servant. All other risks the servant assumes when he enters the master's employment. Wood, Mast. & S. 2d ed. § 416. If the servant's reputation is so generally known to be bad that it could have been easily ascertained upon inquiry, the master is liable, for he is negligent in not making the inquiry. Wood, Mast. & S. 2d ed. § 421; Bailey, Master's Liability, p.

been experienced by the courts who have admitted this sort of evidence.

In Baltimore Elevator Co. v. Neal (1886) 65 Md. 438, 5 Atl. 338, and Baltimore v. War (1893) 77 Md. 593, 27 Atl. 85, it was admitted that evidence of prior acts of carelessness or unskillfulness is admissible upon the question of negligence in retaining the servant, when a proffer of evidence that they were known to the master is also made. Yet in both cases the language of the court, if taken strictly, goes to the extent of denying that evidence of any number of previous acts of negligence can be sufficient to prove incompetency. On page 599 of the last-cited case it is said: "If you say the cage fell the day before the accident, because Burns was then negligent, you do not thereby prove him incompetent, because negligence may be predicable of competency." The logic here seems to be decidedly faulty. How can a jury be justified in finding that there was negligence in retaining a servant because the master knew of his prior derelictions of duty and at the same time not be at liberty to infer incompetency from those derelictions?

In Kindel v. Hall (1896) 8 Colo. App. 63, 44 Pac. 781, it was held that a jury should not be told that if they find the delinquent fellow servant was frequently, and for an improper length of time, absent from his post, and the practice was known, they might consider the fact as bearing on the question of his skill and competency.

But perhaps it is not intended to deny the admissibility of such evidence altogether. Logically it certainly bears on the question of the servant's habitual carelessness, and this is one form of unfitness.

The Missouri court of appeals has laid it down that simple acts of negligence do not tend to establish general incompetency. Cook v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (1880) 8 Mo. App. 573, Appx.; but the opinion is not reported at length, and it is impossible to say what the grounds of the judgment were.

b. Act of negligence which caused the accident.

According to some decisions evidence which merely shows that the delinquent servant was negligent in respect to the particular act which caused the injury will not warrant either a finding that the servant was incompetent (Curran v. Merchants' Mfg. Co. (1881) 130 Mass. 374, 39 Am. Rep. 457; Salem Stone & Lime Co. v. Chastain (1894) 9 Ind. App. 453, 36 N. E. 919; Lindvall v. Woods (1891) 44 Fed. Rep. 855; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Berry (1887) 67 Tex. 238, 5 S. W. 817; Baltimore v. War 48 L. R. A.

(1893) 77 Md. 593, 27 Atl. 85; Peaslee v. Fitchburg R. Co. (1890) 152 Mass. 155, 25 N. E. 71; Spring Valley Coal Co. v. Patting (1898) 58 U. S. App. 575, 86 Fed. Rep. 433, 30 C. C. A. 108; Hathaway v. Illinois C. R. Co. (1894) 92 Iowa, 337, 60 N. W. 651; Buckley v. Gould & C. Silver Min. Co. (1882) 8 Sawy. 394, 14 Fed. Rep. 833) or that the master retained him with knowledge of his incompetency. Conrad v. Gray (1895) 109 Ala. 130, 19 So. 398.

So far as this doctrine depends on considerations analogous to those relied on in the cases which deny the justifiability of inferring incompetence from one act of negligence committed before the accident in suit, it must seemingly be subject to the same qualification as the general rule laid down in those cases, viz.; that the delinquency which caused the accident may be of such a flagrant character as to warrant the conclusion that only an unfit servant could have committed it.

In Sullivan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (1892) 62 Conn. 209, 25 Atl. 711, the court, taking the ground that negligence, as regards the retention of the servant, was not "necessarily shown" by such evidence, refused to set aside a verdict for the plaintiff on the ground that the delinquent servant was negligent in respect to the particular incident which led to the injury.

Nor, we think, do the considerations appropriate only in cases where the evidential weight of the negligence which caused the injury is in question furnish sufficiently strong grounds for refusing to admit the propriety of this qualification.

"If," it was said in Lee v. Detroit Bridge & Iron Works (1876) 62 Mo. 565, "a single act of negligence is to be regarded as tending by itself to show incompetency, and furnish any ground for conjecture that such incompetency is known to the company or its agents, then it must follow that all cases of damage by negligence of a fellow servant may be allowed to be traced to the negligent appointment of incompetent subordinates."

But plainly this would not necessarily be the consequence of admitting in appropriate cases the competency of the evidence condemned. The questions whether a negligent act was merely a temporary lapse by a capable servant, or indicates an essential unfitness, are entirely distinct, and it seems impossible, from a purely logical standpoint, to maintain that such evidence, so far as it bears upon the latter question, should be rejected simply because the other one is also suggested by it. It may be readily conceded that the practical result of leaving juries untrammelled as regards the con-

48. Applying these principles to this case, it appears that, as defendant employed Sheldon as a wiper or fire puller, it was not bound to exercise the same degree of care that it would if he had been employed as an engineer or hostler, and that no negligence is shown in employing him as a wiper, for there is no complaint as to his competency in that employment, nor was the injury to the plaintiff caused in any manner by any unskilfulness in discharging his duty as a wiper. The plaintiff's case must rest, then, upon the alleged knowledge of Stringer. Aside from the defects in the third instruction above noted, and the total absence of any proof that Stringer knew of or consented to Sheldon's moving an engine, the instruction is erroneous for the further reason that Stringer and the plaintiff were fellow servants, as were Sheldon and the plaintiff fellow servants. Stringer had no power to hire or discharge anyone. Randall was the foreman and master mechanic in charge of the defendant's roundhouse and all that was done there, and he alone had power to hire or discharge servants. He was the vice principal of the company. And it is not even pretended that he knew of or permitted Sheldon to run an engine, or ever heard anything about his competency or incompetency to do so. He hired Sheldon as a wiper, and no negligence is imputable to the defendant from that employment. In Williams v. Missouri P. R. Co. 109 Mo. 475, 18 S. W. 1098, it was held that the knowledge of the foreman of the roundhouse (here, Randall) was the knowledge of the company, because "it was his duty to look after the engines and men, and make reports to his superior." Bailey, Master's Liability, p. 65, instruction of this kind of testimony would inevitably be a serious inroad upon the doctrine of common employment. But this is hardly an adequate reason for excluding it altogether.

The power of the court to direct the deliberations of the jury by differentiating clearly the two issues to which the evidence is applicable, and to make peremptory rulings upon its effect in extreme cases, is a sufficient guaranty against its being used to sap the foundations of the doctrine in question.

It has also been said that to allow a jury to infer negligence or unskilfulness on the delinquent servant's part from the simple fact of the happening of the accident in suit would conflict with the principle that it is incumbent on the plaintiff to establish by affirmative proof that his injury was caused by the negligent and unskilful act of the fellow servant. Baltimore Elevator Co. v. Neal (1886) 65 Md. 438, 5 Atl. 838.

"The occurrence itself," said the same court in another case, "raises no presumption of negligence and justifies no inference of incompetency." Baltimore v. War (1893) 77 Md. 593, 27 Atl. 85.

Clearly, however, no logical reason can be suggested why the principle of res ipsa loquitur should not be as applicable under appropriate circumstances to cases where the injury arises from the negligence of a servant, as it is to cases where the injury is due to the defective quality of some inanimate agency of the master's business. The rule as to the burden of proof, therefore, is not necessarily infringed by admitting the competency of the evidence objected to. Whether it is sufficient, unsupported, to establish incompetency, depends upon the character of the servant's act.

1. Temporary unfitness at the time of the accident.

The fact that the servant was intoxicated at the time of the accident is competent evidence on the question whether the master was in fault in employing him. Probst v. Delamater (1885) 100 N. Y. 266, 3 N. E. 184; Huntington R. Co. v. Decker (1877) 84 Pa. 419.

Under a general allegation of negligence, evidence that the servant was drunk when the accident occurred is admissible as part of the res gesta. Hobson v. New Mexico & A. R. Co. (1886; Ariz.) 11 Pac. 545.

j. Derelictions of duty subsequent to the injury in suit.

Subsequent derelictions of the servant have been held not to be competent evidence of fault. 48 L. R. A.

on the master's part in having had the delinquent servant in his employment. Couch v. Watson Coal Co. (1877) 46 Iowa, 17; Craig v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (1893) 54 Mo. App. 523 (demurrer to evidence sustained, where there was no evidence that the servant had been reckless, till after the accident).

That this is true without qualification of acts which do not tend to show unfitness of the kind complained of is, of course, indisputable. Ransler v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 32 Minn. 331, 20 N. W. 332.

But if it indicates a want of fitness at the time when the act was committed, it is difficult to see why it should not be at least competent when the act was sufficiently close in point of time to the accident in suit to render it not unreasonable to infer that the servant's capacity for his duties was the same at the later as at the earlier date.

k. Disclaimer of fitness by delinquent servant himself.

Under ordinary circumstances, it would seem, the self-deprecatory statements of the delinquent servant himself are to be wholly disregarded where his previous experience and conduct are such as to justify the master in supposing that he is competent to do the work assigned to him.

Where boys of the age and size are commonly considered competent to do the work in which the servant whose act caused the injury in suit was engaged, and for six months he had done the work to the satisfaction of all his collaborators, the mere fact that, on the occasion in question, he had told the master's vice principal that he did not feel strong enough to do the work will not render the master liable for the act of the vice principal in setting him to work notwithstanding this statement. Jungnitsch v. Michigan Malleable Iron Co. (1895) 105 Mich. 270, 63 N. W. 296.

In Wright v. New York C. R. Co. (1858) 28 Barb. 80, the supreme court remarked that the statement of an engineer to his superior officer, that he did not feel competent to take a train over a particular piece of road at night, was "very slight evidence" to prove incompetency for that duty; but did not express any definite opinion as to the precise evidential weight of the fact. The court of appeals (25 N. Y. 562) held that the engineer was certainly competent, a ruling which necessarily implies that the evidence in question was inadequate to justify the inference of negligence on the master's part.

lays down the rule that knowledge must be shown to have been possessed by the master, or "by one who has authority in the premises, or whose duty it is to convey it to one having such authority. Knowledge by one not sustaining such relation is not sufficient;" and, quoting from Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Col-larn, 73 Ind. 261, 38 Am. Rep. 134, he says: "Notice to the master mechanic, whose duty is to employ or discharge the incompetent servant, will be notice to the master." Stringer occupied no such relation to the defendant company as would charge it with his knowledge. He was in no sense a vice principal. He was the head hostler, and as such was not of as much rank or dignity as an engineer. The plaintiff was a fireman, and he and the engineer were fellow servants. So he and Stringer were fellow servants, and Stringer's knowledge was no more the knowledge of the company than that of any other servant. We are not disposed to extend the doctrine of vice principal any further than was done in the Williams Case, supra. It follows that the third instruction given for the plaintiff was erroneous, and that the converse of that instruction embodied in instruction 3 asked by defendant should have been given. Instruction 4, asked by defendant, should have been given in any aspect of the case. It asserted perfectly correct principles of law, and bore upon the vital points at issue, which were not covered by any other instruction given.

It follows that the judgment of the Circuit Court must be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial in conformity herewith.

It is so ordered.

I. Specific statements as to unfitness made by coemployees of delinquent servant.

The following cases discuss the evidential weight of remarks made by individual coemployees as to the incapacity of the delinquent servant:

Recovery cannot be had where the only evidence going to show the master's knowledge is the testimony of the plaintiff, that he told the master's representative that the delinquent servant was incompetent, and there is no evidence that he was actually incompetent, and the master's representative denies that such statements were made. Snodgrass v. Carnegie Steel Co. (1896) 173 Pa. 228, 33 Atl. 1104.

The mere fact that the plaintiff testifies that he thought the servants by whose negligence he was injured were not "fair hands," and told the employer that he had better get rid of them, will not constitute evidence sufficient to carry the case to the jury. Sanders v. Etiwan Phosphate Co. (1883) 19 S. C. 510.

Evidence that the yardmaster of one railroad company, who was short a man, employed a switchman on the statement of a yardmaster of another company that he "had one that he was done with that he could have," about an hour before an accident to a fellow servant, is insufficient to show negligence on the part of the company in hiring him. Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Dunn (1894) 138 Ind. 18, 36 N. E. 702, Rehearing Denied in (1894) 138 Ind. 28, 37 N. E. 546.

A strong expression of opinion as to the unfitness of the delinquent servant, uttered by a mere fellow servant on the day following the accident, is not competent evidence on that point, as an admission blinding the defendant. Atlin v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1887) 66 Mich. 358, 35 N. W. 515.

m. Reputation of delinquent servant.

1. Admissibility, generally.

The doctrine which declares the notoriety of a certain fact in the community where the parties live to be competent evidence of a defendant's knowledge of the fact operates both to the advantage and disadvantage of a master in the type of case now under review.

On the one hand, testimony that the delinquent servant had a general reputation for competency at the time and place of employment is admissible as tending to disprove that the master was negligent in employing him. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Morrissey (1891) 45 Ill. App. 127.

43 L. R. A.

It should be noted, however, that, as a master is absolutely liable for the negligence of a vice principal evidence on the defendant's behalf, that he had the reputation of being a careful workman, is incompetent, where the ground of the action is the delinquency of such an agent. Malcolm v. Fuller (1890) 152 Mass. 100, 23 N. E. 83.

On the other hand, evidence that such servant was generally reported to be unfit for the work which he was hired to do is competent to show that the master, if he had exercised ordinary care, would have discovered that unfitness.

In Monahan v. Worcester (1890) 150 Mass. 439, 23 N. E. 228, the court said: "The master is bound to use reasonable care in selecting his servants, and if a person is incompetent for the work he is employed to do, the fact that he is generally reputed in the community to want those qualities which are necessary for the proper performance of the work certainly has some tendency to show that the master would have found out that the servant was incompetent, if proper means had been taken to ascertain the qualifications of the servant."

In Davis v. Detroit & M. R. Co. (1870) 20 Mich. 105, 4 Am. Rep. 364, the court said: "If the defendants continue a man in their employ who is so notoriously unfit as to have established a general reputation to that effect, it is unreasonable, the plaintiff argues, to suppose the officers of the defendants ignorant of that fact, unless we excuse their want of information on the ground of neglect of duty on their part to their employees and the public, so gross as to make it proper and just to hold them responsible to the same extent as if they were fully informed of all the facts. And if they fail to inquire into the cause of accidents, where manifestly this is an important part of their duty, and a high obligation rests upon them to accomplish it thoroughly and faithfully, they cannot afterwards justly plead their ignorance to excuse their principal from responsibility for other accidents resulting from the same cause."

For other cases on this point, see also, Hatt v. Nay (1887) 144 Mass. 186, 10 N. E. 807; Gilman v. Eastern R. Corp. (1865) 10 Allen, 233, 87 Am. Dec. 635 (1866) 13 Allen, 433, 90 Am. Dec. 210 (Intemperance); Western Stone Co. v. Whalen (1894) 151 Ill. 472, 38 N. E. 241 (approving the statement of principles in Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 223); Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Hoover (1894) 79 Md. 253, 25 L. R. A. 710, 29 Atl. 994; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Sullivan (1872) 63 Ill. 293 (Intemperance); St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Hackett (1894) 58

Ark. 381, 24 S. W. 881; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Stupak (1889) 123 Ind. 210, 23 N. E. 246; Grube v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1889) 88 Mo. 330, 4 L. R. A. 776, 11 S. W. 730; Mexican Nat. R. Co. v. Mussette (1894) 86 Tex. 708, 24 L. R. A. 642; Snodgrass v. Carnegie Steel Co. (1896) 173 Pa. 228, 33 Atl. 1104; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Johnson (1896) 89 Tex. 519, 35 S. W. 1042.

In one case we find this remark: "Reputation is not competent evidence to charge a master with negligence in the employment of a servant. Because, first, it may be false, and, secondly, he may never have heard it." Haskin v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1873) 65 Barb. 129.

But this statement is altogether too sweeping, as the foregoing authorities very clearly indicate.

In Stevens v. San Francisco & N. P. R. Co. (1893) 100 Cal. 554, 35 Pac. 105, the court approved of the refusal of the trial judge to permit the plaintiff to prove the general reputation of the delinquent servant for intemperance among his coemployees, the reason assigned being that the offer was general, and that, if offered for the purpose of affecting the master with notice, it should have been so specified.

In Cook v. Parham (1853) 24 Ala. 21, the court held that the answer of a witness, that the delinquent servant "had no reputation, for the reason that he had no experience, and he regarded him as wholly incompetent," for his duties, was held to have been properly admitted. The statement in the first clause was plainly competent, and, no specific objection having been made to the second clause, the court was not bound to separate it from the other.

But the cases in which evidence of a servant's reputation for unfitness is admissible are those, of course, in which the injury in suit was due to the particular kind of unfitness for which the servant was notorious. Hawk v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1887; Pa.) 9 Cent. Rep. 786, 11 Atl. 459 (recklessness); Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Hoover (1894) 79 Md. 253, 25 L. R. A. 710, 29 Atl. 994 (intemperance). In this case an instruction was held erroneous which told the jury that unless the culpable servant was drunk at the time of the accident, and his negligence by reason of such drunkenness produced or contributed to the accident, evidence of general reputation as to his incompetency was not relevant and could not be considered, "unless such reputation was brought home to the knowledge of the defendant before the accident." The court said that the condition thus appended was inaccurate, because, on the one hand, if the culpable servant did not cause the accident, the master's knowledge of his reputation had nothing to do with the case; while, on the other hand, if the culpable servant did, by his intemperance, cause the accident, it was immaterial whether the master had actual knowledge of his bad reputation, inasmuch as he was negligent in not knowing it.

See also the cases cited above as to reputation for competency.

Evidence of the servant's reputed unfitness is also admissible to show that the unfitness is one in regard to which a general reputation may grow up.

In Monahan v. Worcester (1890) 150 Mass. 439, 23 N. E. 228, the court refused to say that it might not be a matter of common repute in a community that a man is physically weak, and is partially blind and deaf.

But the servant's general character is, of course, only one among many kinds of probative facts, and not the only kind from which the master's notice of the servant's incompetency may be inferred. As was pointed out in Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Ruby (1871) 38 Ind. 294, 10 Am. Rep. 111, the servant's general character might be, not only good, but very good, while the defendant had actual knowledge that he was, in point of fact, careless, negligent, reckless, unskilful, and incompetent; or his general reputation might be that of a sober man, when, in point of fact, the defendant knew that he was in the habit of getting drunk, and that when drunk he was desperate and reckless.

In Zumwalt v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (1889) 35 Mo. App. 661, it was said that notoriety as to the bad habits of a servant was the only evidence which could supply the place of evidence of actual knowledge on the part of the master's representatives. But this is clearly an inaccurate way of stating the rule, as there are other sources of constructive knowledge.

It has been held that negligence cannot be imputed to the master for not knowing the reputation acquired by a servant ten or fifteen years before the accident in suit, at a time when he was still attending school, and had not yet entered the master's employment. Baird v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1897) 16 App. Div. 490, 44 N. Y. Supp. 926.

But the doctrine formulated above, as to the duty of the master to inquire into the qualifications of the servant when he is hired, indicate that this immunity must terminate at some point of time anterior to the hiring. Upon what principle that point should be fixed is a question which has apparently not been discussed. Of course the reputation of the delinquent servant for unfitness at any time during his employment, prior to the accident in suit, is admissible in evidence. Mexican Nat. R. Co. v. Mussette (1893) 7 Tex. Civ. App. 169, 24 S. W. 520 (testimony as to such reputation not objectionable for the reason that it is not distinctly confined to a period just preceding the accident).

Whether it will be allowed any probative force depends upon whether, taking into consideration the ordinary method of conducting the business, it can reasonably be supposed to have reached the master.

Thus, there can be no inference of negligence in regard to the employment of a servant where there is no evidence that he had not a good reputation at the time of his hiring, or at any other time than during two days during which he had been engaged in making a single trip on a certain train. Van Dusen v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1887) 12 N. Y. S. R. 351.

What is a general reputation depends upon the nature of the unfitness imputed. Where it is sought to charge the master by this means with a knowledge of the servant's bad habits or deficient mental and physical qualifications for his duties, it would seem that the doctrine is satisfied by nothing short of a reputation which pervades a considerable section of the community in which he lives. Gilman v. Eastern R. Corp. (1865) 10 Allen, 283, 87 Am. Dec. 635 (intemperance); Monahan v. Worcester (1890) 150 Mass. 439, 23 N. E. 228 (physical weakness); and cases last cited above.

In St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Hackett (1894) 58 Ark. 381, 24 S. W. 881, the fact that the servant's reputation was a matter of common knowledge in the county was held sufficient.

"The reputation of a foreman amongst a few workmen employed under him is not a general reputation. It is merely the opinion of a small number of men, of which there is no sufficient reason to suppose the master may be cognizant, or which he may be bound to heed." Driscoll

v. Fall River (1895) 163 Mass. 105, 89 N. E. 1003.

In Davis v. Detroit & M. R. Co. (1870) 20 Mich. 105, 40 Am. Rep. 364, the court, in discussing the evidence, said: "It is plain, however, that Harris is not shown to have a general reputation for carelessness or unfitness of any description. No one ventures to express an opinion to that effect. The evidence only tends to show that when an accident occurred remarks were made that he was careless, or that he went too fast. They were such remarks, we suppose, as are almost certain to be made in any case, when an unfortunate accident occurs, while the consequences are exciting the bystanders, and before inquiry and calm consideration have determined whether there is any basis for them in justice or not. Such remarks are of very trifling importance, and if they would tend to convict a man of negligence, few engineers of much experience, we apprehend, would escape condemnation. And of how little importance they were in the present case, and how little likely to express settled opinions, may be inferred from the fact that no one of the persons supposed to have made these remarks is placed upon the stand to testify to facts which would justify them. We think, therefore, that the evidence of reputation should be dismissed from further consideration."

But where a man is engaged in an occupation which brings him into contact with only one class of the community, the material point is his reputation among that class, and inquiries as to it must be confined to that class. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Davis (1893) 4 Tex. Civ. App. 468, 23 S. W. 301, holding that a question worded: "Do you know what Thomas Henry's general reputation was, and how he was generally regarded as to care and competency, while running his engine?"—was too general, where the delinquent servant was a railway engineer.

In one case the master's knowledge of intemperate habits was held to have been properly inferred, where they had been "notorious among his fellow employees, and long continued" (Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Sullivan (1872) 63 Ill. 213); and in another, where several co-employees testified that he was a very reckless man. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Jewell (1867) 40 Ill. 99, 92 Am. Dec. 240.

2. Reputation not evidence of actual unfitness.

In some cases it has been contended that the servant's reputation for incompetency is evidence that he is actually incompetent, and not simply a circumstance which puts the master upon inquiry as to whether he is or is not competent. But this contention has been rejected. Cogrove v. Pitman (1894) 103 Cal. 268, 37 Pac. 232 (where negligence was held to be negatived by proof that the servant was not really intemperate, though he had that reputation); Lee v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1891) 87 Mich. 574, 49 N. W. 909 (reputation of incompetency as yardmaster not sufficient when based only on the fact that he had had no experience as switchman).

So, also, in Gor v. Los Angeles Consol. Electric R. Co. (1895) 108 Cal. 120, 41 Pac. 22 the court said that it is the character of the employee which is the object of ultimate determination, not his reputation, and that as evidence of reputation becomes necessary only where there is an inability to furnish direct proof of the employer's knowledge, so it is proper only after the establishment of the fact that the employee is in truth an unfit person; and proceeded thus: "Reputation is not proof of that fact. A man's reputation may be at variance with his character or in accord with it. He may be reputed reckless, and in fact be careful. An employer is not bound to discharge an employee merely because of his ill repute; but he is culpable if he retains in his employ a servant with a bad reputation well founded."

To the same effect, see Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Davis (1893) 4 Tex. Civ. App. 468, 23 S. W. 301; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Henthorne (1896) 43 U. S. App. 113, 73 Fed. Rep. 634, 19 C. C. A. 623 (intemperance), and subsec. 3, infra.

Still less is reputation competent evidence to establish that the particular form of incapacity which it ascribes to him existed at the time of the injury, and contributed to produce it. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Colvin (1888) 118 Pa. 230, 12 Atl. 337 (reputation for carelessness not evidence of inefficient performance of duty at the time of the accident); Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Henthorne (1896) 43 U. S. App. 113, 73 Fed. Rep. 634, 19 C. C. A. 623 (reputation for drunkenness not evidence that servant was drunk when the accident occurred).

3. Nicknames as evidence against the master.

The proper inference to be drawn from the fact that the delinquent servant bore some nickname which, if deserved, indicated that he was unfit for his position, has sometimes been discussed with the result of producing a diversity of opinion among the courts. If the nickname is the outcome of a general reputation, which would of itself be sufficient to lay a foundation for the imputation of notice to the master, it is simply to be regarded as a corroborative piece of evidence. Park v. New York C. & H. R. Co. (1895) 85 Hun, 184, 32 N. Y. Supp. 482 (evidence that the culpable servant's general reputation prior to the accident was that he was "a little off," and that among railroad men he was usually called "Crazy Brown," held admissible to prove the master's knowledge of his unfitness).

Nor is there any difficulty in accepting the doctrine that "nicknames are not so generally expressive of the characteristics of the persons to whom they are applied as to be competent evidence for the purpose of proving that the bearer of the name possessed the characteristics denoted by the nickname." Marrinan v. New York C. & H. R. Co. (1897) 13 App. Div. 439, 43 N. Y. Supp. 606 (fact that a servant is called by his fellow employees "Crazy Nolan" not, in the absence of other proof, competent evidence to show that he is actually crazy).

In a subsequent case this ruling was cited with approval, and a new trial ordered, on the ground that the jury had not been left uninfluenced by the evidence of a nickname ("crazy") which had been applied to the culpable servant. Baird v. New York C. & H. R. Co. (1897) 16 App. Div. 490, 44 N. Y. Supp. 926.

But, in view of the fact that the servant's reputation is put in evidence merely as a circumstance indicating constructive notice on the master's part, it is doubtful whether the Illinois court of appeals has not gone too far in declaring without qualification that evidence that the delinquent servant was known by the nicknames of "Crazy Pete" and the "Wild Irishman," is inadmissible either for the purpose of showing that the engineer was incompetent or negligent, or for the purpose of showing that the employer knew of his incompetence or negligence. St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. v. Corgan (1891) 49 Ill. App. 229.

If such epithets are bestowed on a man by a large number of those with whom he comes into contact, in his work, and reach the master's ears, it can scarcely be said, as a matter of law, that the master is acting as a prudent man in omitting to make inquiries with a view to ascertaining what is the man's real character and capacity.

a. Length of the period during which the unfitness has continued.

To affect the employer with liability for the incompetency of a servant, it is not necessary that it should actually be brought to his knowledge. If it continue for such a length of time that a careful and diligent supervision of its business ought to bring it to light, he is chargeable with notice of its existence. Whittaker v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. (1891) 128 N. Y. 544, 27 N. E. 1042.

In Cameron v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1895) 145 N. Y. 400, 40 N. E. 1, a verdict was set aside by which a railroad company was declared to be negligent in retaining a brakeman who had habitually violated a rule. The following extracts from the opinion sufficiently explain the grounds upon which the conclusion was based: "There is no arbitrary rule of law that charges the master with constructive notice of the negligent omissions of duty on the part of a coservant, after the lapse of a certain time, under all circumstances. The doctrine of constructive notice is founded upon reasonable and just considerations, and the mere lapse of time is not always the test of negligence on the part of the master. If a defect exists in the appliances furnished the servant for doing his work, of such a character and for such a length of time as to enable the master to discover and remedy it by reasonable vigilance, inspection, or examination, then the law will imply notice, since he ought to know what can thus be ascertained. The same rule will apply where the place furnished to the servant to do his work becomes defective, dangerous, or unsafe by use or otherwise. So, when the negligence of a coservant in performing his work is of such a character as to leave traces or evidence of it in the work itself, which can be seen or discovered by reasonable examination, the master might be chargeable after it had continued for such a length of time as to render it reasonable to assume that he either must have known of the omission of duty, or could have known of it by the exercise of reasonable care; or where the incompetency of the servant is frequently displayed under the eye and observation of some officer or foreman who represents the corporation or has the power to discharge him. But how was the master in this case to know that Norton habitually violated the rules for his own protection and that of his coservants? His work was performed on freight trains running over a long line of railroad, with little, if any, opportunity for any officer or representative of the company to watch or observe him at any one point. He had sufficient ability and intelligence to do his work, and his omissions of duty were purely wilful or thoughtless. It would be manifestly unreasonable and unjust under such circumstances to impute negligence to this defendant for the sole reason that during four months it failed to detect his delinquencies. The defendant had given him by its rules plain and simple instructions to govern his conduct with respect to the switches, and there was no reason to suspect that they would be disregarded, since it was quite as convenient for him to obey as to violate them. Moreover, it had in these same rules invited and requested all of his coservants to make prompt report to the company of any neglect or disobedience of 48 L. R. A.

the rules on his part, and no complaint had been made. It was reasonable to assume that his coemployees, whose lives might be endangered by his neglect, would observe and report his omissions of duty, if any; and if they failed to observe any, how can it be said that the defendant itself was in fault for not discovering what his coservants themselves had not discovered? The negligent acts of Norton took place while he was working on the same train and in a like capacity with the deceased. It is more reasonable to suppose that they were done in his presence, or under his observation, than to imply knowledge on the part of the defendant, and if it can be said that the deceased knew of these omissions of duty on the part of his fellow brakeman, and failed to report them, he might be regarded as voluntarily assuming the risks and dangers incident to his association in a common work with a careless or incompetent coservant. There is a manifest inconsistency in assuming that the officers or representatives of the defendant knew, or could have known, of Norton's violation of the rules, and at the same time that the deceased did not. On the evidence in the case it is true that the defendant's servant was unfaithful, and that his want of care resulted in the death of the plaintiff's testate. But the defendant cannot be made liable for his negligent act, unless it was at fault in selecting him for the work, which is not claimed, or in failing to adopt such means as ordinary prudence and care would dictate to secure his fidelity, and we are unable to perceive what more it could have done, unless it employed other men to watch his conduct, and that would be plainly an unreasonable requirement."

o. A promise by the master to discharge the delinquent servant.

The master's promise to discharge a servant is tantamount to an admission that the servant is incompetent, and that the master is aware of his incompetency. Poirier v. Carroll (1883) 35 La. Ann. 699.

III. Duty to employ an adequate number of servants.

a. Generally.

A duty of the master which, as a matter of logical arrangement, it seems equally appropriate to associate either with that discussed in the foregoing sections or with that of conducting the business upon a safe system, is the duty of employing a staff of servants sufficiently large to perform the work with reasonable safety to themselves. Flike v. Boston & A. R. Co. (1873) 53 N. Y. 549, 13 Am. Rep. 545; Mad River & L. E. R. Co. v. Barber (1856) 5 Ohio St. 541, 67 Am. Dec. 312; Burke v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. (1893) 69 Hun, 21, 23 N. Y. Supp. 458; McMullen v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. (1894) 60 Mo. App. 281; Alberts v. Bache (1890) 32 N. Y. S. R. 1014, 10 N. Y. Supp. 639; Jones v. Old Dominion Cotton Mills (1886) 82 Va. 140; Johnson v. Ashland Water Co. (1888) 71 Wis. 553, 37 N. W. 823.

A ship is "seaworthy," as regards the sufficiency of her crew, if the required number can be made up by counting in the fireman. Re Meyer (1896) 74 Fed. Rep. 881.

In an action resulting from a collision due to the fact that one of the trains was sent out with two instead of three brakemen, it is not error to refuse to charge that, if the jury believed that the third brakeman would not have been at his post, the plaintiff could not recover. It cannot be assumed that, if the third brakeman had been sent, he would not have done his duty. Booth v. Boston & A. R. Co. (1878) 73 N. Y. 38, 29 Am. Rep. 97.

The fact that some slight inconvenience or expense will be caused by engaging the services of another employee will not excuse the master if the work could not safely be done without him. Trainor v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (1890) 137 Pa. 148, 20 Atl. 632 (master held liable where the plan adopted for taking down a pole required the superintendence of the competent person, but the laborers were left to manage for themselves).

Nor can the master conduct his business on a system which ignores physical laws. Thus, for an injury to an employee caused by the depletion of a train crew the company is liable, as for negligence, where the timetable is so arranged that some of the men cannot procure their meals without absenting themselves from their posts. Pennsylvania Co. v. McCaffrey (1894) 139 Ind. 430, 29 L. R. A. 104, 88 N. E. 67.

In the case of a railway company, what would be inadequacy as regards a passenger is not necessarily inadequacy as regards trainmen.

An instruction is erroneous which declares that a railroad company is negligent towards the employees operating a freight train in failing to furnish a conductor, where a passenger coach is attached. Means v. Carolina C. R. Co. (1898) 122 N. C. 990, 29 S. E. 939.

As in the case of an alleged breach of other duties, the servant's right to receive is dependent upon proof that the master knew, actually or constructively, that the number of employees was inadequate at the time and place where the injury was received. Parker v. New York & N. E. R. Co. (1895) 18 R. I. 778, 30 Atl. 849 (mere fact that a substitute did not remain at a switch continuously during the temporary absence of the regular switchman cannot properly be construed by the jury as an implied notice to the company that said switch was unattended).

b. Whether the master has performed his duty.

The performance of the master's duty in employing a sufficient number of servants is a question of fact in each case, to be determined by the jury, subject to the revision of the court.

A railroad company is not, as a matter of law, free from negligence in having only one brakeman to control ten loaded cars in descending a grade to a place where they are to be coupled to a stationary car. Georgia P. R. Co. v. Propst (1889) 90 Ala. 1, 7 So. 635.

A railway company must keep enough trackmen, not only to supervise the line under ordinary circumstances, but also for extraordinary occasions, as after a rainstorm, when it needs a more minute inspection. Hardy v. Carolina C. R. Co. (1877) 76 N. C. 5.

A railway company is not obliged to provide for the stationing of a watchman on the rear end of backing trains. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Donahue (1874) 75 Ill. 106.

No obligation on the part of a railway company, to keep an agent at a flag station where there is an unblocked siding, can be predicated, in the absence of evidence that the track is in such a condition that there is danger that cars may escape onto the main line. Hewitt v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. (1887) 67 Mich. 61, 34 N. W. 659.

Whether a railway company is negligent in employing no more than one watchman to look after the live engines in a yard, and prevent them from being tampered with, is a question for the jury, where the watchman has also to perform the duties of a wiper. Southern P. Co. v. Lafferty (1893) 15 U. S. App. 193, 57 Fed. Rep. 537, 8 C. C. A. 474 (two engines got out on main track in some unexplained manner).

A railway company is bound to see that a derrick provided for the use of shippers, the arm of which is liable, when not fastened, to swing out over the track, and so endanger trainmen, is placed under the charge of a competent servant, so that it may be kept properly fastened when not in use. Gates v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1892) 2 S. D. 422, 50 N. W. 907.

The fact that the number of the servants was smaller than usual on the occasion when the accident occurred is one which tells with especial force against the master. South West Improv. Co. v. Smith (1888) 85 Va. 306, 7 S. E. 365 (verdict for plaintiff proper, where loaded coal cars in a mine got out of control, owing to there being only one brakeman on duty, instead of two, as was usual); Thorpe v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1886) 89 Mo. 650, 58 Am. Rep. 120, 2 S. W. 3 (verdict for plaintiff proper where the switching crew of which he was one was smaller than usual, and he was injured while coupling cars, owing to the fact that his signals to the engineer were not transmitted); Stoddard v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. (1877) 65 Mo. 515 (not error to refuse to direct a verdict for the defendant, where the master's representative has been notified that one of the regular hands is too sick to attend to his duties, and no substitute is provided).

But evidence to that effect will not establish negligence, where it appears that the safety of the other servants is sufficiently secured by the methods actually adopted in the performance of the work. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Compton (1890) 75 Tex. 667, 13 S. W. 667 (company broke custom of sending out water trains equipped with a conductor).

Still less can the master be held liable on the ground that, although the usual number of servants was engaged on the work to be done, use might have been made of an additional servant on the occasion when the accident occurred, with the possible result of preventing it. Relvea v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. (1892) 112 Mo. 86, 18 L. R. A. 817, 20 S. W. 480 (rear collision of two freight trains equipped with the customary number of brakemen). C. B. L.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

COMMONWEALTH of Massachusetts

v.

Clarence MURPHY.

(174 Mass. 369.)

A sentence of conviction imposed under authority of Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 187, § 13, after the reversal of a former judgment, on the application of the convict, because it was imposed under a statute that was passed after the offense was committed, and was therefore unconstitutional so far as it related to that offense, does not violate the constitutional provision against double jeopardy, or abridge the privileges and immunities of the accused as a citizen, or deprive him of his liberty without due process of law, although he had partly served the invalid sentence before it was re-

Norm.—As to plea of former jeopardy where judgment of conviction has been set aside on the application of the convict, see People v. Murray (Mich.) 14 L. R. A. 809.

The above case was affirmed in Murphy v. Massachusetts, 177 U. S. 155, 44 L. ed. —, 20 Sup. Ct. 639.

48 L. R. A.

versed, including one day's solitary confinement, to which each of the sentences condemned him.

(October 10, 1899.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to the action of the Superior Court for Essex County resentencing him after a former sentence had been set aside for error. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Ezra R. Thayer and Edward F. McClennen, with Messrs. Brandeis, Dunbar, & Nutter, for defendant:

The defendant has suffered imprisonment for his offense for a substantial time under sentence of a court having jurisdiction to sentence.

The crime of which he stood convicted was punishable by imprisonment in the state's prison for a fixed term.

Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 203, §§ 20, 40; Murphy v. Com. 172 Mass. 264, 43 L. R. A. 154, 52 N. E. 505.

The error committed was the failure to fix the exact time of termination of the sentence. This error would not place the whole sentence beyond the jurisdiction of the court.

Re Petty, 22 Kan. 477; Stalker, Petitioner, 167 Mass. 11, 44 N. E. 1068; People v. Whitson, 74 Ill. 20; Riley's Case, 2 Pick. 172; Re Swan, 150 U. S. 637, 37 L. ed. 1207, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 225; United States v. Pridgeon, 153 U. S. 48, 38 L. ed. 631, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 746; Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. 163, 21 L. ed. 872; Ex parte Friday, 43 Fed. Rep. 916.

Where a court has jurisdiction of the person, and of the subject-matter, the imposition by mistake of a sentence in excess of what the law permits is within the jurisdiction, and does not render the sentence void, but only voidable by proceedings upon a writ of error.

Sennott's Case, 146 Mass. 489, 16 N. E. 448.

A person who has suffered imprisonment for a substantial time under sentence of a court having jurisdiction to sentence to the place to which sentence is passed cannot be resentenced for the same offense.

A court may correct, vacate, or change its sentences of its own motion before they go into execution.

Plain v. State, 60 Ga. 284; Com. v. Weymouth, 2 Allen, 144, 79 Am. Dec. 776; State v. Cannon, 11 Or. 312, 2 Pac. 191; People v. Mescrecy, 76 Mich. 223, 42 N. W. 1133; People v. Kelley, 79 Mich. 320, 44 N. W. 615; Brown v. Rice, 57 Me. 55, 2 Am. Rep. 11; Re Mason, 8 Mich. 70.

Although the first sentence is erroneous, a second would be double jeopardy.

State v. Addy, 43 N. J. L. 113, 39 Am. Rep. 547; State v. Warren, 92 N. C. 825; Re Jones, 35 Neb. 409, 53 N. W. 468.

At common law, the court could not re-sentence after reversal of sentence on writ of error.

Shepherd v. Com. 2 Met. 419; Stevens v. Com. 4 Met. 360; State v. Gray, 37 N. J. L. 368; King v. Ellis, 5 Barn. & C. 395. 48 L. R. A.

Although the first had never gone into execution.

Christian v. Com. 5 Met. 530.

The statute was passed to prevent a convict from going free of punishment, and was never intended to authorize a second sentence where the convict had actually suffered punishment.

Shepherd v. People, 25 N. Y. 406; Feeley's Case, 12 Cush. 598; Com. v. Loud, 3 Met. 328, 37 Am. Dec. 139; Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. 163, 21 L. ed. 872; Brown v. Rice, 57 Me. 55, 2 Am. Rep. 11.

Messrs. Hosea M. Knowlton, Attorney General, and Arthur W. DeGooch, for plaintiff:

The appellate court has the right, when there has been an erroneous sentence, to remand the case to the trial court for sentence according to law.

Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 145, 25 L. ed. 244; Re Bonner, 151 U. S. 242, 38 L. ed. 149, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 323; Roberts v. State, 30 Fla. 82, 11 So. 536; Beule v. Com. 25 Pa. 11; Henderson v. People, 165 Ill. 607, 46 N. E. 711; Lourey v. Hogue, 85 Cal. 601, 24 Pac. 995; Brooks v. Com. 4 Leigh, 609; Oliver v. State, 5 How. (Miss.) 14; Lynn v. State, 84 Md. 67, 35 Atl. 21; Re Harris, 68 Vt. 243, 35 Atl. 55; Papworth v. Fitzgerald, 106 Ga. 378, 32 S. E. 363; Herrington v. State, 87 Ala. 1, 5 So. 831; State v. Taylor, 124 N. C. 803, 32 S. E. 548; State v. Williams, 40 S. C. 373, 19 S. E. 5; Hathcock v. State, 88 Ga. 91, 13 S. E. 959; Graham v. State, 79 Wis. 651, 48 N. W. 863; United States v. Pridgeon, 153 U. S. 48, 38 L. ed. 631, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 746; Coleman v. Tennessee, 97 U. S. 509, 24 L. ed. 1118; United States v. Harman, 68 Fed. Rep. 472.

The term jeopardy "has no relation to the reversal of an erroneous judgment and pronouncing a legal one pursuant to a legal conviction."

McKee v. People, 32 N. Y. 239; State v. Lee, 65 Conn. 265, 27 L. R. A. 498, 30 Atl. 1110.

Statutes authorizing retrials and resentences have been in force from time immemorial. Even the right of the government to a new trial after a verdict of not guilty has been upheld.

State v. Lee, 65 Conn. 265, 27 L. R. A. 498, 30 Atl. 1110; United States v. Sanges, 144 U. S. 310, 36 L. ed. 445, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609.

Morton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant in this case was the plaintiff in error in the case of Murphy v. Com. 172 Mass. 264, 43 L. R. A. 154, 52 N. E. 505. In that case it was held that the statute under which he was sentenced was unconstitutional so far as it related to past offenses, and the sentence which had been imposed was reversed, and the case remanded to the superior court, under Pub. Stat. chap. 187, § 13, for sentence according to the law as it was when the offense was committed, and before the statute under which he was sentenced took effect. The defendant was brought before the superior court on January 7, 1899, pursuant to that decision, and resented; the sentence being to the state prison for nine years, ten months, and twenty-nine days,—the first day solitary, and the rest at hard labor. Under the previous sentence he had been sentenced to the state prison for not less than ten nor more than fifteen years,—the first day to be in solitary confinement. When he was resented he had served the solitary confinement and two years, seven months, and ten days under the original sentence. Prior to imposing the last sentence the court said that, as defendant had already served the term of solitary confinement, he would prefer not to resentence him to solitary confinement, if a written waiver thereof was filed by defendant's attorney. The attorney stated that he did not feel justified in filing such waiver, and thereupon sentence was imposed as aforesaid. The defendant duly excepted to the imposition of the last sentence, and requested that all his rights might be reserved, which was done.

The contention of the defendant is, in substance, that one who has been sentenced by a court having jurisdiction of the offense and of the person, and the right to sentence to the place designated, and who has served a substantial portion of the time for which he was sentenced, cannot be resented if it turns out on a writ of error brought by him that the original sentence was unlawful. He contends in his own case that the resentence constituted a second punishment for the same offense; that he has been twice put in jeopardy thereby, and has been deprived of his constitutional rights. The statute under which the case was remanded contains no limitation on the power to remand for sentence in case of a reversal for error, but it is manifest that it cannot authorize the imposition of another sentence under such circumstances as would make it an interference with the constitutional rights of the prisoner. The question then is, Was the effect of the last sentence to put the defendant in jeopardy twice, or to punish him again for the same offense, or to abridge his privileges and immunities as a citizen of the United States? By "jeopardy" is meant, we think, lawful jeopardy from the commencement of the proceedings until their termination by a proper judgment and sentence or acquittal, or what the law regards as such. It has been held in numerous cases that where, either for want of jurisdiction, or from some defect in the indictment, or from such error in the course of the proceedings, the verdict has been set aside or the judgment has been arrested on a writ of error brought by the defendant, or on a motion made by him, and he has been tried again, he was not thereby put in jeopardy a second time, and his constitutional rights were not abridged. Com. v. Wheeler, 2 Mass. 174; Com. v. Peters, 12 Met. 387; Com. v. Roby, 12 Pick. 496, 502; Com. v. Lahy, 8 Gray, 459; Com. v. Gould, 12 Gray, 171; McKee v. People, 32 N. Y. 239; People v. M'Kay, 18 Johns. 212; State v. Walters, 16 La. Ann. 48 L. R. A.

400; Jones v. State, 15 Ark. 261; Turner v. State, 40 Ala. 21; Gerard v. People, 4 Ill. 362; State v. Redman, 17 Iowa, 329; State v. Sutton, 4 Gill, 494; Cooley, Const. Lim. 3d ed. 327; Sedgw. Stat. & Const. Law, 2d ed. 572, 573, note a. One ground on which such a conclusion has been reached is that by bringing the writ of error or making the motion he is deemed to have waived any constitutional objection that he might have had to another trial, or to the entry of a proper judgment. 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, 2d ed. §§ 672 et seq. If a second trial, where the verdict has been set aside or the judgment arrested, does not constitute legal jeopardy, it is difficult to see how a party who may have served a portion of the sentence that has been set aside for error on proceedings instituted by him can rightfully object to the imposition of another and a lawful sentence by the court to which the case has been remanded. In this case the trial and conviction were, for aught that appears, regular and legal in all respects. The only error was in the sentence. It would be strange if there was no power anywhere to correct or to authorize the correction of the error on proceedings instituted by the prisoner, except at the risk of delivering him from any further punishment for the offense of which he had been convicted. It is said in McKee v. People, 32 N. Y. 239, 245, where the case was remanded under a statute similar to ours, that the term "jeopardy" "has no relation to the reversal of an erroneous judgment, and pronouncing a legal one pursuant to a legal conviction." And in Jeffries v. State, 40 Ala. 381, it was held that a prisoner could not plead autre fois convict if the former conviction had been reversed on proceedings instituted by himself, notwithstanding he had served a part of the term of his imprisonment before the reversal. See also Jones v. State, 15 Ark. 261. In criminal proceedings the sentence is the judgment, or at least an essential part of it.

Though the sentence in this case was in excess of the jurisdiction, it was not void, but voidable (Sennott's Case, 146 Mass. 489, 16 N. E. 448; Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. 163, 174, 21 L. ed. 872, 878), and, if the defendant had completed the term for which he was sentenced, he would have paid the penalty required, and could not have been imprisoned or punished again for the same offense (Com. v. Loud, 3 Met. 328, 37 Am. Dec. 139). To that extent the sentence was lawful until reversed. Sennott's Case, 146 Mass. 489, 16 N. E. 448; Reg. v. Drury, 3 Car. & K. 193. Except for the statute authorizing the case to be remanded, he would have been entitled to a discharge, not because to resentence him was unconstitutional, but because at common law the court from which the writ of error issued could not itself pronounce the proper judgment or sentence, or send back the case to the inferior court to do so. Shepherd v. Com. 2 Met. 419; King v. Bourne, 7 Ad. & El. 58; King v. Ellis, 5 Barn. & C. 395. But a judgment and sentence reversed are the same as if there had been no judgment and sentence (Reg. v. Drury, 3 Car. &

K. 193), and this must be so even if the prisoner has served a part of the sentence. Whether the confinement under the reversed sentence has been longer or shorter can, on principle, make no difference. Besides, the length of such confinement will depend somewhat, at least, on the promptness with which proceedings are instituted to secure a reversal. No doubt, it would have been competent for the court to order that the last sentence should take effect from the date of the first sentence (Jacquins v. Com. 9 Cush. 279), but we do not think that it was bound to do so; and though the effect of the resentence will be to compel the defendant to suffer solitary confinement twice, and will result, it is said, in his actual confinement for a longer period than the term for which he was originally sentenced, we do not see, for reasons already given, that the last sentence is rendered invalid thereby. The case is not one of the imposition of a second sentence for the same offense, or of the attempted correction of a sentence after the term has ended at which it was imposed, and the court has adjourned without day. See Com. v. Foster, 122 Mass. 317, 323, 23 Am. Rep. 326. But it is a case where the sentence that was originally imposed has been reversed and declared unlawful upon a writ of error brought by the party aggrieved, and the case has been remanded, as provided by statute, to the superior court for sentence according to the law as it was when the offense was committed. Cases in regard to the imposition of a second sentence as such, or in regard to the attempted correction of a sentence after the adjournment of the court, or the substitution of one sentence for another, do not apply. The defendant relies upon Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. 163, 21 L. ed. 872, and Feeley's Case, 12 Cush. 598. In Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. 163, 21 L. ed. 872, the statute authorized fine or imprisonment, but the court imposed both. The prisoner paid the fine, and, after it had been paid, the court at the same term attempted to modify the sentence by changing it to imprisonment, and substituting the sentence as thus modified for the original sentence of fine and imprisonment.

But the supreme court held that, the prisoner having satisfied one of the alternative penalties provided by the statute, the sentence could not be changed and the other alternative penalty imposed. Manifestly, that case is not like this. Feeley's Case, 12 Cush. 598, was much the same. The statute provided fine or imprisonment. The court imposed both, and the prisoner paid the fine, and was committed pursuant to the other part of the sentence, and then petitioned for a writ of habeas corpus on the ground that he was unlawfully restrained of his liberty. This court granted the writ and ordered his discharge on the ground that he had paid the fine, and the court below had no power to impose imprisonment. It is manifest that this case, also, does not help the defendant. The course that was followed in Murphy v. Com., 172 Mass. 264, 43 L. R. A. 154, 52 N. E. 505, seems to have been followed in the Supreme Court of the United States, and apparently was not regarded as putting the prisoner in jeopardy or punishing him twice, or as interfering with his constitutional rights. Re Bonner, 151 U. S. 242, 262, 38 L. ed. 149, 153, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 323; Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 145, 168, note, 25 L. ed. 244, 251; Coleman v. Tennessee, 97 U. S. 509, 519, L. ed. 1118, 1123. We do not discover in what has been done anything by which the privilege or immunities of the defendant as a citizen of the United States have been abridged, in violation of the 14th Amendment. The equal protection of the laws has not been denied to him, and he has not been deprived of his liberty without due process of law. Re Converse, 137 U. S. 624, 34 L. ed. 788, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 191; Moore v. Missouri, 159 U. S. 673, 40 L. ed. 301, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 179. The fact that he court in Murphy v. Com., 172 Mass. 264, 43 L. R. A. 154, 52 N. E. 505, may have taken a somewhat different view of Stat. 1895, chap. 504, from that taken in Com. v. Brown, 167 Mass. 144, 45 N. E. 1, does not constitute an interference with the defendant's rights.

Exceptions overruled.

Affirmed by Supreme Court of United States, April 9, 1900.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Arthur D. HOLMES

v.

David J. McALLISTER et al., Plffs. in Err.

(.....Mich.....)

1. An employer is not liable for the services of a physician summoned by his manager or foreman to attend an employee in case of an injury by accident in a laundry during the employer's absence.
2. A promise to pay for services engaged by an employee without any authority, for the benefit of a third person, when accompanied by a denial of any liability, does not constitute a ratification, but is a mere promise to pay the debt of another, which is void under the statute of frauds.

(March 27, 1900.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wayne County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the value of medical services rendered to defendants' employee. Reversed.

NOTE.—For duty of master to furnish medical aid to servant, see Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Early (Ind.) 28 L. R. A. 546, and note. 48 L. R. A.

Statement by Grant, J.:

Plaintiff, a physician, sued the defendants, copartners in a laundry business, for medical services rendered one of their employees, and recovered a verdict of $50. The case was submitted to the jury upon two theories: (1) That there was an original contract of employment between plaintiff and defendants; (2) that the act of the forewoman of defendants in sending for plaintiff to attend the employee, if unauthorized by them, was subsequently ratified. Defendants insist that there was no original contract, and no ratification of an unauthorized contract. There is little, if any, dispute about the material facts. Plaintiff had no conversation with either of the defendants in regard to the service, and the parties had never met until the trial in the justice court. The employee, Augusta Senken, had her hand seriously injured on April 19. Neither of the defendants was in the laundry at the time. Defendant James usually spent most of his time there. One Miss McGrath, the forewoman, had charge of the work on the four floors of the building; hired and discharged girls when she saw fit; and, when James was not there, acted in case of an emergency. The injury was so serious that Miss McGrath deemed prompt medical assistance advisable. She sent a boy for a physician, not designating any particular one. The boy called plaintiff. He immediately responded, dressed the wound, and ordered her to be taken home, saying that he would have to see her again. She was taken home in a carriage. In the afternoon of the same day she was suffering pain, and sent a note to a store near by to telephone to the laundry. Someone at the laundry telephoned to plaintiff, and he went to see her. Defendants had no knowledge of this. Plaintiff treated her at her home until she was able to go out, and then she went to his office, and there received treatment until the wound was healed. She was under treatment for about three months. The only conversation plaintiff had with anyone connected with the defendants was with Miss McGrath, and he does not tell what that conversation was. It was at the house of Mrs. Knack, with whom Miss Senken lived. Miss McGrath testified: "The doctor asked me if Mr. McAllister had said anything in regard to him taking care of the girl. I said he hadn't said anything to me. He says, 'Well, I would like to make the bill as reasonable as possible for Mr. McAllister, and at the same time take care of the girl properly.' I said: 'Well, I don't know what Mr. McAllister would do in a case of this kind. We have never had an accident before, and it would be better to see him.' So he said he would call and see Mr. McAllister." Miss Senken testified that she heard this conversation, and states it as follows: "Miss Margaret McGrath came to my house several times while the doctor was there. One time he asked her if Mr. McAllister says anything, and if it was all right about the bill; and she says to him that she thought that Mr. McAllister was a very good man, and that he would pay the bill." Mr. 48 L. R. A.

Knack, husband of Mrs. Knack, testified that in June, after the accident, he went to defendant James, and asked him to help the girl; that he declined, and, after a little while, said, "I will pay the doctor's bill." Mr. Kissane, one of the attorneys for plaintiff, testified: "I went to see James McAllister with a view of collecting the bill in controversy, at the request of Dr. Holmes, shortly before the commencement of this suit. I told him the doctor was claiming $104. I demanded the payment of the bill. He declined to pay the full amount, and said that he was willing to pay the first visit, whatever that might be worth, but he didn't think he ought to pay the entire bill; that the calling of the doctor by the forelady was all right; it was something that he would have done himself, had he been there in the laundry at the time, and that he didn't go back on that, and whatever was reasonable for that first visit he was willing to pay." The above is all the testimony bearing upon the liability of the defendants. Plaintiff called in two physicians, one for advice and another to assist him in an operation, all of which was unknown to defendants. No accident had ever happened in the laundry before. The first intimation the defendants had that plaintiff considered them liable was when they received a bill after the services were rendered.

Mr. Ira A. Lieghley, for plaintiffs in error:

The authority of a foreman in a manufacturing institution to employ a physician for an injured employee will not be presumed.

Chaplin v. Freeland, 7 Ind. App. 676, 34 N. E. 1007.

A railroad company is not under any legal obligation to provide surgical assistance for employees who are injured while in the discharge of their duties.

Sevier v. Birmingham, S. & T. River R. Co. 92 Ala. 258, 9 So. 405; Clark v. Missouri P. R. Co. 48 Kan. 654, 29 Pac. 1138.

A contract made by a physician of a railroad company to pay for board and nursing of an injured employee is not binding on the company where the authority of the physician is not shown.

Mayberry v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 75 Mo. 492.

No ratification of employment was shown, and even if a promise to pay the physician was made, or the employment ratified, it was void under the statute of frauds.

1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1184, note 6.

A physician employed by the railroad company to attend to a case has no power, by virtue of such employment, to make a contract with another physician to look after his patient, to be paid for by the company.

Evansville & I. R. Co. v. Spellbring, 1 Ind. App. 167, 27 N. E. 239; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Brown, 107 Ind. 336, 8 N. E. 218.

The burden of proving ratification rests upon the one who relies upon the agent's unauthorized act.

Hurley v. Watson, 68 Mich. 531, 36 N. W.

726; Heyn v. O'Hagen, 60 Mich. 150, 26 N. W. 861; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1188, note 1.

Knowledge of all material facts and circumstances is an essential element to an effective ratification.

1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1180, note 2; Wheeler v. McGuire, 86 Ala. 398, 2 L. R. A. 808, 5 So. 190.

It is the duty of all parties dealing with an agent to inquire into the nature and extent of his authority, and deal with him accordingly.

1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 934, note 11; Deffenbaugh v. Jackson Paper Mfg. Co. (Mich.) 6 Det. L. N. 106, 79 N. W. 197.

A physician cannot recover without proof of authority on the part of the contracting agent.

Mobile & M. R. Co. v. Jay, 61 Ala. 247; Swazey v. Union Mfg. Co. 42 Conn. 556.

Messrs. Thomas Kissano and O. H. Wilson, for defendant in error:

When a doctor is employed to attend upon a sick person, his employment continues while the sickness lasts, and the relation of physician and patient continues, unless it is put an end to by the assent of the parties, or is revoked by the express dismissal of the physician.

Dale v. Donaldson Lumber Co. 48 Ark. 188, 2 S. W. 703; Ballou v. Prescott, 64 Me. 305; Potter v. Virgil, 67 Barb. 578.

It was not the duty of the plaintiff to notify the defendants that he was continuing the treatment; but it was their duty to notify him to stop.

Sevier v. Birmingham, S. & T. River R. Co. 92 Ala. 258, 9 So. 405.

An employer is obliged to pay such bills.

Marquette & O. R. Co. v. Taft, 28 Mich. 289; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. McMurray, 98 Ind. 358, 49 Am. Rep. 752.

Grant, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Had defendants' forewoman authority to bind them by sending for plaintiff to attend the injured employee? She had no general authority to do so. If she was clothed with any authority to do so, it must be because an emergency arose in which it was the defendants' duty to have someone to act for them. There are authorities which hold parties liable in certain emergencies for the acts of their managers or foremen in employing physicians. These authorities, however, go no further than to hold the parties liable for the immediate services made necessary by a present urgency. Authority to act is implied from the necessity of the case. Chaplin v. Freeland, 7 Ind. App. 676, 34 N. E. 1007; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. McMurray, 98 Ind. 358; St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Hoover, 53 Ark. 377, 13 S. W. 1092; Louisville, N. A. & O. R. Co. v. Smith, 121 Ind. 353, 6 L. R. A. 320, 22 N. E. 775; Arkansas Southern R. Co. v. Loughridge, 65 Ark. 300, 45 S. W. 907. Neither the authorities nor reason carry the rule beyond the emergency. Such employment does not make the employer liable for the services rendered by the physician to the employee after the emergency has passed. If the physician desires to hold the employer responsible for subsequent services, he must make a special contract with him. The cases above cited, and others, are those in which the employment is hazardous, exposing the employees to dangers and risks greater than those in the ordinary pursuits of life. The ground for such liability is thus stated in Chaplin v. Freeland, 7 Ind. App. 676, 34 N. E. 1007: "Railroad companies occupy a peculiar position with reference to such matters, exercising quasi-public functions, clothed with extraordinary privileges, carrying their employees necessarily to places remote from their homes, subjecting them to unusual hazards and dangers. The law has, by reason of the dictates of humanity and the necessities of the occasion, imposed upon such companies the duty of providing for the immediate and absolutely essential needs of injured employees, when there is a pressing emergency calling for their immediate action. In such cases even subordinate officers are sometimes, for the time being, clothed with the powers of the corporation itself for the purposes of the immediate emergency, and no longer." There is no evidence in this case that employment in a laundry is accompanied by any such dangers. We may infer the contrary, as no accident had ever before occurred in the defendants' business, an extensive one. An employee in a bank, store, or shop, or upon a farm, may become suddenly very ill, or in some way seriously injured, so that some foreman or other employee might properly deem immediate medical attendance necessary, and in the absence of the employer, summon a physician. Is the employer liable? We are cited to no authority which so holds. It is doubtful whether such an employer would be liable if he himself sent for the physician to attend one of his employees. It is unnecessary upon this point to express an opinion. We do not, however, hesitate to hold that in those avocations of life unaccompanied by dangers an employer is not liable for the services of a physician summoned by his manager or foreman or other servant to attend an employee in a case of sudden illness or injury, whatever his moral obligation may be. If, therefore, the plaintiff had known that Miss McGrath summoned him, the defendants would not be liable. He did not know and made no inquiries as to who summoned him. He testified, "A boy from their office summoned me from the laundry." He never informed defendants that he was treating her, or that he expected them to pay him, or presented a bill, until he had ceased to treat her. He now seeks to bind, not only defendants for his own services, but for the services of other physicians whom he employed to assist him without their knowledge or assent. He could, in no event, recover for the services of the other physicians. Mayberry v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 75 Mo. 492. We therefore hold that there was no original contract.

2. There is no evidence of ratification. The testimony of Mr. Knack and the attorney, Mr. Kissane, does not show a ratification. To Mr. Kissane defendant James denied liability, though willing to pay for the first visit at the laundry. As already shown, defendants were not originally liable.

The language of Knack and Kissane imports no more than the promise to pay the debt of another, which is void under the statute of frauds.

Judgment reversed, and new trial ordered.

The other Justices concur.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.

Grant GRATTIS, Resp't.,
v.

KANSAS CITY, PITTSBURG, & GULF RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.

(.....Mo.....)

1. The conductor and engineer of a freight train are both fellow servants of a fireman, so as to preclude him from recovering for injuries received by reason of the derailment of the train at a switch, that was caused by the negligence of the engineer and the conductor.
2. A master is not bound to furnish the safest and best appliances that can be used; but he is acquit of fault if what he furnishes is reasonably safe and suitable.
3. It is not negligence on the part of a railroad company towards its servants to use a stub switch, which is safe when used in the proper manner, although it is unsafe to run a train through it from the wrong direction.
4. A railroad company cannot be held negligent for placing a switch-signal target on the same side of the main track with the side track, although an injury which happened might have been avoided if the target had been on the other side of the track, where there is no uniform rule as to which side of the track such target shall be placed, and under some circumstances it is better to have it on one side, and under other circumstances better to have it on the other side.

(Brace, J., dissents.)

(January 10, 1900.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Newton County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Vessers. Trimble & Braley, Benton & Sturgis, and John A. Eaton, for appellant.

The immediate and direct cause of the wreck of the locomotive and train upon which Grattis was fireman was the negligence of the engineer and his wilful violation of the rules of the company. If, therefore, the engineer and fireman are fellow servants, the plaintiff cannot recover in this action.

NOTE.—As to when a conductor is deemed to be a co-servant of other railway employees, see Jackson v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (W. Va.) 46 L. R. A. 337, and note.

48 L. R. A.

The fireman, engineer, brakeman, and conductor were fellow servants; and the conductor was not a vice principal as to either the engineer or the fireman.

McGowan v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. 81 Mo. 528; Blessing v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 77 Mo. 410; Marshall v. Schrickler, 63 Mo. 308; Shortel v. St. Joseph, 104 Mo. 114, 16 S. W. 397; Keegan v. Kavanaugh, 62 Mo. 230; Stephens v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 90 Mo. 200, 9 S. W. 589; Higgins v. Missouri P. R. Co. 104 Mo. 413, 10 S. W. 409; Schaub v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 106 Mo. 75, 16 S. W. 924; Relyea v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. 112 Mo. 86, 18 L. R. A. 817, 20 S. W. 480; Rutledge v. Missouri P. R. Co. 123 Mo. 121, 24 S. W. 1053, 27 S. W. 327; Ryan v. McCully, 123 Mo. 636, 27 S. W. 533; Sherrin v. St. Joseph & St. L. R. Co. 103 Mo. 378, 15 S. W. 442; Moran v. Brown, 27 Mo. App. 487; Corbett v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 26 Mo. App. 621; Browning v. Wabash Western R. Co. 124 Mo. 55, 24 S. W. 731, 27 S. W. 644; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. ed. 772, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914; Northern P. R. Co. v. Hamblly, 154 U. S. 349, 38 L. ed. 1009, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 983; Central R. Co. v. Kccgan, 160 U. S. 259, 40 L. ed. 418, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 209; Northern P. R. Co. v. Peterson, 162 U. S. 346, 40 L. ed. 994, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 843; Oakes v. Mase, 105 U. S. 363, 41 L. ed. 746, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 345; Bailey, Mast. & S. p. 230.

The proposition that the conductor, engineer, and fireman are all fellow servants is abundantly supported by the decisions of other states.

Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Petty, 67 Miss. 255, 7 So. 351; Henry v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 49 Mich. 495, 13 N. W. 832; Murray v. South Carolina R. Co. 1 McMull. L. 385, 36 Am. Dec. 208; Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Elliott, 1 Coldw. 611, 78 Am. Dec. 506; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Blohn, 73 Tex. 637, 4 L. R. A. 764, 11 S. W. 869; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Snyder, 117 Ill. 376, 7 N. E. 604; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Dolan, 32 Mich. 510; Enright v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. 93 Mich. 409, 53 N. W. 536; New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Hughes, 49 Miss. 262; Heine v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 58 Wis. 525, 17 N. W. 420; Wright v. Southern R. Co. 80 Fed. Rep. 260; Jackson v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 43 W. Va. 380, 46 L. R. A. 337, 355, 27 S. E. 278, 31 S. E. 258; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Needham, 27 U. S. App. 227, 63 Fed. Rep. 107, 11 C. C. A. 56, 25 L. R. A. 833; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Sipes, 23 Colo.

226, 47 Pac. 287; Mulligan v. Montana Union R. Co. 19 Mont. 135, 47 Pac. 795; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Culpepper (Tex. Civ. App.) 38 S. W. 818; Moore v. Jones, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 391, 39 S. W. 593; Slater v. Jewett, 85 N. Y. 61, 39 Am. Rep. 627.

Where the fireman is injured by the alleged negligence of the engineer, the burden is on him to show that they are not fellow servants.

Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Becker, 63 Ark. 477, 39 S. W. 358; Eckles v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 96 Va. 69, 25 S. E. 545.

The master's duty is fully discharged when it uses reasonable care and precaution in procuring and keeping its appliances in good condition and order; and, while it cannot wholly disregard the improvements of the day, no rule of law requires it to immediately adopt them and put them in use.

Huhn v. Missouri P. R. Co. 92 Mo. 440, 4 S. W. 937; Gardner v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 135 Mo. 90, 36 S. W. 214; Elliott, Railroads, § 1277.

With the existence of the stub switch, and the location of the switch stand, and the condition of the engine, Grattis was familiar. He continued to run over the road with this engine almost daily from the 1st day of June until the time of the injury; he assumed the risks incident thereto.

Lucey v. Hannibal Oil Co. 129 Mo. 32, 31 S. W. 340; Holloran v. Union Iron & Foundry Co. 133 Mo. 470, 35 S. W. 260; Wray v. Southwestern Electric Light & W. Power Co. 68 Mo. App. 380; Gardner v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 135 Mo. 90, 36 S. W. 214; Marshall v. Kansas City Hay Press Co. 69 Mo. App. 256; Krampe v. St. Louis Brewing Asso. 59 Mo. App. 277.

The negligence of the engineer is clearly established; he could not recover by reason of any injuries received by him, nor could there be any recovery because of his death.

Roblin v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 119 Mo. 476, 24 S. W. 1011; Roddy v. Missouri P. R. Co. 104 Mo. 234, 12 L. R. A. 746, 15 S. W. 1112; Price v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 77 Mo. 608; Porter v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 71 Mo. 76, 36 Am. Rep. 454; Devitt v. Pacific R. Co. 50 Mo. 302; Thorpe v. Missouri P. R. Co. 89 Mo. 650, 58 Am. Rep. 120; Berning v. Medart, 56 Mo. App. 443; Rutledge v. Missouri P. R. Co. 110 Mo. 312, 19 S. W. 38; Bohn v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 106 Mo. 429, 17 S. W. 580; Friel v. Citizens' R. Co. 115 Mo. 503, 22 S. W. 498; Ring v. Missouri P. R. Co. 112 Mo. 220, 20 S. W. 436.

As between the company and an employee, the court, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, will presume that there was no negligence on the part of the company in using a "passenger siding" for "storing cars."

Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Williams, 89 Va. 165, 15 S. E. 522.

The engineer's attention was twice called to the existence of the dangers, and had he obeyed the rules, the danger would have been averted. These rules were in the possession of both engineer and fireman, and their violation by either engineer or fireman will defeat a recovery for injuries received by either.

Francis v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 110 Mo. 387, 19 S. W. 935; Alcorn v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 108 Mo. 81, 18 S. W. 188; Pennsylvania Co. v. Whitcomb, 111 Ind. 212, 12 N. E. 380; Bennett v. Northern P. R. Co. 2 N. D. 112, 13 L. R. A. 465, 49 N. W. 408; Crew v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co. 20 Fed. Rep. 87; Wolsey v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 33 Ohio St. 227; Lyon v. Detroit, L. & L. M. R. Co. 31 Mich. 429; Sutherland v. Troy & B. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 737, 26 N. E. 609; Buswell, Personal Injuries, § 153; Elliott, Railroads, § 1282; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Williams, 89 Va. 165, 15 S. E. 522; Smith v. Missouri P. R. Co. 113 Mo. 70, 20 S. W. 896.

Messrs. Cravens & Cravens and Edward H. Stiles, for respondent:

If the conductor had control of the train and of the engineer, fireman, and brakeman assisting in running it, then he was vice principal.

Brothers v. Cartter, 52 Mo. 372, 14 Am. Rep. 424; Gormly v. Vulcan Iron Works. 61 Mo. 492; Whalen v. Centenary Church. 62 Mo. 326; Cook v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 63 Mo. 397; Moore v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 85 Mo. 588; Stephens v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 86 Mo. 221; Hoke v. St. Louis, K. & N. R. Co. 88 Mo. 360; Tabler v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 93 Mo. 79, 5 S. W. 810; Dayharsh v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 103 Mo. 570, 15 S. W. 554; Smith v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 92 Mo. 359, 4 S. W. 129; Sherin v. St. Joseph & St. L. R. Co. 103 Mo. 383, 15 S. W. 442; Dixon v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 109 Mo. 421, 18 L. R. A. 792, 19 S. W. 412; Hutson v. Missouri P. R. Co. 50 Mo. App. 305; Miller v. Missouri P. R. Co. 109 Mo. 350, 19 S. W. 58; Foster v. Missouri P. R. Co. 115 Mo. 165, 21 S. W. 916; Berry v. Missouri P. R. Co. 124 Mo. 223, 25 S. W. 229; Covey v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 27 Mo. App. 170; Cox v. Syenite Granite Co. 39 Mo. App. 424; Banks v. Wabash W. R. Co. 40 Mo. App. 458; Higgins v. Missouri P. R. Co. 43 Mo. App. 547; Hall v. St. Joseph Water Co. 48 Mo. App. 364; Mason v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 111 N. C. 482, 18 L. R. A. 845, 16 S. E. 698.

The conductor is not a fellow servant with the other employees operating a train.

Patton v. Western N. C. R. Co. 96 N. C. 455, 1 S. E. 863; Central R. Co. v. De Bray, 71 Ga. 406; Boatwright v. Northeastern R. Co. 25 S. C. 128; Coleman v. Wilmington, C. & A. R. Co. 25 S. C. 446, 60 Am. Rep. 516; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Brooks, 83 Ky. 129; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Moore, 83 Ky. 675; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Robinson, 4 Bush. 508; Louisville, C. & L. R. Co. v. Cavens, 9 Bush. 559; Kentucky C. R. Co. v. Ackery, 87 Ky. 278, 8 S. W. 691; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Collins, 2 Duv. 114, 87 Am. Dec. 498.

Where the servant is, in the grade of his employment, superior to the injured servant, or where one servant is placed by the employer in a position of subordination and subject to the orders and control of another, in such a way and to such an extent that the servant so placed in control may reasonably be regarded as representing the master as his alter ego or vice principal, when such inferior servant, without fault and while in the discharge of his duty, is injured by the negligence of the superior servant, the master is liable in damages for the injury.

Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 110; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. May, 108 Ill. 288; Lalor v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 52 Ill. 401; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Hawk, 121 Ill. 259, 12 N. E. 253; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Collins, 2 Duv. 114, 87 Am. Dec. 486; East Tennessee & W. N. C. R. Co. v. Collins, 85 Tenn. 227, 1 S. W. 833; Nashville & D. R. Co. v. Jones, 9 Heisk. 27; Washburn v. Nashville & C. R. Co. 3 Head, 638; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Wheless, 10 Lea, 741, 43 Am. Rep. 317; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Boulver, 9 Heisk. 866; Cowles v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 84 N. C. 309, 37 Am. Rep. 620; Dobbin v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 81 N. C. 446, 31 Am. Rep. 512; Criswell v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. 30 W. Va. 798, 6 S. E. 31; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Lavalley, 36 Ohio St. 221; Berea Stone Co. v. Kraft, 31 Ohio St. 287, 27 Am. Rep. 510; Kansas P. R. Co. v. Little, 19 Kan. 267; Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Lundstrom, 16 Neb. 254, 20 N. W. 198; Burlington & M. R. Co. v. Crockett, 19 Neb. 138, 26 N. W. 921; Smith v. Sioux City & P. R. Co. 15 Neb. 583, 19 N. W. 638; Moon v. Richmond & A. R. Co. 78 Va. 745, 49 Am. Rep. 401; Atlanta Cotton Factory Co. v. Speer, 69 Ga. 137; Baldwin v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co. 63 Iowa, 210, 18 N. W. 884; Northern P. R. Co. v. O'Brien (Wash. Terr.) 21 Pac. 32; Thompson, Neg. 1028, § 34; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 102; Wharton, Neg. § 229; Little Miami R. Co. v. Stevens, 20 Ohio, 415; Madden v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 28 W. Va. 610, 57 Am. Rep. 695.

The knowledge by plaintiff of the existence of the unsafe stub switch and the bad condition of the engine does not bar his recovery, or abate the force of the combining effect of these negligent acts of defendant with the negligence of plaintiff's coservant, the engineer.

Conroy v. Vulcan Iron Works, 62 Mo. 35; Hamilton v. Rich Hill Coal Min. Co. 108 Mo. 364, 18 S. W. 977; O'Mellia v. Kansas City, St. J. & O. B. R. Co. 115 Mo. 205, 21 S. W. 503.

If the defendant had not failed in its duty to plaintiff to have a reasonably safe switch and pop, then plaintiff would have had no injuries.

The jury found by their verdict the combining negligence of defendant in producing the injury to plaintiff.

Bluedorn v. Missouri P. R. Co. 108 Mo. 439, 18 S. W. 1103; Browning v. Wabash W. R. Co. 124 Mo. 55, 24 S. W. 731, 27 S. W. 644; Ellingson v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 60 Mo. App. 679; Ford v. Fitchburg R. Co. 110 Mass. 240, 14 Am. Rep. 598; Cayzer v. Taylor, 10 Gray, 274, 69 Am. Dec. 317; Holden v. Fitchburg R. Co. 129 Mass. 268, 37 Am. 48 L. R. A.

Rep. 343; Houston & T. O. R. Co. v. Lowe (Tex.) 11 S. W. 1065.

The stub switch, the location of the switch target, and the condition of the engine were contributory proximate causes.

Ring v. Cohoes, 77 N. Y. 83, 33 Am. Rep. 574; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Williams (Tex. Civ. App.) 34 S. W. 161; Burger v. Missouri P. R. Co. 112 Mo. 238, 20 S. W. 439.

Plaintiff may show that defendant is negligent in respect to the operation and equipment of its road by proving that the alleged negligent acts are not usual with well-managed roads, and not such as good railroading requires.

Hewitt v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 67 Mich. 61, 34 N. W. 659; Kehler v. Schwenk, 144 Pa. 348, 13 L. R. A. 374, 22 Atl. 910; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Warner (Tex. Civ. App.) 36 S. W. 118; Titus v. Bradford, B. & K. R. Co. 136 Pa. 618, 20 Atl. 517; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Jones, 92 Ala. 218, 9 So. 276; Georgia P. R. Co. v. Propst, 83 Ala. 518, 3 So. 764; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Allen, 78 Ala. 494.

Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The following opinion of division No. 1 is hereby adopted as the opinion of the court in banc.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment of the Circuit Court be reversed.

Gantt, Ch. J., and Sherwood and Valiant, JJ., concur.

Burgess and Robinson, JJ., concur in the judgment of reversal on the ground that the negligence of the engineer was the cause of the injury, and that the engineer and fireman were fellow servants; but do not regard the "department doctrine" as involved in the case.

Brace, J., dissents.

Marshall, J.:

This is an action for damages for personal injuries received by plaintiff at McElhaney switch, in Newton county, Missouri, between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock, P. M. on July 12, 1894. The petition charges that it was a switch station, where trains stop only when signaled; that there is a side track on the east side of the main track long enough to hold eleven standard freight stock cars; that at each end of the side track there was a switch post placed on the east side of the main track, instead of the west side, each post being about 6 feet and 4 inches from the east rail of the main track, and used to work the switch; that the switch posts have targets placed on their tops, one side being painted red and the other white, so that the color indicates whether the switch is thrown to connect with the switch or with the main track,—the red signifying that the connection is with the switch, and the white that it is with the main track,—and that, when the red appears, it is dangerous for trains to attempt to pass over from the opposite direction; that on July 12, 1894, the switch or side track was full of empty freight cars, there being eleven standard freight cars on it, which were put there by defendant on July 11, 1894, "making it impossible to see the target on the switch post at the south end of the switch track by those seated in engine cabs of trains moving south along said place until within 60 or 80 feet of said switch post; that the ties supporting the main track at the south end of the side track were rotten, and would not hold the spikes that were intended to hold the rails in place; that at the south end of the switch track was what is known as a 'stub rail' switch,—an old and abandoned and extremely dangerous and hazardous character of switch, long since discarded by all practical railroad men, and especially dangerous and unsafe, under the circumstances, with the switch post and target on the east side of the main track; that the lock maintained on said switch was weak and old, and insufficient to hold the same;" that plaintiff was employed as fireman on a train that was going from Pittsburg, Kansas, to Siloam, Arkansas, and when the train approached McElhaney flag station, going south, it was traveling at the rate of about 15 miles an hour, and when it neared the south end of the switch it was discovered that the switch was thrown for the side track, which left the end of the main track at the switch open to this train going south; that this could not have been discovered sooner because the cars on the side track obstructed the view of the switch post and target from plaintiff and the engineer on the engine; that, if the cars on the side track had not obstructed the view, or if the target had been on the west side of the track, it could have been seen for a quarter of a mile before reaching the end of the switch; that, as soon as plaintiff discovered that the switch was open, he notified the engineer, who tried to stop the engine, but could not do so in time, and the engine was thrown from the track,—the rotten ties gave way, and the engine was thrown over on its side; that, when plaintiff saw his imminent danger, he jumped from the cab of the engine; that the engine was old, worn out, and defective, and unfit for use, and the "pops" attached to the engine on the top of the steam dome, being defective and out of repair, flew out, and the steam escaped, and scalded and burned plaintiff over his whole body. Plaintiff then sets out the negligence of the defendant to be: "In permitting the empty cars to be and remain on the side track or switch aforesaid, and thereby preventing plaintiff and said engineer [who was killed] from seeing the signal target of the switch, which would advise them of the danger on account of said switch or track being moved out of place. In having said switch rods and targets on the east side of said main track, instead of on the west, where it ought to have been for the appliance to be reasonably safe, and where proper and ordinary railroading required them to be placed, and where a person in the exercise of ordinary care and foresight would, in view of the great danger involved, have placed them. In having at that place an unsuitable and unsafe 'stub rail' switch, instead of a 'split' or 'spring' switch, which latter are entirely free from the danger which produced this accident, and which ordinary care and foresight on the part of the defendant would have caused it to provide. In permitting said engine to be out of repair, and said 'pops' to be and remain loose, out of repair, and unsafe, and in a dangerous condition, as above stated. In having on said switch post an unsuitable and unsafe lock."

48 L. R. A.

The answer admitted its incorporation, and ownership of the road, and also the allegations as to the character, purpose, and working of the switch, and denied the other allegations of the petition. It then pleaded contributory negligence of plaintiff and the engineer, and averred: That it was the duty of the plaintiff and the engineer to see that the switch was correctly set, and the track clear, before attempting to pass over it; and that they failed to exercise ordinary care in not stopping the engine where the cars on the side track obstructed the view of the target, until they could ascertain whether the track was safe to pass over. That plaintiff knew the character of the switch and the condition of the engine, and that, notwithstanding, they ran the train over the switch at a high rate of speed, and caused the accident. That plaintiff and the engineer were in possession of the rules of the company defining and prescribing their duties, one of which (No. 65) was: "A signal imperfectly displayed, or the absence of a signal at a place where a signal is usually shown, must be regarded as a danger signal;" another (No. 78) was: "All signals must be used strictly in accordance with the rules, and trainmen and engineers must keep a constant lookout for signals;" another (No. 121) was: "In all cases of doubt or uncertainty, take the safe course, and run no risks." That plaintiff and the engineer violated said rules by not stopping the train when they could not see the signals.

The reply was a general denial, but during the trial it was amended so as to allege that: when the train approached McElhaney station it slowed up with the intention of stopping there, and at a point a short distance north of the end of the switch, and had almost stopped, when the conductor ordered the engineer not to stop, but to go on, which was done against plaintiff's protest, and he was powerless to prevent it or otherwise protect himself.

The trial disclosed the facts to be that the plaintiff, about June 1, 1894, began to run as a fireman on the local freight train between Pittsburg, Kansas, and Siloam Springs, Arkansas, and, with the exception of a few days, made daily trips, and in doing so passed this switch every day. The train crew on the day of the accident were Jay Traver, engineer, George Bartholic, conductor, J. A. Cellar, brakeman, and plaintiff, fireman. There were two local freight trains running daily one each way between Pittsburg and Siloam. They usually met at Donahue, a station about 4 miles north of McElhaney switch. On this day the southbound train, on which plaintiff was fireman, was late, and hence the freight trains met at Neosho between 12 and 1 o'clock P. M. The accident occurred between 1 and 2 P. M. The running time between Neosho and McElhaney was fifteen or twenty minutes, so that the northbound freight passed safely over the switch in question about thirty to forty minutes before the accident. The defendant had only acquired the portion of the road between Joplin, Missouri, and Sulphur Springs in May, 1894, and had, therefore, only been operating it from May to July 12, when the accident occurred. At McElhaney station there was a switch or side track on the east side of the main track. At each end of the switch or siding there were "clearance posts," that is, posts to designate the limits that trains might occupy on the switch, and the distance they must be kept from the main track. These clearance posts were 429 feet apart. On the day of the accident the switch was full of freight cars. At both ends of the side track there were switch stands, of the character known as "stub switches;" that is, with blunt ends of the rails coming together, so that, when the switch was opened, a train coming from the south would run onto the other side track, but a train coming from the north would be derailed. One of the claims made by the plaintiff is that a stub switch is dangerous, not to the train coming from the south, for as to it the only result would be to throw the train from the main track onto the switch or side track, but to the train coming from the north, for, as to it, the result would certainly be to derail the train; hence plaintiff claims that a "split switch" or a "split spring switch" should have been used, by which is meant a rail beveled on one side, and coming almost to a knife edge at the end, so that it rests against the rails of the main track, and changes the points of the switch from the main to the side track, and does not destroy or break the continuity of the main track; and that, if such a switch had been used, a train coming from the north would not have been derailed, but the flanges of the wheels would simply have forced the switch back, and let the train pass through the switch along the continuous rails of the main track; and, if it was a split spring switch, it would have sprung back into place after the train passed through it. When the train approached McElhaney, the engineer brought it almost to a stop at a point 80 rods north of the north end of the switch. At this point the plaintiff notified the engineer that the side track was full of cars, and that he could not see the target of the switch at the south end of the side track. The engineer said: "I am going, I have a signal from the conductor to go on." Again plaintiff told the engineer he could not see the target, but the engineer replied, "I have a signal from the conductor, and things are apparently all right, and I am going." The engineer proceeded, increasing speed the while, and when the train neared the switch at the south end of the side track the plaintiff notified the engineer that the switch was open. The engineer tried to stop the train, but did not succeed, and it ran off the track, turned over, the "pops" were broken, the steam escaped and scalded and burned plaintiff most seriously. The court gave the jury twelve instructions at the request of the plaintiff, fifteen of the court's own motion, and four asked by defendant. There was a verdict for the plaintiff for $6,000, and defendant appealed.

1. The case was tried below on the theory that the conductor was a vice principal, and that his orders to the engineer to go ahead overcame the rules as to signals, unless the danger was so apparent and imminent as to deter a person of ordinary prudence from proceeding; and if the plaintiff, as fireman, was under the control and subject to the orders of the engineer, and had no control over the engine, and if plaintiff notified the engineer that the switch target was obscured by the cars standing on the side track, and, notwithstanding, the engineer went ahead, "then the acts of the said engineer in so doing should not be regarded as the personal acts of plaintiff, unless he concurred therein." The controlling legal questions in the case therefore are: First. Are the conductor, engineer, and fireman of a train fellow servants, or is the conductor a vice principal and the engineer and fireman fellow servants, or is the conductor a vice principal, the engineer a lesser vice principal, and the fireman the servant? And, second, was the defendant negligent in not furnishing safe appliances and machinery; that is, in maintaining a stub switch instead of putting in a split switch or a split spring switch? The leaky pops may be disregarded, as they were not the proximate cause of the injury. Likewise the allegations as to the broken lock on the switch and the character of the ties may be eliminated, as they had nothing to do with the injury. There is no branch of the law that has received more attention than that relating to master and servant, and there is none as to which a greater diversity of opinion has been expressed, and certainly none that is to-day more uncertain. The old doctrine that all persons under the control and in the pay of a common master are fellow servants, and that the master is not liable to anyone for injuries received through the negligence of any of the others, has been relaxed, modified, distinguished, and pared down, and, with the characteristic ingenuity and inventiveness of the age, distinctions have been drawn, the first relation has been extended many degrees, and the original classification has been many times subdivided, with the result that much contrariety of opinion exists, and the whole matter is unsettled, and left in an unsatisfactory state. By some this has been called the evolution of the law from its original harshness to a more humane condition. By others it is placed upon the ground of necessity,—that is, that where the master has a small business, and only a few servants under his own eye and personal supervision, and where all of the servants are "Jacks of all trades" in respect to the master's business, each doing any part of the whole, as he may be directed, they are fellow servants, and have no recourse against the master for injuries received through the negligence of the others; but where the master's business increases, and becomes more extended, and spreads out into many places, and perhaps over many states, so that the master cannot be always present in person to direct or to hear reports from his servants, it is, of course, necessary for him to have some one on the spot to represent him,—an alter ego, or vice principal, it is called,—who shall have the right to speak for the master; and in such cases such person's acts are the acts of the master, and he is liable to the servant for injuries received through his negligence, the same as if the master had been present acting himself. No serious objection can be raised to this rule in the abstract, for a master choosing to have a scattered or diversified business, which he cannot personally look after, must needs have a representative on the ground, and hence, taking the benefits of such an extended business, he must bear the burdens necessarily incident to its transaction. At first a vice principal was limited to be a person who had the right to employ and discharge the servants, but this has since been relaxed; and the rule now is that it is a question of authority to represent the master which determines the question of whether a person is a vice principal. The courts have often been asked to lay down a definite principle or rule for the determination of the question, but, as was well said by Gantt, J., in Parker v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 109 Mo. loc. cit. 378, 18 L. R. A. 802, 19 S. W. 1123: "After a careful examination of this subject in its varied aspects, we think the attempt would be futile and unsatisfactory. The judge or court who would deal in general observations outside of the record under consideration would be treading on dangerous ground, and in a very short time would probably find 'himself hoisted by his own petard.' . . . And, after due consideration, we are of the opinion that, unsatisfactory as it may seem, the rule itself must remain general, its application specific, as the cases arise. This rule, to exempt the master, requires the servants shall be employed by a common master, and the servants must be employed in the same common employment." Accordingly, in that case it was held that a section hand engaged in repairing the track was a fellow servant with the engineer and crew running a construction train that was hauling rock to be used in ballasting the track. Some courts have undertaken to lay down a rule broad and just and elastic enough to cover all cases, unmindful, it seems to me, of the fact that in so doing they are wiping out the old rule as it was at common law, and substituting a new rule of their own creation, which the changing conditions of life may shortly prove as unacceptable to their successors as the rules of the common law are to them. In the attempt, however, they have classified the service of the master, divided it into departments of service, and say that 48 L. R. A.

a servant shall be barred of recovery only where the injury was received through the negligence of a fellow servant in the same department of service, and shall not be cut off where it came about through the negligence of a servant in another department. The reason given for this is that, "where several persons are employed in the conduct of one common enterprise or undertaking, and the safety of each depends to a great extent on the care and skill with which each shall perform his appropriate duty, each is an observer of the conduct of the other, can give notice of any misconduct, incapacity, or neglect of duty, and leave the service if the common employer will not take such precautions and employ such agents as the safety of the whole party may require." Yet in the practical application of the departmental doctrine to the specific cases that have arisen as much difficulty has been encountered as was found before, and different courts have disagreed as widely on the same state of facts as was the case before the introduction into the law of the new rule. In fact, the reported cases show that the decisions of the same court cannot be made to harmonize under the principles announced in the new rule. This is partly explainable from the fact that the same person in the same department may occupy the relation of vice principal and fellow servant at the same time, or may be the one to-day and the other to-morrow. Even in the same department there may be several distinct gangs of servants, each having its own foreman, or vice principal, and neither in a position to observe the conduct and give the notice of misconduct, incapacity, or neglect of duty in the other, yet under the departmental doctrine the servants in each are the fellow servants of those in the other gang.

The practical difficulty in trying to enforce the departmental doctrine is that it is nowhere stated of what the departments shall be composed. The term or name is employed as expressive of a class, but there has been no attempt to classify. The result is contrary judgments upon the same facts, an irreconcilable contrariety of opinion, with a natural, and to be expected, confusion in the law, with no better or more satisfactory results to either the master or servant than were attained before the doctrine was announced. A brief review of the decisions in our state will suffice to illustrate. McDermott v. Pacific R. Co. 30 Mo. 115, was the first case in which the doctrine of fellow servant was discussed. It was a suit by a brakeman who was injured by the Gasconade Bridge disaster in 1860. Napton, J., held there could be no recovery, as the brakeman and bridge builders were fellow servants, and that the rule "applied in all cases alike, without regard to the degrees of subordination in which the different servants or agents may be placed with reference to each other;" citing with approval Farrell v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 4 Met. 49, 38 Am. Dec. 339. Wagner, J., in Rohrbach v. Pacific R. Co. 43 Mo. 187, held a track repairer and a trainman were fellow servants. In Moore v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 85 Mo. 588, Henry, J., held that a car repairer and the crew of the engine that ran into the car the repairer was working on were not fellow servants, and allowed a recovery to stand on the ground that the company was obliged to provide for the safety of the servant, and the foreman of the repair shop had promised the repairer to see to it that no engine should run into the car, which was standing on the side track, and which he was repairing. In McGowan v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. 61 Mo. 528, Hough, J., held that a conductor and a laborer engaged in loading bridge timbers on the train were fellow servants. In Smith v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 92 Mo. 359, 4 S. W. 129, Norton, J., held that a train dispatcher and the conductor, engineer, and fireman of a train are not fellow servants. In Sherrin v. St. Joseph & St. L. R. Co. 103 Mo. 378, 15 S. W. 442, Gantt, P. J., held that the two foremen of two different gangs of section men, working independently of each other, but under the same road master, are fellow servants. In Sullivan v. Missouri P. R. Co. 97 Mo. 113, 10 S. W. 852, Black, J., held that a track walker is not a fellow servant with an engineer or fireman of a passenger train. In Murray v. St. Louis, C. & W. R. Co. 98 Mo. 573, 5 L. R. A. 735, 12 S. W. 252, Black, J., held that the gripman and a watchman at a street crossing, whose duty it was to signal the cars to stop or go ahead, were fellow servants, because engaged in the same common employment of running the cars. In Higgins v. Missouri P. R. Co. 104 Mo. 413, 16 S. W. 409, Gantt, P. J., held that an engineer and laborer on a construction train were fellow servants. In Parker v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 109 Mo. 362, 18 L. R. A. 802, 19 S. W. 1119, Gantt, J., held that a track repairer and the engineer of a construction train were fellow servants. In Dixon v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 109 Mo. 413, 18 L. R. A. 792, 19 S. W. 412, Barclay, J., held that a laborer, whose duty was to couple small cars used to haul rock up an incline across the track, the rock to be crushed, and used as ballast for the road, was not a fellow servant with the engineer of a passenger train. In Tabler v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 93 Mo. 79, 5 S. W. 810, Black, J., held that a master mechanic and work master was not a fellow servant of a bridge carpenter. In Miller v. Missouri P. R. Co. 109 Mo. 350, 19 S. W. 58, Black, J., held that a conductor of a material train, having control of it and its movements, and the foreman over a crew engaged in repairing a railroad track, having power to direct them, are vice principals, and the defendant is liable for the death of a member of the crew, occasioned by their negligence. In Relyea v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. 112 Mo. 86, 18 L. R. A. 817, 20 S. W. 480, Black, J., held that a brakeman on one freight train and a fireman on another, where they are engaged in the same department of service, and are operating trains over the same section of the road, are fellow servants. The learned judge further laid down the departmental doctrine as follows: "They are coservants who are so related and 48 L. R. A.

associated in their work that they can observe and have an influence on each other's conduct, and report delinquencies to a common correcting power; and they are not coservants who are engaged in different and distinct departments of work;" and further said: "Now in this case each servant was under the immediate command of his own conductor, it is true; but that fact does not constitute a decisive or controlling circumstance. Many cases may be instanced where different gangs of men, each gang under the orders of its own foreman, are clearly coservants within the rule of exemption." In Schlereth v. Missouri P. R. Co. 115 Mo. 87, 21 S. W. 1110, Burgess, J., held that a locomotive engineer and track repairer are not fellow servants. In this case Macfarlane, J., wrote the opinion of the court in division No. 2, and said: "It is insisted, in the first place, that the demurrer to the evidence should have been sustained, for the reason, as is claimed, that deceased and the negligent engineer were fellow servants within the rule which exempts the master from liability for damages to one servant resulting from the negligence of the other. There is no doubt that the weight of judicial authority sustains the position for which defendant contends. Murray v. St. Louis, C. & W. R. Co. 98 Mo. 573, 5 L. R. A. 735, 12 S. W. 252. The majority of the members of this court are of the opinion, however, that the reasons and policy upon which the rule of exemption has been placed do not extend to those common employees of a railroad corporation occupying the relation to each other sustained by deceased and the engineer. The writer has been of the opinion that the general rule exempting the common master in all cases where the servants are engaged in a common service has been recognized and approved by the courts of this state for so long a period of time, without change or serious question, that, while the principle has been questioned, it has become the settled policy of the state, and should only have been changed by legislative action. Rohbach v. Pacific R. Co. 43 Mo. 192, and cases cited in dissenting opinion of Gantt, J., in Parker v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 109 Mo. 362, 18 L. R. A. 802, 19 S. W. 1119. The importance of having the rules of law firmly established, especially those under which property rights are held, or the business and wages of large classes of citizens are made to depend, is fully recognized; and we therefore hold, in accordance with the late rulings of the court, that the husband of plaintiff was not a fellow servant of the negligent engineer. . . . Sullivan v. Missouri P. R. Co. 97 Mo. 113, 10 S. W. 852; Parker v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 109 Mo. 362, 18 L. R. A. 802, 19 S. W. 1119." A motion for rehearing was filed, and by reason of a division of the court the case was sent to the court in banc for review. Burgess, J., wrote the opinion in banc, and held that on the faith of Sullivan v. Missouri P. R. Co. 97 Mo. 113, 10 S. W. 852; Parker v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 109 Mo. 362, 18 L. R. A. 802, 19 S. W. 1119; and Dixon v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 109 Mo. 413, 18 L. R. A.

792, 19 S. W. 412,—the deceased and the engineer were not fellow servants, because they were not in the same department of service. In this connection it is well to note that in the Parker Case Gantt, Sherwood, and Macfarlane, JJ., held that the section hand and the engineer of the construction train were fellow servants, and hence they voted to reverse the judgment in plaintiff's favor, while Black, J., held they were prima facie fellow servants, but that it might be rebutted by plaintiff, and so voted to reverse and remand, and Thomas, Brace, and Barclay, JJ., were of opinion that they were not fellow servants; while in the Dixon Case Black, Brace, Barclay, and Thomas, JJ., held that the laborer and the engineer were not fellow servants, and Sherwood and Gantt, JJ., held they were, and Macfarlane, J., having been of counsel, did not sit. In Swadley v. Missouri P. R. Co. 118 Mo. 268, 24 S. W. 140, Black, J., held that a track repairer was not a fellow servant with the train crew of a regular freight or passenger train, and distinguished the case from the Parker Case, where it was a crew on a construction train and a track repairer. In Rutledge v. Missouri P. R. Co. 123 Mo. 121, 24 S. W. 1053, and 27 S. W. 327, Barclay, Black, and Brace, JJ., held a switchman and the engineer were fellow servants. In Jones v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. 125 Mo. 666, 26 L. R. A. 718, 28 S. W. 883, Macfarlane, J., held that a porter in a Pullman car is not a fellow servant with the engineer and conductor. In Kcoun v. St. Louis R. Co. 141 Mo. 86, 41 S. W. 926, Barclay, P. J., held that the foreman of a street-car line and a gripman on one of the cars were not fellow servants. In McCarty v. Rood Hotel Co. 144 Mo. 397, 46 S. W. 172, Sherwood, J., held the electrician and engineer in a hotel a fellow servant with the elevator boy.

This is the state of the adjudications in our state, and similar conditions exist in other states where the departmental doctrine has been introduced into the decisions. Can any man, however learned in the law, however abstruse his analytical faculties, or however discriminating his logical powers, deduce any rule from these adjudications, or define the departments, or classify or arrange the classes? Is the servant better protected or more humanely treated by this doctrine than he was before its adoption? Is the master's duty made plain, or the labors of the bar and the courts made lighter? In practical operation is it not true that these cases are at last decided according to their individual merits as they appeared from the facts proved, and as the justice of each seemed to the judge deciding them to require when gauged by the old, tried, and accepted standards of the common law? Is it not a fact that the departmental doctrine exists only in theory, and not in practice? The only definite definition of a department that is attempted by any of them is by Black, J., in Parker v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 109 Mo. 362, 18 L. R. A. 802, 19 S. W. 1119, when he puts clerks in the office in one department and servants operating a train in another. Yet in that same case it was held that a track repairer and the train crew of a construction train were fellow servants, because in the same department, while in the Dixon Case, which immediately follows the Parker Case in the same volume of the Reports, it was held that a laborer who attached the rope to a small car used to haul rock to a rock crusher, and intended for ballasting the road, was not a fellow servant with the engineer of a passenger train, and on the same line in the Sullivan Case it was held that a track walker and an engineer were not fellow servants; yet in Relyea v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. it was held that the brakeman on one freight train and a fireman on another were fellow servants, and in the Schlereth Case it was held that an engineer on a passenger train and a track repairer were not fellow servants, and in the Swadley Case it was held that a track repairer and the train crew on either a freight or passenger train were not fellow servants, while in the Rutledge Case a switchman and an engineer were held fellow servants. If it be said that these cases show the evolution of the law, how can the Relyea Case, be reconciled with the departmental idea? The brakeman on the one train and the fireman on the other cannot observe the conduct of each other, and give notice of "misconduct, incapacity, or neglect of duty." In short, it may be pertinently asked What is the classification into departments of service which these cases create, or authorize, or recognize? Is it that clerks in the office constitute one department, train dispatchers another, the crew of a passenger train another, the crews of two freight trains another, the crew of a construction train and the track repairers another, the track walkers a department unto themselves, the mechanics in the shops another, etc.? If so, are these all the departments, or, if not, what others are there? Measured by experience, and tested scientifically, if there is to be a division into departments, it should be: First, the mechanical; second, the operative; third, the clerical; fourth, the managerial; and, fifth, the executive. This would come nearer the natural and business division of work. The road could not be run without the engine and cars,—the mechanical appliances; nor would the mechanics move without they were operated by human beings; nor could they move without tracks, and there could be no tracks without human beings to build them, and keep them in repair; nor could the machines be built, and the tracks laid, and the cars be run without clerks to keep track of the business and attend to collecting the freight and passenger charges; nor could any of them be made to work harmoniously or successfully without managers; nor could the road be built or run or managed without the executive head that provided the finances in the first place, and provided for the regularly recurring operating expenses. Yet no court has divided the business into such departments, or made any other division or classification. The adjudicated cases in our state, when brought into contraposition or conjunction, do not, in the aggregate, define the division into departments; but when any attempt is made to deduce a rule or create a class out of the several cases, discrepancies and inconsistencies are at once apparent. Still this court and the supreme courts of other states speak of departments of service, and yet in practice allow or deny recoveries which cannot be harmonized on the theory of departments of service. Practically, therefore, there is no difference between the old and the new rule. It leaves it where the old masters of the law put it, a mixed question of fact and law in every case. And so it should be. The lower court in this case treated the conductor as a vice principal, whose order to the engineer to go ahead amounted to a suspension of the rule which required the engineer to look out for the signals or targets; and also treated the engineer as a vice principal whose disregard of the warning of the plaintiff that he could not see the signal or target was the same as the negligence of the master, and, because of his relation to the fireman, held that they were not fellow servants. It is not denied that in so treating the conductor in his relations to the engineer and fireman, the lower court followed the case of Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. ed. 787, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 184, which so holds; but in the light of subsequent decisions of that distinguished tribunal the Ross Case cannot now be considered the law in that court. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. ed. 772, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914; Northern P. R. Co. v. Hamby, 154 U. S. 349, 38 L. ed. 1009, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 983; Central R. Co. v. Keegan, 160 U. S. 259, 40 L. ed. 418, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269; Northern P. R. Co. v. Peterson, 162 U. S. 346, 40 L. ed. 994, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 843; and Oakes v. Mase, 165 U. S. 363, 41 L. ed. 746, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 345. In the last case cited that court held the engineer of one train to be a fellow servant with the conductor of another. In our state beginning with McDermott v. Pacific R. Co. and running through Rohback v. Pacific R. Co. and McGowan v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. the conductor, engineer, fireman, and brakeman have been held to be fellow servants. If the departmental doctrine, and the reasons given for it, to wit, opportunity to observe each other, notice and report incapacity or neglect, be followed, the result is the same, and they must be held to be fellow servants. Plaintiff, however, cites many cases in other jurisdictions, which it is claimed hold that a conductor is a vice principal, and not a fellow servant with the engineer, fireman, and brakeman; but an examination of them shows the point here involved was present only in the case of Moon v. Richmond & A. R. Co. 78 Va. 745, 49 Am. Rep. 401 (and that case showed that the conductor had the power of placing and assigning to duty the trainmen, and the deceased was assigned to duty as a brakeman), and the case of Cowles v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 84 N. C. 309, 37 Am. Rep. 620 (where it was held that one who is the engineer and conductor of a train is not a fellow servant with the brakeman), and the case of East Tennessee & W. N. C. R. Co. v. Collins, 85 Tenn. 227, 1 S. W. 883 (where the engineer was held not to be a fellow servant with the brakeman). Without further reference to other cases, then, it may be said that, prima facie at least, the conductor, engineer, and fireman on the same train are fellow servants. The engineer and fireman were held to be fellow servants in Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. ed. 772, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914, and the engineer of one train and the conductor of another were held to be fellow servants in Oakes v. Mase, 165 U. S. 363, 41 L. ed. 746, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 345. In this case the order to go ahead was given by the conductor, who was in the caboose, at the rear of the train, eating his dinner, to the brakeman, who in turn signaled it to the engineer. Neither could see then, or under usual circumstances, whether the track was clear or not. It was the especial duty of the engineer and fireman to watch the track, and see that no obstructions were in the way, and to keep a sharp lookout for open switches. Smith v. Missouri P. R. Co. 113 Mo. loc. cit. 80, 20 S. W. 898. The conductor's signal or order to go ahead cannot have the effect of waiving or suspending the rule of the company—which the engineer and plaintiff well knew—to observe the targets and danger signals, and, in case of doubt, to stop. Nor could it overcome the express notice of danger given by plaintiff himself to the engineer that the side track was filled with cars, which obstructed the view so he could not see the target. It was plainly the duty of the engineer, under the circumstances, to stop. His failure to do so was the direct cause of the accident. The fact that plaintiff was helpless to stop the engine does not alter the case. The plaintiff assumed that risk when he entered the employment. Gibson v. Pacific R. Co. 46 Mo. 169, 2 Am. Rep. 497. He knew he could never stop the engine. But the engineer is not shown to have been incompetent, or an unfit person in any way; so there was no negligence on the part of the defendant in employing him. It follows that the circuit court erred in holding that the conductor was a vice principal, and also in holding that the engineer and the fireman were not fellow servants.

2. It is insisted, however, that the master was bound to furnish his servants with safe and suitable appliances for the work, and that it failed in this regard by furnishing a stub switch, instead of a split switch or split spring switch; and that, if either of the latter had been furnished, the accident in this case would not have occurred. It is settled law that it is the duty of the master to furnish safe and suitable appliances for his servants to use. He owes this duty to his servant, but his liability in this regard must not be confounded with any question of fellow servant. Parker v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 109 Mo. loc. cit. 407, 18 L. R. A. 812, 19 S. W. 1127; Williams v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 119 Mo. 316, 24 S. W. 782; Bender v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 137 Mo. 240, 37 S. W. 132. The evidence shows that with a split switch or a split spring switch an engine can safely run through a switch from the reverse side of it without being derailed, but that with a stub switch the continuity of the main track is broken, and, if an engine is run through it from the opposite side, it will be derailed. Both the engineer and the fireman knew this fact. They knew this was a stub switch. They had passed over it every day for over a month. They also knew the dangers of trying to run through a stub switch. There is no doubt that a split switch or a split spring switch is safer, when passing over it in the wrong direction, than a stub switch. In fact, the two former are comparatively and reasonably safe, while the latter is positively dangerous. But there is absolutely no evidence in this case that a stub switch is not safe and suitable when it is used in the natural and usual manner of using a switch. On the contrary, it was the only kind of a switch that was used for many years. It never was intended to be run through from the wrong direction, nor in fact is there any evidence that the split or split spring switches are intended to be used in this way. The master cannot be adjudged guilty of a failure of duty where he furnishes a servant machinery and appliances which are reasonably safe when used in the manner they are intended to be used, but which may become dangerous if their use is perverted by the servant. The master is not bound to furnish the safest and best appliances that could be used. He is acquit of fault if what he furnishes is reasonably safe and suitable. A stub switch is not the safest or best, but it is reasonably safe and suitable. The master cannot be adjudged negligent in this regard. Tabler v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 93 Mo. 79, 5 S. W. 810.

The placing of the target on the same side of the main track with the side track is claimed to be negligence. If it had been placed on the other side of the main track, it could have been more easily seen by the engineer when going south, and would not have been hidden from view by the cars on the side track. But coming north the engineer could not have seen it as well as he could if it was on the east side of the track. Aside from this, the evidence discloses that there is no uniform rule as to which side of the track it shall be placed on. The location and topography of the surroundings usually determine the position. It matters not which side it is placed on, the rules of the company require the engineer and fireman to watch for it, and if it indicates danger, or if they cannot see it, they must take the safe course, and stop. If the cars on the side track prevented the engineer or fireman from seeing the target, it was their duty to stop. The conductor's signal to go ahead cannot be construed into meaning anything more than that, so far as his end of the train was concerned, there need be no stop. It could not reasonably be construed into an order to the engineer to shut his eyes, or disregard the rules, and run ahead through an open switch. The conductor was not in a position to know 48 L. R. A.

whether the track was clear, or the signals and targets obscured from sight, or the switch open or not. This was essentially the duty of the engineer and fireman. In no proper sense can the order of the conductor—or, rather, the brakeman, for the engineer got it from the brakeman, and could not have known that the conductor had instructed the brakeman to give it—be said to be a waiver of the rules; this, too, whether the conductor be a vice principal or a fellow servant of the engineer.

3. But Missouri is not alone in respect to the uncertain state of the law relating to this subject. Speaking on this matter, Corliss, Ch. J., in Ell v. Northern P. R. Co. 1 N. D. 336, 12 L. R. A. 97, 48 N. W. 222, aptly says: "This is issue of law we are to determine, and our investigation must run along the line of general principles; for the adjudications upon this subject,—so multitudinous as almost to warrant the simile, 'thick as autumnal leaves that strew the brooks in Valambrosa,'—these adjudications are so discordant, enumerating so many rules, stating so many limitations, applying the law to facts so diverse, that one is reminded of Gibbon's remark upon the infinite variety of laws and opinions when Justinian entered upon the reform of codification,—that they were beyond the power of any capacity to digest." The learned judge, speaking of the test, sometimes applied, of power to observe and right to report the conduct of each other, as decisive of the relation of master and servant, or of whether the injured—and the negligent servant belong to the same department of service," says: "Many of the cases holding the master exempt from liability under the fellow-servant rule were, as we have said, cases in which the injured servant could not possibly have exerted influence over the negligent servant. Their separate departments of service, or their usual stations of employment, kept them, as a rule, entirely aloof from each other. In the following cases the relation of fellow servant was held to exist between persons who could exert little, if any, influence over each other: Quebec S. S. Co. v. Merchant, 133 U. S. 375, 33 L. ed. 656, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397,—the carpenter, porter, and stewards of a steamship; St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Welch, 72 Tex. 298, 2 L. R. A. 839, 10 S. W. 529,—foreman of a bridge gang and servants operating a train; Elliot v. Chicago. M. & St. P. R. Co. 5 Dak. 523, 3 L. R. A. 363, 41 N. W. 758,—a section foreman and a conductor; Fagundes v. Central P. R. Co. 79 Cal. 97, 3 L. R. A. 824, 21 Pac. 437,—a laborer employed to remove snow from a track and a conductor; Baughman v. Calaveras County Super. Ct. 72 Cal. 573, 14 Pac. 207,—a conductor and a brakeman; Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 109 U. S. 478, 27 L. ed. 1003, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 322,—a brakeman and conductor of different trains; Van Wick-le v. Manhattan R. Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 275,—a track repairer and an engineer; McMaster v. Illinois C. R. Co. 65 Miss. 264, 4 So. 59,—brakeman of one train and employee on another; Naylor v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co.

33 Fed. Rep. 801,—engineer and switchman; Van Avery v. Union P. R. Co. 35 Fed. Rep. 40,—engineers of different trains; Connelly v. Minneapolis E. R. Co. 38 Minn. 80, 35 N. W. 582,—a sectionman and an engineer or brakeman; Howard v. Denver & G. R. Co. 26 Fed. Rep. 837,—an engineer and fireman of different trains; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Rider, 62 Tex. 267; Gormley v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 72 Ind. 31; Collins v. St. Paul & S. C. R. Co. 30 Minn. 31, 14 N. W. 60; Clifford v. Old Colony R. Co. 141 Mass. 564, 6 N. E. 751; Keys v. Pennsylvania Co. (Pa.) 1 Cent. Rep. 893, 3 Atl. 15; Whaalan v. Mad River & L. E. R. Co. 8 Ohio St. 249—in each case an engineer and a sectionman.” In the same case attention is called to the reasoning of Judge Cooley in his work on Torts (543), in which he combats the idea that the question can be solved by reference to the grades of the injured and negligent servants, respectively, and denies that reason, or logic, or public policy gives sanction to such a doctrine. Reference is also made to the article of Judge Dillon in 24 Am. Law Rev. 175, which is so appropriate to this case as to justify its verbatim reproduction here, as follows: “The master owes certain defined, personal, unalienable, nonassignable duties towards servants. These duties may be devolved on others by the master, but not without recourse on him. . . . In the general American law, as I understand it, the doctrine of vice principal exists to this extent, and no further, viz., that it is precisely commensurate with the master’s personal duties towards his servants. As to these, the servant who represents the master is what we may call for convenience a ‘vice principal,’ for whose acts and neglects the master is liable. Beyond this the master is liable only for his own personal negligence. This is a plain, sound, safe, and practicable line of distinction. We know where to find it, and how to define it. It begins and ends with the personal duties of the master. Any attempt to refine, based upon the notion of ‘grades’ in the service, or, what is much the same thing, distinct ‘departments’ in the service (which ‘departments’ frequently exist only in the imagination of the judges, and not in fact), will breed the confusion of the Ohio and Kentucky experiments, whose courts have constructed a labyrinth in which the judges that made it seem to be able to ‘find no end; in wandering mazes lost.’ . . . The real inquiry is, Was the injury caused by another servant one of the ordinary risks of the particular employment? If so, the grade, whether higher, lower, co-ordinate, or the department of the faulty servant, it is of no consequence. It is a condition of the contract of service that the servant takes upon himself the risk of accidents in the common course of the business,—all open and palpable risks, including the negligence of all fellow servants, of whatever grade, in the same employment.” In view of the dubious state of the law on this subject in our own and sister states, brought about by the introduction of new, but not useful, rules and theories, is it not time to set the target signal of danger, and to return to the beaten track, lit up by the “glad-some light of jurisprudence,” which the experience of ages and the wisdom of the brightest legal minds of the world has laid out for us, and to cease, like moths, to burn our wings in the candles of “grades” and “departments”?

The judgment of the circuit court is reversed.

Robinson and Williams, JJ., concur in the judgment of reversal herein on the ground that the negligence shown was that of the engineer, who, under the decisions in this state, was a fellow servant with the plaintiff, but do not regard the “departmental doctrine” as involved in this case.

Brace, J., dissents.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

Andrew J. HANSCOM
v.
Max MEYER et al., Appts.

(.....Neb.....)

*1. Evidence examined, and found that the Omaha Mercury is a weekly publication, circulating among various classes of people within the county and state; that its printed matter consists principally of legal notices and information regarding the courts, and of legal matters in general, and also advertising of a miscellaneous character, literature of a general kind, and a limited amount of general news of current events. Held, that such publication is a newspaper within the meaning of § 497 of the Code of Civil Procedure; that the fact that it also makes a specialty of some particular class of business, and conveys intelligence of particular interest to those engaged in such business, will not thereby deprive it of its general classification as a newspaper, within the meaning of the statute.

2. Held, also, that the principal distinguishing feature of a newspaper, in contemplation of the statute, is that it be a publication appearing at regular, or almost regular, intervals, at short periods of time, as daily or weekly, usually in sheet form, and containing news; that is, reports of happenings of recent occurrences of a varied character, such as political, social, moral, religious, and other subjects of a similar nature, local or foreign, intended for the information of the general reader.

*Headnotes by HOLCOMB, J.

NOTE.—As to what constitutes a newspaper within meaning of statute as to publication of legal notices, see Lynch v. Durfee (Mich.) 24 L. R. A. 793; and Lynn v. Allen (Ind.) 33 L. R. A. 779.
48 L. R. A.

(March 21, 1900.)

APPEAL by defendants from an order of the District Court for Douglas County refusing to set aside a foreclosure sale of real estate on the ground that the notice of sale was not published in a legal newspaper. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Charles S. Elgutter, for appellants:

In 1842 the Attorney General of the United States was called upon by the Postmaster General for an opinion as to what, under the postal laws of the United States, was a "newspaper." He made the following summary:

"On the whole, the only requisites of a newspaper, which I think must be judicially held indispensable, are:

"1. That it be bona fide published; that it is for everybody's use. . . .

"2. That it is published in numbers, not perhaps with exact regularity, but something approaching to it.

"3. That it conveys news, not mere dissertation and discussion, or literary and poetical miscellanies.

"4. That it be in sheets, and in rather a cheap form."

This opinion is in the line of what is regarded as a true interpretation of the word "newspaper," as used in the statute under consideration.

Beecher v. Stephens, 25 Minn. 146; Hull v. King, 38 Minn. 349, 37 N. W. 792; Lynch v. Dufce, 101 Mich. 171, 24 L. R. A. 793, 59 N. W. 409; State ex rel. Elliott v. Holliday, 35 Neb. 333, 53 N. W. 142; Kerr v. Hitt, 75 Ill. 51; Kellogg v. Carrico, 47 Mo. 157; Kingman v. Waugh, 139 Mo. 360, 40 S. W. 884; Williams v. Colwell, 18 Misc. 399, 43 N. Y. Supp. 720; Lynn v. Allen, 145 Ind. 584, 33 L. R. A. 779, 44 N. E. 646.

Measured by these standards, the scope of the "Omaha Mercury" is altogether too narrow to be classed as a "newspaper."

Messrs. L. F. Crofoot and James S. McIntosh also for appellants.

Mr. George E. Pritchett for appellee.

Holcomb, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In proceedings of foreclosure of a real-estate mortgage in the district court of Douglas county, on an application for confirmation of a sale of real estate made in said action, the defendants (appellants) objected thereto, and moved to set aside the sale on the ground that notice of sale by publication in the Omaha Mercury was insufficient; alleging that that publication was not a newspaper, as provided for by § 497 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The objection was overruled, and by appeal the case is brought to this court.

The section referred to provides as follows: "Lands and tenements taken in execution shall not be sold until the officer cause public notice of the time and place of sale 48 L. R. A.

to be given, for at least thirty days before the day of sale, by advertisement in some newspaper printed in the county, or in case no newspaper be printed in the county, in some newspaper in general circulation therein. . . . All sales made without such advertisement shall be set aside on motion by the court to which the execution is returnable." The point in issue is whether the Omaha Mercury is a newspaper, within the meaning of the section quoted. In the affidavit in support of the motion to set aside it is said: "That said Omaha Mercury, published weekly at Omaha, Nebraska, is a class paper, devoted especially to the interests of the lawyers of Douglas county, Nebraska; that said Omaha Mercury is a paper which is confined to the particular trade, calling, or business, of the lawyers of Omaha, and has a limited circulation, and is not a newspaper, as by law provided and required." A copy of one issue of the paper is made an exhibit, which is said to be "a fair sample of said publication." The proprietor of the publication challenged makes affidavit that "he is the owner and proprietor of the Omaha Mercury, a newspaper printed and circulated every Friday in the city of Omaha, Douglas county, Nebraska, and elsewhere. . . . This affiant says that it is not true that said Omaha Mercury is a class paper, or that it is confined to the interests of the lawyers of Omaha or Douglas county; that said Omaha Mercury, then known as the 'Omaha Watchman,' was established in the year 1870, and has been published weekly ever since said date; that said paper contains each week news of a general character, such as is to be found in the average weekly paper published in Nebraska; that of late years it has made a specialty of the news of the courts and of legal matters in general, but that it is not true that it is devoted to the legal profession in any sense which would render it a 'class publication'; that said paper has a large and valuable subscription list, and that its said subscribers are of all classes and professions; that said newspaper has a wide circulation in Douglas county and the state of Nebraska, but that it is also taken and paid for by various classes of people in a great number of the states of the Union; that for the past twenty years it has been the custom of lawyers and others to publish legal notices in said paper,—so much so that the people of Douglas county and the state of Nebraska, and throughout the entire United States, look first in its columns for legal advertisements in which they are interested; that it has published in the past, and still continues to publish, the greater percentage of legal notices in Douglas county, including orders required to be published by the district and circuit courts of the United States and of the district and county courts of Douglas county; and that said paper is commonly designated by the judges of the aforesaid courts as the paper in which to publish the various orders required to be published by said courts." Webster's Dictionary defines a newspaper to be: "A sheet of paper, printed and distributed at stated intervals, for conveying intelligence of passing events, advocating opinions, etc.; a public print that circulates news, advertisements, proceedings of legislative bodies, public announcements, etc." Burrill, Law Dictionary, gives this definition: "A printed publication, issued in numbers at stated intervals, conveying intelligence of passing events. The term 'newspaper' is properly applied only to such publications as are issued in a single sheet and at short intervals, as daily or weekly."

It is difficult, if not impossible, to determine with clearness and exactness where the lines of demarkation should be drawn between a newspaper, in a legal and common acceptance of the term, and the numerous publications devoted to some special purpose, and which circulate only among a certain class of the people, and which are not within the purview of statutes requiring publication of legal notices in some newspaper. The daily and weekly newspapers common to all parts of the country, of general circulation among the people, without regard to class, vocation, or calling, devoted to the gathering and dissemination of news of current events of interest to all, and usually espousing and advocating principles of some political party with persistency, if not at all times with consistency, are, without doubt, newspapers, within the meaning of the statute. On the contrary, many publications, such as literary, scientific, religious, medical, and legal journals, that are obviously for but one class of the people, and that class always but a small part of the entire public, are not newspapers, within the legal and ordinary meaning of the word; and it would be manifestly unjust, as well as against the letter and spirit of the law, to recognize such publications as proper for the advertisement of legal notices,—the object in all cases being to give wide and general publicity regarding the subject of which notice is required to be published. The paper in question partakes, in a degree, of the characteristics of each of the two classes mentioned. If, however, it has the distinguishing features required to make it a newspaper as ordinarily defined, the fact that it also makes a specialty of some particular class of business, and conveys intelligence of particular interest to those engaged in such business, will not thereby deprive it of its general classification as a newspaper, within the meaning of the statute. In Lynch v. Duffee, 101 Mich. 171, 24 L. R. A. 793, 59 N. W. 409, it is held: "A weekly paper, containing matter of general interest, and having a general circulation among professional and business men, is a newspaper, within the meaning of How. Stat. § 5801, providing for publication in a newspaper of certain notices in probate proceedings, though it is primarily devoted to disseminating matters of interest to the legal profession." In the opinion it is said: "But a newspaper, even in the days when these statutes were enacted, meant what it means to-day,—a sheet of paper, printed and distributed at short intervals, for conveying intelligence of passing events; a public print that circulates news, advertisements, proceedings of legislative bodies, public documents, and the like." In Lynn v. Allen, 145 Ind. 584, 33 L. R. A. 779, 44 N. E. 646, it is held that a periodical, ephemeral in form, issued daily except Sundays, devoted to the general dissemination of legal news, and containing other matter of general interest to the public, is such a paper. In the case of Railton v. Laufer, 126 Ill. 219, 18 N. E. 555, the evidence in the case showed that the Chicago Daily Law Bulletin was in general circulation throughout the city of Chicago and the state of Illinois, among judges, lawyers, and real-estate brokers, merchants and business men generally. Its contents consisted for the most part of legal matters, but it contained advertisements not confined to any one calling or trade. It also published news and information of a general secular character, was published in Chicago, and had a general circulation. The paper in question was held to be a secular newspaper of general circulation, within the meaning of the statute. To the same effect is Williams v. Colwell, 18 Misc. 399, 43 N. Y. Supp. 720, decided in 1896, where the writer of the opinion has collated the more important cases up to that date upon the subject. Says the writer of the opinion, after reviewing the authorities: "The facts stated in the affidavit and stipulation read on the motion bring this case within the cases cited sustaining publications of legal notices. While the principal news published in the Daily Mercantile Review is of especial value to attorneys, bankers, brokers, commission merchants, and those engaged in the real-estate business, yet it is shown by the affidavit and stipulation that several columns are devoted to general advertising and to the publication of local and other news of general interest, and that it has a general circulation."

The paper in question has been established for a number of years, and is published weekly. As stated in an affidavit in the case, "Of late years it has made a specialty of the news of the courts, and of legal matters in general." It appears to have, according to the affidavit, a large and valuable subscription list, and to circulate among various classes of people throughout the county and state, as well as the United States. It has been recognized as a legal newspaper by the probate court of the county, the district court, and the Federal courts. Its printed matter consists principally of legal notices, information regarding courts, and a legal directory of the Douglas county bar. Some advertising of a miscellaneous character, literature of a general kind, commonly designated "plate matter," and what purports to be information of the actions of Congress, two addresses by lawyers, and a limited amount of general news of current events, are found in its columns, although we are constrained to say that there is quite a dearth of the latter, as is shown by the exhibit, which has rendered it more difficult to reach a correct conclusion in this case. The principal distinguishing feature of a newspaper, in contemplation of the statute, in our opinion, is that it be a publication appearing at regular, or almost regular, intervals, at short periods of time, as daily or weekly, usually in sheet form, and containing news; that is, reports of happenings of recent occurrence, of a varied character, such as political, social, moral, religious, and other subjects of a similar nature, local or foreign, intended for the information of the general reader. It is the one quality of news which gives it its general interest, and secures for it a general circulation among people of different classes and callings, whom the statute seeks to reach by the requirement of notice by publication in a newspaper. It should be noted, too, that, in a degree, the presence of advertisements not appealing to any particular class, trade, or profession constitutes a factor tending to bring a publication possessing the qualifications heretofore mentioned within the designation of a newspaper of general circulation. While some effort has been made by the legislature to define a newspaper, and limit the publication of legal notices to papers which are most likely to have a bona fide circulation among the general public where published, so far nothing of a permanent nature has been accomplished. In the absence of such legislation, we are disposed to the opinion, under the evidence presented, that the Omaha Mercury is a newspaper, within the meaning of the statute, and as defined by the authorities herein adverted to.

It follows that the ruling complained of is correct, and is affirmed.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

David W. OLIVER

v.

Mayor, etc., of JERSEY CITY et al., Plffs.
in Err.

(.....N. J.....)

- *1. An officer legally elected and qualified, who enters upon the duties of his office, and afterwards is appointed to and accepts another office, but in good faith continues to publicly discharge the duties of the first, his term not having expired, and no successor having been appointed or elected in his stead, nor any adjudication made against his title,—is an officer de facto.
2. The official acts of an officer de facto are valid, as far as the rights of third persons and the public are concerned, unless the defects in the officer's title are notorious, and sufficient to overcome the apparent evidence to the contrary; but when they see a person occupying an important public office by virtue of an election by the people, and publicly exercising its duties within the period for which he was elected, they are entitled to consider him to be such officer, and will be protected in their rights if they do so.
3. When a person legally holding one office is elected or appointed to another, but is prohibited by a statute from holding both, upon accepting the second his de jure title to the first ends, and his successor may at once be appointed or elected; but, if the former occupant refuses to vacate the office, his successor will be compelled to take the necessary legal steps to oust him.
4. When an action is begun, the object of which is only to determine the validity of an act or thing done by an officer, and not

*Headnotes by NIXON, J.

NOTE.—As to validity of acts of de facto officer, see Magenau v. Fremont (Neb.) 9 L. R. A. 786; State v. Lewis (N. C.) 11 L. R. A. 105; Cleveland v. McCanna (N. D.) 41 L. R. A. 852; 48 L. R. A.

Involving his integrity or want of good faith, the officer himself is not a necessary party to the suit.

(November 20, 1899.)

ERROR to the Supreme Court to review a judgment setting aside an ordinance of the board of street and water commissioners of Jersey City granting a railroad the right to cross a street at grade. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. D. Edwards and C. L. Corbin, for plaintiffs in error:

The prosecutor had no interest to warrant the writ.

State, Montgomery, Prosecutor, v. Trenton, 36 N. J. L. 79; State, Traphagen, Prosecutor, v. Jersey City, 52 N. J. L. 65, 18 Atl. 586; State, Middleton, v. Robbins, 54 N. J. L. 566, 25 Atl. 471; Tallon v. Hoboken, 60 N. J. L. 212, 37 Atl. 895; H. B. Anthony Shoe Co. v. West Jersey R. Co. 57 N. J. Eq. 607, 42 Atl. 279; Smith v. Boston, 7 Cush. 254; People ex rel. Bristol v. Ingham County Supers. 20 Mich. 95; Chicago v. Union Bldg. Asso. 102 Ill. 379, 40 Am. Rep. 598; Hesing v. Scott, 107 Ill. 600; Brady v. Shinkle, 40 Iowa, 576.

Commissioner Smith was a de facto member of the board of street and water commissioners.

Clark v. Ennis, 45 N. J. L. 69; State ex rel. Dugan v. Farrier, 47 N. J. L. 383, 1 Atl. 751; State ex rel. Bumsted v. Govern, 47 N. J. L. 368, 1 Atl. 835; State v. Anderson, 1 N. J. L. 318, 1 Am. Dec. 207; State, Corrigan, Prosecutor, v. Duryea, 40 N. J. L. 266; State, Flaucher, Prosecutor, v. Camden, 56 N. J. L. 244, 28 Atl. 82; Shcehan's Case, 122 Mass. 445, 23 Am. Rep. 374; Mechem, Pub. Off. § 320; Throop, Pub. Off. § 631.

The acts of an officer de facto have the same validity as those of an officer de jure. Throop, Pub. Off. § 627; Nofire v. United States, 164 U. S. 661, 41 L. ed. 590, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 212; Hoagland v. Culvert, 20 N. J. L. 387; State, Garrabrant, Prosecutor, v. Meyers, 29 N. J. L. 392; State ex rel. Mitchell v. Tolan, 33 N. J. L. 195; State, Bloomfield Twp. Prosecutor, v. Pierson, 47 N. J. L. 247; Pence v. Frankfort, 101 Ky. 534, 41 S. W. 1011.

The appointing power must determine prima facie the question of the validity of the incumbent's title.

State ex rel. Leal v. Jones, 19 Ind. 356, 81 Am. Dec. 403; People ex rel. Kelly v. Brooklyn, 77 N. Y. 503, 33 Am. Rep. 659; State v. Parkhurst, 9 N. J. L. 446, Appx.; State ex rel. Clawson v. Thompson, 20 N. J. L. 689; Atty. Gen. ex rel. Moreland v. Detroit, 112 Mich. 145, 37 L. R. A. 211, 70 N. W. 450; Mechem, Pub. Off. § 330; Throop, Pub. Off. §§ 624, 631; State ex rel. Police Comrs. v. Pritchard, 36 N. J. L. 101; Clark v. Ennis, 45 N. J. L. 69; State, Markley, Prosecutor, v. Cape May Point, 55 N. J. L. 104, 25 Atl. 259; State ex rel. Mitchell v. Tolan, 33 N. J. L. 195.

Messrs. Charles D. Thompson and Richard V. Lindabury, for defendant in error:

The prosecutor's interest is such that he will suffer a special private injury beyond that which will affect him in common with the remainder of the public.

Tallon v. Hoboken, 60 N. J. L. 212, 37 Atl. 895; Higbee v. Camden & A. R. Co. 19 N. J. Eq. 376; Bechtel v. Carslake, 11 N. J. Eq. 500; McDonald v. Newark, 42 N. J. Eq. 136, 7 Atl. 855; Iveson v. Moore, 1 Ld. Raym. 486; Wilkes v. Hungerford Market Co. 2 Bing. N. C. 281; Aldrich v. Wetmore, 52 Minn. 164, 53 N. W. 1072; Wood, Nuisances, § 840, p. 1275; Crooke v. Anderson, 23 Hun. 266; Stetson v. Facon, 19 Pick. 147, 31 Am. Dec. 123; Frink v. Lawrence, 20 Conn. 117, 50 Am. Dec. 274; Platt v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 74 Iowa, 127, 37 N. W. 107; Brakken v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 29 Minn. 41, 11 N. W. 124; Benton v. Elizabeth, 61 N. J. L. 411, 39 Atl. 683, 906.

The injury complained of directly affects the public, and the prosecutor is one of that portion of the public most immediately concerned. He has a standing, therefore, in the discretion of the supreme court, to prosecute the writ on this ground also.

State ex rel. Ferry v. Williams, 41 N. J. L. 332; State, Middleton, v. Robbins, 54 N. J. L. 566, 25 Atl. 471; State v. Wood, 23 N. J. L. 561; State v. French, 24 N. J. L. 736.

There was a vacancy in the board of street and water commissioners from the time Smith entered the United States army, and therefore the ordinance was not legally passed, for the want of the necessary four votes.

Smith had, before casting his vote, accepted an appointment to public office within the meaning of the act creating the street and water board.

Mechem, Pub. Off. § 1, p. 1; People ex rel. Throop v. Langdon, 40 Mich. 673; Re Oaths of Attorneys & Counselors, 20 Johns. 492; Rouland v. New York, 83 N. Y. 376; United 48 L. R. A.

States v. Hartwell, 6 Wall. 385, 18 L. ed. 830; State ex rel. Clark v. Stanley, 66 N. C. 59, 8 Am. Rep. 488; Wood's Case, 2 Cow. 29, note; Henly v. Lyme, 5 Bing. 91; Kerr v. Jones, 19 Ind. 351; State ex rel. Cornwell v. Allen, 21 Ind. 517; State v. De Gress, 53 Tex. 387; Re Martin, 60 N. C. (Winst. L. pt. 1) p. 153; State ex rel. McNeill v. Somers, 96 N. C. 473, 2 S. E. 161; King v. Harris, 1 Barn. & Ad. 936; Page v. Hardin, 8 B. Mon. 648; People ex rel. Henry v. Nostrand, 46 N. Y. 381; Nellis v. Clark, 20 Wend. 26; People v. Hayes, 7 How. Pr. 248.

The effect of Smith's acceptance of the office of colonel was ipso facto to vacate his office of commissioner.

Mechem, Pub. Off. § 420; Tiedeman, Mun. Corp. p. 133; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. p. 308; Stubbs v. Lee, 64 Me. 195, 18 Am. Rep. 251; Magie v. Stoddard, 25 Conn. 565, 68 Am. Dec. 375; State ex rel. Metcalf v. Goff, 15 R. I. 505, 9 Atl. 226; People ex rel. Stephen v. Hanifan, 96 Ill. 420; State ex rel. Walker v. Bus, 135 Mo. 325, 33 L. R. A. 616, 36 S. W. 636; Kerr v. Jones, 19 Ind. 351; State ex rel. Cornwell v. Allen, 21 Ind. 516; People ex rel. Whiting v. Carrique, 2 Hill, 93; People ex rel. Kelly v. Brooklyn, 77 N. Y. 503, 33 Am. Rep. 659; Atty. Gen. ex rel. Moreland v. Detroit, 112 Mich. 145, 37 L. R. A. 211, 70 N. W. 450; State v. Parkhurst, 9 N. J. L. 427, Appx.; Bishop v. State ex rel. Griner, 149 Ind. 223, 39 L. R. A. 278, 48 N. E. 1038; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 562b; Dailey v. State ex rel. Huffer, 8 Blackf. 329; Howard v. Shoemaker, 35 Ind. 111; People ex rel. Grogan v. Glass, 19 App. Div. 454, 46 N. Y. Supp. 572; Louisville v. Higdon, 2 Met. (Ky.) 526; Relender v. State ex rel. Utz, 140 Ind. 283, 49 N. E. 30.

Smith was not a commissioner de facto. Smith's position in the board was precisely as if he had formally resigned on the 18th of July, or had never been appointed. Such being the case, something more was necessary to make him a de facto commissioner than mere attendance when away on furlough, at five out of sixteen meetings, and their voting under public protest.

Wilcox v. Smith, 5 Wend. 231, 21 Am. Dec. 213; Hussey v. Smith, 99 U. S. 20, 25 L. ed. 314; People v. Cook, 8 N. Y. 67, 59 Am. Dec. 451; State v. Newhouse, 29 La. Ann. 824; Biencourt v. Parker, 27 Tex. 558; Howard v. Shoemaker, 35 Ind. 111.

Even if the acts of Smith could be upheld in favor of the public and third persons generally as those of a de facto officer they could not be upheld in this case, for the reason that the rule only supports such acts as affect the public and innocent third persons dealing with public officers in good faith.

Mechem, Pub. Off. § 328; 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 820, 821; King v. Bedford Level, 6 East, 356; Knowles v. Luce, F. Moore, 109; St. Luke's Church v. Mathews, 4 Desauss. Eq. 578, 6 Am. Dec. 619; State ex rel. Cosgrove v. Perkins, 139 Mo. 106, 40 S. W. 650; Williams v. Boynton, 147 N. Y. 426, 42 N. E. 184; Re Quinn, 152 N. Y. 89, 46 N. E. 175; Conway v. St. Louis, 9 Mo. App. 488; State ex rel. Van Amringe v. Taylor, 108 N. C. 196, 12 L. R. A. 202, 12 S. E. 1035; Dabney v. Hudson, 68 Miss. 292, 8 So. 545; State ex rel. Dugan v. Farrier, 47 N. J. L. 383, 1 Atl. 751; State ex rel. Hugg v. Ivins, 59 N. J. L. 139, 36 Atl. 685; State v. Carroll, 38 Conn. 449, 9 Am. Rep. 409.

Nixon, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On September 19, 1898, the board of street and water commissioners of Jersey City passed "An Ordinance Granting to the Greenville and Hudson Railway Company Permission to Cross Communipaw Avenue with Its Tracks at Grade, and Regulating Such Crossing." The ordinance was vetoed by the mayor, but was passed again, notwithstanding the objections of the mayor, on the 3d of October, 1898. The defendant in error, a resident and taxpayer of Jersey City, was allowed a writ of certiorari, and a judgment of the supreme court was afterwards obtained setting aside the ordinance, and this writ of error brings that judgment before us for review.

While numerous reasons are assigned in the record, they all center around two propositions. First, whether the defendant in error has such an interest in the subject-matter of the writ as to give him a legal standing to prosecute it. The court below adjudged that he had, and we concur in the conclusion reached by that court, and find no occasion to add anything to the reasoning and authority by which it is supported. The second proposition relates to the validity of the ordinance itself. It is contended that the board of street and water commissioners has no power to authorize grade crossings. The court below sustained the right of the board, and in that conclusion, also, we agree. Such authority is given by 1 Gen. Stat. pp. 471, 472, §§ 50, 51.

But the ordinance is assailed principally upon the ground that it was not legally adopted. The board of street and water commissioners is the governing body of Jersey City, and it enacts all the local laws of that city respecting streets and water. It consists of five members, and the ordinances passed are subject to the mayor's approval, and, if vetoed by him, may be again passed, notwithstanding his objections, by four votes of the board. 1 Gen. Stat. p. 466. The ordinance in question was adopted at a regular meeting held September 19, 1898, there being four votes for and one against it. It was vetoed by the mayor on September 28, and finally passed, over his veto, on the 3d of October, 1898, receiving the same number of votes. But the contention is that one of them was not such as could give efficacy to the ordinance. It was cast by Robert G. Smith, who had been mustered into the United States service as colonel of the 4th regiment of New Jersey volunteers, on July 18, 1898. The statute creating the board of street and water commissioners provides (1 Gen. Stat. p. 465) that "no other commissioner shall accept or hold any other place of public trust or emolument 48 L. R. A. within the elective franchise, nor any appointment to public office, unless he shall first resign his said office, and if he shall so accept such other office without having resigned his office of such commissioner, upon his acceptance of such place or appointment, his office of commissioner shall thereupon become vacant." While there has not been furnished the best proof that Smith actually accepted the office of colonel, yet, in the absence of any rebuttal, we shall hold, as did the court below, that it is sufficient, and that he did accept such office. It is also insisted by the plaintiffs in error that Smith should be made a party in this proceeding; but we think that where an action is instituted, the object of which is only to determine the validity of the act or thing done by an officer, and not involving his personal integrity or want of good faith, the officer himself is not a necessary party. No allegation or proof of bad faith on the part of anyone appears in the record.

The question at issue is thus narrowed down to the efficacy of Smith's vote in the adoption of the ordinance. Without his vote, it could not have been passed over the veto, neither could it without every other vote it received, and it is not strictly accurate to say that his vote had any more potency than any other. After his appointment, Smith continued to discharge the duties of his office as commissioner, and was present and voted when the ordinance was adopted, as the official minutes show. It would therefore be a pure solecism to call the office vacant at that time, except in the strictly legal sense of having no occupant with a de jure title. The acts done by Smith in respect to the adoption of the ordinance were neither more nor less than he would have done had the 4th regiment never been organized. It is therefore manifest that the words of the statute (1 Gen. Stat. p. 465) already quoted, declaring that when a commissioner accepts another office his former office shall become "vacant," cannot mean, in a situation like this, that it is corporally vacant; for the person lawfully elected to fill it remained in possession discharging its duties. Mere words in a statute cannot alone make an office unoccupied which in fact is occupied. The legal meaning of the words, in such circumstances, is that the office has no occupant who holds by a good title in law, and that the appointing power may at once be exercised to fill it, or, if it is an elective office, the people may elect, and no adjudication is required to declare the vacancy, although the newly appointed or elected officer may find it necessary afterwards to resort to quo warranto proceedings to obtain actual possession of the office. Under the old rule of common law, upon accepting another and incompatible office, the first became vacant, and, if the occupant refused to abandon it, a writ of quo warranto to determine the question of incompatibility was the remedy; and where the common law has been superseded by statutes declaring a vacancy under like circumstances, and the occupant remains, a similar course must be pursued to obtain possession, or such other steps as the facts may warrant. There are familiar precedents in our own state which illustrate the rules here stated. In Clark v. Ennis, 45 N. J. L. 69, the court said: "It is clear, . . . both upon reason and authority, that a statute declaring an office vacant, for some act or omission of the incumbent after he enters upon his duties, does not execute itself." Also State ex rel. Clawson v. Thompson, 20 N. J. L. 689. Also State v. Parkhurst, 9 N. J. L. 427, Appx., with a difference only in the attitude of the parties. The governor having appointed Parkhurst in Ogden's absence, the new officer took possession, and Ogden became the prosecutor to regain possession. Had Ogden remained, the title of the case would have been State v. Ogden, with the same result. The same practice prevails in other states, and the rule is clearly stated in State ex rel. Leal v. Jones, 10 Ind. 336, 81 Am. Dec. 403, where it is said: "Where it appears, prima facie, that acts or events have occurred subjecting an office to a judicial declaration of being vacant, the authority authorized to fill such vacancy, supposing the office to be vacant, may proceed before procuring a judicial declaration of the vacancy, and appoint or elect, according to the forms of law, a person to fill such office; but if, when such person attempts to take possession of the office, he is resisted by the previous incumbent, he will be compelled to try the right, and oust the incumbent, or fail to oust him, in some mode prescribed by law."

Smith, then, being in the office under color of a legal title ab origine, and no other person claiming a right to it, was he a commissioner de facto? Lord Ellenborough, in 1805, in King v. Bedford Level, 6 East. 356, said: "An officer de facto is one who has the reputation of being an officer; he assumes to be, and yet is not, a good officer in point of law." This definition has never been questioned, and all those given by the text writers since are little more than variations of this one. Tested by this ancient or any modern definition, Smith must be held to have been such an officer when this ordinance was passed. He certainly had color of title and reputation: for the legal voters of Jersey City elected him in the spring of 1898 a member of the board for the term of three years, and he duly qualified as such, and entered upon his duties, with the full knowledge and acquiescence of the public. He had never resigned, the board had not been abolished, and his term had not expired. It has been argued, and the record shows, that he had been absent from several meetings of the board, but it cannot be held that a vacant chair in itself makes a vacant office. Such a rule would work bad results in most of our legislative or governing bodies. The question in a case like this is not whether a member has been frequently absent, but whether he was present and voted when the ordinance was adopted. He did not assert a right which any other person claimed, or perform any official duties that anyone else pretended to have any right to perform in his stead, but only those duties which belonged to the office he was elected to fill, and which the law contemplated should be done, and the public expected him to do when they elected him; for the law creating the board provides that the judgment and wisdom of five commissioners should determine the questions that arise in the passage of ordinances concerning the streets. The board, also, recognized his membership. He participated in their proceedings. His name was called and vote recorded in the adoption of ordinances, and, if not present, his absence was duly noted in the official minutes. With all these facts and circumstances appearing in the record, and undisputed, we must hold that Smith was a commissioner de facto. This conclusion is in accord, we think, with the decisions in this state and elsewhere on this subject. In State ex rel. Dugan v. Farrier, 47 N. J. L. 383, 1 Atl. 751, Justice Dixon said: "One who assumes an office legally, and in good faith remains in it after his title has ended, is a de facto officer." The same doctrine was held in State, Flaucher, Prosecutor, v. Camden, 56 N. J. L. 244, 28 Atl. 82. In State v. Anderson, 1 N. J. L. 318, 1 Am. Dec. 207, it was held that a person in the office of sheriff, although ineligible, was nevertheless sheriff de facto, and his official acts valid. In Clark v. Ennis, 45 N. J. L. 69,—a case where the sheriff failed to give bond with sureties as required by law, and yet continued to discharge the duties of the office,—he was held to be an officer de facto, and his acts valid, although the law expressly declares that, if any sheriff shall neglect, refuse, or be unable to give such bond, "the office shall expire and be deemed to be vacant." In the Case of Sheehan, 122 Mass. 445, 23 Am. Rep. 374, one Mr. Hawkes, while holding the office of justice of the peace, was elected to the state legislature, and had qualified and entered upon his duties, but continued to act as justice, although the Constitution of Massachusetts provided that, upon accepting another office, that of justice should become vacant; but the court, by Chief Justice Gray, said: "If Mr. Hawkes, upon taking his seat in the house of representatives, ceased to be a justice de jure, he was, by color of the commission which he still assumed to hold and act under having the usual signs of judicial office,—sitting in the court, using its seal, and attended by his clerk,—and, no other person having been appointed in his stead, a justice of the peace de facto." Decisions of like import may be found in every state.

Smith being a commissioner de facto when he voted for the ordinance, it must, upon the application of well-settled legal principles, be held valid and effective as to the rights of the public and third persons. In State ex rel. Mitchell v. Tolan, 33 N. J. L. 195, Justice Depue said: "Premising that an officer de facto is one who exercises the duties of an office under a color of right, by virtue of an appointment or election to that office, as distinguished on the one hand from a mere usurper of an office, and on the other from an officer de jure, the acts of an officer de facto are valid, as far as the rights of the public or third persons are concerned." In Woodside v. Wagg, 71 Me. 207, it was held that a person exercising the functions of a valid public office by color of right will be deemed to be an officer de facto, and his acts will protect third persons, although he has legally forfeited his office by the acceptance of an incompatible one. In State v. Carroll, 38 Conn. 449, it was said: "The de facto doctrine was introduced into the law as a matter of policy and necessity, to protect the interests of the public and of individuals, where those interests were involved in the official acts of persons exercising the duties of an office without being lawful officers. It was seen, as said in Knuckles v. Luce, F. Moore, 109, that the public could not reasonably be compelled to inquire into the title of an officer, nor be compelled to show a title, and these became settled principles in the law." In Wilcox v. Smith, 5 Wend. 232, 21 Am. Dec. 213, the court said: "The principle is well settled that the acts of officers de facto are as valid and effectual when they concern the public or the rights of third persons as though they were officers de jure. The affairs of society could not be carried on upon any other principle." In Petersilea v. Stone, 119 Mass. 465, 20 Am. Rep. 335, Justice Devens said: "Third persons, from the nature of the case, cannot always investigate the right of one assuming to hold an important office, even as far as to see that he has color of title to it by virtue of some appointment or election. If they see him publicly exercising its authority, if they ascertain that this is generally acquiesced in, they are entitled to treat him as such officer, and, if they employ him as such, should not be subject to the danger of having his acts collaterally called in question."

But this legal protection is not afforded where the defects in the title of the officer are notorious, and such as to make those relying on his acts chargeable with such knowledge. What, then, may be considered notice sufficient to warn third persons and the public? The expiration of the term of an officer, and the appointment or election and qualification of his successor; the resignation of a public officer; the abolition of the office itself by an act of the legislature; the refusal of the board or legislative body of which the officer is a member to recognize him; or the judgment of a court against the title of the officer,—are such facts as third persons and the public are, as a general rule, required to take notice of. But in this case none of these facts existed, but just the contrary were known to every citizen of Jersey City. All knew that Smith had been legally elected; that he had not resigned; that his term had not expired; that no court had questioned his right to serve; that no one claimed a right to his seat; that the board had not been abolished; that the members recognized him as one of their number; and that he took part in their proceedings. All of these things were enough to confirm the belief of third persons and the public in Smith's right to serve them. If it was publicly known that he was colonel of the 4th regiment, it was quite as publicly known on the 3d of October, when the ordinance was adopted, that the war with Spain had ended, and only the terms of a formal treaty of peace were being considered. Whether he had in fact accepted the office of colonel, and what the nice distinctions are between de jure and de facto officers, they could not be expected to know, nor were they bound to know, before accepting the benefits of any ordinance he might by his vote assist in passing. Another significant proof of the general acquiescence of the public in Smith's exercise of the office appears in the fact that the mayor of the city, whose veto, as printed in the record, manifests great hostility to the ordinance, well knew that the four votes that first passed it could pass it over his veto, and who had the power to fill a vacancy in the board, if he believed that any existed, had failed to make any attempt to appoint a successor, although he had been mustered into service in July. The mayor, as the chief representative of the public, had, so far as the record shows, acquiesced in his exercise of the office, and in his veto message does not claim that any illegal vote was cast for the ordinance. We find nothing to offset all this public reputation of Smith's right to the office, except a notice by the attorneys of the prosecutor of an intention to apply for an alternative writ of mandamus to compel the mayor of Jersey City to appoint someone as commissioner in Smith's place. By its terms, it only contemplated future action, and, when allowed, the hearing was fixed for the 17th of October, fourteen days after the adoption of the ordinance. This notice was served upon the mayor, and also upon the clerk of the board of commissioners. In any event, it was not notice to third persons and the public, and, if they heard of it at all, they would only know that some disputes had arisen as to Smith's title which might become the subject of future, and perhaps tedious, litigation, the result of which they could not anticipate. The board itself could not be required to stop business upon receipt of such a notice. It cannot be held that when a public legislative or governing body, about to act upon some important measure, receives a notice from the attorney of some person who is opposed to it that he intends to begin an action which, in its final result, may deprive a member of his seat, all further proceedings must be postponed until that suit is ended. Congress does not stop business until all its contested seats are settled, nor does any other legislative body. There are no facts in this case to justify us in relaxing the wise and ancient rule, so deeply rooted in public policy, that the acts of de facto officers, holding under color of a title originally lawful, when acting in good faith, will protect third persons and the public in their dealings with them, whether serving alone or as members of a governing or legislative body.

48 L. R. A.

The ordinance in question is one of interest to all of the people of Jersey City, and they are the public whose rights are affected by its validity. The third persons whose rights are involved are the more than 400 residents and taxpayers in the neighborhood where it is to go into effect, who petitioned the board to pass it, claiming that it will be of benefit to them; and another third party, corporate, is the railway company, to which the rights is granted to lay the tracks that will, it is alleged, greatly add to the convenience of a system of public traffic extending from Communipaw Cove to the Great Lakes.

The learned counsel for the prosecutor have invited our attention to many cases, but we fail to discover their applicability to the facts in the record before us. There can be no difference of opinion as to all such as hold that, when a person filling one office accepts another and incompatible one, his de jure title to the first ceases, and his successor may at once be appointed or elected; or that the acts of an officer whose term has ended, and his successor has qualified and taken possession in his stead, are void; or that the official acts of a city council, done after the term for which it was elected has expired, are illegal; also the acts of a board after it has been abolished by the legislature; or that the acts of one who has not, and never had, any color of title to the office are void. But this case rests entirely upon the question whether Smith, when he voted for the ordinance in dispute, was a commissioner de facto, and his acts, therefore, valid, as far as the rights of third parties and the public are concerned. We hold that he was such an officer, and that the ordinance is valid.

This conclusion results in a reversal of the judgment of the Supreme Court setting aside the ordinance.

NEW MEXICO SUPREME COURT.

Re B. G. WILSON.

(.....N. M.....)

*1. A territorial statute which imposes a license fee as a condition upon which coal oil may be sold in the territory is unconstitutional and void in so far as it applies to sales in original packages by the importer of coal oil produced and refined without the territory.

2. Section 2 of the act of the territorial legislature approved March 15, 1899 (Sess. Laws 1899, p. 101), construed to apply to sales of coal oil in the territory in original packages by the importer, and held to be, to that extent, unconstitutional and void.

(January 29, 1900.)

APPLICATION for a writ of habeas corpus to procure the release of petitioner from custody to which he had been committed for alleged violation of a statute forbidding the sale of coal oil without a license. Petitioner discharged.

Statement by PARKER, J.:

By an act approved March 15, 1899, the territorial legislature attempted to tax the sale of coal oil and its products; the pertinent provisions of said act being as follows:

"Sec. 2. No corporation, either foreign or

*Headnotes by PARKER, J.

NOTE.—As to state tax or license laws as affecting interstate commerce, see Rothermel v. Meyerle (Pa.) 9 L. R. A. 366, and note; American Fertilizing Co. v. North Carolina Bd. of Agri. (C. C. E. D. N. C.) 11 L. R. A. 179, and note; Re Spain (C. C. E. D. N. C.) 14 L. R. A. 97, and note; Com. v. Harmel (Pa.) 27 L. R. A. 358; South Bend v. Martin (Ind.) 29 L. R. A. 531; State v. Gorham (N. C.) 25 L. R. A. 510; State v. Wheelock (Iowa) 30 L. R. A. 429; Com. v. Myers (Va.) 31 L. R. A. 379; 48 L. R. A.

domestic, engaged in the business of producing or refining petroleum or coal oil, or the products thereof, for illuminating purposes, shall have the right to sell said commodities within the territory of New Mexico, until a license has been issued by said territorial commerce commission [provided for in § 1 of the act], authorizing such corporation to engage in the business of selling and disposing of such products. No such license shall be issued in case of any foreign corporation until it shall have complied with the laws of the territory of New Mexico, authorizing it to do business in the territory, and then only upon written application therefor. For such license every such corporation shall pay the sum of five hundred dollars, to be paid ——. If any such corporation shall attempt to do business in this territory without having obtained such license, or, if having obtained the same, shall attempt to do business after revocation thereof, it and its agents shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding five thousand dollars, or, in case of a natural person, imprisoned for a period not to exceed two years in the territorial penitentiary, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

"Sec. 5. All corporations, copartnerships, or persons who purchase and sell more than three thousand dollars in value of such commodities per annum, estimated at the market price thereof, shall be deemed wholesale dealers, and all others shall be deemed retail dealers. Said commission shall charge for a wholesale license the sum of twenty-five dollars, and for retail license the sum of one dollar. The corporations mentioned in sections two and three of this act shall be deemed producers and refiners, and any corporation, whether actually engaged in producing and refining said commodities or engaged in the distribution of said commodities as the agent under any contract or arrangement with the actual producer and refiner thereof, shall nevertheless be deemed such producer or refiner."

Carrollton v. Bazzette (Ill.) 31 L. R. A. 522; State v. Scott (Tenn.) 36 L. R. A. 461; State v. Coop (S. C.) 41 L. R. A. 501; Laurens v. Elmore (S. C.) 45 L. R. A. 249; and Adkins v. Richmond (Va.) 47 L. R. A. 583.

The cases in Titusville v. Brennan (Pa.) 14 L. R. A. 100, were reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States in Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U. S. 289, 38 L. ed. 719, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 658, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 829.

Thereafter the petitioner was charged with a violation of said § 2, and was by the judge of the second judicial district committed to answer said charge, whereupon petitioner sued out a writ of habeas corpus in this court, and the cause was heard upon the following agreed statement of facts: "(1) That the Continental Oil Company is a corporation created, organized, and existing under the laws of the state of Iowa, and doing business in the territory of New Mexico. (2) That the Continental Oil Company does not actually produce or refine petroleum or its products, but is engaged in distributing the same. Said company buys said commodities from the actual producers and refiners, and brings a portion thereof into the territory of New Mexico, and sells and disposes of the same to all persons desiring to purchase from it. (3) That portions of the coal oil so brought into the territory of New Mexico by the Continental Oil Company are shipped into said territory on orders received by it without said territory, from persons residing within said territory, in the original packages in which the same is put up by said Continental Oil Company for sale, and is delivered by said company to the purchaser in such original packages. (4) That other portions of the coal oil so brought into the territory of New Mexico by the Continental Oil Company are shipped to the various points within the territory where the said company has established distributing agencies, and is there stored in the tanks or otherwise, and delivered to purchasers in such quantities as may be desired, except that no delivery is made of less than five gallons. (5) That the petitioner, B. G. Wilson, is the agent of the said Continental Oil Company, and transacts the business of said company within the territory of New Mexico, as its agent. The said B. G. Wilson is a citizen of the United States, and resides in the territory of New Mexico. (6) That the defendant has, since the 15th day of March, 1899, continuously, as agent of the said Continental Oil Company, engaged in the business of selling within the county of Bernalillo, and territory of New Mexico, coal oil produced and refined and bought without the territory of New Mexico, as set forth in paragraphs 2, 3, and 4 of this statement, and no license has been issued to, or applied for by, the said Continental Oil Company or the said B. G. Wilson; nor has the said Continental Oil Company or the said B. G. Wilson paid the fee of $500 for such license, as required by § 2 of an act entitled 'An Act Relating to Sales of Coal Oil and Its Products,' approved March 15, 1899, but, on the contrary, the said Continental Oil Company and the said B. G. Wilson have refused to apply for any such license, and to pay the license fee prescribed by said act.

(7) That no petroleum is, or ever has been, produced or refined within the territory of New Mexico by any person or corporation, and all coal oil sold within said territory is, and always has been, produced and refined beyond the limits thereof. (8) That all coal oil brought into the territory of New Mexico by the Continental Oil Company for sale is inspected by the territorial coal-oil inspector appointed by law for that purpose, and no coal oil is sold or offered for sale by the petitioner or by the Continental Oil Company except such as is suitable for illuminating purposes, in accordance with the requirements of the statutes of said territory. (9) That the Continental Oil Company has fully complied with the provisions of all laws of the territory relating to foreign corporations doing business within said territory except the provisions of the said act entitled, 'An Act Relating to Sales of Coal Oil and Its Products,' approved March 15, 1899, and has refused to comply with the provisions of said last-mentioned act on the ground that the same is unconstitutional and void."

Mr. Neill B. Field, for petitioner:

The regulation of the sale of coal oil in the manner attempted by this act is not a rightful subject of legislation within the meaning of the acts of Congress defining the legislative power in the territories.

Stoutenburgh v. Hennick, 129 U. S. 143, 32 L. ed. 637, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 256.

The power of Congress under the Constitution to regulate commerce is exclusive as to all matters not of purely local concern. No state or territory can, under any pretense, encroach upon that power.

Thurlow v. Com. 5 How. 573, 12 L. ed. 287; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 225, 6 L. ed. 77; Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 446, 6 L. ed. 688; Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 630, 29 L. ed. 260, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1091; Walling v. Michigan, 116 U. S. 446, 29 L. ed. 691, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 454; Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. ed. 347; Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. ed. 238.

This law attempts to lay a direct burden on interstate commerce.

Crutcher v. Kentucky, 141 U. S. 58, 33 L. ed. 652, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 851; Robbins v. Shelby County Taxing Dist. 120 U. S. 439, 30 L. ed. 694, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 45, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 692; Pickard v. Pullman Southern Car Co. 117 U. S. 34, 29 L. ed. 785, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 635; Lyng v. Michigan, 135 U. S. 166, 34 L. ed. 153, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 143, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 725; Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 640, 32 L. ed. 311, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 134, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1380; Asher

v. Texas, 128 U. S. 129, 32 L. ed. 368, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 241, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 136 U. S. 114, 34 L. ed. 394, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 178, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 958; Stoutenburgh v. Hennick, 129 U. S. 141, 32 L. ed. 637, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 256; McCall v. California, 136 U. S. 104, 34 L. ed. 391, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 181, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 881; State Freight Tax Case, 15 Wall. 232, sub nom. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 21 L. ed. 146; Henderson v. New York, 92 U. S. 259, 23 L. ed. 543; Cook v. Pennsylvania, 97 U. S. 566, 24 L. ed. 1015; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 30 L. ed. 244, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 31, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 4.

This law necessarily discriminates against the introduction and sale within this territory of a product of other states.

Collins v. New Hampshire, 171 U. S. 32, 43 L. ed. 61, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 768; Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 320, 34 L. ed. 458, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 185, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 862; Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. ed. 317; Walling v. Michigan, 116 U. S. 446, 29 L. ed. 691, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 454; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465, 24 L. ed. 527; Vance v. W. A. Vandervoort Co. 170 U. S. 438, 42 L. ed. 1100, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 674.

This case involves only incidentally, if at all, the power of the legislature to prescribe the terms upon which a foreign corporation may do business in the territory.

Hooper v. California, 153 U. S. 652, 39 L. ed. 298, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 610, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 460, 26 L. ed. 1067; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 29 L. ed. 158, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 382, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 826; Philadelphia & S. S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 320, 30 L. ed. 1200, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 308, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1118; McCall v. California, 136 U. S. 104, 34 L. ed. 391, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 181, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 881; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 136 U. S. 114, 34 L. ed. 394, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 178, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 958; Robbins v. Shelby County Taxing Dist. 120 U. S. 489, 30 L. ed. 694, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 45, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 592; Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 640, 32 L. ed. 311, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 134, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1380; Stoutenburgh v. Hennick, 129 U. S. 141, 32 L. ed. 637, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 256; Asher v. Texas, 128 U. S. 129, 32 L. ed. 368, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 241, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1; Crutcher v. Kentucky, 141 U. S. 47, 35 L. ed. 649, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 851.

The 8th section of the act is clearly not a rightful subject of legislation within the meaning of the congressional grant of legislative power to the territory.

Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77; Budd v. New York, 143 U. S. 532, 36 L. ed. 251, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 45, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 468; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 456, 33 L. ed. 980, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 209, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 462, 702; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 400, 42 L. ed. 819, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418; Covington & L. R. A.

Turnp. Road Co. v. Sandford, 164 U. S. 578, 41 L. ed. 560, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 198.

Mr. Edward L. Bartlett, for the Territory:

The commerce clause of the Constitution, giving power to Congress to regulate exclusively commerce between foreign nations, the several states, and Indian tribes, and therefore prohibiting states from passing such laws, does not, for the same reason, prohibit the passage of such laws by the legislature of a territory, which is a creature of Congress and to which has been delegated by that body the right and power to make laws upon all rightful subjects of legislation.

When Congress has failed to exercise its power and pass any laws upon a given subject, and the legislature does so, the act of the legislature of the territory must be considered the act of Congress upon the subject, until it is disapproved.

A citizen of a territory is not a citizen of a state within the meaning of the language of the Constitution.

Hepburn v. Ellzey, 2 Cranch, 445, 2 L. ed. 332; Hoce v. Jamieson, 166 U. S. 395, 41 L. ed. 1049, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 596; United States ex rel. Champion v. Ames, 95 Fed. Rep. 453; Stoutenburgh v. Hennick, 129 U. S. 141, 32 L. ed. 637, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 256.

Similar license or occupation tax on the business of selling, where there is no discrimination in favor of domestic products, has been frequently upheld by the Federal courts.

Singer Mfg. Co. v. Wright, 33 Fed. Rep. 124; State v. Long, 95 N. C. 582, 59 Am. Rep. 265; Osborne v. Mobile, 16 Wall. 481, 21 L. ed. 473; Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall. 123, 19 L. ed. 382; Hinson v. Lott, 8 Wall. 149, 19 L. ed. 387; Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 282, 23 L. ed. 350; State v. Richards, 32 W. Va. 348, 3 L. R. A. 705, 9 S. E. 245; Pearson v. International Distillery, 72 Iowa, 348, 34 N. W. 1; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 550, and note.

A corporation is not a citizen within the meaning of the Constitution, and the state has the right to impose reasonable conditions on it to do business, and to discriminate between our own citizens and those corporations which are not citizens.

Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357; Ward v. Maryland, 12 Wall. 430, 20 L. ed. 452; Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 113 U. S. 732, 28 L. ed. 1138, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 739; Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 31 L. ed. 650, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 24, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 737; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 136 U. S. 118, 34 L. ed. 396, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 178, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 958.

This act is clearly within the police powers of the territory, in the enlarged sense in which that term is used.

Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio, 173 U. S. 285, 43 L. ed. 702, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 465; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 548; Erie R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 21 Wall. 492, 22 L. ed. 595; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 484, 489; Re Rahrer, 140 U. S. 545, sub nom. Wilkerson v.

Kahrer, 35 L. ed. 572, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77.

Parker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Upon the foregoing record, this court discharged the petitioner, and it now remains for the court to express its reasons for holding this statute unconstitutional and void.

The scope and effect of the commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States has been a much-mooted question before the courts, both state and Federal, ever since early in the century, and the number of cases involving this important provision have constantly increased down to the present time. Without attempting to review, or even cite, the numerous cases involving the question under consideration, we think there are certain principles, firmly established by the Supreme Court of the United States, which are decisive of this case, and which may be stated as follows: (1) Commerce between a state and territory is "commerce among the several states," within the meaning of the Constitution. Stoutenburgh v. Hennick, 129 U. S. 141, 32 L. ed. 637, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 256. (2) The right to conduct interstate commerce includes the right to sell in original packages the goods which are the subject of such commerce, free from state regulations. Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23; Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 419, 6 L. ed. 678; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681; Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 49, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 757. (3) A state statute imposing a license tax upon the conduct of interstate commerce is a regulation of such commerce and invalid. Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 640, 32 L. ed. 311, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 134, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1380; Lyng v. Michigan, 135 U. S. 161, 34 L. ed. 150, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 143, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 725; Crutcher v. Kentucky, 141 U. S. 47, 35 L. ed. 649, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 851. (4) A license may not be demanded of a foreign corporation or person engaged in interstate commerce for the privilege of conducting the same, nor may the same be prohibited notwithstanding a like tax may be exacted for domestic business covering the same articles, and notwithstanding such domestic business may be prohibited. Crutcher v. Kentucky, 141 U. S. 47, 35 L. ed. 649, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 851; Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 49, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 757; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273. (5) A state may tax or license a business wholly within the state, notwithstanding the person or corporation engaged in such business may also be, either incidentally or principally, engaged in interstate business, so long as the license or tax does not refer to, and is not imposed upon, the business which is interstate. Osborne v. Florida, 164 U. S. 650, 41 L. ed. 586, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 214. (6) But where a license tax is laid generally upon the conduct of business in all forms, and without distinction as to whether it is interstate or local, and where the tax which is laid upon local business cannot be separated from that which is on interstate business, the whole tax is in contravention of the Constitution, and void. Crutcher v. Kentucky, 141 U. S. 47, 35 L. ed. 649, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 851; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Alabama State Bd. of Assessment, 132 U. S. 473, 33 L. ed. 409, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 726, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 161; Ratterman v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 127 U. S. 411, 32 L. ed. 229; 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 59, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1127; Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 640, 647, 32 L. ed. 311, 314, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 134, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1380; Osborne v. Florida, 164 U. S. 650, 655, 41 L. ed. 586, 587, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 214.

Applying the foregoing principles to the facts in this case, it seems clear that § 2 of the act of the territorial legislature under consideration is in contravention of the provisions of the Constitution, and void, so far as it applies to the business of the petitioner as agent of the Continental Oil Company. The petitioner, as such agent, is engaged in the business of buying coal oil, from the producers thereof, without the territory, and shipping the same into the territory for distribution and sale. Coal oil is a recognized article of commerce, and, as such, entitled to the protection of the commerce clause of the Constitution. The sales of the petitioner are largely in original packages, and, as such, not subject to a license tax. It is true that the act provides for a like license for the sale of oil produced within the territory, but this fact does not take the business of the petitioner, which is interstate, out of the protection of the Constitution. It is to be further observed that none of the exceptions, such as the right of inspection, the right to regulate sale in a particular way, as by auctioneers, peddlers, or hawkers, or the right to regulate sales of intoxicating liquors under the Wilson act (28 Stat. at L. 509), or the right to exercise any of the police powers which are conceded to the states, intervene in this case to modify the principles announced above. It appears, however, that some portion of the business of the petitioner consists of the sale of coal oil in the territory after the original packages in which the same is put up for sale have been broken, and as to this portion of his business he or his company might be properly taxed. But § 2 of the act cannot be interpreted or construed to apply to such business. The act provides, in § 5, for a license fee of $25 from all persons whose sales amount to $3,000 per annum, and who are termed "wholesale dealers," and a fee of $1 from all other persons who are termed "retail dealers." It may be that the petitioner is subject to the payment of the wholesale or retail dealer's tax as prescribed by the act, but as to this it is unnecessary to express any opinion. It is clear, however, that the license tax of $500 applies to some character of business other and different from that of a wholesale or retail dealer in coal oil. There being no method furnished by § 2 of the act whereby the tax of $500 can be apportioned between the local and interstate business of the petitioner, and it not being susceptible of construction so as to apply solely to local business, the same must be held to apply to the interstate business of the petitioner, and to be, consequently, unconstitutional and void, so far as it applies to the business in which the petitioner is shown to be engaged.

Mills, Ch. J., and McFie, J., concur.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Richard HUFFMIRE et al., Respts., r.

City of BROOKLYN, Appt.

(162 N. Y. 584.)

1. The city of Brooklyn is the proper party defendant in an action for damages caused by a sewer constructed by the town of Flatbush before the town was merged in the city, since Laws 1894, chap. 356, limiting and defining the liability of the city for debts and obligations of the town, merely confines the area of taxation for such debts and obligations to the territory which would have been liable but for its annexation to the city.
2. The destruction of oysters by the casting of sewage upon them, though the sewer was constructed by a city, under legislative authority, is as clearly a taking of the property of the owner of the oyster bed, for which he has a constitutional right to compensation, as if there had been a physical removal and conversion of the oysters.

(May 1, 1900.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Second Department, affirming a judgment of a Trial Term for Kings County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover damages for injury to an oyster bed by sewage from the defendant city. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William J. Carr, with Mr. John Whalen, for appellant:

The statute having authorized the construction of the sewer, and the discharge of its contents into the tide waters, no liability could attach to the town of Flatbush without proof of fault either in the method of construction or the maintenance of the sewer built under such legislative sanction.

Where a public work is undertaken under

NOTE.—As to liability of city for negligent construction of sewer, see Nashville v. Comer (Tenn.) 7 L. R. A. 466, and note; Seymour v. Cummins (Ind.) 5 L. R. A. 128, and note; and Bulger v. Eden (Me.) 9 L. R. A. 205.

As to liability of city for pollution of stream by sewage, see Chapman v. Rochester (N. Y.) 1 L. R. A. 296, and note.

As to liability for disease suffered in consequence of improper maintenance of sewer system, see Hughes v. Auburn (N. Y.) 46 L. R. A. 636.

As to liability for casting surface water upon lot by means of drain, see Jordan v. Benwood (W. Va.) 36 L. R. A. 519, and footnote.
48 L. R. A.

a legislative direction, and executed in a mode required by statute, no liability will arise from damages simply consequential to the work, unless negligence be shown.

Radcliff v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 196, 53 Am. Dec. 357; Bellinger v. New York C. R. Co. 23 N. Y. 47; Atwater v. Canandaigua, 124 N. Y. 602, 27 N. E. 385; Brunswick Gaslight Co. v. Brunswick, 92 Me. 493, 43 Atl. 104; Booth v. Rome, W. & O. Terminal R. Co. 140 N. Y. 267, 24 L. R. A. 105, 35 N. E. 592; Morton v. New York, 140 N. Y. 207, 22 L. R. A. 241, 35 N. E. 490; Hill v. New York, 139 N. Y. 495, 34 N. E. 1090; Cogswell v. New York, N. H. & H. R. R. Co. 103 N. Y. 21, 57 Am. Rep. 701, 8 N. E. 537; Merrifield v. Worcester, 110 Mass. 216, 14 Am. Rep. 592; Washburn & M. Mfg. Co. v. Worcester, 116 Mass. 458; Morse v. Worcester, 139 Mass. 380, 2 N. E. 694.

The plaintiffs deliberately exposed themselves unnecessarily to damage, and in fact their entire damage is due to their failure to take reasonable precautions to avoid the threatening damage.

They cannot charge the defendant with damages so occasioned.

Hamilton v. McPherson, 28 N. Y. 72, 84 Am. Dec. 330; Thomas v. Bartow, 48 N. Y. 193; Dillon v. Anderson, 43 N. Y. 231; Cook v. Soule, 56 N. Y. 420; Heater v. Knoa, 63 N. Y. 561; Parsons v. Sutton, 66 N. Y. 92.

Mr. Frederick E. Crane, for respondents:

While an act of the legislature authorizing a public improvement may protect a municipality from liability for consequential injuries, it does not protect it from liability for the direct, actual, and physical taking of property.

Carl v. Northport, 11 App. Div. 121, 42 N. Y. Supp. 576; Magee v. Brooklyn, 18 App. Div. 22, 45 N. Y. Supp. 473; Moody v. Saratoga Springs, 17 App. Div. 207, 45 N. Y. Supp. 365; Byrnes v. Cohoes, 67 N. Y. 204; Seifert v. Brooklyn, 101 N. Y. 136, 54 Am. Rep. 664, 4 N. E. 321; Noonan v. Albany, 79 N. Y. 470, 35 Am. Rep. 540; Moore v. Albany, 98 N. Y. 407; New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Rochester, 127 N. Y. 591, 28 N. E. 416; Hay v. Cohoes Co. 2 N. Y. 159, 51 Am. Dec. 270.

The act of 1889, authorizing the town of Flatbush, through commissioners, to construct the sewer, did not authorize the taking or destruction of private property or property rights without just compensation.

Morton v. New York, 140 N. Y. 207, 22 L. R. A. 241, 35 N. E. 490; Hill v. New York, 139 N. Y. 495, 34 N. E. 1090.

The town of Flatbush having been wiped out of existence, the city of Brooklyn is the proper party defendant.

Dillon, Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 186; Armstrong County v. Clarion County, 66 Pa. 218, 5 Am. Rep. 368.

Werner, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought to recover damages to a bed of oysters planted by the plaintiffs in Mill creek, which is tide water bordering upon that portion of the city of Brooklyn formerly known as the town of Flatlands, Kings county, New York. These oysters were planted under a permit issued to the plaintiffs by the justice of the peace and the supervisor of said town of Flatlands, pursuant to the provisions of chapter 734, Laws 1868. This act, in substance, provides that any person who has been an inhabitant of the town for a period of six months prior to making application may upon complying with the provisions of the act, acquire the right to plant oysters under the public waters within said town, and have "the exclusive property in the oysters so planted, and the exclusive use of said oyster beds." The first permit received by the plaintiffs was issued in December, 1892. The rental or license fee was $10 a year. This permit was renewed from year to year until 1892, when the plaintiffs omitted to procure a formal renewal thereof, but continued to plant and gather oysters as before. On the 9th of February, 1893, the plaintiffs paid $20, which included the rental for 1892, and renewed their permit until December, 1893. The damage to plaintiffs' oyster bed was caused by the discharge of sewage thereon from one of defendant's sewers. The history of this sewer, and its relation to this controversy, is as follows: By chapter 161, Laws 1880, the legislature authorized the town of Flatbush to build a sewer to empty into the waters of Jamaica Bay, of which Mill creek is a part. This sewer was constructed so that its outlet was about 300 feet from plaintiffs' oyster bed, and was first used in January, 1893. Soon after it was in operation, the plaintiffs discovered that their oysters were covered with and ruined by tar and "sludge acid;" substances which were being discharged from the mouth of said sewer. The town of Flatbush constructed the sewer in question; but by chapter 356, Laws 1894, said town was annexed to and became a part of the city of Brooklyn, being designated as the Twenty-Ninth ward thereof. Section 4 of said act provides that the city of Brooklyn shall not be or become liable to pay "any debt, liability, or obligation of the town of Flatbush . . . contracted or incurred prior to the time this act shall take effect, . . . but the property in such town . . . as now constituted . . . shall remain liable for the said debts, liabilities, and obligations, and the moneys to meet the same, principal and interest, as they accrue, 48 L. R. A.

shall be raised by taxation upon the property of said town." The act further provides that the taxes levied for these purposes, when collected by the city of Brooklyn, shall be paid over to the county treasurer or other proper officers charged with the duty of paying such indebtedness, and exempts the territory above described from certain general city taxes.

The first question presented for our consideration, although not seriously urged upon the argument, is whether the city of Brooklyn is the proper defendant in such a case as this. As this action was not brought until after the town of Flatbush had become merged in the city of Brooklyn, the latter is undoubtedly the proper party defendant in any case which might have been brought against the former before such merger. Where a municipal corporation is legislated out of existence, and its territory annexed to another, the latter, unless the legislature otherwise provides, is entitled to the property and liable for the debts of the former. Dillon, Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 186. The provisions of chapter 356, Laws 1894, limiting and defining the liability of the defendant for debts and obligations of the town of Flatbush prior to its annexation to the city of Brooklyn, were simply intended to confine the area of taxation for such debts and obligations to the territory which would have been liable but for such annexation. This is made clear by other provisions of the same act exempting the territory annexed from the payment of certain taxes levied for the exclusive benefit of the city of Brooklyn as it was constituted prior to 1874. Any other construction of the annexation act referred to would leave remediless those having lawful claims against the former town of Flatbush. That town no longer exists. By the act of 1894 it became a part of the city of Brooklyn, and the latter is now the only legal entity which can be brought into a court of justice upon claims against the former. We therefore address ourselves to the principal question, which arises upon defendant's contention that it is not liable in any event. It seeks to shield itself from liability herein by the application of the rule that in the construction or operation of a public work under legislative authority or direction a municipal corporation is not answerable for such a consequential injury as may result to others where there is no negligence in such construction or operation. We recognize the controlling force of this familiar and now well-settled principle. It is founded upon the transcendent power of the legislature, within constitutional limitations, to enact whatever it may deem essential to the public welfare. The question which most frequently arises in cases where this rule is invoked is whether the injury complained of is purely consequential, or is so direct as to amount to a taking of property which entitles the party injured to compensation under the Constitution. That is the precise question here presented. The plaintiffs contend that the casting of noxious and destructive substances upon their oyster bed was not a consequential, but a direct, injury. The defendant insists that the discharge of the sewer in question into the waters of Mill creek is simply the consequential result of obedience to the legislative mandate, and that, in the absence of negligence on the part of the municipal authorities in the construction and operation of said sewer, the defendant is not liable. Applying the rule which the defendant invokes in all its force and breadth, we think this case falls directly within the constitutional inhibition against the taking of property without compensation. The plaintiffs were lawfully in possession of a piece of land under water upon which they had planted a bed of oysters. They held their title under legislative authority, which was as ample and unquestioned as that under which defendant's sewer was constructed. Although this land was under public waters, it was as much the private property of the plaintiffs as though it had been a tract of farm land held under a lease from the town of Flatlands under legislative authority. The act of the defendant in pouring its sewage upon this land was not consequential. It was as direct as though it had been discharged upon a piece of land owned or rented by the plaintiffs, and used for farming or gardening purposes. In the latter case a municipal corporation could not successfully defend its trespass because it was acting under legislative authority, or because its sewage had been carried to the lands of the person complaining over the lands of others. The fact that plaintiffs' land was under public water, and that defendant's sewage was discharged upon it, after passing through 300 feet of public water, the land under which was not in the possession or control of the plaintiffs, does not differentiate this case in principle from the illustrative case of a discharge of sewage upon surface lands. In either case the injury is so direct as to amount to an invasion of a private right, which no legislative sanction or direction can justify or excuse. These views are, we think, sustained by abundant authority. Early in the history of this court the distinction was clearly pointed out between direct and consequential injury to private lands in the prosecution of public work performed under legislative direction. The case of Radcliff v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 205, 53 Am. Dec. 364, was one in which the plaintiffs were held not entitled to recover for injuries to their lands occasioned by a change of grade in the street adjoining the same. None of their lands had been taken or invaded. In speaking of the rule applicable to such cases, Judge Bronson said: "Private property cannot be taken for public use without making just compensation to the owner, and a law which authorizes the taking without providing for compensation must be unconstitutional and void. But laws which authorize the opening and improving of streets and highways, or the construction of other works of a public nature, have never been held void, because they omitted to provide compensation for those who," 48 L. R. A.

though their property was not taken, suffered indirect or consequential damages." In Bellinger v. New York C. R. Co. 23 N. Y. 47, the defendant, under legislative authority, constructed a railroad embankment in such a manner as to cause a stream to overflow the lands of the plaintiff. Judge Denio, in discussing the right of the railroad company to do the act complained of, said: "This is, of course, to be understood as limited to cases in which the legislature has the constitutional power to act. If, therefore, a corporation or an officer should be authorized by a statute to take the property of individuals for any purpose, however public or generally beneficial, without compensation, or, for a private use, making compensation, the pretended authority would be wholly void, and, of course, could afford no protection to anyone. But this limitation has no application to cases where property is not taken, but only subjected to damages consequential upon some act done by the state or pursuant to its authority." In Atwater v. Canandaigua, 124 N. Y. 602, 27 N. E. 385, cited by defendant, and arising out of a state of facts similar to those in the Bellinger Case, 23 N. Y. 47, the distinction above adverted to was again recognized by this court in the following language: "In the present case the action of the defendants in the performance of the work was confined within the limits where they had the right to execute it, and the effect upon property beyond those bounds, resulting in damages, was the consequence of such performance of the work, and not the direct act of its execution by them. In that respect this case is distinguishable from that of St. Peter v. Denison, 58 N. Y. 416, 17 Am. Rep. 258. There the defendant was held liable because, by casting stone upon the premises, he committed a trespass; and the fact that he was engaged in the performance of a public work, and the fragment of rock was in the process of blasting thrown upon the land of another, was no justification. Here the injury to the plaintiff's premises was not done directly by any act of the defendants, but it was the consequence following and traceable to the work as the cause. In the one case the act of the party was, and in the other not, a direct invasion of the premises of the plaintiff."

But even more directly in point are Noonan v. Albany, 79 N. Y. 476, 35 Am. Rep. 540, and New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Rochester, 127 N. Y. 591, 28 N. E. 416. In the first of these cases it was held: "A municipal corporation has no greater right than an individual to collect the surface water from its lands or streets into an artificial channel, and discharge it upon the lands of another; nor has it any immunity from legal responsibility for creating or maintaining nuisances." In the other case it was decided that "a municipality may not empty its sewers upon private property without acquiring the right so to do." The same doctrine was held to apply in Seifert v. Brooklyn, 101 N. Y. 143, 54 Am. Rep. 669, 4 N. E. 324, which was an action brought to recover damages alleged to have been caused to plaintiff's premises by defendant's negligence in the construction of a sewer. There Chief Judge Ruger stated the rule, which is applicable here, as follows: "It is a principle of the fundamental law of the state that the property of individuals cannot be taken for public use except upon the condition that just compensation be made therefor; and any statute conferring power upon a municipal body, the exercise of which results in the appropriation, destruction, or physical injury of private property by such body, is inoperative, and ineffectual to protect it from liability for the resultant damages, unless some adequate provision is contained in the statute for making such compensation."

... Where, however, the acts done are of such a nature as to constitute a positive invasion of the individual rights guaranteed by the Constitution, legislative sanction is ineffectual as a protection to the persons or corporation performing such acts from responsibility for their consequences." The foregoing authorities sufficiently illustrate the underlying principle which must control the decision of this case. Briefly recapitulated, it is that when, in the exercise of authority conferred upon them by the legislature, municipal corporations perform acts as a result of which some indirect or consequential injury is sustained by an individual, the latter has no right of action for such injury. Such injuries are damnum absque injuria. But when a municipal corporation takes the property of an individual it must pay for it.

We have not lost sight of defendant's contention that the deposit of sewage on the plaintiffs' land was not a taking of their property. We are of the opinion that any direct invasion of a man's land is a taking of his property within the meaning of the Constitution. The destruction of plaintiffs' oysters by the casting of sewage upon them was as clearly a taking of their property as the physical removal and conversion of the same would have been.

The judgment of the court below should be affirmed, with costs.

Parker, Ch. J., and Gray, Bartlett, Martin, and Vann, JJ., concur. Cullen, J., did not sit.

Georgiana HICKS, Resp't.,

v.

BRITISH AMERICA ASSURANCE COMPANY, Appt.

(162 N. Y. 284.)

1. The rights of one whose property is destroyed by fire after an oral contract to insure it, but before a policy therefor is issued, are subject to the provisions of the standard policy prescribed by law, and he can recover only by compliance with the conditions required by such policy, including that as to furnishing proofs of loss within a specified time.

2. The value of property destroyed by fire after an oral contract to insure it, but before the issuance of a policy thereon, cannot be recovered as damages for breach of the agreement to issue the policy, where the failure to deliver the policy did not cause any damage to the insured, since the oral agreement constituted a binding contract of insurance which could be enforced against the insurer except for the failure of the insured to comply with the conditions contained in the standard policy of insurance, which were by law made a part of the contract.

3. The denial by a local insurance agent that any contract of insurance has been made, when in fact there has been an oral agreement to insure which is binding, will not waive the condition as to proofs of loss which is by law made a part of the contract because contained in the standard policy of insurance, where that policy also provides that no such agent shall have power to waive any condition therein except in writing.

4. A denial in an answer by an insurance company, of all allegations in the complaint, will not have the effect of ratifying an unauthorized denial by a local agent of the existence of any contract of insurance, so as to waive a condition as to proofs of loss, when the agent's denial was by the terms of the policy ineffectual to constitute such waiver because not in writing.

(Landon, Werner, and Haight, JJ., dissent.)

(March 27, 1900.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Fourth Department, affirming a judgment of the Monroe County Circuit in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover an amount alleged to be due under a fire-insurance contract. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. H. Sawyer, for appellant:

Hobart, the agent of the defendant, had no power to make a parol contract of insurance binding upon defendant. The most that he could do was to make a parol preliminary contract to issue a policy with the usual terms and conditions in such policy.

Angell v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 59 N. Y. 171, 17 Am. Rep. 322; Ellis v. Albany City F. Ins. Co. 50 N. Y. 402, 10 Am. Rep. 495; Van Loan v. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Assn. 90 N. Y. 280; Hubbell v. Pacific Mut. Ins. Co. 100 N. Y. 41, 2 N. E. 470; Lipman v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 121 N. Y. 454, 8 L. R. A. 719, 24 N. E. 699; Karelsen v. Sun Fire

NOTE.—As to validity of oral contract of insurance, see Newark Mach. Co. v. Kenton Ins. Co. (Ohio) 22 L. R. A. 768, and note.

As to time when contract of insurance is consummated, see Harnickell v. New York L. Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 2 L. R. A. 150; Lorscher v. Supreme Lodge, K. of H. (Mich.) 2 L. R. A. 208; 48 L. R. A.

Luhrs v. Luhrs (N. Y.) 9 L. R. A. 534; Walner v. Milford Mut. F. Ins. Co. (Mass.) 11 L. R. A. 598; Michigan Pipe Co. v. Michigan F. & M. Ins. Co. (Mich.) 20 L. R. A. 277; Dalley v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Accl. Assn. (Mich.) 26 L. R. A. 171; and New York L. Ins. Co. v. Babcock (Ga.) 42 L. R. A. 88.

Office, 122 N. Y. 545, 25 N. E. 921; De Grove v. Metropolitan Ins. Co. 61 N. Y. 594, 19 Am. Rep. 305.

Service of an immediate notice of the loss in writing, and of proofs within sixty days, were conditions precedent without which no recovery could be had unless such conditions were waived.

Quinlan v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 133 N. Y. 356, 31 N. E. 31; Sergeant v. London & L. & G. Ins. Co. 85 Hun, 31, 32 N. Y. Supp. 594.

Agents of insurance companies authorized to issue and deliver policies, collect premiums, etc., have no power to waive proofs of loss, or to bind the company in any manner in relation to claims against said companies for losses.

Bush v. Westchester F. Ins. Co. 63 N. Y. 531; Van Allen v. Farmers' Joint Stock Ins. Co. 64 N. Y. 469; Blossom v. Lycoming F. Ins. Co. 64 N. Y. 162; Quinlan v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 133 N. Y. 356, 31 N. E. 31; Smith v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 60 Vt. 682, 1 L. R. A. 216, 15 Atl. 353.

The fact that a policy of insurance containing restrictions upon the authority of the agent had not been issued to, or was not in the possession of, the insured, and that he was ignorant of the conditions contained therein, does not relieve him from the obligation of such restrictions.

Quinlan v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 133 N. Y. 356, 31 N. E. 31; De Grove v. Metropolitan Ins. Co. 61 N. Y. 594, 19 Am. Rep. 305.

It cannot be held that the authority of an agent to receive proposals for insurance and countersign and deliver policies, extends to adjusting losses, or waiving the stipulated proofs of loss, and binding the company to pay without them.

Bush v. Westchester F. Ins. Co. 63 N. Y. 531; Van Allen v. Farmers' Joint Stock Ins. Co. 64 N. Y. 469; Smith v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 60 Vt. 682, 1 L. R. A. 216, 15 Atl. 353; Quinlan v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 133 N. Y. 356, 31 N. E. 31.

Mr. John A. Barhite, for respondent:

Hobart, the agent of the defendant, had authority to make a contract to issue a policy, and such contract was binding upon the defendant.

The contract of insurance is like any other contract, and governed by the same rules; and if one party denies the contract, or refuses to perform, the other may take him at his word, and bring his action for damages.

McMaster v. State, 108 N. Y. 542, 15 N. E. 417; Ziehen v. Smith, 148 N. Y. 558, 42 N. E. 1080; Ellis v. Albany City F. Ins. Co. 50 N. Y. 402, 10 Am. Rep. 495; Angell v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 59 N. Y. 171, 17 Am. Rep. 322; Van Loan v. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Asso. 90 N. Y. 280; Manchester v. Guardian Assur. Co. 151 N. Y. 88, 45 N. E. 381; Hubbell v. Pacific Mut. Ins. Co. 100 N. Y. 41, 2 N. E. 470; De Grove v. Metropolitan Ins. Co. 61 N. Y. 594, 19 Am. Rep. 305; Ruggles v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 114 N. Y. 415, 21 N. E. 1000; Quinlan v. Providence Wash- 48 L. R. A.

ington Ins. Co. 133 N. Y. 356, 31 N. E. 31; Relief F. Ins. Co. v. Shaw, 94 U. S. 574, 24 L. ed. 291.

A complaint setting up a contract to insure against fire, and to issue a policy in accordance with such contract, and alleging a breach of such contract, and claiming damages for the breach, sets up a legal cause of action.

Humphry v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 15 Blatchf. 35, Fed. Cas. No. 6,874.

If a person asks an individual who has authority to complete a contract, to complete that contract, and is met by a refusal, must the person ask some other individual who has the same or a greater authority to complete the contract, to do so, before an action for the breach can be maintained?

The agent was only asked to do what he had the authority to do, and his refusal constituted the breach which authorized this action without further preliminaries.

Shaw v. Republic L. Ins. Co. 69 N. Y. 286; Young v. Hunter, 6 N. Y. 203; Robinson v. Frank, 107 N. Y. 655, 14 N. E. 413; Taylor v. Merchants' F. Ins. Co. 9 How. 390, 13 L. ed. 187; May, Ins. § 469; Porter, Ins. Am. notes by Henry Darrach, 1889, *194; Richards, Ins. (1892) § 51; Boyd v. Cedar Rapids Ins. Co. 70 Iowa, 325, 30 N. W. 585; Grattan v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 80 N. Y. 281, 36 Am. Rep. 617.

Hobart was the agent of the company, and had charge of its business.

He had made an authorized contract which he refused to complete; he had knowledge of all the facts; notice to him was notice to the company; a demand upon him was a demand upon the company, and his refusal was the refusal of the company.

Cragie v. Hadley, 99 N. Y. 131, 52 Am. Rep. 9, 1 N. E. 537; Post v. Aetna Ins. Co. 43 Barb. 351; Ellis v. Albany City F. Ins. Co. 50 N. Y. 402, 10 Am. Rep. 495; Bochen v. Williamsburgh City Ins. Co. 35 N. Y. 131, 90 Am. Dec. 787; Van Schoick v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 68 N. Y. 434; Church v. LaFayette F. Ins. Co. 66 N. Y. 222.

The principal must dissent within a reasonable time after knowledge of the act on the part of the agent, or an assent will be presumed.

Stilwell v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 72 N. Y. 385; Hyatt v. Clark, 118 N. Y. 563, 23 N. E. 891; Southern L. Ins. Co. v. McCain, 96 U. S. 84, 24 L. ed. 653.

Hobart had the power to accept risks, to agree upon and settle the terms of insurance, and to issue policies. This made him a general agent for the defendant.

Carroll v. Charter Oak Ins. Co. 40 Barb. 292; Post v. Aetna Ins. Co. 43 Barb. 351; Pitney v. Glen's Falls Ins. Co. 65 N. Y. 6; Ruggles v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 114 N. Y. 415, 21 N. E. 1000.

Parker, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

We are agreed that the verdict of the jury establishes that on the 30th day of December, 1893, defendant's agent Hobart had a conversation with Col. Hicks, plaintiff's assignor, the legal effect of which was to create a contract of present insurance in the sum of $2,500 upon property of Col. Hicks, which was consumed by fire two days later. The agreement that the contract was one of present insurance accords with the allegations of the complaint, the theory of the counsel as shown by their method of trial and the charge of the court. That position cannot be attacked from any source, for either that which was said operated to create a contract of present insurance, or else no contract was ever made binding upon the defendant. The evidence tended to show a contract to insure, and nothing else. It is not pretended that a contract of any kind between these parties was made after the conversation of December 30th. The jury have found that the defendant's agent said to Hicks, after a general discussion on the subject of insuring the property, "You are insured from noon on the 30th day of December, 1893, to noon of December 30, 1894." The legal effect of this answer to the application for insurance made by Col. Hicks was to create a complete, binding agreement for insurance for the period named, upon which he was entitled to recover for the damages sustained by the fire, had he made performance on his part. Ruggles v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 114 N. Y. 415, 21 N. E. 1000. This contract of insurance, although verbal, embraced within it the provisions of the standard policy of fire insurance, which the legislature in its wisdom formulated for the protection of both insured and insurer. It is usual for the company to issue a policy of insurance evidencing the contract between the parties; but the policy accomplishes nothing more than that, for, when the contract is entered into between the agent and the owner, whether the binder be verbal or in writing, it includes within it the standard form of policy, and the contract is a completed one. Ruggles's Case, 114 N. Y. 415, 21 N. E. 1000; Lipman v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 121 N. Y. 454, 8 L. R. A. 719, 24 N. E. 699; Karelsen v. Sun Fire Office, 122 N. Y. 545, 25 N. E. 921; Underwood v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 161 N. Y. 413, 55 N. E. 936. In the three cases last cited the binder had been reduced to writing, but there is no distinction whatever in principle between those cases and the one at bar, for in each there is a binding contract to insure, and necessarily according to the only form of insurance contract authorized by the laws of this state. The law reads into the contract the standard policy, whether it be referred to in terms or not. In Lipman's Case, 121 N. Y. 454, 8 L. R. A. 719, 24 N. E. 699, Judge Andrews, in speaking of the construction to be put upon the binding slip, issued in that case, said: "The construction is, we think, the same as though it had expressed that the present insurance was under the terms of the usual policy of the company to be thereafter delivered." And in Karelsen's Case the court said: "While the binding slip contained none of the conditions usually found in insurance policies, the contract evidenced by it was the ordinary policy of insurance issued by the company. So that, in any construction of the contract, it must be regarded as 'though it had expressed that the present insurance was under the terms of the usual policy of the company to be thereafter delivered.'" So that all this plaintiff had to do, in order to recover in this action, aside from showing a loss by fire, and compliance on her part with the condition of the contract, was to prove the making of the contract. This was accomplished by proving the conversation between her assignor and the agent, for the conversation disclosed the sum for which the property was to be insured, the amount of premiums, and the period of insurance, and the statute provided for all of the other conditions of the contract of insurance. Neither party to it had the right to add to or take from the requirements of the legislature in that regard. The making of the contract the plaintiff proved to the satisfaction of the jury, and she did not attempt to prove anything more. This the trial court, as well as the counsel, understood, and the case was tried upon that theory. It has been discovered in this court, however, that the judgment against the defendant cannot be sustained if this action be now treated in accordance with the theory that induced its commencement, and upon which it was tried, namely, that the plaintiff's assignor made a valid contract of insurance with the defendant, by virtue of which this plaintiff, as assignee, is entitled to recover to the extent provided for by the policy for the damages sustained by her through the destruction by fire of the building insured. The error which calls for a reversal of the judgment, if this be treated as an action on the contract, lies in the trial court's charge to the jury, in effect, that, as matter of law, it was not necessary for the insured to present to the defendant proofs of loss in accordance with the requirements of the standard policy. To avoid this result, it is proposed in the dissenting opinion not only to set at naught the many decisions of this court holding that on an appeal a case must be disposed of upon the theory upon which it was tried (Snider v. Snider, 160 N. Y. 151, 54 N. E. 676; Stephens v. Meriden Britannia Co. 160 N. Y. 178, 54 N. E. 731; People ex rel. Warschauer v. Dalton, 159 N. Y. 235, 53 N. E. 1113; Drucker v. Manhattan R. Co. 106 N. Y. 157, 60 Am. Rep. 437, 12 N. E. 568; Baird v. New York, 96 N. Y. 567), but also to decide that, growing out of this contract, the plaintiff had another cause of action, the maintenance of which did not require the service of proofs of loss. Hence it is claimed that, by treating the case as having been tried upon that theory, the court may avoid reversing the judgment, for in such a case it would have been unnecessary to charge that the service of proofs of loss was essential to recovery. This newly-discovered cause of action is said to spring out of the promise, made at the time the contract was entered into, that the defendant would deliver to the insured evidence of the contract in the shape of a policy of insurance. The contract was completed at the moment the agent said, "You are insured from noon on the 30th day of December, 1893, to noon on the 30th day of December, 1894" (Ruggles v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 114 N. Y. 415, 21 N. E. 1000); and it is agreed by every member of this court that the defendant is liable to the plaintiff on the contract thus made in the full amount of the policy, if the damage was sustained in the manner referred to in the policy, and plaintiff performed the conditions imposed upon him by it.

48 L. R. A.

But it is said that he may recover either on the contract, or, instead, if he elects, on the ground that the defendant failed to deliver to him written evidence of the contract; i. e., a policy of insurance. If the case were one where the written evidence of the contract had to come into the possession of the plaintiff before recovery could be had thereon, then it is true that an action in equity might be brought, praying for a delivery of the policy that the defendant withheld, and further demanding that, upon the policy delivered in pursuance of the decree, the plaintiff should have judgment in the amount specified in the policy for her damages by fire; and even then the plaintiff would have to abide by the terms of the policy, delivery of which the judgment should decree. But that is not this case at all. To enable her to recover, it was not necessary for this plaintiff to have physical possession of the policy which the agent promised to give her assignor. Ruggles's Case, supra. Her action was not founded upon a policy, but upon the contract of insurance made upon the 30th day of December, which, as both parties agreed, was to begin at noon on that day, no matter when the policy, which the parties intended should furnish evidence of the contract, should be delivered. The action was brought, tried, and decided upon that theory; and no one disputes that the judgment could in this court stand upon that theory, had the trial court charged the jury correctly in relation to the necessity of serving proofs of loss. It is apparent, therefore, that the plaintiff sustained no damage by reason of the defendant's failure to furnish her assignor with written evidence of the contract. Had the promise been kept, the plaintiff might not have been obliged to call her assignor to prove the contract, thus subjecting him, as it turned out, to be confronted with impeaching testimony; but neither the plaintiff nor her assignor was otherwise damaged, for he found no difficulty in proving a contract to the satisfaction of the jury. The possession of the promised policy, therefore, would have been a convenience possibly, but nothing more. Plainly, therefore, it is not true that the plaintiff suffered damage in the amount of the contract of insurance by reason of the failure of the defendant to deliver a policy reciting the terms of the contract entered into, and hence the judgment cannot be affirmed on the ground that the plaintiff sustained damages in the sum of $2,500, because the defendant omitted to deliver a policy. Nor do I think that a sound public policy would sanction the creation of such a precedent even if a legal principle could be found upon which to rest it.

The legislature of the state of New York has prescribed a standard form of policy for the protection of both insurer and insured. It contains provisions specially protecting the insured from harsh methods by insurance companies. On the other hand, it provides that which experience has shown to be necessary in order to protect insurance companies from being victimized through fraud; and among the conditions which the legislature, in its wisdom, has caused to be incorporated into the standard policy is one making it necessary that the insurer shall have immediate notice of the facts and circumstances of the fire; another, that within sixty days the owner shall present proofs of loss, duly verified, in which shall be stated the circumstances of the fire, and the value of the property destroyed, and various other things which it is deemed important that insurance companies should know before being called upon to adjust a loss; still another provides that no local agent shall have the power to waive any of these written conditions, except by a writing. It is unnecessary to present the reasons which induced the legislature to require these conditions precedent to a recovery upon a policy of insurance. It is sufficient for our purpose that the legislature declared that it should be so, and we should see to it that the general trend of our decisions is towards the enforcement of the legislative command, instead of its nullification. This plaintiff had the right, as it is conceded on all hands, to recover on the contract of insurance which her assignor made with the defendant's agent, whether a policy was subsequently delivered to him or not; but, as the standard policy was necessarily a part of the contract, he should be required to comply with the conditions of that policy, and give notice of the facts and circumstances of the fire, and present proofs of loss duly verified. The view taken by some of my brethren, however, is that it was unnecessary to give notice of the fire and present proofs of loss within sixty days, or at any other time, because, it is said, such an action need not be treated as on a contract of insurance, but on a contract to give a policy, which has not been carried out, and, therefore, prior to beginning suit, which may be done at any time within six years instead of one year, as provided in the standard policy, the insured has nothing whatever to do when he sustains a loss by fire but lie by until, as in this case, several months have passed, or, in some other case, until years have gone by, without giving the company notice of the fire or any proofs of loss whatever. He may then bring a suit, claiming that two days, or less, or more, before the fire, the defendant's local agent, without receiving any premium, agreed to, but did not, issue a policy, for which defendant is liable to plaintiff in the amount of the sum for which it was agreed that the policy should issue. If such a procedure should be sanctioned by this court, then might an insurance company be mulcted in damages without having had an opportunity to investigate promptly the origin of the fire and the value of the thing destroyed, and thus would the door be opened wide for the perpetration of fraud.

It is said that, if the foregoing argument seems not to be defective upon its mere reading, it is, nevertheless, so, because it leaves out of consideration the decisions of this court in Ellis v. Albany City F. Ins. Co. 50 N. Y. 402, 10 Am. Rep. 495; Angell v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 59 N. Y. 171, 17 Am. Rep. 322; Van Loan v. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Asso. 90 N. Y. 280. But the situation which those cases were designed to meet no longer exists. During the period of time in which they and others were decided, and down to the year 1886, each insurance company was at liberty to insert such provisions in the policy of insurance issued by it as it deemed best. The result was that there was no uniformity in policies of insurance, and, when loss by fire occurred prior to a delivery of the policy, it became necessary for the assured to secure possession of the policy, either by its voluntary delivery to him by the officers of the company, or in pursuance of a decree in a suit in equity for specific performance. Thereon he could found a judgment for the damages sustained by the fire, or he was allowed to recover the damages sustained for a breach of the contract, which was treated as a contract for the delivery of a policy. The last one of the cases cited was decided in 1882. Four years later the legislature, by chapter 488 of the Laws of 1886, enacted and provided for a uniform policy of fire insurance, to be made and issued in this state by all insurance companies taking fire risks on property within this state, to be known and designated as the "standard fire insurance policy of the state of New York." Upon the passage of this important legislation the policy of insurance was no longer of special moment, except as evidence that a contract to insure had been made; for it was no longer competent for the parties to incorporate into the policy any provisions whatever outside of those embraced within the terms of the standard policy, and thereafter the contract to insure was, by common consent of the profession and the courts, scientifically treated as a contract of insurance, and not, as formerly, a contract to issue a policy, as an examination of the authorities in this court from the Ruggles's Case down will show.

It is suggested that an affirmance of the judgment might also be placed on the ground that, while the action was brought upon the contract of insurance, it was made to appear upon the trial that the defendant, by its conduct, waived service of proofs of loss, and hence that it was not error for the court to charge, in effect, that the plaintiff could recover without showing that she had complied with the terms of the contract in that respect. If the defendant had, by its conduct, rendered unnecessary the service of proofs of loss, the contention would, of course, be well founded. But it had to do something in order to lose the benefit of the stipulations in its contract. At the outset it should be said that the defendant or its officers never did anything whatever until after this action was commenced. Neither the plaintiff nor her assignor, so far as this record discloses, ever addressed any letter or other communication to the defendant or any of its officers prior to the commencement of this action. What, then, is the alleged waiver founded upon? Why, upon the action of the local agent who made the contract of insurance in denying that he ever made such a contract,—an unstable and worthless foundation, surely, in view of the fact that under the standard policy an agent is without power to waive any of the conditions, as this court has time and again held. Van Allen v. Farmers' Joint Stock Ins. Co. 64 N. Y. 469; Quinlan v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 133 N. Y. 356, 31 N. E. 31; Bush v. Westchester F. Ins. Co. 63 N. Y. 531; De Grove v. Metropolitan Ins. Co. 61 N. Y. 594, 19 Am. Rep. 305. While it is conceded that the local agent had no power in such a case to waive the condition regarding proofs of loss, yet it is contended that he did in fact waive it by omitting to deliver the policy when called for by the owner of the building after the fire, and by denying that he had ever made a contract to insure. Stating the contention in other words, it is that, if the agent had tried to waive the conditions of the policy, and had promised to do so, he could not have accomplished it; but that, by omitting either to do or to say a particular thing, he did waive the condition, which is to say that an express waiver would not be effectual, but an implied one would. As the statement of the proposition seems to furnish the answer to it, I pass on to such of the defendant's acts as are relied upon to constitute a waiver. It is not pretended that prior to the commencement of this action the plaintiff or her assignor ever notified the defendant company that she claimed that the company had insured the burned building, so there is nothing before action brought upon which to base a claim that the defendant waived proofs of loss. But it is said that when the suit was brought, and the defendant, by its answer, denied the allegations of the complaint, it in some way made good the attempted waiver of the agent, although it was absolutely void before. The answer is that, if the plaintiff had not a complete cause of action against the defendant when the summons was served, no obstacles have been removed from her path by the denials in the defendant's answer of the allegations of her complaint. If a party has not a good cause of action before commencing suit, it is safe to say that he will not get one by an answer of the defendant which contents itself with denying the existence of the facts alleged in the complaint. It is plain, therefore, that the plaintiff is without a basis for a recovery upon this cause of action if a new trial be granted, because neither she nor her father, the assignor, have presented to the defendant any proofs of loss, nor was service of proofs of loss waived by the defendant; and, while such a result may or may not be in the interest of justice, in this particular case there can be no doubt that the measure of injustice done, if any, will be far less than would necessarily ensue from a decision putting a premium upon insurance obtained without a policy, by making it possible to recover for the damages sustained through a fire by an action commenced at any time before the six-years' statute of limitations shall have run, and that, too, without giving the company notice of the fire, or serving it with proofs of the loss; thereby preventing it from being able to inquire about the facts and circumstances attending the fire until months or years after the happening of it. This would in many cases effectually prevent the company from acquiring any information whatever. It follows, if the views expressed be sound, that the action is upon a contract of insurance, and not one for damages resulting from a failure to deliver a policy, and hence that proofs of loss were necessary, in the absence of a waiver thereof by the defendant, of which there is no proof; and the failure to so charge was error calling for a reversal of the judgment.

The judgment should be reversed.

Gray, O'Brien, and Cullen, JJ., concur.

London, J., dissenting:

We have no jurisdiction to inquire whether there was any evidence tending to support the verdict, but must limit our review to the alleged errors of law, which, if found to be well assigned, may possibly have misled the jury. The complaint may be construed as seeking either a recovery of damages for the breach of a contract to issue a policy of insurance, or to enforce its delivery, and to recover thereon as if actually delivered. Two questions of law are presented by the defendant's exceptions; one respecting the omission to serve proofs of loss, and the other the exclusion of evidence. The following facts were established by the verdict: On the 30th of December, 1893, George C. Hicks, the plaintiff's assignor, was the owner of a malt house in the village of Seneca Falls, upon which was other insurance. He applied on the evening of that day to Melmouth Hobart, who was the local agent of several insurance companies, including the defendant. He was authorized by the defendant to make agreements for policies of insurance and to issue policies therefor of the form of the standard policy of the state of New York. He was furnished by the defendant with blanks for the purpose, which he was authorized to fill, and, by countersigning and delivering, to make completed obligations of the defendant. Hobart agreed to issue to Hicks two policies of insurance upon the malt house, each for $2,500, one by the defendant and the other by a Westchester company, each for one year from noon of that day, for the premium of $31.25 for each policy. Hicks offered to pay the premiums then, but Hobart said that he need not do so until he should deliver him the policies, which he would not do that evening, as he wished to see a policy issued upon the malt house by the agent of the other companies, in order to make his description of the property identical with that in the other policies, but would attend to the matter the next day. He then said to Hicks, "You are insured from noon on the 30th day of December, 1893, to noon on the 30th day of December, 1894." The next day was Sunday, and Monday following was a holiday, and Hobart did not make out the policies. Early in the morning of Tuesday, January 2, 1894, the malt house was destroyed by fire. The loss was great enough to equal the amount of all the other insurance and that here in question. The day after the fire Hicks tendered to Hobart the premiums, and demanded the policies. Hobart refused to take the tender, and also refused to issue the policies. Hicks also demanded blank proofs of loss. Hobart refused to give him any, saying that he would not say whether he would receive the money for the premium or refuse it; that he had no blank proofs of loss; that he could do nothing about the matter; that he had written to his companies, and that, upon getting notice from them, he would let Hicks know; that he could give no definite answer in reference to the policies until he heard from his companies. Hicks then said, "We may take it as conclusive that you will not receive the money," and Hobart made no reply. No further communication took place. No proofs of loss were served. This action was brought seven months after the fire. The oral contract was complete in all its details, and Hicks was entitled to the policy. Ellis v. Albany City F. Ins. Co. 50 N. Y. 402, 10 Am. Rep. 495; Angell v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 59 N. Y. 171, 17 Am. Rep. 322; Van Loan v. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Asso. 90 N. Y. 281; Ruggles v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 114 N. Y. 415, 21 N. E. 1000.

The standard policy of the state of New York, which was the form of policy the defendant agreed to issue, requires the insured to furnish the insurer proofs of loss within sixty days of the fire. The court charged the jury: "I charge you, as a matter of law, if you find from the evidence that a contract was made to issue a policy, and when Mr. Hicks called upon the agent, and tendered him $62.50, and demanded his insurance policy, the agent refused to give it to him, or to pay the loss, upon the ground that the company was not liable, because it had not agreed to issue a policy, then that was a waiver of proofs of loss on the part of the insurance company." To this the counsel for the defendant excepted, whereupon the court said that, "if the agent claimed that the contract was not made, it was not necessary for the plaintiff or Mr. Hicks to furnish any proofs of loss." To this the defendant excepted, and asked the court to charge the jury that Hobart, as the local agent of the defendant, had no power to waive the condition of the contract of insurance requiring proofs of loss. The court refused, and defendant's counsel excepted. The standard policy provides that no agent of the company shall have power to waive any provision or condition of the policy, except such as by the terms of the policy may be the subject of agreement indorsed upon or added to it, and in every such case the waiver must be in writing indorsed upon or annexed to the policy. Treating the case as if under the policy, Hobart had no power to waive the proofs of loss. Van Allen v. Farmers' Joint Stock Ins. Co. 64 N. Y. 469; Quinlan v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. 133 N. Y. 356, 31 N. E. 31; Bush v. Westchester F. Ins. Co. 63 N. Y. 531. It does not follow, however, that this is a reversible error. If the action were solely to enforce the delivery of the policy, and to recover thereon as if actually delivered, then service of proofs of loss would be necessary, since in such case the rights of the insured would depend upon his performance of the conditions expressed in the policy as precedent to his right of recovery. De Grove v. Metropolitan Ins. Co. 61 N. Y. 594, 19 Am. Rep. 305. The same would be true if the action were to recover upon an agreement for temporary insurance intermediate the application for it and the decision of the insurance company whether it will issue a policy, as in the cases of "binding slips." Lipman v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 121 N. Y. 454, 8 L. R. A. 719, 24 N. E. 699; Karelsen v. Sun Fire Office, 122 N. Y. 545, 25 N. E. 921. In the two cases last cited the insurance company did not repudiate the binding slip, but claimed to have canceled the contract according to its terms. Recovery was sought in each case under the contract, and not because the agreement to make it was repudiated. In the case of a binding slip the insured has his written contract; in the case of an oral contract he must show his right to one. In the one case the contract speaks for itself, and the action is upon the contract, which for the time being is the policy. In the other case the action may be upon the oral contract; but when the making of the contract is denied, and performance by the company therefore refused, the action may be for damages for the breach of the contract to deliver the policy as of the date orally agreed upon. The right to the policy is not affected by the fire. Franklin F. Ins. Co. v. Colt, 20 Wall. 560, 22 L. ed. 423; Lightbody v. North American Ins. Co. 23 Wend. 18.

We may regard this action as one for the recovery of damages consequent upon the breach by the defendant of its contract to issue and deliver the policy, which, if delivered, would have enabled the plaintiff, by complying with its conditions, to secure indemnity for his loss. If the defendant repudiated the contract to issue the policy, it repudiated its conditions, and therefore cannot, without showing that it retracted its repudiation, insist upon the subsequent performance by the insured of any one of them as a condition precedent to his recovery of the damages accruing to him then or thereafter by the completed breach itself. The defendant did not retract the repudiation of the contract, but, by its answer, repeated and confirmed it. Shaw v. Republic L. Ins. 48 L. R. A.

Co. 69 N. Y. 286; Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. v. Pendleton, 112 U. S. 696, 28 L. ed. 866, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 314; Meyer v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. 73 N. Y. 516, 29 Am. Rep. 200; Robinson v. Frank, 107 N. Y. 655, 14 N. E. 413; Tayloc v. Merchants' F. Ins. Co. 9 How. 390, 13 L. ed. 187; Post v. Aetna Ins. Co. 43 Barb. 351. It would be a useless act for the plaintiff to serve proofs of loss in order to charge the defendant with liability under a contract which it repudiated altogether, and to hold otherwise would be to absolve the offender and punish its victim. As the plaintiff did not commence this action until after seven months from the fire, no question arises whether the action for full damages could accrue upon the breach earlier than under the contract. If we treat the case as if the policy had been issued, it was not within Hobart's power thereafter to waive proofs of loss, because his power was limited to the making of the contract and delivery of the policy, and did not extend to a subsequent waiver of the conditions which the policy imposed upon Hicks. But, as his power was complete over the making of the contract and delivery of the policy, it embraced as its necessary incident power to repudiate the oral contract, and thereupon to refuse delivery of the policy; and hence his repudiation and refusal, if made, were the acts of the defendant. In Ellis v. Albany City F. Ins. Co. 50 N. Y. 402, 10 Am. Rep. 495, the court not only so held, but also considered the suggestion, renewed in this case, that such a rule would enable the agent to perpetrate a fraud upon the company by making preliminary contracts, when the company only intended to be bound by writing, and answered it by saying that that was no reason for depriving third persons of the benefit of contracts entered into with the agent. We cannot review the finding that the defendant, through Hobart, did repudiate the contract and refuse to issue the policy. The charge of the court placed the waiver of the proofs of loss and the lack of necessity to furnish them upon the same finding of facts by the jury. The court was wrong as to the waiver of the proofs if plaintiff had no right of recovery except under the policy; but upon the same facts the court was right in saying, if the agent claimed that no contract was made, they were not necessary. As the jury found the facts which made the service of proofs of loss unnecessary, what was said as to waiver was unimportant, and not reversible error.

It is said that the plaintiff sustained no damages by the defendant's breach of its contract to deliver the policy, because she had her remedy upon the oral contract to insure. It could be said with equal force that she had no remedy upon the oral contract to insure because she had her remedy for damages. Obviously, she could stand upon all the causes of action which the facts pleaded permitted, and finally avail herself of the one proved. The form of the policy is fixed by statute, but that simply affects case of proof, and not the remedy upon the proofs. It was a disputed question of fact upon the trial whether in the interview between Hobart and Hicks, when the oral contract was made, Hobart agreed to place one policy in the defendant company. Hicks affirmed it, and Hobart denied it, and testified that the name of the defendant was not mentioned. The offer of his further testimony to the effect that he had received instructions from the defendant not to insure the plaintiff was excluded by the court upon plaintiff's objection. The evidence was offered in corroboration of Hobart's testimony, the defendant's theory being that, having received such instruction, the presumption followed that Hobart obeyed it, and that the defendant was entitled to cast this presumption into the scale. Hobart did not communicate the instruction to Hicks, and thus it could not affect him, unless the circumstance, in its nature, tended to support Hobart, or to discredit Hicks. That Hobart received the instruction was immaterial unless he obeyed it. That is not proved by the instruction itself, nor does it tend to prove it. It may be conceded, as the learned counsel for the appellant insists, with the support of authority, that the presumption is that every man, in his private and official character, does his duty; but this presumption is a shield from attack upon the charge of violation of duty, not a weapon of offense. If his company should sue Hobart for disobedience to its instructions, he could rely upon this presumption until the contrary should be proved; but, if he should sue his company for some promised reward of obedience, the presumption would not avail him; much less can it be used as affirmative evidence against a third person dealing at arm's length against both principal and agent. In Fitzgerald v. Dressler, 7 C. B. N. S. 374, A, through a broker, sold seed to C, who, through the same broker, sold the seed, at an advanced price, to D. D was to pay C before C was to pay A. D sent his clerk to the broker for the delivery order, and the broker took the clerk to A, who gave the order to the clerk on his promise that D would pay A. A sued D. The court held that there was no presumption that the clerk told D that he had made the promise. The case, in principle, is like the one before us. The judgment should be affirmed, with costs.

Haight, J., concurs.

Werner, J., dissenting:

It seems to me that we cannot hold that an action may not be brought for the breach of an agreement to insure without distinctly overruling Ellis v. Albany City F. Ins. Co., 50 N. Y. 402, 10 Am. Rep. 495; Angell v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 59 N. Y. 171, 17 Am. Rep. 322; Van Loan v. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Assn., 90 N. Y. 281; and Post v. Etna Ins. Co., 43 Barb. 351. I do not think that the evidence wholly justifies the statement that the action was clearly tried upon the theory of an executed contract of insurance. It is true that the complaint, and the evidence given in support thereof, were undoubtedly appropriate to such an action; but it does not follow that they were, therefore, not appropriate to an action for damages arising out of the alleged breach of the contract to insure. It frequently happens that the same pleadings and proofs will support different causes of actions which are governed by inconsistent legal principles. I am prepared to agree with Chief Judge Parker, in holding that under the law providing for the standard policy it is the logical rule to decide that every contract for insurance made with an authorized agent, whether the same be oral or written, constitutes a valid contract of insurance, which requires nothing to complete it except the written evidence of its terms and conditions. The cases of Lipman v. Niagara F. Ins. Co., 121 N. Y. 454, 8 L. R. A. 719, 24 N. E. 699; Karelsen v. Sun Fire Office, 122 N. Y. 545, 25 N. E. 921, and Underwood v. Greenwich Ins. Co., 161 N. Y. 413, 55 N. E. 936, cited by him, clearly demonstrate that this is the more recent view of our court. But that is very different from deciding that, when a plaintiff claims that a contract for insurance has been made and broken, and a defendant insurance company denies that any such contract was ever made, a plaintiff can recover only upon the theory of an executed and completed contract. Such a rule would result in exempting insurance companies from the application of one of the most familiar principles of the law of contracts. It is a rule of universal application that when a party to a contract refuses to execute it the other party thereto may treat it as rescinded, and sue for the breach. Beach, Mod. Law. Cont. § 788. In such a case as this the difference in the character of the action is one of form, rather than of substance, because the recovery in either case would be the same. But let us assume that it is now the established law that a party claiming under an oral or a written memorandum for insurance must recover, if at all, upon the terms and conditions of a completed policy, which are to be read into his tentative contract. It is conceded that Hobart was the duly-authorized agent of the defendant for the purpose of issuing policies of insurance. He was provided with blanks for that purpose, which needed only to be countersigned by him to make them executed and binding contracts. The right to issue policies included the right to refuse to issue them. Hobart's agreement to issue a policy was the act of the company. Whose act was Hobart's refusal to issue a policy after he had bound the company by his agreement to issue one? To my mind there is no escape from the conclusion that, if he acted for the company in making the agreement, he acted in the same capacity in breaking it. There was a dispute of testimony as to whether he ever made such an agreement with plaintiff's assignor. This presented a question of fact which the jury have settled in favor of the plaintiff. If, then, we treat this as an action upon the policy, and hold the defendant responsible for the acts of Hobart, what is the effect of such acts? The answer seems obvious. If the defendant, through its proper officers, had issued a policy of insurance, and after a loss under the same had denied its liability on the ground that it never made any such contract, it would be a distinct waiver of the right to demand proofs of loss. Shaw v. Republic L. Ins. Co. 69 N. Y. 286; Stokes v. Mackay, 147 N. Y. 223, 41 N. E. 496; People v. Empire Mut. L. Ins. Co. 92 N. Y. 105; May, Ins. § 469; Porter, Ins. Am. notes by Darrach, 1889, *194; Richards, Ins. § 81; Grattan v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 80 N. Y. 281, 36 Am. Rep. 617; Payn v. Mutual Relief Soc. 2 How. Pr. N. S. 220; Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. v. Pendleton, 112 U. S. 696, 28 L. ed. 866, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 314; Brink v. Hanover F. Ins. Co. 80 N. Y. 113. Is the result any different because these things were done by an agent? As we have seen this agent had authority to issue, and therefore to refuse to issue, policies. His agreement to issue a policy was the act of his principal. His refusal to issue a policy after he had agreed to do so falls within the same category. Under these circumstances the refusal of the agent has the same effect as though it had actually been made by the principal. Indeed, for the purposes of the particular act, he was the principal. Goodwin v. Massachusetts Mut. L. Ins. Co. 73 N.

Y. 490, 491. But it is suggested that the policy provides that no agent shall have power to waive any of the conditions thereof. This is undoubtedly true after a policy has been issued, and the limited powers of the agent are spent. But in the case before us the acts of the agent were within the scope of his authority, for, until the policy was actually issued, he was the alter ego of the defendant. At every instant within the period covered by the negotiations between Hobart and the plaintiff's assignor the former was acting within the scope of his authority. As the case stands, it is just as though the defendant itself had refused to issue a policy after it had agreed to do so. Under these circumstances the plaintiff and her assignor were not required to present proofs of loss, because they had been absolved from this duty by the acts of the defendant. If these views are adopted, it follows that the charge of the trial court was substantially correct wherein it stated that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to serve proofs of loss, and by the same rule it would seem to follow that the instructions relating to the waiver by Hobart were harmless, because they were immaterial.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

Thomas USBORNE, Appt.,
v.

George R. STEPHENSON et al., Respts.

(.....Or.....)

1. The practice of withdrawing a juror for the purpose of postponing or continuing the trial of a civil case does not prevail in Oregon.
2. The only cause for withdrawal of a juror in a civil case, if that practice can be resorted to for any reason, is surprise on the trial, and a motion therefor cannot be based upon matters happening long prior to the trial, which had been considered on motion for a continuance before the jury was impaneled.
3. The question of care and diligence in respect to the disposal of goods received on consignment, which had been retained for almost a year, when they were consumed by fire, may be submitted to the jury, where there is evidence of their value in the market.

(November 20, 1899.)

NOTE.—Withdrawal of juror.

- I. Power to withdraw juror.
 - a. In civil cases.
 - b. In criminal cases.
- II. Effect of withdrawal of juror in civil cases.
 - a. English cases.
 1. In general.
 2. As to costs.
 - b. American cases.
- III. Effect of withdrawal of juror in criminal cases.
 - I. Power to withdraw juror.
 - a. In civil cases.

In civil cases the court has the power, with-
48 L. R. A.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Multnomah County in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover back money advanced to consignors, and for insurance, storage, and interest on a consignment of hops. Affirmed.

Statement by Bean, J.:

The plaintiff is a hop factor in the city of London, and the defendants are hop growers in this state. In September, 1893, the defendant consigned to plaintiff, for sale on commission, 98 bales of hops, of the aggregate weight of 17,392 pounds, upon which he made an advance of $1,550. The hops were received in London about the 24th day of November, 1893, by plaintiff, who retained them in his possession until September 13, 1894, when, as he alleges, they were destroyed by fire, whereby he became entitled to and collected insurance to the amount of $1,714.32, which, after being placed to de-out consent of the parties, to withdraw a juror. Instead of granting a nonsuit; and this will continue the case. The effect is different in the English practice, which usually treats the withdrawal of a juror as an end of the case.

In USBORNE v. STEPHENSON it is held that the practice of withdrawing a juror for the purpose of postponing or continuing the trial of a civil case does not prevail in Oregon. The court says: "Whatever authorities there are on the subject, all agree that the practice can be resorted to only when a party finds himself taken by surprise on the trial, and when further proceeding therewith would be productive of great hardship or manifest injustice to him;" and therefore holds that, as the same matters were presented in a motion for continuance be-defendants' credit, left a balance for freight, insurance, money advanced, expenses, and interest of $834.40, to recover which this action was brought. The defendants, by their answer, denied any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to whether the hops were destroyed by fire, or that plaintiff collected any insurance money thereon, and denied owing the balance alleged to be due, and, for a further and separate defense, averred, in substance, that, owing to plaintiff's negligence in not selling the hops before the alleged fire, they were damaged in the sum of $4,099.54, for which they prayed judgment and that such sum be set off and counterclaimed against any sum found due the plaintiff. The cause was brought to an issue by the filing of a reply on the 25th of February, 1896, and on the 25th of May an order was made setting the trial for the 24th of June. On the day set for the trial, but before the jury was called, the plaintiff moved for a continuance on account of the absence of material testimony; basing his motion upon an affidavit of his counsel to the effect that he could not safely proceed to trial without the depositions of several residents of London. The motion being denied, a jury was impaneled and sworn; but, before any evidence had been given, the plaintiff filed a motion for permission to withdraw a juror, based upon an affidavit of his counsel substantially the same as the one filed in support of the motion for a continuance, except that it contained a statement to the effect that the cause had been set down for hearing in violation of a verbal understanding and agreement with counsel for defendants, which, however, was denied by a counter affidavit. This motion was like-fore trial, the withdrawal of a juror for the same reason was properly refused. This case states that it has never been the practice in England, in civil cases, or in this country, except in New York, but this seems to be a mistake, as will be shown from the cases cited in this note.

In civil cases it is generally held that a juror may be withdrawn where it is necessary to prevent the defeat of justice. Wolcott v. Sndebaker, 34 Fed. Rep. 8; Schofield v. Settler, 31 Ill. 515; Miller v. Metzger, 16 Ill. 390; Morrison v. Hedenberg, 138 Ill. 22, 27 N. E. 490; Van Syckle v. Perry, 3 Robt. 621; Glendenning v. Canary, 5 Daly, 489, Aff'd 64 N. Y. 636; Messenger v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 6 Daly, 190, Affirming 48 How. Pr. 542; People v. Marks, 10 How. Pr. 261; St. John v. Duncan, 2 N. Y. Month. L. Bull. 20; Planer v. Smith, 40 Wis. 31; Stodhart v. Johnson, 3 T. R. 657; Bentley v. Dawes, 10 Exch. 347, 23 L. J. Exch. N. S. 279, 18 Jur. 837; Thomas v. Lewis, 5 Dowl. P. C. 395, W. W. & D. 67, 1 Jur. 104; Norburn v. Hilliam, L. R. 5 C. P. 129, 39 L. J. C. P. N. S. 183, 22 L. T. N. S. 87, 18 Week. Rep. 602; Harries v. Thomas, 2 Mees. & W. 32; Thomas v. Leonard, 5 Ill. 556; Moscatti v. Lawson, 1 Rob. & M. 454, 1 Harr. & W. 572; Sheldon v. Rahner, 4 Pa. Co. Ct., 16; People ex rel. Perkins v. New York Common Pleas Judges, 8 Cow. 127.

So, where both parties consent in a civil case a juror may be withdrawn. Burdon v. Flower, 7 Dowl. P. C. 786; Benedict v. Cozzens, 4 Cal. 381; Cook v. Ritter, 4 E. D. Smith, 253; Everett v. Youells, 3 Barn. & Ad. 349; Sanderson v. Nestor, Ryan & M. 402; Hammond v. Thorpe, 2 Dowl. P. C. 721, 1 Crompt. M. & R. 64, 4 Tyr. 528; Seely v. Powers, 3 Dowl. P. C. 372; Gibbs v. Ralph, 14 Mees. & W. 804, 15 L. J. Exch. N. S. 7; Bohmman v. Chicago, 15 Ill. App. 48; Thomas v. Exeter Flying Post Co. 56 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 313, L. R. 18 Q. B. Div. 822, 56 L. T. N. S. 361, 35 Week. Rep. 504.

And in Chedwick v. Hughes, Carth. 464, it is said that in civil cases a juror may be withdrawn.

And in Strong v. District of Columbia, 8 MacArth. 499, under a Maryland statute it was held that a juror might be withdrawn.

But in Schechter v. Denver, L. & G. R. Co. 8 Colo. App. 25, 44 Pac. 761, which was a civil case, the court refused to permit a juror to be withdrawn.

The court has the discretion to discharge a juror whenever it comes to the knowledge of the court that one who has inadvertently been sworn cannot render a legal verdict in the case. Thomas v. Leonard, 5 Ill. 556.

48 L. R. A.

And the court on the trial of civil cases, upon being satisfied that any real ground of surprise exists, such as the unexpected absence of witnesses who had been in attendance, or that have been kept out of the way, the sickness of a juror, party or counsel, or any other accident occasioned by substantial misapprehension or disappointment, which would render its further progress unjust or unfair to either party, may, in the exercise of a sound discretion, direct the withdrawal of a juror or discharge the jury, and postpone the trial. Glendenning v. Canary, 5 Daly, 489, Affirmed in 64 N. Y. 636.

In Cook v. Ritter, 4 E. D. Smith, 253, it was said: "There may be doubt as to the right of the justice to order jurors to be withdrawn, and others substituted after the jury are impaneled and sworn. It does not appear that the trial had commenced, other than by calling and swearing the jury, nor does it appear by the return that the defendant at the time made any objection to it. Under such circumstances I think he must be considered as assenting to the change of jurors, and as having waived his right to object thereto."

In a civil action, courts may, in the exercise of a sound discretion, allow a juror to be withdrawn, and still retain the cause upon the calendar for trial, instead of nonsuiting the plaintiff for a defect in his proof as in case of mistake or surprise on his part in the preparation of his cause for trial; and this even where the defendant has not wilfully misled the plaintiff. People ex rel. Perkins v. New York Common Pleas Judges, 8 Cow. 127. In this case the court said: "The question is, whether a court may allow a juror to be withdrawn, thus saving the plaintiff from the consequences of a fatal defect in his testimony. If such a discretion exists as to any civil case, we are satisfied it existed and was properly applied in this. The modern books are very barren of authority upon the question as to civil causes, though jurors have been withdrawn, and the practice has been sanctioned in criminal cases. The older authorities do not agree. In Chedwick v. Hughes, Carth. 465, Holt, Ch. J., says it was the opinion of all the judges of England, upon debate between them, that in civil cases this cannot be done without consent of all parties; nor without the defendant's consent in criminal cases not capital. The authority of that dictum is rendered rather questionable, by what appears in Foster, 36, 37; and as to criminal cases not capital, we have a very respectable authority in United States v. Coolidge, 2 Gall. 364, Fed. Cas. No. 14,858, that the court may, in their discretion, allow a juror to be wise denied, and the cause proceeded to trial, resulting in a judgment in favor of defendants for the sum of $537.04, from which the plaintiff appeals, assigning as error the overruling of his motion to withdraw a juror, and certain instructions given to the jury.

Messrs. Edgar Grimm, W. W. Thayer, and Henry St. Rayner, for appellant:

The practice of "withdrawing a juror" may be resorted to when it appears that "owing to some accident or surprise, defect of proof, unexpected and difficult question of law, or like reason, a trial cannot proceed without injustice to a party."

Anderson, Law Dict. 1889 ed. p. 1118; Abbott, Law Dict.; Bishop, Code Pr. § 428; People ex rel. Perkins v. New York Common Pleas Judges, 8 Cow. 127; Dillon v. Cockcroft, 90 N. Y. 649.

withdrawn in order to prevent a failure of justice, and yet continue the cause. The principle would seem to apply more strongly to a civil cause. We find the practice has prevailed at the circuit, and it strikes us as convenient, and indeed necessary, in some instances to prevent a failure of justice. On the whole, we think courts may, in the exercise of a sound discretion, take the course which the court below adopted in this case."

b. In criminal cases.

The court has the power to withdraw a juror in criminal cases. This rests in the sound discretion of the court. In Carthew's Reports, 465, it was said that it was the conclusion of all the judges in England that this could not be done except by consent, and not in capital cases even with consent. But this statement is attacked in Foster's Crown Law, 16, and that report shown to be incorrect. It is not followed.

The withdrawal of a juror rests in the discretion of the court, and may be exercised in a criminal case in order to prevent the defeat of justice. Com. v. Bowden, 9 Mass. 494 (felony); People v. Olcott, 2 Johns. Cas. 301 (misdemeanor); People v. Ellis, 15 Wend. 371 (misdemeanor); Brown v. State, 38 Tex. 482 (felony); Ferrars's Case, T. Raym. 84 (forgery).

And the same is held although the defendant may not consent. United States v. Morris, 1 Curt. C. C. 23, Fed. Cas. No. 15,815 (misdemeanor); State v. Weaver, 35 N. C. (13 Ired. L.) 203 (misdemeanor); United States v. Coolidge, 2 Gall. 364, Fed. Cas. No. 14,858.

And the same rule was applied under a statute allowing a juror to be withdrawn. Stone v. People, 3 Ill. 326 (capital offense).

And in Chedwick v. Hughes, Carth. 464, it was said that in cases of crimes not capital a juror may be withdrawn by consent.

And in Com. v. Purchase, 2 Pick. 521, 13 Am. Dec. 452, and Com. v. McCormick, 130 Mass. 61, it was said that a juror may be withdrawn.

But in some cases the right to withdraw a juror is denied where the defendant refuses to consent. State v. Ephraim, 19 N. C. (2 Dev. & B. L.) 162 (capital offense); People v. Barrett, 2 Cal. 304, Reversing 2 Cal. 100.

In Rex v. Jeffs, 2 Strange, 984 (felony). It was held that a juror cannot be withdrawn.

And in Chedwick v. Hughes, Carth. 464, it is said that a juror cannot be withdrawn in a capital case, even though the defendant consents.

In the Case of Ferrars, T. Raym. 84, "against 48 L. R. A.

It is now well settled that in civil cases the court has power to do this, in the exercise of a sound discretion, without the consent of the parties, instead of nonsuiting the plaintiff.

2 Bouvier, Law Dict. 13th ed. 826; Messenger v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 48 How. Pr. 545.

In the American practice it is now well settled that in civil cases the court has the power to permit a plaintiff to withdraw a juror for any of the reasons that prevailed under the practice of the common law, when the further progress of the trial would be disastrous and unfair to him, thus saving the plaintiff from the consequence of a fatal defect in his testimony.

1 Paine & D. Pr. p. 539; People ex rel. Perkins v. New York Common Pleas Judges, 8 Cow. 127.

whom an information was exhibited for forgery. It was resolved by all the justices that, although the jury be charged and sworn in the case of a plea of the Crown, yet a juror may be drawn or the jury dismissed, contrary to common tradition, which hath been held by many learned in the law."

In People v. Olcott, 2 Johns. Cas. 304, it is said: "In the Case of Ferrars, cited in Sir T. Raym. 84, which was on an information for forgery, it is said to have been held by all the justices that, after a jury was sworn and charged in a capital case, they may be dismissed, or a juror withdrawn though this was said to be contrary to common tradition."

On the trial of a party for a misdemeanor, a juror may be withdrawn on the application of the public prosecutor, after the jury have been impaneled and sworn. People v. Ellis, 15 Wend. 371. In this case the court said: "In the case of People v. Olcott, 2 Johns. Cas. 307, the power of the court as to the withdrawal of a juror after the jury was impaneled and sworn. In the case of a misdemeanor, seems to be put on the same footing as in civil cases, in which it rests very much in the exercise of a sound discretion. [People ex rel. Perkins v. New York Common Pleas Judges], 8 Cow. 127. The same indulgence is not extended in this court to all criminal cases not capital (People v. Barrett, 2 Cal. 304), though respectable authorities have gone that length. [United States v. Coolidge] 2 Gall. 364, Fed. Cas. No. 14,858. We see no good objection to the application of the rule in all cases of misdemeanor."

In an indictment for misdemeanor the court may, without the consent of the defendant, withdraw a juror, when in its discretion it judges it necessary to the ends of justice. State v. Weaver, 35 N. C. (13 Ired. L.) 203. In this case, after the prosecuting officer closed the case the court stated that on the evidence the prisoner could not be convicted of the crime of receiving from one D. a stolen slave knowing that D. had stolen him, and D. was then in confinement in the jail in G. county and had not been tried, whereupon the court, without the consent of the prisoner, but in opposition to his wishes, ordered a juror to be withdrawn, and the question was brought up on certiorari.

Where the jury was unable to agree in a misdemeanor case it was ordered by the court that a juror be withdrawn, and this was done against the consent of the defendant, and defendant was again put upon trial. It was held that the right to discharge the jury in such case was discretionary with the court. State v. Morrison, 20 N. C. (8 Dev. & B. L.) 115.

And where a witness refused to be sworn in

This rule of practice of the common law has not been abrogated by the judicature act of this state.

2 Rapalje & L. Law Dict. ed. 1888, p. 1362.

Under our system of jurisprudence all the common-law remedies are preserved in some form, and when a course of proceeding is not specifically pointed out, any suitable process may be adopted conformable to the spirit of the Code.

Aiken v. Aiken, 12 Or. 203, 6 Pac. 682; Civ. Code, § 940; Bailey v. Frush, 5 Or. 139; Ladd v. Mason, 10 Or. 316; Carter v. Koshland, 13 Or. 615, 12 Pac. 58; Mitchell v. Powers, 16 Or. 491, 19 Pac. 647.

Where a remedy is provided by statute, unless made exclusive the rule is that it is cumulative with one already existing at common law.

People v. Craycroft, 2 Cal. 243, 56 Am. Dec. 331; Candee v. Hayward, 37 N. Y. 653. Messrs. Platt, Durham, & Platt for respondents.

Bean, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is the first attempt, so far as we are advised, to invoke in this state the practice of withdrawing a juror. There is but little satisfactory information to be obtained from the books in regard to the ancient practice, which used to be resorted to when a party was taken by surprise on a trial, of withdrawing a juror, and thus causing a mistrial, and, of necessity, a postponement of the case. It was originally confined to criminal cases, and seems to have been adopted for the purpose of avoiding a rule which once obtained, based largely upon a dictum

a prosecution for shipping flour during the war, contrary to act of Congress July 6, 1812, chap. 129, and the court claimed that he was not within the rule allowing an affirmation, and committed him for contempt, and the district attorney moved to discharge the jury, and that the cause should remain for trial at a future date. Story, J., said: "A party is on trial before a jury, and a circumstance occurs which will occasion a total failure of justice if the trial proceed; have the court, in such an emergency, power to withdraw a juror? It has been stated from the bar that, in capital cases, the court have not this power, but in a case in Foster's Crown Law, and in several other cases, it has been held that they have. In misdemeanors, there is certainly a larger discretion, and until the cases just mentioned, capital trials were generally supposed to be excepted. It is now held that the discretion exists in all cases, but it is to be exercised only in very extraordinary and striking circumstances. Were it otherwise, the most unreasonable consequences would follow. Suppose, that in the course of the trial the accused should be reduced to such a situation as to be totally incapable of vindicating himself; shall the trial proceed and he be condemned? Suppose a jurymen taken sudden ill, and incapable of attending to the cause; shall the prisoner be acquitted? Suppose that this were a capital case, and that in the course of the investigation, it had clearly appeared that on Lee's testimony depended a conviction or an acquittal; would it be reasonable that the case should proceed? Lee may, perhaps, during the term, be willing to testify. Under these circumstances, I am of opinion that the government is not bound to proceed, but that the case be suspended until the close of the term, that we may see whether the witness will not consent to an examination." United States v. Coolidge, 2 Gall. 364. Fed. Cas. No. 14,858.

In Com. v. McCormick, 130 Mass. 61, referring to the case of United States v. Morris, 1 Curt. C. C. 23. Fed. Cas. No. 15,815, which held that it was in the discretion of the court to protect the administration of justice by withdrawing the case from the jury if a juror was unfit to sit therein, and in which case the court withdrew a juror after the trial had commenced. It was said: "It is not contended that this power is given to the court to be exercised arbitrarily, or without good cause to believe that interference is necessary to prevent great injustice to one side or the other. It is to be used alike for the protection of the public and for the security of the prisoner in his right to an impartial trial; alike when the juror is so biased either against the prisoner or against the government that he is disqualified to serve upon the panel."

In the report of Chedwick v. Hughes, Carthew, 464 (which was a prohibition to stay a suit against the school master for keeping a school without a license), there is the following note:—"Nota, per Holt, Chief Justice. At the sittings in Westminster, 9 Novemb. 1698, in a case of perjury tried before him, between the King and Perkins, he said, that it was the opinion of all the judges of England, upon debate between them. (1) That in capital cases a juror cannot be withdrawn, tho' all parties consent to it. (2) That in criminal cases, not capital, a juror may be withdrawn, if both parties consent, but not otherwise. (3) And that in all civil causes, a juror cannot be withdrawn, but by consent of all parties."

This note is discussed in People v. Olcott, 2 Johns. Cas. 301, as follows: "With respect to the note in Carthew, it underwent a critical examination, in the case of the two Kinlochs, Fost. C. L. 16, in the year 1746, and it was considered as a palpable mistake of the reporter. The case as corrected by a MS. report of Ch. J. Eyre, was on an indictment for perjury; and on the trial, the prosecutor, finding his evidence defective, insisted on withdrawing a juror, and Ch. J. Holt refused it, saying that in criminal cases a juror cannot be withdrawn but by consent; and in capital cases, not even with consent. This case, therefore, goes only in restraint of what was properly deemed an unreasonable and oppressive claim on the part of the prosecutor."

In Wedderburn's Case, Fost. C. L. 22-28, the case of Chedwick v. Hughes, Carthew, 464, was criticized, the court saying that in Eyre's MSS. report of the same case Holt says: "I have had occasion to consider of this matter. In criminal cases a juror cannot be withdrawn but by consent; and in capital cases it cannot be done even with consent;" and this does not show any resolution of the judges but only Holt's opinion. The court said that the report in Tracy's MSS. must have been second hand, as he was not an English judge at the time the judges are supposed to have come to these resolutions, or even so early as 1698.

In Rex v. Jeffs, 2 Strange, 984, on an indictment for barratry where the prosecutor could not go on for the want of several processes, there was an attempt to withdraw a juror, as it was done on an indictment against the scavengers of St. Giles's for not paying money according to a justice's order; and there being some unpreparedness, one of the King's counsel of Lord Coke, that a jury sworn and charged in any criminal case could not be discharged without giving a verdict. To escape the effect of this rule and yet apparently observe it to the letter, the courts resorted to the fiction of directing the clerk to call a juror out of the box, when it appeared that the prosecution was taken by surprise on the trial, whereupon the prosecution objected or was supposed to object, to proceeding with the eleven jurors, and the trial went over for the term. 2 Hawk. P. C. 619; 2 Hale, P. C. 294; Wedderbourn's Case, Fost. C. L. 22; People v. Olcott, 2 Johns. Cas. 301; United States v. Coolidge, 2 Gall. 264, Fed. Cas. No. 14,358. It was nothing more, however, than a means of obtaining a continuance or postponement of the trial after the jury had been impaneled and sworn. At first it was thought this could be done only by the court ordering the discharge of one of the jurors, and then holding that, as the case could not be tried before the remaining eleven, it must be continued. But after the doctrine of Lord Coke had been repudiated, and it became the settled rule that it was within the power of the court, in a proper case, to discharge the jury after it had been impaneled and sworn, and continue the cause, the device of withdrawing a juror seems to have become practically obsolete, and but little, if any, reference to it as a substantive practice is to be hereafter found in the books. That it ever prevailed at common law in civil cases is very doubtful. No case has come under our observation in which it was resorted to in England. Indeed, the only reference we have been able to find to the question in the early authorities is a note to Chedwick v. Hughes, Carthew, consented to withdraw a juror. Upon consideration it was refused, and it was held that there was a difference between the scavengers' case which may be compared to cases of a civil nature, and the barratry case where the punishment may be infamous, as the pillory. It was said that it had never been done in perjury or forgery.

The power to withdraw a juror in a criminal prosecution for a conspiracy was upheld in People v. Olcott, 2 Johns. Cas. 301. In this case, Rex v. Jeffs, 2 Strange, 984, was distinguished and commented on, by saying that in that case on the charge of barratry the court refused "to permit a juror to be withdrawn on the motion of the prosecutor, after he had gone into proof and found himself deficient, because the punishment annexed to that offense might be infamous; but he said it might be and had been done in other cases of misdemeanors. This . . . case controls an improper exercise of the power of the court, but does not deny its existence. It perhaps admits too much: for to allow the prosecutor in any case to withdraw a juror because he finds himself not fully prepared in his proofs is an unreasonable indulgence unless it should be made to appear that some part of the testimony was wanting through the contrivance or agency of the defendant."

II. Effect of withdrawal of juror in civil cases.

a. English cases.

1. In general.

Chitty's General Practice, p. 917, § 23, says that when a considerable time has elapsed, and the jury cannot agree upon their verdict, the practice is for the counsel of the respective parties to agree to withdraw a juror, "i. e., to require one of the twelve to leave the jury box, by which means the proceedings on the trial are in effect determined without any verdict or other proceeding. This arrangement usually takes place at the recommendation of the judge at any time pending the action, when the action is doubtful, or it is on any ground unfit that it should proceed further. In this case each party pays his own costs, and a defendant, by consenting to withdraw a juror, waives any supposed right he may have to claim his costs from the attorney for the plaintiff, on the ground of the action having been brought without the consent of the latter. However, although it is in general understood and expected that there are not to be any further proceedings, yet in point of law the plaintiff may commence a fresh action; and therefore a defendant's counsel should require a written engagement, signed by the plaintiff or his attorney, in consideration of the defendant's consenting to withdraw a juror, that the plaintiff will not institute any further proceedings in relation to the subject-matter of that suit."

Discharging a jury by consent does not terminate the suit, but is the same in this respect as withdrawing a juror. And where the plaintiff, instead of going on with such suit, brought a new action for a cause admitted to be the same, the court stayed the proceedings, but would not grant the defendant his costs of the latter suit. Everett v. Youells, 3 Barn. & Ad. 349.

And the withdrawal of a juror in a civil action by consent of the parties is no bar to a future suit on the same cause of action. Sanderson v. Nestor, Ryan & M. 402. In this case a similar action had been brought in Ireland by the same plaintiff against the same defendant, and by consent of the parties a juror was withdrawn. It was contended that this was an agreement between the parties to terminate the dispute.

Withdrawing a juror does not necessarily put an end to the suit; whether it does so or not depends upon the arrangement between the parties in the particular instance. Bentley v. Dawes, 10 Exch. 347, 23 L. J. Exch. N. S. 279. 18 Jur. 837; s. p. Harries v. Thomas, 2 Mees & W. 32, 6 L. J. Exch. N. S. 58.

In the latter case the court said: "I entirely agree with Mr. Williams that the mere withdrawal of a juror does not of necessity put an end to the cause. A juror may be withdrawn merely for the accommodation of both parties, it being found convenient not to try the cause, although, the jury having been sworn, the record cannot be withdrawn. It depends entirely on the circumstances under which the agreement is come to: if it appears that it was the intention of the parties to put an end to the cause, for obtaining a particular advantage, or avoiding a particular loss, the court will give effect to it, or, under some circumstances, even preclude the plaintiff from bringing another action. . . . But we think, on the whole circumstances before us, the agreement of the parties was to put an end to the cause, each receiving a benefit by going before the arbitrator for settlement of their pecuniary account. The defendant is therefore entitled to have the rule made absolute, but the parties may still, if they please, go before the arbitrator again on the terms suggested on the former occasion."

At the trial of a cause the parties agreed that a juror should be withdrawn, and that 464, in which it is stated that Lord Chief Justice Holt, in a case of perjury tried before him, said that it was the opinion of all the judges of England, upon debate between them, that in civil cases a juror cannot be withdrawn but by consent of all parties. And while the authority of this note underwent a critical examination in the subsequent case of Sir John Wedderbourn, Post. C. L. 28, from which its authority is rendered rather questionable, it seems to be the only reference to the practice in civil cases. It was early ruled, however, in this country, by the courts of New York, after some hesitation, that a court may allow a juror to be withdrawn in a civil case, when necessary to save the plaintiff from the consequence of a fatal mistake in his testimony. People ex rel. Perkins v. New York Common Pleas Judges, 8 Cow. 127. And we believe it is still regarded as a proper practice in that state, and is open to either party. Bishop, Code Pr. § 428; Dillon v. Cockcroft, 90 N. Y. 649; Messenger v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 48 How. Pr. 542. But, so far as we have been able to ascertain, it does not prevail elsewhere in this country; the same result being accomplished by a direct application to the court for a postponement of the trial. 4 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 863. We are therefore of the opinion that the motion was properly denied on the ground that no such practice prevails in this state. But, however that may be, whatever authorities there are on the subject, all agree that the practice can be resorted to only when a party finds himself taken by surprise on the trial, and when further proceeding therewith would be productive of great hardship or manifest injustice to him. Mr. Bishop, in the section of the judge, instead of trying the issues, should examine the subject-matter of the dispute, and say what ought to be done by both parties or either party. A juror was accordingly withdrawn, and the judge undertook the matter, and was about to carry out the rest of the arrangement when the defendant refused to be bound by it. It was held that the effect of such refusal was to set aside the arrangement, and to give the court therefore power to order the cause to be tried notwithstanding there had been such withdrawal of a juror with the consent of both parties and without fraud on the part of the defendant. Norburn v. Hilliam, L. R. 5 C. P. 129, 39 L. J. C. P. N. S. 183, 22 L. T. N. S. 67, 18 Week. Rep. 602. In this case the court said: "It is clear, beyond all question, that the withdrawal of a juror by consent not only puts an end to the proceedings in the cause, but also puts an end to the whole matter, so as to prevent its being litigated in a subsequent action; for, if either party should attempt it, the court would stay the proceedings in that or in any fresh action brought for the same cause. That is the effect which is given to the withdrawal of a juror, because such was the intention of the parties. But that is no stronger than a consent to a nonsuit on terms. There, if one party afterwards repudiates the terms agreed on, under circumstances such as are disclosed here, it would be the bounden duty of the court not to allow the proceedings to be terminated, and one party to get the advantage of the arrangement without performing the stipulations on his part."

The withdrawal of a juror upon terms is not necessarily the final determination of the action; and if there be a substantial breach by one of the parties of the terms upon which the juror was withdrawn, the court before whom the case came for trial has jurisdiction to retry the action. Thomas v. Exeter Flying Post Co. L. R. 18 Q. B. Div. 822, 56 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 313, 56 L. T. N. S. 361, 35 Week. Rep. 594. This was a libel case, and the plaintiff agreed that a juror should be withdrawn, and the defendant agreed that he should apologize in court and publish such proceedings in his paper, which he did; but in another part of his paper he repeated the libel. The plaintiff had the case reinstated and retried, and obtained a verdict. The court said: "No doubt most persons would say that the effect of withdrawing a juror was that the cause thereby came to an end; and, popularly speaking, that is a very fair description of the result of such an agreement; in all ordinary cases the juror is withdrawn with the intention that the cause shall, and it does, come to an end. Gibbs v. Ralph, 14 48 L. R. A.

Mees. & W. 804, 15 L. J. Exch. N. S. 7, is the only case where similar general language is used without qualification, and it is abundantly clear, both upon principle and from the decisions in Burdon v. Flower, 7 Dowl. P. C. 786, and Norburn v. Hilliam, L. R. 5 C. P. 129, 39 L. J. C. P. N. S. 183, 22 L. T. N. S. 67, 18 Week. Rep. 602, that the withdrawal of a juror is not a legal determination of the cause, but is only a determination in this sense, that, unless something very special happens, the court will hold the parties to their understanding, and will stay any further proceedings in the action."

But in Gibbs v. Ralph, 14 Mees. & W. 804, 15 L. J. Exch. N. S. 7, it was held that if a juror is withdrawn under the advice of counsel, and a second action is brought for the same cause, the court will stay the proceedings notwithstanding the belief of the attorneys on each side that such withdrawal would not operate as a termination of the suit. In this case the court said: "The counsel on both sides were, of course, aware of the consequences of that proceeding, and the understanding of the attorneys as to its effect is quite immaterial."

The court also said: "All that the case of Sanderson v. Nestor, Ryan & M. 402, decides is, that if a second action be brought for the same cause, and the defendant, instead of applying to the court to stay the proceedings, chooses to allow the action to proceed, he cannot avail himself of the withdrawal of a juror as a defense at the trial."

2. As to costs.

If the defendant pay money into court, and the plaintiff proceed to trial when a juror is withdrawn, the plaintiff is not entitled to the costs up to the time of paying money into court. Stodhart v. Johnson, 3 T. R. 657.

And where judgment passed for the plaintiff on a demurrer to one plea, and the cause was taken down for trial upon another, and a juror was then withdrawn by consent, it was held that the plaintiff could not then obtain the costs of the demurrer. Burdon v. Flower, 7 Dowl. P. C. 786.

Where a juror is withdrawn and the cause referred, but no award made, and the cause being taken down again, the plaintiff succeeds, he is not entitled to the costs of the first attempt at trial. Thomas v. Lewis, 5 Dowl. P. C. 305, W. W. & D. 67, 1 Jur. 104.

And where the defendant consented to the withdrawal of a juror and the payment of his own costs, it was held that he could not thereafter claim from the plaintiff's attorney those his work on Code Practice already cited, in speaking of the New York practice, says: "Instead of submitting to a nonsuit, the plaintiff, if he finds himself taken by surprise on the trial,—as by the absence of a witness who has been in attendance, or by the unexpected presentation of evidence by his adversary which he is not prepared to meet, or by any accident which might render the further progress of the trial disastrous and unfair to him,—may ask the court to withdraw a juror. The result of this application, if granted, will be to produce a mistrial; and the court may thus continue the pending action, and set the trial over to a future day, when the plaintiff may come properly prepared to try the case afresh." Within this rule, the plaintiff's motion was likewise properly denied, because it is not based upon anything occurring at the trial, but upon matters happening long prior thereto, and which could be, and were, properly submitted to the court in support of the motion for a continuance made before the jury was impaneled.

It is also claimed that the court erred in costs which he so consented to pay: Hammond v. Thorpe, 2 Dowl. P. C. 721, 1 Tyr. M. & R. 64, 4 Tyr. 338. In this case the plaintiff's attorney brought an action, having induced the plaintiff, who was an illiterate person, to sign a paper, not knowing its contents, authorizing an action to be brought.

On a question of costs, where a jury on a previous trial had been discharged, the court said: "I cannot, however, see any difference in reason between the withdrawing a juror by agreement and the discharge of the jury by the judge. In either case it is done because the jury cannot agree." Seely v. Powers, 3 Dowl. P. C. 372.

Where the defendant paid part of the demand into court, and issue was joined as to the rest, and notice of trial had, which was continued, and the plaintiff neither entered his cause nor countermanded his notice of trial, but took the money out of court, and now moved to have his costs taxed up to the time of payment into court, and that defendant have his costs subsequent to that, and that the balance should be paid over to the party to whom it should be found due, it was said: "The practice seems fully settled by the cases cited on the part of the plaintiff; and it is now further certified to us by the master, that that continues to be the practice." Seamoer v. Bridge, 8 T. R. 408. In this case the defendant's attorney contended "that the rule was not so general as was contended for; that where the plaintiff did not actually proceed to trial he might have his costs taxed up to the time of the defendant's paying money into court; for it is otherwise if a juror be withdrawn. Now the present case falls within the reason of that; for here the defendant is entitled to judgment as in case of a nonsuit."

b. American cases.

The usual effect of the withdrawal of a juror is a continuance of the case. But to this there appears to be some exception.

Certain depositions on objection of the defendant were rejected by the court, and thereupon at the instance of the plaintiff the court withdrew a juror, and afterwards on the papers being destroyed by fire the plaintiff had leave to file a new complaint. On the subsequent trial defendant contended that the withdrawal of a juror was equivalent to a nonsuit, and that a new and different complaint had been substituted without notice. It was held: "The withdrawal of the juror was made to operate as a continuance by the court. Such must, then, have been the design of it, and otherwise unexplained. It must be presumed to have been done by consent or without objection. Under any circumstances, it is no ground for reversal." Benedict v. Cozzens, 4 Cal. 381.

And under Md. act 1785, chap. 80, providing that courts of law shall have full power to allow amendments before verdict, and that if amendment is made after the jury is sworn a juror shall be withdrawn, it is error to refuse a continuance. Strong v. District of Columbia, 3 MacArth. 499. In this case the court said: "In our opinion the requirement in this section, that, 'a juror shall be withdrawn' where 'amendment is made after the jury is sworn,' is mandatory, and the party against whom the amendment is made has an absolute right to a continuance in the case referred to which the court is not at liberty to refuse."

Where, after a jury was impaneled, upon motion of plaintiffs, leave was given to withdraw a juror, and a juror being withdrawn and the jury discharged, the court ordered that the case be continued and that plaintiffs pay the costs of the term, and it was assigned for error that the court allowed a juror to be withdrawn without rendering a judgment for previous costs, it was held, on the objection that after the jury was impaneled the court at the instance of the plaintiff gave leave to withdraw a juror without consulting the plaintiff, that the practical effect of withdrawing a juror in our practice is not that it shall operate as a nonsuit, but merely to carry the case over to another term. Schofield v. Settley, 31 Ill. 515. In this case the court said: "This practice has crept in gradually, ameliorating the more rigid mode of proceeding by the rules of the common law. It is considered necessary for the due administration of justice that courts should possess this power, to be used in their discretion."

And where the court allowed the plaintiff on the trial to amend his declaration, and directed a juror to be withdrawn, and continued the case, it was held that the continuance was at the instance of the plaintiff in error, that it was necessary for that purpose that the jury be discharged, that a discretion is necessary to the administration of justice, and that when it is properly exercised no one can complain. Miller v. Metzger, 16 Ill. 390. In this case the court said: "The power to discharge a jury must of necessity reside in the court, otherwise there would often be a total failure of justice. A material witness may be taken ill, a party by fraud may get his adversary's witness beyond the reach of the court, a juror may be taken sick and die, and many other occurrences incident to human affairs may arise, where the court must exercise such power; and it has often been done, even in criminal cases."

And where a continuance was asked to examine a map on file in the auditor's office, and to compare the same with one on file on the trial, and it was admitted that if the maps tallied the plaintiff could recover, and the court entered a verdict for plaintiff and refused to allow the withdrawal of a juror, but gave the defendant time to move for a new trial in case he could show the maps differed, which he failed to do, it was held that the withdrawal of a juror where a party is surprised after going into trial is usually, if not uniformly, a matter resting in the sound discretion of the trial court, and that a refusal to permit a juror to be withdrawn cannot usually be as-instructing the jury as to the law of negligence, and submitting to them the question as to whether the plaintiff had exercised due care and diligence in selling and disposing of the hops consigned to him by the defendants, on the ground that there was no evidence to support such an instruction. The evidence on the part of the defendants tended to show that, at the time the hops were received by the plaintiff in London, they were worth in that market from 24 to 25 cents a pound, notwithstanding which he retained them in his possession for almost a year, when they were consumed by fire; and this was, in our opinion, sufficient, in the absence of any explanation whatever, to carry the case to the jury upon the question of negligence, and was sufficient upon which to base an instruction.

This disposes of the questions made on the appeal, and, there being no error in the record, we have no alternative but to affirm the judgment.

signed for error. Morrison v. Hedenberg, 138 Ill. 22, 27 N. E. 460. The court said: "But in this case, the only purpose for which counsel desired to have a juror withdrawn and the case continued was, to enable him to make investigations as to the genuineness of the Wooley map, and by the order of the court under which the verdict was rendered he was allowed nearly one month for that purpose. . . . He was therefore accorded all the relief that the withdrawal of a juror would have given him, and consequently has no ground of complaint in that respect."

In Van Syckel v. Perry, 3 Robt. 621, where on a trial it appeared that part of a cargo sued for had been paid for, and that one of the plaintiffs had assigned his interest in one half the claim and was an improper party, and a motion was made for a nonsuit, and, in order to defeat that motion, plaintiff moved to amend the complaint, the court declined to grant a nonsuit, but intimated that plaintiff's counsel might withdraw a juror and apply for such amendment at special term. A juror was accordingly withdrawn and the case went over, and thereafter the amendment was refused on the ground that it was a new and separate cause of action and was barred by limitation.

And where a party is surprised by the evidence given on the trial by his adversary's witnesses, and is not prepared with the evidence to rebut, his proper course is to apply for an adjournment in order to procure it or for leave to withdraw a juror, and if he neglects to do so, and allows the case to go to the jury on the evidence taken, the court will not grant him a new trial on the ground that the evidence was a surprise to him, and that the witnesses whose testimony was needed to rebut it were kept away from the trial by the contrivance of persons acting in the interest of his adversary. Messenger v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 6 Daly, 190, Affirming 48 How. Pr. 542.

A plaintiff has no right to be surprised by evidence within the issues. If, however, he is, he must find out his surprise at the trial, and he can then apply to the court for leave to withdraw a juror, or submit to a nonsuit. People v. Marks, 10 How. Pr. 261.

"The plaintiff began suit for damages for malicious prosecution of bankruptcy proceedings instituted by defendants without alleging that they were taken against him without probable cause and with malice. On the trial of the action, it was held that the complaint was not sufficient, and that the plaintiff be allowed to withdraw a juror on the payment of costs, and amend the complaint by inserting 'without probable cause and malice.'" St. John v. Duncan, 2 N. Y. Month. L. Bull. 20.

The power of the circuit court, in a proper case, to permit a juror to be withdrawn, or to order a nonsuit, is undoubted; but there is no necessary connection between the two processes. The withdrawal of a juror operates to continue the cause, and does not of itself entitle the defendant to a judgment of any kind. If a nonsuit be properly granted the withdrawal of a juror as preliminary thereto is entirely superfluous and harmless. But if judgment of nonsuit be rendered merely because a juror has been withdrawn, such judgment is founded upon a misapprehension of the legal effect of withdrawing a juror, and is erroneous. Planer v. Smith, 40 Wis. 31. In this case the court said: "The judgment before us is erroneous because it was evidently rendered on the theory that judgment must necessarily follow the withdrawal of a juror. But were any judgment proper, it should only be a judgment of nonsuit, which, of course, would be no bar to another action for the same cause."

Where defendant moved to exclude all the evidence, and plaintiff's counsel, instead of asking leave to withdraw a juror, asked leave to introduce further testimony, which was denied, and defendant pressed his motion and to discharge the jury, which was allowed, it was held that "while such a practice is wholly without precedent, so far as our knowledge of practice goes, yet it is not difficult to prescribe as to its legal effect. Such a motion can be regarded only as an expressed consent, on the part of the defendant, to the withdrawal of a juror by the plaintiff, and that the cause might stand continued to another term, and when allowed by the court no other effect could legally be attributed to it. The defendant having so consented, the court could not properly even give judgment as in case of nonsuit." Bohmann v. Chicago, 15 Ill. App. 48. The court said: "It was held in Chandler v. Bicknell, 5 Cow. 30, that where the plaintiff is allowed to withdraw a juror, against the consent of the defendant, the latter was entitled to move for judgment as in case of nonsuit. That, however, is not allowed under our practice. In Schofield v. Settley, 31 Ill. 515, the court says: 'The practical effect of withdrawing a juror, in our practice, is not that it shall operate as a nonsuit, but merely to carry the cause over to another term.'"

Where a party to a suit is surprised by an unlooked-for construction of one of the rules of the court upon which he has relied in making out his case, the jury will be withdrawn and the cause continued. Sheldon v. Bahner, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. 16.

But in Wolcott v. Studebaker, 34 Fed. Rep. 8, where the court was about to direct the verdict for the defendant, and the plaintiff asked then for a nonsuit, it was held: "It is not our practice to grant what is technically known as a nonsuit. The proper practice would be for the plaintiff to ask to withdraw a juror and discontinue the case." In this case the court said: "There is a statutory provision of this state [Illinois] to the effect that every person desiring to suffer a nonsuit shall be debarred from doing so unless he do so before the jury retires from the bar. As I am advised, it was the practice of Judge Drummond, applying by way of analogy this statute to such a case, and it is the practice of Judge Blodgett, to allow the plaintiff before the jury retires to withdraw a juror and discontinue. So I shall permit the plaintiff to take that course."

In Schechter v. Denver, L. & G. R. Co., 8 Colo. App. 25, 44 Pac. 761, in an action for injury to property from a railroad, plaintiff's counsel asked leave to withdraw a juror, and submit to nonsuit. Both requests were denied by the court, who then withdrew the case from the jury and ordered a judgment of nonsuit entered. It was held that under Colo. Civ. Code, § 166, providing that an involuntary nonsuit may be granted upon motion of the defendant, the court may sua sponte, or on motion of either party, grant a nonsuit in every case where there is such a failure of evidence that a verdict if found would be set aside. The court said: "But, in our view, it is not necessary to authoritatively decide whether or not a court can order a nonsuit of its own motion, as in this case the request of both parties was tantamount to a motion, and must be so regarded."

III. Effect of withdrawal of juror in criminal cases.

The withdrawal of a juror is held, with but few exceptions, not to be a bar to a further trial. But where the discretion of the court is apparently abused by allowing the prosecuting attorney more time to look for further evidence, it is held to be a bar.

In Kinloch's Case, Fost. C. L. 16, 22, 1 Wils. 157, after a plea of not guilty of treason, the defendants desired to plead to the jurisdiction and a juror was withdrawn, and the jury were discharged upon the motion of the prisoner's counsel, and at the prisoner's request and with the consent of the attorney general. The court overruled the plea, and ordered that the prisoners should plead over to the treason, and they pleaded not guilty, and the same jury was sworn and charged and both defendants found guilty. A motion in arrest of judgment on the ground that the last trial was a nullity on account of the jury having been sworn and charged in the previous proceedings, was overruled.

And where a trial for murder had been commenced and part of the witnesses examined, and it was discovered that an alien was upon the jury, and the prosecuting attorney moved that the juror be withdrawn and a new juror be sworn in his place, it was held to be regular, under Ill. Rev. Laws, 381, Gale's Stat. 397, § 11, providing that in case of the death, sickness, or nonattendance of any grand or petit juror, after he shall have been sworn upon the jury, or where any such juror as aforesaid, after being sworn as aforesaid, shall, for any reasonable cause, be dismissed or discharged, it shall be lawful for the court to cause others, if necessary, to be summoned, and sworn in his or their stead. Stone v. People, 3 Ill. 326.

And where one of the jurors was withdrawn from the panel without the defendant's consent, and the jury were discharged in a prosecution for highway robbery, and the defendant was remanded to prison, it was held that a judgment on a subsequent verdict for guilty could not be arrested on the ground that a jury sworn and charged in a criminal case cannot be discharged. Com. v. Bowden, 9 Mass. 494. In this case the court said: "The ancient strictness of the law upon this subject has very much abated in the English courts; nor would it be consistent with the genius of our government or laws to use compulsory means to effect an agreement among jurors. The practice of withdrawing a juror, where there existed no prospect of a verdict, has frequently been adopted at criminal trials in this court, and the exception taken in this case cannot prevail."

48 L. R. A.

So, where two were indicted for conspiracy to defraud, and one was acquitted, and the jury being unable to agree on a verdict as to the other, the court, without consent of the prisoner, ordered a juror to withdraw, and the rest being called, and only eleven answering, they were discharged, it was held that the court may, in their discretion, in a criminal case, discharge a jury who are unable to agree on a verdict, and against the consent of the defendant, who may be brought to trial a second time for the same offense. People v. Olcott, 2 Johns. Cas. 301.

And in an indictment for a misdemeanor, where it was discovered after the trial had begun that one of the jurors was biased, and evidence of this fact was received over the objection of the defendant, and the court ordered the juror to be withdrawn and the case continued without the consent of the defendant, it was held that this did not prevent a second trial. United States v. Morris, 1 Curt. C. C. 23, Fed. Cas. No. 15,815. In this case the court said: "The rule of the common law, as shown by the authorities cited by the defendant's counsel, is, that neither party has a right of challenge after the jury is sworn for cause then existing. But it by no means follows that it is not in the power of the court, at the suggestion of one of the parties, or upon its own motion, to interpose and withdraw from the panel a juror utterly unfit, in the apprehension of every honest man, to remain there."

In Com. v. Purchase, 2 Pick. 521, 13 Am. Dec. 452, where the jury in a capital case failed to agree, and the prisoner was put upon his trial before another jury, reference was made to Com. v. Bowden, 9 Mass. 494, where the jury failed to agree, and a juror was withdrawn without the consent of the prisoner and the case committed to another jury which convicted, and the court said: "The precedent, however, has been followed in many instances since, in trials not capital; and in one case at Plymouth. In a trial for capital arson, the jury were discharged of the case under similar circumstances, and on another trial at the succeeding term a conviction of the burning of a dwelling house, but not in the night-time, took place and judgment followed. In this latter case no question was made as to the regularity of the second trial."

And where a defendant in a prosecution for felony is taken ill on the trial, and the court is satisfied, by the opinion of physicians or otherwise, that he is too ill to be present in open court at every stage of the trial, the cause should be either temporarily continued to await his convalescence, or a juror should be withdrawn and the cause continued for the term. Brown v. State, 38 Tex. 482.

But in some cases the withdrawal of a juror has been held to operate as a discharge of the defendant.

As in State v. Ephraim, 19 N. C. (2 Dev. & B. L.) 162, where it was held that the withdrawal of a juror and the discharge of the jury against the consent of the defendant in a capital case entitled the defendant to his discharge. In this case after the trial the jury came into court and declared that they were not likely to agree, and two of the jurors stated that they were unwell, and the court ordered a juror to be withdrawn and the jury to be discharged. The court said that if the record showed that the jurors were so sick as to render it dangerous to health it would have been different; but it was not shown that the discharge was necessary in this case.

In State v. Morrison, 20 N. C. (3 Dev. & B. L.) 115, the court said that in the case of State v. Ephraim, 19 N. C. (2 Dev. & B. L.) 162, "we held that a jury charged in a case of capital felony cannot be discharged before rendering a verdict, but for evident, urgent, overruling necessity, arising from some matter occurring during the trial, which was beyond human foresight and control. But in the trial of issues on indictments for misdemeanors the rule is different."

And after a prisoner has pleaded to an indictment and the jury sworn and evidence offered, if the public prosecutor without the prisoner's consent withdraw a juror because he is unprepared with his evidence, the prisoner cannot afterwards be tried on the same indictment, and if he is, it is a good cause for arresting the judgment. People v. Barrett, 2 Cal. 304, Reversing 2 Cal. 100. In this case the court said: "Without denying the right of courts to withdraw a juror in criminal causes, and put the defendant on his trial a second time, it is evident this power should not be lightly used, but confined as much as may be to cases of very urgent necessity, where, by the act of God, or by some sudden and unforeseen accident, it is impossible to proceed without manifest injustice to the public, or the defendant himself. We do not mean, at present, to define all, or any, of the cases in which this practice may be pursued, but we all agree that a defendant ought, in no case, to be put on a second trial for the same offense, where a juror has been discharged on no other ground than because the public prosecutor found himself unable to proceed for the want of sufficient testimony to convict, and where this inability was the consequence of his not taking the necessary measures to obtain it. To discharge a juror under such circumstances would be liable to great abuse and oppression."

In conclusion, it may be said that the weight of authority now is that a juror may be withdrawn and the case tried before another jury either in criminal or civil cases. But if a juror is withdrawn in a felony case by an abuse of discretion of the trial judge, there is some risk of its being held to be bar to a further prosecution. Whilst it is within the discretion of the court, the practice is in reality a relic of antiquity, the supposition being that the only way to get rid of a jury is to call them by name and if eleven only respond the trial must stop; therefore when one juror was taken out of the box and the jury were called, and the court suddenly discovered that they had only eleven jurors, the trial ceased. The ordinary practice throughout this country is that when a party is suddenly taken by surprise during the trial by his witnesses testifying directly opposite to what he has reason to believe they will say, and knows that he can prove the facts alleged by other witnesses, or when, by an unexpected ruling on pleadings a just claim is prejudiced, the court on a proper application by affidavit for continuance on account of want of evidence or of its own motion in matters on pleadings usually makes an order that "swearing of the jury is set aside and the case continued" instead of going through the formula of taking one of the jurors out of the jury box. While this is in effect the usual practice, the courts have a right to withdraw a juror and continue the case. I. T.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

James CANSLER

v.

G. N. PENLAND, Appt.

(125 N. C. 578.)

1. A contract by which a sheriff and tax collector turns over the tax list to another person, with an agreement to give him a certain commission for collecting the taxes for certain years, is illegal and void on grounds of public policy, under Code, § 2084, which provides that the sheriff shall not "let to farm, in any manner, his county or any part of it."
2. The defense that a contract is invalid on grounds of public policy cannot be waived by failure to plead it.

(December 22, 1899.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Macon County in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover the amount alleged to be due plaintiff under a contract by which defendant was to collect taxes which it was plaintiff's duty as county tax collector to do. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—For public policy in respect to transfer of an officer's salary, see Schwenk v. Wyckoff (N. J.) 9 L. R. A. 221; Bowery Nat. Bank v. Wilson (N. Y.) 9 L. R. A. 706, and note; and State v. Williamson (Mo.) 21 L. R. A. 827.

For sale by postmaster of his furniture and fixtures, with agreement to resign his office and recommend appointment of the other party, see Edwards v. Bandle (Ark.) 38 L. R. A. 174. 48 L. R. A.

Messrs. Simmons, Pou, & Ward, for appellant:

Such contracts are expressly forbidden by the laws of the state.

1 N. C. Code, § 2084.

Such contracts are in violation of common law, and are void because violations of public policy.

Basket v. Moss, 115 N. C. 448, 20 S. E. 733.

It is not too late to make this defense for the first time in the supreme court.

Oscangan v. Winchester Repeating Arms Co. 103 U. S. 261, 26 L. ed. 539.

Messrs. Shepherd & Busbee for appellee.

Faircloth, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for an alleged balance due the plaintiff by the defendant on the following facts: The plaintiff was sheriff and tax collector of Macon county, and the tax list was in his hands for collection for the years 1891 and 1892. Plaintiff and defendant contracted with each other that the defendant was to collect the taxes for those years, and to receive a commission of 2½ per cent for making collections, and the tax list was turned over to the defendant by the plaintiff. This action was commenced in 1894. The matter was referred, and the result was a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $93.02, with interest and costs. Appeal by the defendant.

In this court the defendant contends that the contract was illegal and void, and that the plaintiff cannot maintain his action. This question has not heretofore been presented to this court, and the defendant's counsel disclaims any insinuation that the contract was corruptly made, or that the parties intended to violate the law. We agree with counsel that the contract was illegal and void, on the grounds of public policy. Code, § 2084, says: "No sheriff shall let to farm, in any manner, his county, or any part of it, under pain," etc.; meaning his office. There is no question of fraudulent purpose in the case. The question is one of policy and safety to the public interests, and that is highly important. There can be no doubt that a sheriff may employ a deputy or other private person to assist him, but he cannot delegate his authority to another, as that would tend to injure the public service. The public has an interest in the proper performance of their duties by public officers, and would be prejudiced by agreements tending to impair an officer's efficiency, or in any way interfere with or disturb the due execution of the duties of the office. The office of sheriff and tax collector is one of public confidence and fidelity to a public trust, and cannot be a matter of bargain and sale. It requires good faith and duty. Under the present contract, the duty, the power, and the control of the tax collector's office are placed in the hands of the defendant. True, the sheriff's bond is liable for the amount of collectible taxes, but the public trust and confidence are not secured by his bond. As to the validity of contracts, the law makes no distinction between acts mala in se and acts mala prohibita or wrong simply because they are prohibited by statute. When a statute intends to prohibit an act, it must be held that its violation is illegal, without regard to the reason of the inhibition, or the morality or immorality of the act; and that is so, without regard to the ignorance of the parties as to the prohibiting statute. The law would be false to itself if it allowed a contract to be enforced in the courts against the intent and express provisions of the law. The above principles were recognized and expressed in Puckett v. Alexander, 102 N. C. 95, 3 L. R. A. 43, 8 S. E. 767, where a graduated physician had not been licensed, but practiced, and undertook to collect under a contract, in violation of Code, §§ 3122, 3132. It was held that the contract was void in its inception.

The plaintiff's counsel in this court then took the position that, if the contract was illegal and unenforceable, the defendant had waived it by not pleading the illegality, and by submitting to an account on the merits of the controversy. That is true generally, under the Code practice, but there are some matters that the party cannot waive, and the authorities are against the proposition in such cases. In Oscanyan v. Winchester Repeating Arms Co. 103 U. S. 268, 26 L. ed. 539, the contract under consideration was held illegal and void, because it was against public policy, which was not pleaded, and the plaintiff insisted on the waiver. Coppell v. Hall, 7 Wall. 542, 19 L. ed. 244, is incorporated in the case. The court said there can be no waiver in such cases. "The defense is allowed, not for the sake of the defendant, but of the law itself. . . . It will not enforce what it has forbidden and denounced. . . . Whenever the illegality appears, whether the evidence comes from one side or the other, the disclosure is fatal to the case. No consent of the defendant can neutralize its effect. A stipulation in the most solemn form to waive the objection would be tainted with the vice of the original contract, and void for the same reasons. Whenever the contamination reaches, it destroys. The principle to be extracted from all the cases is that the law will not lend its support to a claim founded upon its violation." When an action is instituted in a court which has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the court will not proceed to do a vain thing, but will stop, without waiting for a plea denying its authority to proceed. So, under our Constitution and statutes, no personal contract of a married woman will be enforced against her (with a few exceptions), if the court can discover in any part of the record that she is married, although her coverture is not pleaded. Green v. Ballard, 116 N. C. 144, 21 S. E. 192; Weathers v. Borders, 124 N. C. 610, 32 S. E. 881. The principle is that, when the court discovers that it is invoked to aid in enforcing an illegal transaction, the court ex mero motu will withdraw its hand. The common law was provident in respect to public interests. It would not allow the sale of an office to be the foundation of an action, because it was against public policy. Parsons v. Thompson, 1 H. Bl. 322; Blachford v. Preston, 8 T. R. 89. Such a sale was and is invalid, because the law could not know in advance whether the grantee or bargainee would be competent to discharge the trust in the public interest. Reynel's Case, 9 Coke, 95a. For the above reasons, we feel it to be our duty to declare that the judgment of the superior court was erroneous.

Reversed.

Clark, J.: 1 concur in the result.

Rehearing denied.

John SLAUGHTER

v.

N. O'BERRY, App't.

(.....N. C.....)

1. Doubt as to the constitutionality of NOTE.—As to necessity that ordinance for public improvement be reasonable, see Hawes v. Chicago (Ill.) 30 L. R. A. 225.

As to necessity that ordinances in general be reasonable, see People v. Armstrong (Mich.) 2 L. R. A. 721, and some cases in note; Re Ah You (Cal.) 11 L. R. A. 408; Olympia v. Mann (Wash.) 12 L. R. A. 150; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Crown Point (Ind.) 35 L. R. A. 684; and People ex rel. Akin v. Kipley (Ill.) 41 L. R. A. 775.

an ordinance relating to the construction of a public improvement will be resolved in favor of the property rights of individuals as against the power of the city to invade them.

2. An ordinance which provides that a city shall do the work and furnish the materials for making a sewer connection up to within 3 feet of the building to be connected is void as an unreasonable invasion of the rights of property owners, although the city may properly specify the materials to be used, and provide that the work shall be done only by some person licensed by the city to make such connections, and that the work shall be done under the supervision of the city inspector.

(March 13, 1900.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Wayne County in favor of plaintiff in a mandamus proceeding to compel defendant to permit plaintiff to make connections with a public sewer. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. C. Davis for appellant.

Mr. W. C. Munroe, for appellee:

A municipal corporation possesses, and can exercise, the following powers, and no others: First, those granted by express words; second, those necessarily or fairly implied in, or incident to, the powers expressly granted; third, those essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation, not simply convenient, but indispensable.

Dill. Mun. Corp. 2d ed. § 89 (55); State v. Webber, 107 N. C. 965, 12 S. E. 598.

Municipal corporations cannot, under the claim of exercising the police power, substantially prohibit a lawful trade unless it is so conducted as to be injurious or dangerous to public health.

State v. Taft, 118 N. C. 1193, 32 L. R. A. 122, 23 S. E. 970; Rosenbaum v. Newbern, 118 N. C. 83, 32 L. R. A. 123, 24 S. E. 1.

Furches, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff is a citizen and the owner of a house and lot in the city of Goldsboro, and Goldsboro is an incorporated city and the owner of a public sewerage system. The defendant, O'Berry, is the chairman of the sewerage committee of said city, with power to grant privileges of connection with said city sewerage, upon specified terms, mentioned in the ordinances of said city. Among the specified requirements of the city ordinances are the following: That no connection shall be made, but by some person elected and licensed by the city to make such connection; that said work shall then be done under the supervision and direction of the city inspector, and that the city shall furnish the materials and do the work of making such connection to within 3 feet of the building to be so connected with said sewerage; that the application for such connection shall be in writing, setting forth the location of the building to be connected, and the purposes for which the sewerage is to be used, and a survey and plan of said sewerage, containing an estimate of the cost of said connection; and that the applicant shall deposit a sufficient amount of money with the city to defray the expenses of such connection. The plaintiff has been elected and licensed to make such connections, and has made his application in writing, and furnished a survey of the premises, with estimates of cost of said connection, but declined to make the deposit required by the ordinance, and asked the privilege of furnishing his own material and of doing his own work in making the connection, under the direction and supervision of the city inspector. This application of the plaintiff was refused for the reason that he had not made the deposit required by the ordinance, and because he proposed to furnish his own material and do his own work in making the connection. These are the substantial facts as we understand them, and present the question of consideration, and determination.

The city being the owner of a public sewerage, it has the right, and it is its duty, to protect the same from improper uses and connections. But this should be done in a reasonable manner, and so as not to affect private rights further than is necessary for that purpose. Where it becomes necessary to invade private property, it must be done with the consent of the owner, or under the doctrine of eminent domain, when the owner would be entitled to compensation. Neither can the city, in the exercise of its corporate powers, interfere with the rights of the owner over his property, nor with his personal rights, where it is not necessary to do so for the public benefit. From a consideration of these principles, it seems to us that the city had the right to say what is a proper connection with its sewerage; that it had a right to require that this connection should be made by its authorized agent, and under the direction and supervision of its city inspector; and that only suitable material should be used in making such connection. But with these, it seems to us, its rightful powers ceased. The plans and specifications for this connection had been made and approved. The connection was a proper one to be made, or the plans and specifications filed by the plaintiff would not have been approved. The plaintiff was a licensed officer of the city to do such work, under the direction and supervision of the city inspector. So the question comes down to this: Should the plaintiff be allowed to furnish his own material, subject to the inspection and approval of the city inspector, and to do his own work on his own premises, or shall he be compelled to hire the city to furnish this material and to do his work? We see no reason why he should be required to do so. We can see no benefit the city is to derive from such a requirement, unless it be a profit on the material or the work to be done, or to furnish a job for some favorite of the corporate authorities. We do not say this is so, but we say that, if it is not then we see no reason for such requirement, and no public benefit to be derived from such requirement. And, if it is not required for the public good, it is an unnecessary invasion of the personal and property rights of the plaintiff, ultra vires, and unlawful. Too much stress should not be put upon the fact that the plaintiff is a licensed officer to make the connection,—“to tap the main.” That fact supplies only one of the points made in this case, and therefore enters into its consideration. But, had he not been such licensed officer, it seems to us that it would have been only necessary for the plaintiff to have gotten someone licensed by the city to do such work,—to make the connection with the main,—and the other work, such as supplying the material, digging the trench, and covering the pipe, he might have been allowed to do himself, as the city was in no way interested in that. Where a city has the power to erect a public improvement, and to control, manage, and protect the same, the line of demarcation is so small and so delicately drawn between such power and the rights of the individual citizens of the corporation, that it is difficult to run and mark it so as to give the corporation its proper powers without infringing upon individual rights and property rights. But, as delicate as this duty is, it seems to us that in this case the line of demarcation is plainly apparent. But, if it was in doubt, it would have to be resolved against the defendants, and in favor of the plaintiff's individual rights. 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. ¶ 89; State v. Webber, 107 N. C. 962, 12 S. E. 598; Edgerton v. Goldsboro Water Co. (N. C.) 35 S. E. 243.

We are therefore of the opinion that the city had the right to require that this connection should be made by its licensed officer; that materials furnished should be proper for such work, and subject to the inspection and approval of the city inspector; and that the work of putting them in should be done under the supervision of the city inspector. But we are also of the opinion that the city had no right to compel the plaintiff to buy the material from it, nor had it the right to compel the plaintiff to pay it to do the work we have specified and pointed out above in this opinion.

The plaintiff was entitled to the mandamus, and the judgment of the court below is affirmed.

J. B. EDGERTON

v.

GOLDSBORO WATER COMPANY et al.,
Appts.

(.....N. C.....)

The cost of providing water for a city, although expressly authorized by charter, is not a “necessary expense” of the city, within the meaning of Const. art. 7, § 7, which prohibits indebtedness or taxation of a city for anything except necessary expenses, without a majority vote of the qualified voters

NOTE.—As to purposes for which money may be raised and expended by municipal corporations, see Daggett v. Colgan (Cal.) 14 L. R. A. 474, and note; Jacksonville Electric Light Co. 48 L. R. A.

(Clark, J., dissents.)

(March 6, 1900.)

A PPEAL by defendant water company from a judgment of the Superior Court for Wayne County in favor of plaintiff in a proceeding brought to enjoin defendant city from paying to the defendant water company the rentals for water supplies. Modified and affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. W. C. Munroe and L. F. Dortch, for appellants:

The state Constitution, art. 8, § 4, provides that “it shall be the duty of the legislature to provide for the organization of cities, towns, and incorporated villages, and to restrict their power of taxation, assessment, borrowing money, contracting debts, and loaning their credit, so as to prevent abuses in assessment, and in contracting debts by such municipal corporations.”

The grant of such a power carries with it, by necessary implication, the power to endow cities with the usual and necessary incidents of an incorporated city.

Wilson v. Charlotte, 74 N. C. 757.

The legislature has incorporated the city of Goldsboro, and required its authorities to provide water and to take all necessary steps to prevent and extinguish fires.

This exercise of the power by the legislature was within the discretion of the legislature, and not reviewable by the courts.

Harries v. Wright, 121 N. C. 181, 28 S. E. 209.

Furnishing water for the use of its inhabitants being a power usually incident to cities, the legislature had the right to require the city authorities to furnish water, and the cost became a necessary expense of this city.

Wilson v. Charlotte, 74 N. C. 758.

If it was a necessary expense to furnish water, it was not necessary to submit the question to a vote of the people.

Brodnaz v. Groom, 64 N. C. 249; Sharer v. Salisbury Comrs. 68 N. C. 292; Wilson v. Charlotte, 74 N. C. 754; Evans v. Cumberland County Comrs. 80 N. C. 154; Vaughn v. Forsyth County Comrs. 117 N. C. 429, 23 S. E. 354.

Furnishing water was a necessary expense.

Smith v. Newbern, 70 N. C. 18, 16 Am. Rep. 766; Tucker v. Raleigh, 75 N. C. 267.

This principle became a part of the contract, and no subsequent decision could annul it.

Thompson v. Lee County, 3 Wall. 331, 18 L. ed. 178; Kenosha v. Lamson, 9 Wall. 477, 19 L. ed. 725; Olcott v. Fond du Lac County Supers. 16 Wall. 678, 21 L. ed. 382.

Messrs. Allen & Dortch and Aycock & Daniels for appellee.

v. Jacksonville (Fla.) 30 L. R. A. 540; Sun Print. & Pub. Assn. v. New York (N. Y.) 37 L. R. A. 788; and Mayo v. Washington (N. C.) 40 L. R. A. 163.

Furches, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff is a citizen and taxpayer of the city of Goldsboro, and brings this action to enjoin and restrain the city authorities from paying the defendant the Goldsboro Water Company $1,395, this being the semi-annual rental for water supplies furnished the city of Goldsboro by said water company, which the plaintiff alleges that the defendant city of Goldsboro is about to do. The plaintiff alleges that this money was collected by the levy of taxes upon the citizens and property of said city, and can only be used and paid out for the lawful necessary expenses of the city government; that the furnishing of water to the city by the water company is not a necessary expense of the city government, and that the same was wrongfully and unlawfully levied and collected, and that it would be unlawful to pay the same to the defendant water company; that defendant city was never authorized by any special act of the legislature to levy any such tax, or to collect the same, or to submit a proposition to the voters of said city, and that in fact no such proposition has ever been submitted or voted upon by said city. It is admitted by defendants that said money was levied and collected as a tax on defendant city; that there has been no act of the legislature authorizing a submission of the question to the vote of the people, and that no such vote has been taken. And it is not denied but what the city was about to make the payment, as alleged by the plaintiff. But the defendants allege and say that the charter of the city of Goldsboro provides (Priv. Laws 1899, chap. 171, § 27) "that among the powers hereby conferred on the board of aldermen, they shall provide water, provide for repairing the streets," etc.; that this made it their duty to provide a supply of water for the city, and made water a legislative necessity, and did away with the requirement of article 7, § 7, of the Constitution; that, so understanding the law, the city contracted with the assignor of the defendant water company to furnish the city of Goldsboro a supply of water (as specified in said contract) for the public use of the city and for the private use of its citizens, the citizens paying a stipulated price for the use of the water; that under the terms of the contract the city was to pay the water company $2,790 per year in semiannual instalments, and the payment of the money sought to be enjoined is one of the semiannual payments; that upon these facts the court below granted the injunction, and the defendants appealed.

This presents a constitutional question,—the power of the defendant city to levy, collect, and pay out money. But it seems to us that it has been substantially decided by the recent adjudications of this court. A city has no right to levy and collect a tax unless it has legislative power to do so. It has no powers except those given by legislative authority, in express terms or by necessary implication, in aid of express powers. 1 Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 80, quoted with approval in State v. Webber, 107 N. C. 962, 12 S. E. 598. But it is contended by defendant that, as the charter of Goldsboro provides that it "shall have power to provide water for the city," this is an express legislative power, and, the power being conferred, the courts will not undertake to direct or supervise the manner in which this shall be done. It must be conceded that, if the first proposition be true, it had the power to levy and collect the taxes, the second proposition is necessarily true, and the courts cannot and will not undertake to supervise their action as to the manner of its execution, unless a manifest abuse of power be shown. It has been held by this court that, where a town levied a tax in aid of the common schools of the town, under and within the provisions of an act of the legislature not passed according to the requirements of the Constitution, such levy is void, for the reason that the act had not been passed as provided by article 2, § 14, of the Constitution; common schools not being one of the necessary expenses incident to the corporate government. Rollman v. Washington, 122 N. C. 39, 30 S. E. 118. The court has also held that an electric-light plant was not a necessary expense incident to the government of a town, and that an attempt to establish one by the city, to be paid for and supported by taxation without having the required constitutional legislation, was ultra vires, and void. Mayo v. Washington Comrs. 122 N. C. 5, 40 L. R. A. 163, 29 S. E. 343. It has been held by this court that a waterworks plant was not a necessary incident to the administration of the city government, and that an effort to levy and collect a tax out of the city for that purpose, without having the required legislative power to do so, was unconstitutional, and void. Charlotte v. Shepard, 120 N. C. 411, 27 S. E. 109, and this opinion was cited with approval in Mayo v. Washington Comrs. 122 N. C. 5, 40 L. R. A. 163, 29 S. E. 343. From these authorities it must be held that it is not one of the necessary expenses of a city or town government to furnish the city or town with a supply of water. And we do not understand the defendants to seriously contend that this is not generally so, although they cite Tucker v. Raleigh, 75 N. C. 271, Smith v. Newbern, 70 N. C. 14, 16 Am. Rep. 766, and Smith v. Goldsboro, 121 N. C. 352, 28 S. E. 479. But it does not seem to us that these cases sustain the contention that the water contracted for in this case was a necessity to the town government. In Tucker v. Raleigh, it appeared that a part of the little account sued on was for cleaning and repairing public wells. This is covered by the case of Spaulding v. Peabody, 153 Mass. 129, 10 L. R. A. 397, 26 N. E. 421, cited with approval in Mayo v. Washington Comrs. 122 N. C. 5, 40 L. R. A. 163, 29 S. E. 343, as being allowed by reason of ancient custom. The cases of Tucker v. Raleigh and Smith v. Goldsboro are cited, discussed, and disposed of in Mayo v. Washington Comrs. In Smith v. Newbern, 70 N. C. 14, 16 Am. Rep. 766, it is incidentally stated, in the argument of the case, that the city would have the right to bore an artesian well. If it had held that a city might have such a well, we do not think it would sustain the defendants' contention in this case. But that was not the point in that case, and was in no respect necessary to its decision, and it could, at most, be regarded as no more than an obiter. But it was contended with earnestness by the defendants that, because the charter said it should be the duty of the city authorities to supply the city with water, this made it a necessary expense. We cannot give our assent to this proposition. To put the most favorable construction upon this language, it can only mean that they should do so in a lawful way. To put the meaning upon this provision of the charter that defendants contend for would be to destroy the provisions of article 7, § 7, of the Constitution, which provides that "no county, city, town, or other municipal corporation shall contract any debt, pledge its faith, or loan its credit, nor shall any tax be levied or collected by any officers of the same except for the necessary expenses thereof, unless by a vote of the majority of the qualified voters therein." If the legislature had the power to make a thing necessary by saying that it should be done, or even saying that it was necessary, this wise provision of the Constitution would be utterly destroyed. It seems to us that this proposition is so self-evident that it needs no authority to support it. But we think it is sustained by State v. Webber, 107 N. C. 962, 12 S. E. 598. In that case it was attempted to make the owners of certain houses guilty of keeping houses of ill fame, whether they occupied them or not. The court held this could not be done; that saying they were the keepers of such houses did not make them so. See State v. Clay, 118 N. C. 1234, 24 S. E. 492; State v. Thomas, 118 N. C. 1221, 24 S. E. 535. The money sought to be enjoined has been collected, but it is still in the possession and control of the city of Goldsboro. But, if it has been illegally levied and collected, the wrongful paying it out may be enjoined. Stanly County Comrs. v. Snuggs, 121 N. C. 394, 39 L. R. A. 439, 28 S. E. 539. If the authority of the city to levy and collect this tax was doubtful (which, to us, does not seem to be so), that doubt would have to be resolved against the defendants. 1 Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 91, and note 2. We are therefore of the opinion that the levy and collection of this money was ultra vires, and unconstitutional; that to pay it out to the waterworks company, as it is proposed to do, would be unconstitutional and unlawful, for this reason the injunction should be continued as to the payment of this money to the defendant water company for water furnished the city of Goldsboro.

Holding as we do, as to the question of power, we do not find it necessary to consider the question as to the quality of the water. The injunction, modified in accordance with the opinion, is continued.

Modified and affirmed.

48 L. R. A.

Clark, J., dissenting:

Without calling in question our decisions that waterworks are not a municipal necessity, I think that water for public sanitation and protection of public buildings is such necessity, and that, when the legislature of the state has required the town to procure water, to the above extent at least, it is a necessary purpose. The courts have nothing to do with the wisdom, policy, or necessity of statutes which require an exercise of the police power. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. State ex rel. Omaha (Neb.) 43 Am. St. Rep. 557, 572, and notes (47 Neb. 549, 41 L. R. A. 481, 66 N. W. 624); Morris v. Columbus (Ga.) 66 Am. St. Rep. 243, and notes (102 Ga. 792, 42 L. R. A. 175, 30 S. E. 850).

STATE of North Carolina

v.

Sherwood HIGGS, Appt.

(.....N. C.....)

1. The jurisdiction of the mayor over violation of an ordinance will not be defeated by the fact that a provision in the ordinance attempts to make his jurisdiction exclusive, if the laws give him at least a coordinate jurisdiction.
2. An ordinance is not void for uncertainty by reason of a provision giving the mayor discretion to impose a fine of $50 or imprisonment for thirty days upon conviction, where the statute makes the violation of the ordinance a misdemeanor, and the Constitution of the state makes exactly the same provision as to the punishment for misdemeanors.
3. An ordinance making it a penal offense to maintain a sign suspended or projecting over a sidewalk is not included in charter power to open streets and keep streets and sidewalks free and clear from obstructions, and is unreasonable, oppressive, and void as applied to a sign which does not impede, delay, obstruct, or in any way endanger the use of the sidewalk.

(Clark, J., dissents.)

(March 27, 1900.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Wake County convicting him of violating an ordinance forbidding the suspension of signs over sidewalks. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. R. O. Burton and A. Jones, for appellant:

It is necessary to the validity of an ordinance that it have a penalty.

State v. Cainan, 94 N. C. 883; Horr & B. Mun. Pol. Ord. §§ 77 et seq.; Dillon, Mun. Corp. 336.

The municipality cannot make a violation of its ordinances a crime; it is merely a civil matter, punishable by a pecuniary penalty, and the statute so intends.

NOTE.—For power of municipal corporation as to encroachments on streets by signboards, etc., or things overhanging streets, see note to Hagerstown v. Wiltmer (Md.) 89 L. R. A. 66 pages 661, 667.

State v. Webber, 107 N. C. 962, 12 S. E. 598; State v. Earnhardt, 107 N. C. 789, 12 S. E. 426; State v. Stevens, 114 N. C. 873, 19 S. E. 861; Raleigh Charter, Priv. Laws 1899, chap. 153, §§ 9, 11, 12, 21, 33, 35, 80; Louisburg Comrs. v. Harris, 52 N. C. (7 Jones, L.) 281; Horr & B. Mun. Pol. Ord. §§ 147, 150, 155, 158, 168, 169, 170, 170a; Dillon, Mun. Corp. 353, 429, 432.

If the general assembly attempted to confer the power of imprisonment upon the town board, it was a delegation of legislative power which is unconstitutional and void.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 139 et seq.; Louisburg Comrs. v. Harris, 52 N. C. (7 Jones, L.) 281.

If the ordinance has a penalty, it is void for uncertainty. It leaves to the mayor the discretion as to the amount of punishment, —whether he shall impose a fine of $50 or imprison for thirty days. This leaves the matter in just as much uncertainty as if the penalty were not less than $50.

State v. Cainan, 94 N. C. 883; State v. Crenshaw, 94 N. C. 877; State v. Worth, 95 N. C. 615.

The board of aldermen has no power under its charter absolutely to prohibit signs. The power is not conferred and it is inconsistent with the abutter's property interests in the street.

Howard v. Robbins, 1 Lans. 63; Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. 497, 19 L. ed. 984; State v. Edens, 85 N. C. 522; Hawkins v. Sanders, 45 Mich. 491, 8 N. W. 98; Clark v. Lake St. Clair & N. U. River Ice Co. 24 Mich. 508; People v. Carpenter, 1 Mich. 257; Hisey v. Mexico, 61 Mo. App. 248; Goldstraw v. Duokworth, L. R. 5 Q. B. Div. 275; Cushing v. Boston, 128 Mass. 330, 35 Am. Rep. 383; White v. Northwestern N. O. R. Co. 113 N. C. 610, 22 L. R. A. 627, 18 S. E. 330.

In ascertaining what are the reasonable uses of the streets and highways which belong to the abutter, it is proper to consider the uses that others are allowed to make of them.

O'Linda v. Lothrop, 21 Pick. 292; Underwood v. Carney, 1 Cush. 285.

A sign is an important part of a merchant's business: the right to have a sign is a valuable property right. Any ordinance which declares that it shall not project at all is unreasonable, arbitrary, and void. The city may regulate, but cannot forbid in toto.

Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. 497, 19 L. ed. 984; Horr & B. Mun. Pol. Ord. § 230; Angell, Highways, § 263; State v. Taft, 118 N. C. 1192, 32 L. R. A. 122, 23 S. E. 970; State v. Thomas, 118 N. C. 1221, 24 S. E. 535; 1 Dillon, Mun. Corp. 319–321, 327, 328; People v. Carpenter, 1 Mich. 287; Hisey v. Mexico, 61 Mo. App. 248.

If it is competent for the board to forbid all encroachments on the streets, it cannot discriminate. All projections beyond the street line should be forbidden, or none should be.

48 L. R. A.

Livingston v. Wolf, 136 Pa. 519, 20 Atl. 551; Pick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; State v. Tenant, 110 N. C. 609, 15 L. R. A. 423, 14 S. E. 387.

Messrs. Zeb. Vance Walser, Attorney General, and Watson & Gatling for appellee.

Furches, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a prosecution commenced before the mayor of the city of Raleigh for an alleged violation of an ordinance of the city. The ordinance under which the defendant is indicted is as follows:

"Sec. 1. That no sign shall be suspended or projected over the sidewalks in the city of Raleigh.

"Sec. 2. That all signs that are now projected or that are suspended over the sidewalks of the city of Raleigh shall be removed, together with the rods and poles used for suspending or swinging said signs, by the 15th day of August, 1899.

"Sec. 3. Any person or firm violating the provisions of this ordinance or failing to comply with the provisions of the same, shall, upon conviction before the mayor, be fined fifty dollars, or imprisoned thirty days."

The legislature of 1899 (chapter 153, Priv. Acts) enacted a new charter for the city of Raleigh, and our attention is called to the following provisions therein for the purpose of showing the power of the city, which, the state contends, authorized the charge of the court and the verdict of the jury in finding the defendant guilty:

Sections of the charter:

"Sec. 33. That it shall be the duty of the aldermen to attend all the meetings of the board unless unavoidably prevented from doing so, and when convened, a majority of the board shall have power to make, and to provide for the execution of such ordinances, by-laws, rules, and regulations, and such fines, penalties, and forfeitures for their violation as may be authorized by this act, consistent with the laws of the land and necessary for the proper government of the city: provided, that no penalty prescribed by the board of aldermen for the violation of any of the provisions of this act, or of any ordinance, by-law, rule, or regulation made in pursuance hereof, shall exceed fifty dollars fine or thirty days' imprisonment."

"Sec. 80. That all penalties imposed under the provisions of this act or of any ordinance, by-law, or regulation of the city, unless herein otherwise provided, shall be recoverable in the name of the city of Raleigh before the mayor; and all such penalties incurred by any minor shall be recovered from the parent, guardian, or master, as the case may be, of such minor."

"Sec. 34. That among the powers conferred on the board of aldermen are these: . . . Ascertain the location, increase, reduce, and establish the width and grade, regulate the repairs, and keep clear the streets, sidewalks, and alleys of the city; extend, lay out, open, establish the width and grade, keep clean, and maintain others; establish and regulate the public grounds, including Moore Square, Nash Square, and Pullen Park, have charge of, improve, adorn, and maintain the same, and protect the shade trees of the city."

"Sec. 38. That they may require and compel the abatement of all nuisances within the city, or within one mile of the city limits, at the expense of the person causing the same, or the owner or tenant of the ground whereon the same shall be. . . ."

Subsection 6 of § 79 provides: "(6) Any person . . . ; or who shall excavate, construct, build, use, keep, or maintain any cellar, basement, area, passage, entrance, or way under any sidewalk, or build, construct, keep, use, or maintain any veranda, piazza, platform, building, or stairway or other projection or construction upon or over any sidewalk in the city whereby the free and safe passage of persons may be hindered, delayed, obstructed, or in any way endangered, . . . without having first taken out a license therefor, . . . shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon satisfactory proof before the mayor shall be adjudged to pay for every such offense a fine not exceeding fifty dollars, or be imprisoned not exceeding thirty days."

The sections in the charter are not produced seriatim, but as they are presented in the brief and argument of counsel who represented the state.

Upon the trial the state introduced the charter and the ordinances of the city, and the following evidence: "The state then introduced Chief of Police Mullins, who testified that a written notice from the mayor to take down his sign was served on defendant before the beginning of this proceeding, which notice was put in evidence. That the sign was not taken down, and is still up. On cross-examination, the witness stated that the sign was an electric sign, which spelled out Higgs's name by the passage of a current of electricity; that it was an ornament to the street, and did not interfere with passage or vision. It was at its lower end about 14 feet above the sidewalk, projected 4 or 4½ feet from building; was 12 to 14 feet long, about 18 inches wide, made of plank, and apparently a very heavy one; was fastened at the top to a bar of railroad iron, and at the bottom to a round bar of iron. The sign itself hung vertically, and he thought it was as practically secure as the house itself. Did not think there was any danger of falling or being blown down. Had never examined closely the fastenings to the bar of railroad iron. Witness identified the photograph of the sign, which was put in evidence, and which was taken before the lower swinging signs on the street were taken down. The sign which Higgs had swinging to the lower rod, as shown in the photograph, was taken down by him before this proceeding was started. The lower rod was also cut off at the end. Witness said it was still common for porticos or balconies, awnings and signs on awnings, and signs on the outer railing of balconies, and signs projecting a few inches over the sidewalks, to exist. There are many of them in the city. There are balconies in front of many buildings on Fayetteville street, projecting over sidewalk 3 to 4 feet. One over Yarboro House, Henry Building (with J. M. Broughton & Co.'s sign on outer railing; also Foller's, the tailor); one over A. B. Stronach's, with his sign on outer railing. Many awnings in the city which cover the entire sidewalk, some of wood, some of cloth,—some signs on cloth, as Berwanger's stretching clear across sidewalk; and some on wood, as W. B. Mann's at edge or side of awning, and extending over street. Some other signs were allowed to set on sidewalk, as of Watts, the barber. A great many signs on the doorfacing, which project a few inches over the sidewalk, as R. B. Raney's Raleigh Savings Bank's, Boylan, Pearce, & Co.'s, W. E. Jones's, a member of the board of aldermen, Cross & Linehan's. Jones & Powell have steps leading from Fayetteville street down into their cellar. On each side of cellar is an iron railing, and till recently they had suspended on the railing an ice and coal sign. W. H. King & Co.'s drug store projects above some distance over sidewalk, and sign is painted on it, as shown from the photograph. Y. M. C. A. building has steps in street. W. Z. Blake, street commissioner, was introduced by the state, and testified that he measured that morning the distance from the front wall of Higgs's store to center of street. It was 49½ feet. The state then introduced the charter of the city of Raleigh, as contained in chapter 153 of the Private Acts of 1899, and thereupon rested its case. The defendant's counsel contended that the ordinance was void; that on the evidence he was the owner to the center of the street, subject to the easement of the public, and had the right to make the customary and proper use of his property; that he was discriminated against, and that the ordinance was unreasonable and arbitrary and oppressive; that the board of aldermen had no power to adopt it, especially in its form and to the extent they claimed; and that it was an attempt to create a criminal offense, which they had no power to do." His honor charged the jury that if they believed the evidence they should find the defendant guilty. Verdict guilty. Defendant excepted, and appealed from the judgment pronounced.

There were exceptions taken on the argument to the jurisdiction of the mayor of the city to try the case, if the defendant was guilty of a criminal offense, for the reason that he was given exclusive jurisdiction. It was also contended that the ordinance was void for uncertainty, for the reason that it gave the mayor the discretion to fine the defendant, upon conviction, $50, or to imprison him for thirty days. We do not think either of these objections can be sustained. Article 4, § 14, Const., expressly provides for the establishment of such courts for the trial of misdemeanors in cities and towns: and the charter of the city of Raleigh (§ 79, subsec. 6) expressly constitutes the mayor a court for the trial of misdemeanors committed within the city, when the punishment does not exceed a fine of $50 or imprisonment for thirty days. It would therefore seem that the mayor had jurisdiction, unless the ordinance is void, for the reason that it gives the mayor exclusive jurisdiction, and takes from justices of the peace their constitutional rights. But, without discussing that question, we are of the opinion that it is not presented in this case, as it must be conceded that the mayor has a co-ordinate jurisdiction, if not the exclusive jurisdiction, and that is all that is necessary to be established to give him jurisdiction of this offense, if it be an offense. Section 3818 of the Code gives to mayors the jurisdiction of justices of the peace; therefore he had jurisdiction outside of the charter.

Neither do we think the ordinance is void for uncertainty in its penalty or punishment. The ordinance of the city limits the punishment to $50 fine or thirty days' imprisonment; and § 3820 of the Code makes the violation of a city ordinance a misdemeanor, and limits the punishment to a fine not to exceed $50, or imprisonment not to exceed thirty days. This is the exact language of the Constitution, and therefore cannot be unconstitutional, as applied to misdemeanors. It seems to us that it must follow that the ordinance is not void for uncertainty, and, if not void for uncertainty, its violation was a misdemeanor, unless it was void for other reasons than for uncertainty in its punishment. But, if it was void for any reason, it was not unlawful to refuse to obey it, and its violation was no criminal offense.

But the ordinance may not be void (and we do not say that it is) when properly construed, and the defendant still not be guilty; and it seems to us that it has not been properly construed in the trial of this case. Whether the legislature could in express terms authorize the city to require the defendant to take down this sign by the passage of an ordinance, or be guilty of a criminal offense, we very much doubt. But it is not necessary that we should pass upon that question, as we do not consider that it has attempted to give the city authorities that power. And we therefore consider the question from that view of the case, as it must be admitted that they had no such right unless it is given them in the charter of the city.

A municipal corporation is a creature of the legislature, and only has such powers as are expressly given it, or such as are incident to the powers expressly given, and necessary to the execution of the express powers. It seems to be conceded that they had no express power to pass an ordinance requiring the defendant to take down this sign. And we do not mean to say by this that the city authorities undertook to pass a personal ordinance requiring the defendant to take down his sign, but to say they had no express authority to pass a general ordinance requiring all such signs as his (if there are others) to be taken down, the violation of which would be per se a misdemeanor.

But the state contends that the city had express authority to open and grade streets, and clear and keep clear the streets and sidewalks of all obstructions; that the city is the owner of the streets and sidewalks, cujus est solum ejus est usque ad coelum, and that the city authorities have the absolute right to remove any permanent fixture upon or over the streets or sidewalks; that they have the same rights of property over the sidewalks of the city that a private citizen has over his land; and, having this right, they have the right, by the exercise of their arbitrary power, to require the defendant to take down his sign. The fallacies of these contentions are that the mayor and aldermen of the city of Raleigh do not own the streets and sidewalks; that, while the fee may be in the city, it is held in trust for the use and benefit of the public. And the mayor and aldermen are but the agents of the city to look after the condition of the streets and sidewalks for the use and benefit of the public, and they have no power arbitrarily to do anything which interferes with the right of the citizen that the public has not and cannot have any interest in. But the defendant, besides his general interest which he has in common with the public generally, is an abutting owner to this street and sidewalk, and in this way has a special property,—an easement in his frontage upon the street. White v. Northwestern N. C. R. Co. 113 N. C. 612, 22 L. R. A. 627, 18 S. E. 330; Moose v. Carson, 104 N. C. 431, 7 L. R. A. 548, 10 S. E. 689; Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. 497, 19 L. ed. 984. This seemed to be conceded as a general proposition. But the state undertook to distinguish this case, and take it out of the general rule, by alleging that the city of Raleigh was the owner in fee of the street, and for this purpose has inserted in its brief the acts and ordinances locating the city of Raleigh. And, while they might have been introduced on the trial (Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 83), they were not introduced, and we must be governed by the record. But lest it might be inferred that, had they been introduced in evidence, our judgment would have been for the state, we think it best to consider the case as if they had been introduced.

Had they been introduced, we are unable to see that this would have affected the status of the parties, or would have in any way affected the conclusion at which we have arrived. We have assumed that the city was the owner in fee, and sold to the defendant, or those under whom he claims, the lot he now occupies, abutting on Fayetteville street, and, by this sale and purchase, the defendant acquired the rights of an abutting landowner,—an easement which is more than that of the general public, but subject to the lawful government of the city, so far as it is necessary for the use and benefit of the public. The case of Moose v. Carson, 104 N. C. 431, 7 L. R. A. 548, 10 S. E. 689, cited by the state to sustain its contention, we think sustains the position taken by the court. Then, was it necessary for the public benefit—for the public convenience, the public safety—that this sign should be removed? If it was, then the city authorities, under their granted powers, would have the right to remove it. This power would then be one of the powers incident to their express powers granted to them over streets and sidewalks of the city for the benefit of the public, while, on the other hand, the defendant had the right of an abutting owner,—an easement; the right to use his frontage for the benefit of his property, as he pleased, in such a way as not to interfere with the rights of the general public, in safety using the sidewalk for the purpose of traveling the same on foot, and for passing and re-passing. And if his sign in no way impeded, or tended to impede, such travel, or in no way endangered the safety of such pedestrians in passing over the sidewalks, as they were wont to do, then the city had no right to require him to take it down, and it was no offense in the defendant to refuse to do so, and he would not be guilty of any criminal offense. It is only the violation of a legal ordinance that is a criminal offense. It is only to valid and lawful ordinances that § 3820 of the Code applies.

While we have been so far discussing this case upon general law and general principles, we do not believe that a fair and reasonable interpretation of the charter goes further, or was intended to go further, or to authorize the city fathers to do more than we have said they could do. It provides in paragraph 6 of § 79 (after enumerating other things), "or other projection or construction upon or over any sidewalk in the city, whereby the free and safe passage of persons may be hindered, delayed, obstructed, or in any way endangered." Therefore, to our minds, it is manifest that this paragraph of the charter is qualified and restricted, and that the obstruction (if we may call it such) must be such as will hinder, delay, obstruct, or in some way endanger the use of the sidewalk (or, at least, tend to do so) to the use of pedestrians in passing and re-passing upon it. According to the evidence in the case, no one of these conditions is present. The sign is 14 feet above the sidewalk, and, of course, cannot be an obstruction to pedestrians, and it is shown to be perfectly secure, and in no danger of falling.

But the state contends that the charter (§ 79, subsec. 6) authorizes the aldermen to condemn this sign, and to require its removal, and that they have done so, and that defendant was properly convicted. We do not think so. We are of the opinion, as we have said, that a fair and reasonable interpretation of the statute does not sustain the state's contention. But, if there are doubts as to its construction (and we do not think there are), they must be resolved against the power and against the state, as its right depends upon this power. 2 Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 91; Slaughter v. O'Berry (N. C.) 35 S. E. 241.

48 L. R. A.

The governing bodies of cities and towns are vested with what is known as "police powers," and they may do many things under and in exercise of this power. But still they must act within the scope of their delegated powers, or their acts are ultra vires and void. They cannot do what they are not authorized to do by their charter or by the general law of the land. If a thing within itself is not a nuisance, they cannot make it so by saying it is. If a sign hanging 4 feet from the wall of defendant's store building, firmly attached to the same, and 14 feet above the sidewalk, is not an obstruction to footmen on the sidewalk, the city authorities cannot make it so by saying it is. And if this sign is securely attached and fastened to the building by iron bars and fastenings, so that there is no danger of its falling, the city authorities cannot make it dangerous by saying it is. State v. Webber, 107 N. C. 962, 12 S. E. 598; State v. Taft, 118 N. C. 1190, 32 L. R. A. 122, 23 S. E. 970; 1 Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 87. The state must show the power, or the ordinance is void. Cooley, Const. Lim. 4th ed. 236. This question of overhanging signs has been elaborately and ably discussed in Goldstraw v. Duckworth, L. R. 5 Q. B. Div. 275, and very much the same views are taken in that case, as to such signs, as are taken in this opinion.

But it is said by the state, among many arguments it makes for the support of the judgment below, that to hold that the city had not the power to have this sign taken down would destroy all city government. We do not think so. But, if the law is so written, it must be so held, though it should have that effect. But it must be kept in mind that the power of the city government is not all that is to be considered in deciding this case. The rights of individual citizens are also to be considered, and they are of equal importance, and probably more in need of the protection of the courts than the mayor and board of aldermen of the city of Raleigh. The court holds that, upon the evidence in this case, the court below should have instructed the jury that, if they believed all the evidence, the defendant was not guilty. But if there had been evidence tending to show that the sign was an "obstruction" to footmen on the sidewalk, or tending to show that it was dangerous to the traveling public, it would have been the duty of the court to submit the question to the jury upon proper instructions. Howard v. Robbins, 1 Lans. 63; People v. Carpenter, 1 Mich. 287. And to this it is replied that this would be destructive of all city government to leave such questions to the jury. We do not think so; but, as we have said, if it is the law, it must be so held, let the results be as they may. But as between a jury, under the restraints of an oath and the instructions of a judge, we think the citizen's rights would be more likely to be protected than they would be by the uncontrolled authority of the city government. The boundary between the rights of the citizen and the powers of the mayor and aldermen is not very plainly marked, and is easily invaded, unless great care is taken. But this line is there, though delicately marked, and it must be found and observed. Slaughter v. O'Berry (N. C.) 35 S. E. 241. While this is true as to many things, there are other rights and duties that the city authorities plainly have. It is plain that they have such powers as are expressly granted, unless they are void as being unconstitutional, or in violation of individual rights as established by the general law of the land. They also have such other powers as are incident to and necessary for them to have and exercise in order to carry out and enforce such express powers as are lawfully granted them. It is their duty to keep the streets and sidewalks in good condition, and to remove such obstructions from the sidewalks as are on them, and are manifestly calculated to "hinder, delay, or endanger," the ordinary use of said sidewalks. Such obstructions clearly fall within their power, and it is their duty to exercise it in a proper manner. But such things as do not appear to hinder, delay, or endanger the public, and do not in any way obstruct the sidewalks, they do not have absolute control over. And, to give them this right, they must allege and show that such signs or other such things are obstructions, or tend to obstruct, or that they are dangerous to the traveling public.

For these reasons, we do not say that the ordinance is absolutely void, because, if the state can show that the sign is dangerous to the public, the city authorities had the right, and it was their duty, to have it taken down, and in such event the defendant would be guilty of a violation of the criminal law of the state. But the state must allege and show this before he is liable.

There is error for which there must be a new trial.

Clark, J., dissenting:

No provision of the Constitution can be found that forbids, or even makes doubtful, the right of the people of this state, speaking through their representatives in the general assembly, to authorize the aldermen or commissioners of any town or city to forbid the swinging of signs across the sidewalks. Certainly none has been cited. The charter provides, in § 34, "that among the powers conferred on the board of aldermen are these: . . . Ascertain the location, increase, reduce, and establish the width and grade, regulate the repairs and keep clear the streets, sidewalks, and alleys of the city; extend, lay out, open, establish the width and grade, keep clean and maintain others; establish and regulate the public grounds, including Moore Square, Nash Square, and Pullen Park, have charge of, improve, adorn, and maintain the same, and protect the shade trees of the city." The title to the streets of a city is in the city, for the use of the public. The defendant, an abutting owner upon a street, has no more rights therein than anyone else. He has the right of ingress and egress to and from his store, but so has the public, unless he closes it.

48 L. R. A.

He has no right to obstruct the view of the street by a sign, unless permitted by the city authorities. He has no more right to hang a sign in the street than the city has to suspend anything above his premises. He owns to the line of his lot, but no further. His easement in the street is simply that it shall not be closed up or perverted to other uses. Moose v. Carson, 104 N. C. 431, 7 L. R. A. 548, 10 S. E. 689; White v. Northwestern N. C. R. Co. 113 N. C. 610, 22 L. R. A. 627, 18 S. E. 330. Whatever has been done in the way of hanging signs across the sidewalks in the past has been by the tacit assent of the city authorities, revocable at will, whenever they deem such mode of swinging signs injurious to the appearance of the city. It would be strange if it were otherwise, seeing that in England, whence we derive our common law, for hundreds of years signs have not been allowed to project over the sidewalks, but are placed flat against the wall of each place of business. There is probably no town in the United Kingdom, however small, in which signs are allowed to hang across the sidewalk, and the same is true of the counties of western Europe generally. The same ordinance has been adopted by many cities in this country, and in a few years will doubtless become the general, if not the universal, rule. After most diligent research by counsel and the court, no decision has been found from any court, in any country, till now, which denies the power of the town council to pass an ordinance like that now called in question. The powers of a city government are not restricted to suppressing what is dangerous, but extend to adorning and beautifying the city (when they possess the funds), and to removing from the public streets that which mars their appearance, and equally that which is unpleasant to the eye as that which is disagreeable to the nose. This particular sign may be ornamental, and so may others, but, if the board of aldermen think the custom of hanging signs over the sidewalks injurious to the appearance of the streets, they could pass this ordinance, impartially ordering the removal of all signs hung across the sidewalks. Now that there is a spirit springing up in favor of beautifying our cities and towns, it is to be regretted that the cold shadow of a judicial inhibition should fall upon the movement in this state, to chill it.

Were a single act, like the hanging out of the defendant's sign, seized upon for its removal as dangerous, or because otherwise a nuisance, then an issue of fact would be raised for a jury. But when it is an ordinance, impartially ordering the removal of all swinging signs above the street or sidewalk, and the defendant's sign admittedly comes within the words of the ordinance, then it is not an issue of fact for the jury, but a question of the power to pass the ordinance. The people of Raleigh, acting through their duly elected board of aldermen, should certainly be able to decide whether they wish these signs removed or not, and, if the aldermen do not correctly * express public opinion, the next board of aldermen will permit the swinging signs to go back. Local self-government demands that much. The people of any town can decide such questions for themselves better than the courts. It is hardly to be conceived that any part of the functions of the supreme court of a state is to act as a supervisory board of public works, to pass upon, restrict, or veto the action of the board of aldermen of any town upon such matters as the present. Chief Justice Pearson, in Brodnaa v. Groom, 64 N. C. 250, expressed much common sense and a sound knowledge of the true functions of the court when he said: "This court is not capable of controlling the exercise of power on the part of the general assembly or of the county authorities, and it cannot assume to do so without putting itself in antagonism as well to the general assembly as to the county authorities and erecting a despotism of five men [italics in original], which is opposed to the fundamental principles of our government and the usages of all times past." What the learned chief justice said as to "county authorities" has, of course, the same application to city authorities. In that case the court held itself incompetent to control the action of the county authorities in building a bridge, or in supervising its location or cost, or passing upon the necessity for it, because building bridges belongs to the county commissioners, and not to the court. Here the regulation of the streets, and the removing of what therein impedes their use or impairs their appearance, is for the town authorities to decide, and they ought to decide it, subject to correction only by the people of the town at the ballot box, who are the best judges of what is proper and meet as to such matters for their own municipality. The defendant has no property rights in the streets more than anyone else who uses them. His land ends where his deed calls for, i. e., at the edge of the sidewalk next to his store. Whatever privileges he is allowed on the sidewalk, or in the air above it, more than belongs to all alike, is a mere tacit license from the town, revocable at its will. Moose v. Carson, 104 N. C. 431, 7 L. R. A. 548, 10 S. E. 689, holds that, where a town conveys land bounded by a street, it cannot afterwards convey away the street itself. White v. Northwestern N. O. R. Co. 113 N. C. 610, 22 L. R. A. 627, 18 S. E. 330, holds that the abutting proprietor has an equitable easement in the street to the extent that it shall not be perverted to other uses. Goldstraw v. Duckworth, L. R. 5 Q. B. Div. 275, is a very short opinion, construing that the language of a local statute to prevent nuisances upon the pavements of streets was not intended to prohibit projections, like balconies and the like, above the pavements. But neither these decisions, which are the reliance of the defendant, nor any others yet found from any court, sustain the contention that the town authorities do not possess the power to pass the plain unequivocal ordinance (which is here called in question), that "all signs suspended over the sidewalks of the city of Raleigh shall be removed by August 15, 1899." No court till now has ever questioned such power, though it has been exercised for centuries in the home of the common law. On the contrary, in Tate v. Greensboro, 114 N. C. 392, 24 L. R. A. 671, 19 S. E. 767, it is held: "The courts will not interfere with the exercise of a discretion reposed in the municipal authorities of a city as to when, and to what extent, its streets shall be improved, except in cases of fraud and oppression, constituting manifest abuse of such discretion." In that case it was held that the discretionary power over the streets authorized the town council to remove shade trees, against the protest of the owner of the abutting lot. That case cites with approval the following from the United States Supreme Court, in Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 540, 23 L. ed. 440: "The authorities state, and our own knowledge is to the effect, that the care and superintendence of streets, alleys, and highways, the regulation of grades, and the opening of new and the closing of old streets, are peculiarly municipal duties. No other power can so wisely and judiciously control this subject as the authority of the immediate locality where the work is to be done." The right to open new and close old streets is certainly greater than the power of removing signs that obstruct the view and impede the circulation of air and light. The right of "superintendence of the streets," thus fully recognized by both courts, extends, like the defendant's ownership of his own lot, usque ad cælum. The city authorities are not chained down to surface improvements, but can rise to the level of the occasion.

STRAUSE BROTHERS

v.

ÆTNA INSURANCE COMPANY, Appt.

(.....N. C.....)

A debt due from an insurance company for loss in another state has no situs in a third state, so as to sustain a garnishment there by a creditor of the insured, merely because the insurance company has appointed an agent in that state on whom process can be served, in pursuance of the state statutes as a condition of the right to do business therein.

NOTE.—As to situs of debt for purpose of garnishment, see Missouri P. R. Co. v. Sharitt (Kan.) 8 L. R. A. 385; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Smith (Miss.) 19 L. R. A. 577, and note; Reimers v. Seatco Mfg. Co. (C. C. A. 8th Cir.) 30 L. R. A. 364; Wyeth Hardware & Mfg. Co. v. Lang (Mo.) 27 L. R. A. 651; Neufelder v. German American Ins. Co. (Wash.) 22 L. R. A. 287; Bragg v. Gaynor (Wis.) 21 L. R. A. 161; Douglas v. Phenix Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 20 L. R. A. 118; Lancashire Ins. Co. v. Corbetts (Ill.) 36 L. R. A. 640; Virginia F. & M. Ins. Co. v. New York Carousal Mfg. Co. (Va.) 40 L. R. A. 237; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Nash (Ala.) 41 L. R. A. 331; Swedish American Nat. Bank v. Bleecker (Minn.) 42 L. R. A. 283; Stewart v. Northern Assur. Co. (W. Va.) 44 L. R. A. 101; National Bank v. Furtick (Del.) 44 L. R. A. 115; and Balk v. Harris, (N. C.) 45 L. R. A. 257.

(March 27, 1900.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Pitt County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a policy of fire insurance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. H. G. Connor & Son, Burwell, Walker, & Cansler, and Jarvis & Blow for appellant.

Messrs. Aycock, Fleming, & Moore, for appellee:

There are two lines of authorities with reference to the situs of the debt. One line, having the better reason with them, holds that the situs is at the domicile of the creditor.

Balk v. Harris, 124 N. C. 468, 45 L. R. A. 260, 32 S. E. 799.

The other line holds that the situs of a debt for the purpose of garnishment is at the domicile of the debtor.

There is beginning to be another line of authorities which holds that for the purposes of garnishment the situs of the debt is not at all material, but that the true question is, Could the garnishee be sued by the creditor in the state where the attachment is taken out?

No court can have jurisdiction unless there is something in the state upon which the attachment may be levied, and legislation in the state cannot put property there, which is not there by the general law.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Nash, 118 Ala. 477, 41 L. R. A. 331, 23 So. 825; Exchange Nat. Bank v. Clement, 109 Ala. 280, 19 So. 814; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565; St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350, 27 L. ed. 222, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 354; Freeman v. Alderson, 119 U. S. 185, 30 L. ed. 372, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 165; Martin v. Central Vermont R. Co. 50 Hun, 347, 3 N. Y. Supp. 82; Wells v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 74 Ga. 548.

The Connecticut corporation did not become a resident of Pennsylvania by conforming to the laws of Pennsylvania set out in the record for the purpose of garnishment.

Swedish-American Nat. Bank v. Blecker, 72 Minn. 383, 42 L. R. A. 283, 75 N. W. 740; Reimers v. Seasco Mfg. Co. 37 U. S. App. 426, 39 L. R. A. 364, 70 Fed. Rep. 573, 17 C. C. A. 228; Douglass v. Phenix Ins. Co. 138 N. Y. 209, 20 L. R. A. 118, 33 N. E. 938; Renier v. Hurlbut, 81 Wis. 24, 14 L. R. A. 562, 50 N. W. 783; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Dooley, 78 Ala. 524; Wright v. Chicago, B. & O. R. Co. 19 Neb. 175, 56 Am. Rep. 747, 27 N. W. 90; Keating v. American Refrigerator Co. 32 Mo. App. 293; National Bank v. Furtick, 2 Marv. (Del.) 35, 44 L. R. A. 115, 42 Atl. 479.

A foreign corporation does not for all purposes become domestic, when it conforms to the laws of the states requiring "domestication," before transacting business; for instance, it does not become a citizen of the 48 L. R. A.

state so as to prevent removals to the Federal courts.

Barron v. Burnside, 121 U. S. 186, 30 L. ed. 915, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 295, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 931; Philadelphia Fire Asso. v. New York, 119 U. S. 120, 30 L. ed. 347, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 108; Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 43 L. ed. 432, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 165.

If it is not, therefore, domesticated as to suit brought against it directly, how can it be said to be domesticated for the purpose of gaining jurisdiction over a nonresident, or his property to whom it owes money.

Garnishment had its origin in the custom of London, and by that custom garnishment did not lie unless the garnishee resided within the jurisdiction of the lord mayor's court.

Turbill's Case, 1 Wms. Saund. 67, note a; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Sturm, 174 U. S. 710, 43 L. ed. 1144, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 797.

If "suable" be the true test, then a debtor temporarily in the state could be garnished, for undoubtedly he could be sued. But the authorities are uniform that a debtor temporarily in the state cannot be garnished.

Balk v. Harris, 124 N. C. 467, 45 L. R. A. 260, 32 S. E. 799.

Clark, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant is a corporation chartered in Connecticut, and issued its policy of insurance to the plaintiffs, who are residents and citizens of this state, upon property located here. The property was partially destroyed by fire during the existence of the policy, and the amount of the loss has been adjusted in the manner required by the policy. This action is brought to recover that sum. The only defense set up is that a creditor of the plaintiffs in Pennsylvania has instituted an action against them in that state, and attached the liability of the defendant company to said plaintiffs by reason of said loss by garnishing the agent of the defendant in that state, which action was instituted before the beginning of this, and is still pending in the courts of that state; wherefore the defendant asks that this action be stayed till the determination of that. The courts of one state give full faith and credit to judgments rendered in another when jurisdiction has been obtained of the person or subject-matter: but, when such is not the case, the judgment of the foreign state is treated as a nullity. So the sole question here is whether the Pennsylvania court has acquired jurisdiction by such garnishment (for there was no personal service upon plaintiffs), since if it has not, then, as the judgment, if it shall be rendered adversely to these plaintiffs, will be a nullity, a stay of proceedings in the courts here will be useless. It is true that under the Pennsylvania statute the defendant, a Connecticut corporation, is required to appoint a resident agent in that state upon whom process can be served, and this is a condition which that state can exact of nonresident corporations, but that only renders the Connecticut corporation suable in Pennsylvania by giving personal service upon its agent. It does not carry the situs of the debt it owes to the plaintiffs to Pennsylvania, and make the plaintiffs Strause suable in Pennsylvania, because their debtor, the defendant company, can be sued there for their own indebtedness to a plaintiff. If suability of the defendant were the test, the plaintiffs could be sued in every state and in every foreign country where their debtor has an agency. Many courts deny that a creditor can be brought into court by attaching a debt due to him, and it is certainly not very logical that a debt should have a situs where the debtor resides, for the debt is property of the creditor, not of the debtor. Some courts, however, have gone that far, including the courts of this state; but none have gone so far as to hold that debts may be ambulatory,—and well-nigh ubiquitous in this case,—by having a situs wherever the debtor has an agent who can be served with process for its own indebtedness. An attachment could be levied in Pennsylvania only upon property of the defendant in such action, and these plaintiffs had no property in that state, and the debt due them by the Connecticut corporation was not in the hands of such company's local agent in Pennsylvania. To put it as strongly as possible, suppose the defendant was a natural person, a citizen and resident of Connecticut, and was temporarily in Philadelphia, so that he could be personally served with process for his own indebtedness to a plaintiff, would that make him liable to garnishment by anyone holding a claim against those whom he owed? This question has often arisen, and has uniformly been decided in the negative. Balk v. Harris, 124 N. C. 467, 45 L. R. A. 260, 32 S. E. 799, and numerous cases cited at pages 469, 470, 124 N. C., p. 260, 45 L. R. A., and pp. 800, 801, 32 S. E. Even if the defendant company had become "domesticated," or had taken out incorporation in Pennsylvania, the Pennsylvania corporation would simply be an affiliated company, and would not swallow up or be substituted for the Connecticut corporation, which owes these plaintiffs, and the situs of whose indebtedness as such would not be affected, however it might be as to their transactions and indebtedness arising in Pennsylvania. The very point was decided in Swedish-American Nat. Bank v. Blecker, 72 Minn. 383, 42 L. R. A. 283, 75 N. W. 740, where it is said: "The garnishee has filed such a stipulation [required by the statute], has established local agencies, and has been insuring property in this state. This did not, in our opinion, give the garnishee a domicile in this state for all purposes, or bring into this state the situs of debts which it owes elsewhere by reason of business transacted elsewhere. Neither the creditor nor the debtor resided in this state; none of the transactions out of which the indebtedness arose took place in this state, and the indebtedness was not payable in this state. Under these circumstances the debt has not a situs in this state. Reimers v. Seatco Mfg. Co. 37 U. S. App. 426, 30 L. R. A. 364, 48 L. R. A.

70 Fed. Rep. 573, 17 C. C. A. 228; Douglas v. Phenix Ins. Co. 138 N. Y. 209, 20 L. R. A. 118, 33 N. E. 938; Renier v. Hurlbut, 81 Wis. 24, 14 L. R. A. 562, 50 N. W. 783; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Dooley, 78 Ala. 524; Wright v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 19 Neb. 175, 56 Am. Rep. 747, 27 N. W. 90; Keating v. American Refrigerator Co. 32 Mo. App. 293." The supreme court of Wisconsin, in Renier v. Hurlbut, cited above, says: "It is obvious from what has been said, that, if the indebtedness of the Boston company to Mrs. Renier had any situs outside of Wisconsin for the purposes of garnishment, it was at the home office of that company in Massachusetts; certainly not with the respective agents of that company, wherever located in the several states." This same view is taken and strongly reinforced in National Bank v. Furtick, 2 Marv. (Del.) 35, 44 L. R. A. 115, 42 Atl. 479, decided by the Delaware court of appeals in 1897. In that case, the court says: "True the garnishee is a corporation doing business in this state, but the debt due the defendant arose from its contract for insurance made through its agency in South Carolina with the defendant, a citizen of that state, and concerning property situate there, and was payable there, . . . and is not such a credit or property within this state as will confer jurisdiction. . . . To take any other view would be to hold that it existed, had its situs, and was liable to attachment in every state in this Union where the defendant happened to have an officer upon whom process could be served as a condition precedent to its being permitted to do business in such state." Upon the argument that, because the defendant is suable in Pennsylvania by service upon its local agent, therefore the plaintiffs, as creditors of the defendant, are suable also in that state, it may be said, following the Minnesota case, above cited, that while Strause Brothers might have sued the Connecticut Company in Pennsylvania by serving their summons upon its agent in Pennsylvania (by service upon the insurance commissioner in Minnesota, as required by its laws), this does not prove that the debt had a situs in Pennsylvania. Such action would be in personam, and not in rem, and it would be immaterial where the situs of the debt would be. Besides, the creditor may give the debt a situs there, for it naturally follows his person, and he can take it anywhere; but a third person, claiming to be a creditor of the creditor, cannot do this. He has no power to change the situs of the debt or give it a situs where it would not otherwise be. Statutes requiring domestication, or the appointment of a local agent by nonresident corporations as prerequisites to doing business in a state, enable any plaintiff to get personal service upon such corporation in an action upon its liabilities to such plaintiff, but it does not remove the corporation's property to such state, nor the situs of its debts, which have been created elsewhere; and it is only upon the latter ground that the indebtedness of the defendant, a Connecticut corporation, to the plaintiffs, could be attached in Pennsylvania. In Boyd v. Royal Ins. Co. 111 N. C. 372, 16 S. E. 339, the point now presented was not discussed nor adjudicated, nor, indeed, does it appear that the insurance company, the garnishee, was not a Virginia company, which would have made the situs of the debt there, and attachable. At any rate, the validity of the attachment was not questioned. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Sturm, 174 U. S. 710, 43 L. ed. 1144, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 797, also relied upon by defendant, does not apply, for it is not contended that the defendant here is a Pennsylvania corporation.

Affirmed.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS OF HARDIN COUNTY, Plffs. in Err., v.

Josephine M. COFFMAN, Admr., etc., of Freeman J. Coffman, Deceased.

(.....Ohio.....)

*1. An action under § 845 of the Revised Statutes, as amended April 13, 1894 (91 Ohio Laws, p. 142), to recover damages caused by the negligence of the county commissioners in failing to keep a bridge under their control in repair, is properly brought against the board in its official capacity; and the county is bound for the payment of the judgment recovered. Whether the county may have recourse to the official bonds of the commissioners for reimbursement,—quære.

2. The commissioners are bound to the exercise of ordinary care to keep the bridges under their control in a safe condition for all usual and ordinary modes of travel and transportation of property over them; but ordinary care does not require them to anticipate that a bridge will be used in an unusual and extraordinary manner, or subjected to an unusual and extraordinary burden involving peculiar danger, nor are they liable for an injury resulting from such use.

3. In an action against a board of county commissioners to recover damages for the death of a person caused by the breaking down of a bridge by a traction engine which was being propelled over it by steam, and drawing a water tank on which the deceased was riding, it is a question for the jury whether that method of using the bridge was, at the time of the accident, a usual and ordinary mode of travel and transportation of property over bridges in that locality, such as the commissioners should, in the exercise of ordinary care, have anticipated, and provided for by putting the bridge in proper condition for such use; and the question should be determined from a consideration of all the evidence.

4. A person about to cross a bridge in any of the usual and ordinary modes of travel, or transport property over it in any usual and ordinary way, has the right to assume that the public authorities have performed their duty, and therefore that the bridge is in a safe condition for such use; and he is not chargeable with contributory negligence in acting upon that assumption, unless the appearance of the bridge, its situation, or structure, or other circumstance would suggest to a person of ordinary prudence that it is defective and dangerous, so that ordinary care would require either that he should forego the contemplated use, or make sufficient examination to reasonably assure him of its safety. But a person who chooses to subject a bridge to some extraordinary burden, by placing upon it some unusual weight, and causing it to be moved in an unusual manner, takes upon himself the risk of any injury thereby sustained, although the bridge is defective, and out of repair.

*Headnotes by the COURT.

NOTE.—As to liability for breaking of bridge when subjected to unusual and extraordinary strain, see Wabash v. Carver (Ind.) 13 L. R. A. 851, and note; Vermillion County Comrs. v. Chipps (Ind.) 16 L. R. A. 228.

48 L. R. A.

(June 20, 1899.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Hardin County to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate, which was alleged to have been caused by defendants' negligently permitting a bridge to become out of repair. Reversed.

Statement by Williams, J.:

The original action was brought against the board of commissioners of Hardin county by Josephine M. Coffman, as executrix of her deceased husband, Freeman J. Coffman, to recover damages for his death, wrongfully caused, it is alleged, by the neglect of the commissioners to keep in repair a bridge under their control over a stream known as "Blanchard River," and forming part of a public road in that county. The death resulted from the bridge giving way on the 5th day of July, 1895, while the deceased was riding over it on a water tank drawn by a traction engine that was being propelled by steam. The petition charges that the bridge was of defective construction, and out of repair, in that the timbers which supported the floor were insufficient and unsound, the rods by which they were suspended from the truss were held only by nuts that were too small, and without washers, and the wood into which the rods were fitted was decayed; and these defects, it is averred, had increased from long exposure, rendering the bridge unsafe for travel upon it, of which the commissioners had notice, but nevertheless neglected to repair it. Issue was taken by the defendant on the charge of negligence, and a counter charge made of contributory negligence on the part of the deceased. The plaintiff recovered a verdict on which judgment was rendered, and, that judgment having been affirmed by the circuit court, the commissioners brought error to this court. The opinion will contain such further statement of the case as may be considered necessary to an understanding of the questions upon which it is reported.

Messrs. Charles C. Lemert and Thomas C. Mahon, for plaintiffs in error:

The allegation that this bridge was located on a public county road does not state that it was a road that was generally traveled by the public.

Chase v. Cleveland, 44 Ohio St. 512, 58 Am. Rep. 543, 9 N. E. 225.

The expediency of building or repairing a bridge, however necessary, is an administrative, and not a judicial, question.

State ex rel. Emerson v. Hamilton County Comrs. 49 Ohio St. 305, 30 N. E. 785; 2 Kinkade, Pl. § 916.

Prior to the passage of the act of April 13, 1894, an action of this character could not be maintained.

Hamilton County Comrs. v. Mighels, 7 Ohio St. 120; Grimwood v. Summit County Comrs. 23 Ohio St. 600.

If the duty which the official authority imposes upon an officer is a duty to the public, a failure to perform it, or an inadequate or erroneous performance, must be a public, and not an individual, injury, and must be redressed, if at all, in some form of public prosecution.

Cooley, Torts, 379-382.

There is no authority for the commissioners to levy a tax for the payment of a judgment of this character.

Whenever the plaintiff's case shows any want of ordinary care under the circumstances, even the slightest, contributing in any degree, even the smallest, as a proximate cause of the injury for which he brings his action, his right of recovery is thereby destroyed.

Beach, Contrib. Neg. 2d ed. § 35; Cooley, Torts, 674, 675; Timmons v. Central Ohio R. Co. 6 Ohio St. 108; Cleveland, C. & C. R. Co. v. Terry, 8 Ohio St. 581; Pittsburgh & W. Coal Co. v. Estievenard, 53 Ohio St. 43, 40 N. E. 725; Thomp. Neg. 768, 769.

The defects complained of could not be detected from an ordinary examination, but it would require a close examination of an expert, by chopping or boring into the parts alleged to be defective, to discover the defects that caused the bridge to fall. To discover this alleged defect would have required extraordinary diligence on the part of the commissioners, and such a degree of vigilance as would have been unreasonable,—with their other official duties, impossible,—and such as, we think, the law does not require.

Blank v. Livonia Twp. 70 Mich. 1, 44 N. W. 157; O'Neil v. Deerfield Twp. 86 Mich. 610, 49 N. W. 596.

The board of county commissioners is 48 L. R. A.

only required to build and keep in repair bridges for ordinary use of the public, and with this exception is not liable.

Thomas, Neg. 794, 989, 991; Chase v. Cleveland, 44 Ohio St. 513, 58 Am. Rep. 543, 9 N. E. 225; Oak Harbor v. Gallagher, 52 Ohio St. 183; Vermillion County Comrs. v. Chipps, 131 Ind. 56, 16 L. R. A. 228, 29 N. E. 1066; Clapp v. Ellington, 51 Hun, 58, 3 N. Y. Supp. 516; Gregory v. Adams, 14 Gray, 242.

Messrs. Crow & Durbin and George E. Crane for defendant in error.

Williams, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The action below was brought under favor of the provision added to § 845 of the Revised Statutes by the amendment of April 13, 1894 (91 Ohio Laws, p. 142). The material part of the section as thus amended reads as follows: "The board of commissioners shall be capable of suing and being sued, pleading and being impleaded in any court of judicature, and of bringing, maintaining, and defending all suits, either in law or in equity, involving an injury to any public state or county road, bridge or ditch, drain or watercourse established by such board in their county, and for the prevention of injury to the same; and any such board of county commissioners shall be liable in their official capacity for any damages received by reason of the negligence or carelessness of said commissioners in keeping any such road or bridge in proper repair." Though, prior to that amendment, the public roads and bridges of the several counties were placed under the control of their respective boards of commissioners, who were clothed with the necessary authority to keep them in repair, until its adoption there was no right of action against a county or its commissioners for damages sustained by the failure to keep a road or bridge in repair. So that the nature and grounds of the defendants' liability must be gathered from this amended statute, and its construction in these respects is, in several particulars, involved in the questions presented in the case. It is one of the claims of the plaintiff in error that the action will not lie, because no provision is made for raising the necessary fund with which to pay any damages that may be recovered. But it does not necessarily follow from the absence of such provision that the action must fail. Satisfaction comes after judgment, and that no present means exist of enforcing payment of a judgment is not a valid objection to its recovery. Means may be afterwards provided. There appears to be general authority vested in the commissioners to raise funds by taxation for all county purposes, and that would seem to include the power to levy taxes to the satisfaction of judgments against the county for whose payment no other or special provision is made.

Another claim of the plaintiff in error—one made on demurrer to the petition—is that, because the liability created by the statute is that of the commissioners in their official capacity, for their official neglect, redress must be sought by action on their official bonds, which are required in order to secure a faithful and diligent performance of their official duties; and, furthermore, that as the negligence charged includes the defective construction of the bridge, which was built before the act was passed, the action is not maintainable against the board of commissioners as constituted when the injury complained of was sustained. The material fact, however, from which the liability for a defective bridge arises, is the negligence of the commissioners in not keeping it in repair when the injury occurs; and the length of time the defect had continued before, or how it originated, are unimportant, except as tending to show knowledge of its existence. The negligent omission to make needed repairs on a bridge known to be out of repair is, within the purview of the statute, a negligent failure to keep it in repair; and the liability of the commissioners in their official capacity is the liability of the county they represent to the person injured by their culpable neglect. Whether, in the first instance, recovery might be had on their bonds, or, whether the county may have recourse to them, for reimbursement of the damages paid by it, are questions not now before us, and upon which we express no opinion. We are satisfied that in a proper case the action may be maintained, as this one was brought, directly against the board of commissioners in their official capacity.

Questions deemed of more practical importance in the report of the case arise upon the charge of the court and its refusal to charge as requested by the defendant. The jury were instructed, in substance, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, in the absence of contributory negligence on the part of the deceased, if the defendant failed to have the bridge examined within a reasonable time after April 13, 1894 (when the amendment of the statute took effect), and from defects in its construction, or want of repair, as alleged in the petition, it was, at the time of the accident that resulted in the decedent's death, in an unsafe condition for the public use "in the way it was then being used." And furthermore, it was a question for the jury "whether the bridge, at the time of the accident, was in a reasonably safe condition for the use of the public in passing over it, in the way it was then being used." The effect of the charge was to hold the commissioners responsible if they failed to examine the bridge, and put it in a condition of safety for the use that was being made of it when it gave way,—that is, for the safe passage over it of the traction engine and water tank on which the deceased was riding,—although that may have been an unusual and unexpected use of the bridge, creating a burden of extraordinary weight. This is a different measure of responsibility from that imposed by the statute. It enjoins on the commissioners no absolute duty to make examination of the bridges under their control, and to put them in a condition of safety for all possible emergencies. Their only liability is for such damages as result from their negligence with respect to keeping a bridge in repair; and, as no special standard of care is prescribed by the statute, the degree required does not extend beyond that which reasonably prudent persons would ordinarily exercise in a like situation, in view of the purposes of the bridge, and the general uses which it should reasonably be expected would be made of it. The object of the law in requiring the maintenance of highway bridges undoubtedly was to make provision, in a reasonable way, for the safety, convenience, and accommodation of public travel in all usual and ordinary ways to which they are adapted. Such probable use of them the commissioners are bound to anticipate, and proper care on their part would require them to keep such bridges in suitable repair for those purposes. That is no more than is demanded in the exercise of ordinary care. But it would seem unreasonable to require of the commissioners that they should anticipate and provide for some extraordinary use of a bridge that would subject it to an unusual burden,—one not likely to be placed upon it in its common and general use. That would impose upon them the duty of extraordinary care, which the statute does not exact. Accordingly we find that, when the question has been made in those states where local authorities are charged with the duty of maintaining ways and bridges, and made answerable in damages for their neglect to do so, it is held that a liability does not arise from neglect to keep a bridge in a safe condition for any unusual or extraordinary use, but only when there is a failure to keep it in repair for such use as is usual, ordinary, and probable. In Gregory v. Adams, 14 Gray, 242, 248, which was an action against a town for damages for the loss of an elephant killed by the falling of a bridge that was out of repair while the elephant was being taken over it, Merrick, J., states the rule to be that the public authorities in charge of bridges "are not required to make preparations for the safety or convenience of those who undertake to use those ways in an unusual or extraordinary manner, involving peculiar and special peril and danger, whether it be in respect to the kind or character of animals led or driven, or the magnitude or construction of carriages used, or the bulk or weight of property transported." In Pennsylvania, where townships are liable in damages for failure to keep their bridges over streams in repair, in an action brought against a township by the owner of a threshing machine for damages done to it by the breaking down of a bridge over which it was being moved by a traction engine, it was held that "a township is not required to assume that its bridges will be used in an unusual and extraordinary manner, either by crossing at great speed or by the passing of a very large and unusual weight. As it does not anticipate any such use, it is not required to so build as to protect against injury resulting from such reckless conduct. Its liability stops with constructing and maintaining its bridges so as to protect against injury by a reasonable, proper, and probable use thereof, in view of the surrounding circumstances, such as the extent, kind, and nature of the travel and business on the road of which it forms a part." McCormick v. Washington Twp. 112 Pa. 185, 4 Atl. 164. In that case instructions were affirmed by which the jury were informed that the duty of the supervisors of the townships was "well performed if the bridge complained of was in a reasonably safe condition for travel in the ordinary modes in the neighborhood, and by the people who commonly used the bridge;" and that they were not required "to make preparation for the safety or convenience of those who undertake to use the highway in an unusual and extraordinary manner, involving peculiar peril and danger by reason of the magnitude or construction of the carriages used, or the volume or weight of the property transported." That case was followed in Com. v. Allen, 148 Pa. 358, 16 L. R. A. 148, 23 Atl. 1115, and Clulow v. McClelland, 151 Pa. 583, 17 L. R. A. 650, 25 Atl. 147. In Clapp v. Ellington, 51 Hun, 58, 3 N. Y. Supp. 516, where the facts were not substantially different from those in this case, it was held that, "while the commissioner of highways is required to construct and maintain bridges of sufficient strength and material to insure the safety of persons passing over them with such vehicles as are commonly and ordinarily used in that county, he cannot be required or expected to construct and maintain bridges which will insure the safety of persons passing over them in a manner involving peculiar and special danger arising from any unusual weight." The doctrine of these cases has been maintained in Yordy v. Marshall County, 86 Iowa, 340, 53 N. W. 298, and other Iowa cases, and also in Vermillion County Comrs. v. Chipps, 131 Ind. 56, 16 L. R. A. 228, 20 N. E. 1066, and other cases in that state.

From these authorities, as well as upon principle, it seems clear that in determining the liability of the defendant in this case the controlling question is whether the use that was being made of the bridge when Coffman received the injury which caused his death was such usual and ordinary use of it as reasonably prudent persons in the situation of the commissioners, and charged with their duties, would, in the exercise of ordinary care, in view of all the facts, have anticipated would be made of the bridge, and would be attended with danger of injury resulting to persons or property. If so, and the injury resulted from the failure of the commissioners to keep the bridge in repair, there was actionable negligence on their part; but not if the use was of that unusual or extraordinary character involving peculiar danger which ordinary care did not require the defendants to anticipate and provide against. And that question, it is manifest, is one for the jury to determine from all the facts and circumstances of the 48 L. R. A.

case; not alone from the fact that the vehicle which was being moved over the bridge at the time was an engine and attachments weighing nearly 5 tons, to which the deceased added his own weight by riding upon it, and that it was propelled by steam power, though this could not be otherwise than important for the consideration of the jury. Such machinery and implements have come into use to some extent in some localities in threshing grain and other agricultural purposes, and are propelled by steam from place to place over the public highways, in the course of the business in which they are employed; and the extent to which that use of such machinery and that method of travel on the public roads and bridges had prevailed in that locality, if at all, before the occurrence, together with all the other pertinent facts shown by the evidence on the question, should be taken into consideration by the jury in determining whether that at the time had become a usual or ordinary method of travel and transportation in that locality,—such as, at that time, ordinary care on the part of the commissioners should have anticipated and provided for, within the rule already stated. In Coulter v. Pine Twp. 164 Pa. 543, 30 Atl. 490, it was held that, "in an action against a township to recover damages for death caused by a traction engine breaking through a township bridge, it is proper to leave to the jury the question whether or not traction engines had become a usual and ordinary mode of travel when the supervisors reconstructed the bridge, about five years before the accident." The instruction given in that case which was approved, was that the case turned upon the question whether or not traction engines had become a usual and ordinary mode of travel when the supervisors of the township reconstructed the bridge; and that, if they had, then it was the duty of the supervisors to so construct, and thereafter maintain, the bridge as to make it reasonably safe for such modes of travel. A similar instruction was sustained in Clulow v. McClelland, 151 Pa. 583, 17 L. R. A. 650, 25 Atl. 147, and Clapp v. Ellington, 51 Hun, 58, 3 N. Y. Supp. 516. The charge of the court in the case before us failed to submit this material question to the jury, and practically excluded its consideration.

Similar considerations enter into the question of the contributory negligence of the person injured in such a case. In Gregory v. Adams, 14 Gray, 242, 248, the supreme court of Massachusetts held it to be the proper rule that, "if any person undertakes to use or travel upon a public highway in an unusual or extraordinary manner, or with animals, vehicles, or freight not suitable or adapted to a way opened and prepared for the public use in the common intercourse of society and in the transaction of usual and ordinary affairs of business, he then takes every possible risk of loss and damage upon himself; and he can have no remedy against the town to recover recompense for injuries sustained, although they be the direct result of defects and imperfections in a way for which it would be responsible in case of injury to individuals in the lawful and proper use of it." In Clapp v. Ellington, 51 Hun, 58, 3 N. Y. Supp. 516, a charge was sustained which instructed the jury that, if "the vehicle upon which the plaintiff was riding, and with which he was connected in passing over the bridge at the time of the accident in question, was unusual and extraordinary in weight, in method of construction, or manner of propelling the same along the highway, and such unusual weight, method of construction, and locomotion was such as to cause unusual and extraordinary strain upon the bridge in passing over it, then the plaintiff took every possible risk of injury upon himself in trying to pass over the bridge, and the plaintiff cannot recover for the injuries sustained by the breaking down of the bridge under such circumstances, although his injuries were the direct result of such imperfections and defects in the bridge." The rule declared in these cases was followed, substantially, in each of the other cases already cited, and appears to be a reasonable one. A person about to cross a bridge in any of the usual and ordinary modes of travel, or transport property over it in any usual and ordinary way, has the right to assume that the public authorities have performed their duty, and therefore that the bridge is in a safe condition for such use; and he is not chargeable with contributory negligence in acting on that assumption, unless the appearance of the bridge, its situation or structure, or other circumstance would suggest to a person of ordinary prudence that it was defective and dangerous, so that ordinary care would require either that he should forego the contemplated use, or make sufficient examination to reasonably assure him of its safety. But a person who chooses to subject a bridge to some extraordinary burden by placing upon it some unusual weight, and causing it to be moved in an unusual manner, takes upon himself the risk of any injury thereby sustained, although the bridge was defective, and out of repair. The proper test is not, as stated in an instruction requested by the defendant, whether the engine and tank on which the deceased was riding were of greater weight, and more dangerous, than ordinary wagons and teams, but were they, with the deceased upon them, and the use to which the bridge was then being put, an unusual method of travel and transportation, involving extraordinary peril, at that time and place? or were the circumstances such that a person of ordinary prudence, in the exercise of ordinary care in the situation of the deceased, would reasonably apprehend and anticipate that it would be dangerous to go upon the bridge in that way? If so, he was guilty of negligence proximately contributing to his death; otherwise, not. The instructions given on the subject were such that, in order to charge the deceased with contributory negligence, it was necessary for the jury to find that he was actually "aware of the condition of the bridge, and had good reason to believe it was not sufficient to sustain the load that was about to pass over it." Actual knowledge and good reason to believe is more than the rule, as we have stated it, requires. The instructions requested were inaccurately expressed, and their refusal was not error. But the case was erroneously given to the jury, as we have indicated.

Judgment of the Circuit Court and of the Court of Common Pleas reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

STATE of Ohio, Exceptant,
v.

William THOMAS.

(61 Ohio St. 444.)

- *1. A judge of the court of common pleas has authority to hold court in any county in his district, though not designated by the judges of the district, as provided by § 468 of the Revised Statutes, to hold court in that county; and an indictment found and returned at a term so held is not invalid, either because the judge holding the term was not designated to hold the same, or because the judges of the district failed to apportion the labor of holding the courts among themselves, and issue an order specifying the terms to be held by each judge.
2. Construing § 457 of the Revised Statutes with § 446-2, which makes the first Monday in September a holiday to be known as "Labor Day," it is not unlawful to hold the court of common pleas on that day, when the judges of the district, in the exercise of their powers under the first of these sections, have fixed that day for the commencement of the term; and an indictment found and returned by a grand jury impaneled and sworn on that day is not, on that account, invalid.
3. Where, after a grand jury has been sworn, a member is discharged on account of sickness, and another person having the legal qualifications is sworn in his stead, as provided by § 7202 of the Revised Statutes, and the person so sworn takes his place on the panel, the body so constituted is a legal grand jury, though a foreman be not again appointed, nor the oath readministered to him or to the other members as a body.
4. It is not necessary that the records of the court should show how or by whom the grand jurors were selected and drawn. The legal presumption is that duty was regularly performed by the proper officers, but, if it was not so done, that is not a valid objection to an indictment.

(January 9, 1900.)

EXCEPTIONS by the state to rulings of the Court of Common Pleas for Brown County which resulted in the quashing of

*Headnotes by the COURT.

NOTE.—As to how far the law of holidays extends to matters other than those relating to negotiable paper, see Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Jaffray (Neb.) 19 L. R. A. 316, and note; Whipple v. Hill (Neb.) 20 L. R. A. 813.

an indictment for the stealing of a horse and carriage. Sustained.

Statement by Williams, J.:

The grand jury impaneled at the September term, 1899, of the court of common pleas of Brown county found and returned the following indictment against William Thomas for horse stealing and grand larceny: "The jurors of the grand jury of the state of Ohio, within and for the body of the county of Brown, aforesaid, on their oaths, in the name and by the authority of the state of Ohio, do find and present that William Thomas, late of the county aforesaid, on the 17th day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-nine, at the county aforesaid, unlawfully and purposely did steal, take, and drive away one bay mare, of the value of forty dollars ($40.00), the personal property of Frank E. Boyd, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state of Ohio. And the jurors of the grand jury aforesaid, in and for the county aforesaid, upon their oaths aforesaid, and in the name and by the authority of the state of Ohio aforesaid, do find and present that the said William Thomas aforesaid, late of the county aforesaid, at the times and date aforesaid, at the county aforesaid, unlawfully and purposely did take, steal, and haul away one black-painted, top buggy, then and there being of the value of fifty dollars ($50.00), the personal property, goods, and chattels of one Frank E. Boyd, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state of Ohio." The indictment was duly signed and indorsed, and was placed on file by the clerk.

At the same term the accused filed the following motion to quash the indictment: "The defendant, William Thomas, moves the court to quash the said indictment against him for the following defects appearing on the face of the record, to wit: (1) Because no judge was assigned and designated to hold the April term, A. D. 1899, of said common pleas court, as required by § 468 of the Revised Statutes of the state of Ohio. (2) Because no judge was assigned and designated to hold the September term, A. D. 1899, of said court, as required by law. (3) Because no valid order was made for the drawing of the grand jury which found said indictment. (4) The judge who fixed and determined the number of ballots to be drawn from the jury wheel for the grand jury and the petit jury for the September term, A. D. 1899, of said court, had not been designated to hold the common pleas court in said county, as required by law. (5) The grand jury which found said indictment was not drawn and impaneled as required by law. (6) The record does not show that the grand jury which found said indictment was drawn at the time and place and by the persons designated by law. (7) The judge who convened and presided at the September term, A. D. 1899, of the said court 48 L. R. A.

of common pleas, had no authority or jurisdiction to hold the said September term, A. D. 1899, of the said court of common pleas; and neither the said judge nor the said court had jurisdiction or authority, at the time and place appearing on the face of the records, to open or hold said court, or to impanel, swear, or charge, or to have impaneled, sworn, or charged, the said grand jury which found the said indictment against this defendant; the day of the convening of said court, and impaneling of said grand jury, to wit, the 4th day of September, being a legal holiday, to wit, Labor Day. (8) The said grand jury which found said indictment had no jurisdiction of the person of this defendant, nor had said grand jury any jurisdiction to inquire into said alleged offense, or present any indictment against this defendant therefor. (9) The said Samuel F. Walker, one of the grand jurors who found said indictment, and who was called by the court instead of A. E. Emmett, discharged, was not sworn as such grand juror according to law. (10) The said grand jury which found said indictment, after the substitution of the said Samuel F. Walker as a member thereof for the said A. E. Emmett, discharged, was not impaneled, sworn, or charged according to law. (11) Because no foreman of said grand jury, as it was constituted after the substitution of the said Samuel F. Walker for the said A. E. Emmett, was appointed by the court, or sworn in the manner and form prescribed by law. (12) The grand jury which found said indictment was not impaneled and sworn as required by law. (13) Said grand jury was not legally constituted, and was not a lawful grand jury. (14) Because said indictment was not prepared nor presented by the grand jury as required by law. (15) Because the said indictment is insufficient in form and substance. (16) For other reasons apparent on the record."

The motion was sustained, and the defendant ordered to enter into a recognizance, with surety, for his appearance at the next term of the court, to await the action of the grand jury at that term, and, in default thereof, to stand committed for that purpose. The prosecuting attorney excepted to the ruling of the court in sustaining the motion, and, on leave granted him, filed a bill of exceptions taken in that behalf, in this court. The only questions argued are those involved in the motion to quash the indictment, and they are sufficiently stated in the opinion.

Mr. James W. Tarbell, for exceptant:

Rev. Stat. § 468, so far as it requires the judges to fix the terms of the common pleas courts, is mandatory; but the other provision of the section, for the apportionment of the labor, and specifying what judge shall hold each term or part of term, is merely directory. An act of the essence of a thing required by a statute is imperative; but the mode of doing it may be directory.

Hubble v. Renick, 1 Ohio St. 175; State v. Elson, 45 Ohio St. 648, 16 N. E. 684.

Where the provision of a statute is the essence of the thing required to be done, it is mandatory; otherwise, when it relates to form and manner; and where an act is incident, or after jurisdiction acquired, it is directory merely.

Davis v. Smith, 58 N. H. 17; Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, §§ 431, etc.; 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 249; 1 Bouvier Law Dict. 424; Dutiot v. Doyle, 16 Ohio St. 400.

No law can require the correction of an error in its construction, which has long existed and has been generally acquiesced in.

Brown v. Farran, 3 Ohio, 140; Chesnut v. Shane, 16 Ohio, 599, 47 Am. Dec. 387; Craig v. Fox, 16 Ohio, 568; Bank of Chillicothe v. Swayne, 8 Ohio, 284, 32 Am. Dec. 707.

The judges of the courts of common pleas are judges of their respective districts, and not of the mere subdivisions thereof. The subdivision of districts is for election purposes merely.

Const. art. 4, § 3: Harris v. Gest, 4 Ohio St. 473; Cincinnati, S. & C. R. Co. v. Sloan, 31 Ohio St. 1.

The record need not affirmatively show that the grand jury which found the indictment was drawn at the time and place, and by the persons, designated by the law.

Blair v. State, 5 Ohio C. C. 496; Huling v. State, 17 Ohio St. 583.

The organization of the grand jury will be presumed to be regular until the contrary is shown by the plea.

9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 5; Preston v. State, 63 Ala. 127.

It is not necessary that all of the jurors should hear the full charge.

Wadlin's Case, 11 Mass. 142; State v. Froiseth, 16 Minn. 313, Gil. 277; Findley v. People, 1 Mich. 235.

Is it absolutely necessary that they should be instructed at all by the judge?

9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 8.

When the grand jury retired on the 5th day of September, unchallenged, to consider of cases, it was a legal grand jury with full legal authority to find and return indictments.

Hastings v. Columbus, 42 Ohio St. 585.

A court may meet and adjourn on Sunday.

Jones v. State, 14 Ohio C. C. 35.

Messrs. W. D. Young and E. R. Young, for defendant:

The drawing of the grand jury list is an essential step in the prosecution for crime.

An indictment can be found only by a lawful grand jury.

Doyle v. State, 17 Ohio, 222.

If the record must disclose the names of the grand jurors,—and that it must cannot be doubted,—there is more potent reason for the requirement that their names should be lawfully selected.

This omission cannot be supplied by presumption.

Goodin v. State, 16 Ohio St. 344; Cantwell v. State, 18 Ohio St. 477.

The court could not lawfully transact any 48 L. R. A.

business on Labor Day, except to adjourn to a subsequent day; and its action in impaneling the grand jury was absolutely void, and the grand jury impaneled and sworn on that day was illegal and wholly without lawful power to find the indictment.

Ohio Rev. Stat. § 4446-2; Spiedel Grocery Co. v. Armstrong, 8 Ohio C. C. 489; Jones v. State, 14 Ohio C. C. 35.

Although by virtue of Rev. Stat. § 7202, the court had a right to discharge the sick member and make the substitution of Walker, yet this action was but a part of the proceedings to make another and different grand jury, to make which a legal grand jury a foreman should have been selected and the jury sworn as provided in §§ 7190, 7191, and 7203.

If the grand jury that found the indictment was one and the same grand jury that was first impaneled and sworn, then there must have been an interregnum—a period of time, long or short—during which but fourteen members composed the grand jury. But the words “grand jury” import, ex vi termini, a body composed of fifteen grand jurors; it cannot consist of a greater or less number than fifteen.

Young v. State, 6 Ohio, 435; Doyle v. State, 17 Ohio, 222.

Whatever is prescribed by the Constitution and laws of the state to be done in the prosecution of crimes is essential to the jurisdiction and power of the court, and can neither be omitted nor waived.

Doyle v. State, 17 Ohio, 225; Williams v. State, 12 Ohio St. 622; Goodin v. State, 16 Ohio St. 346; Cantwell v. State, 18 Ohio St. 477.

Williams, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The objections made to the indictment are in substance: (1) That the judge who opened and held the term of the court at which the indictment was found was without jurisdiction to impanel the grand jury, or to receive its report, because he had not been assigned to hold that term by the judges of the district, nor so designated in any order issued by them; (2) that the grand jury was without authority to find and return the indictment, because it was impaneled and sworn on a legal holiday known as “Labor Day;” (3) that the body by which the indictment was found and returned was not a legally constituted grand jury, for the reason that, after the original panel was sworn, and before the indictment was returned, a new member was substituted in the place of one who was excused on account of sickness, and after the substitution the body was not again sworn and charged, though the new member was; and (4) that the record fails to show the grand jury was selected and drawn as required by law. It should be observed here that none of these objections properly arise on motion to quash: and for that reason alone the exception should be sustained. Except so far as they tender issues of fact, the proper mode of doing which is by plea in abatement they relate to alleged irregularities in selecting and impaneling the grand jury, which do not affect the individual competency of its member, and are available, if at all, only by challenge. Properly speaking, the record of a criminal case, where the offense is an indictable one, except when the accused is bound over to await the action of the grand jury, commences with the return of the indictment. While the preliminary steps in the formation of the grand jury are proper matters of record, they concern the public, rather than the accused, if the body that returns the indictment is composed of men possessing the necessary qualifications; and defects in the record of those steps are not those contemplated by § 7249 of the Revised Statutes, for which a motion to quash an indictment may be made. Inasmuch, however, as the bill of exceptions contains a finding and agreed statement of the facts on which the objections to the indictment are based, and there are other cases pending on indictments found by the same grand jury, in which the same questions are made by plea in abatement, we have concluded, after some hesitation, to consider and dispose of the questions as if presented in that mode. And it may be remarked at the outset that the objections are not to be tested by the overrefined technicalities that were the outgrowth of a system of criminal laws of unreasonable severity, and a humane desire on the part of the court to shield those charged with their violation from excessive and cruel punishment, but by the rule of our Criminal Code, by which defects and imperfections are to be disregarded which do not tend to the prejudice of the substantial rights of the defendant on the merits.

The first one of the objections above stated is founded on § 468 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that "the judges of the common pleas court in each common pleas district, or a majority of them, shall, except as otherwise provided by law, at the time they fix the terms of the common pleas courts in their respective districts, having previously ascertained, as near as practicable, the probable amount of business in each of the counties of the district, apportion the labor of holding the common pleas courts of such districts, as equally as may be, among the judges of the district; and the judges, when they issue their order fixing their terms, shall specify therein what terms, or parts thereof, of the common pleas courts shall be held by each judge, in accordance with such apportionment; and not less than two hundred and forty days of open session of the common pleas court shall be held by each judge during the year, unless all business assigned to him is sooner disposed of." To arrive at the proper construction of this section, it is necessary to notice § 457, which is as follows: "The judges of the common pleas court in each common pleas district, or a majority of them, shall on the third Tuesday in October, in each year, issue their written order to the clerk of the common pleas court in each county in such district, fixing the day of the commencement of each term of the common pleas courts in each county in such district for the next judicial year, which shall commence on the first day of January; and any order so made may be changed by a subsequent order made and issued by them to the several clerks of the court in the district; and the court shall be held for the year covered by such order or orders at the times so ordered; provided, that not less than three terms of the common pleas court shall be held in any county each year." The judges of the common pleas district of which the county of Brown is a part, at their meeting in October, 1898, fixed the day for the commencement of each term of the court in each county of the district for the next judicial year, and issued their order to that effect to the clerk of each county of the district, in conformity with § 457, but failed to specify in the order what terms or parts thereof should be held by each common pleas judge of the district, or otherwise apportion the labor of holding the courts to the several judges; and the claim is that, in consequence of this failure, no judge of the district was authorized to open or hold the term of court at which the indictment in question was returned; and, there being no court, there could be no legally constituted grand jury. If this claim should be sustained, the result would be serious, both to the public, and with respect to the rights and interests of individuals. The omission, intentional or otherwise, to make the apportionment of the labor of holding the courts among the judges, would relieve them of their judicial duties, and suspend the administration of justice in a large degree throughout the district, endangering the peace and good order of society and entailing incalculable loss upon its members. A statute having that effect could not be upheld. By the Constitution the judicial power of the state is vested, in part, in courts of common pleas, and it requires that the state shall be divided into districts and these into subdivisions, in each of which at least one judge shall be elected. The duty is enjoined on these judges to hold court in the several counties of the district as often as may be provided by law. So that the judicial power with which the judges are clothed is coextensive with the district, and in that respect cannot be restricted or suspended by law. What the law may do is to define the jurisdiction of the courts, prescribe the mode of procedure, fix the number of terms to be held in each county, and require the judges to hold them. For many years following the adoption of the present Constitution there was no statute like § 468, and yet any judge held the court in any county of his district.—usually in his subdivision,—without other authority than that which pertained to his office; and manifestly it was not the purpose of that statute to limit the power of the judges in this respect. Its evident design was to enable the judges to make an equitable division among themselves of their judicial labors, so that, as nearly as practicable, the judges should bear their equal share of the burdens, and each county might have court for such time as should be necessary for the transaction of the business. The omission of the judges to make the apportionment, or designate the respective judges who should hold the terms in the several counties, cannot affect the right of any judge to hold court in any county of his district, not render invalid any proceeding at a term so held.

The second objection to the indictment is founded on § 4440-2 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that "the first Monday in September, of each and every year, shall be known as Labor Day; and for all purposes whatever considered as the first day of the week." 90 Ohio Laws, p. 194. The term of the court at which this indictment was found commenced on the first Monday in September, 1899; and the grand jury that returned the indictment was impaneled and sworn on that day, though the indictment was found and returned at a subsequent day of the term; and the contention is that, as the statute declares Labor Day shall be considered as the first day of the week for all purposes, it was unlawful for the court to transact any business on that day; and, consequently, the body impaneled as a grand jury was not a lawful grand jury, and its subsequent action was void. If it be conceded that the statute places Labor Day in the same category with Sunday for all purposes, does it follow that a grand jury impaneled on that day is an illegal body without authority to thereafter hear evidence and find indictments? The distinctive principle established by the case of Bloom v. Richards, 2 Ohio St. 387, is that Sunday laws are mere civil regulations for the good of society, and not designed to enforce or require any religious observance of the day; and that, being penal in their nature, such laws will not be extended by construction beyond their plain import; so that, whatever act may be lawfully done on any other day of the week is equally lawful on Sunday, unless its performance on that day is forbidden by statute. Our statute goes no further than to the prohibition, on that day, of common labor, the arrest of persons on civil process, the selling of intoxicating liquors, and certain shows, games, and sports. It was held in that case that the making of a contract for the sale of land did not come within the prohibition against common labor on Sunday, and the specific performance of such a contract made on that day was enforced. The case was thoroughly considered, and it is shown by Judge Thurman, in an opinion of great research, that the principles stated are maintained by the great weight of authority in this country, and that under Constitutions like ours an enactment could not be sustained whose purpose was simply to enforce the observance of Sunday as a religious duty. It is generally held that statutes which in terms require the closing of public offices on Sunday do not prevent the performance of judicial duties by judges on that day. There is no provision in our statutes, as there is in those of many of the states, and was in 29 Car. II. chap. 7, under which most of the English decisions on the subject were made, forbidding the holding of courts or judicial proceedings on Sundays or holidays, or requiring public offices to be closed, or all secular business suspended, on that day; and the omission of such provisions from our statutes, in view of their presence in the statutes of other states, and especially since the decision of Bloom v. Richards, 2 Ohio St. 387, which has been accepted as the law of this state for nearly half a century,—leads to the conclusion that the legislature has not deemed it advisable to incorporate either of them into the laws of the state. Certain it is that neither of them is embraced in the term "common labor," as used in our statute. Where the transaction of judicial business on Sunday or holidays is expressly forbidden by statute, acts of a ministerial character on those days are held lawful; such as the issue of a warrant for the apprehension of a criminal and his admission to bail, the receiving of a verdict and committing the defendant for sentence, the issue and service of civil process, and many other acts of a similar nature. All of which is a recognition of the rule already stated, that whatever acts may be lawfully done on other days are also lawful when performed on Sunday or a holiday, except when and in so far as their performance on those days is prohibited by statute. The case of Lampe v. Manning, 38 Wis. 673, is sometimes cited in support of the proposition that a holiday is ex vi termini dies non juridicus; but the remark to that effect of the judge who prepared the opinion in that case loses its force when it is considered that the statute governing the case expressly forbade the opening of any court for a trial on a legal holiday. Our attention has also been called to the case of Spicdel Grocery Co. v. Armstrong, 8 Ohio C. C. 489, where it is held that a judgment rendered on Labor Day was void. That case was affirmed by this court without report, and was not much considered. The correctness of the decision may well be doubted; but it is not necessary to reconsider it here. It is distinguishable from the case before us on a ground upon which we prefer to place the decision of this case. It has already been observed that the Constitution confers on the general assembly power to fix the terms of the court of common pleas in all the counties of each district, and the courts are required to be held at such times and places as are provided by law. In the exercise of this power, the legislature may designate by statute, as has often been done, the times for holding the courts, or provide a mode by which such times shall be fixed. It has adopted the latter course in the enactment of § 457, heretofore quoted, by which judges of the district, at the annual meeting provided for, are required to fix the day for the commencement of each term of the court in each county of the district for the next judicial year. No restraint is placed on the power of the judges with respect to the days they may fix for the commencement of the term, but that is left entirely to their discretion; and the courts are required to commence on the days they shall so fix. Considering this section in connection with the Labor Day statute, under a well-settled rule of interpretation, the former being a special provision for particular cases, acts authorized by it may be regarded as excepted from the operation of the latter, especially since the latter contains no express prohibition against such acts. As a general rule, no act can be considered unlawful by implication from one statute that is expressly authorized and required by another valid statute. Though that section (457) was passed before the Labor Day statute, there is nothing in the latter to indicate an intention to repeal the former, or that restricts its operation; nor is there such inconsistency between them that both may not stand together and each have its appropriate effect. The prohibitive and penal provisions of the latter statute, whatever those may be, cannot be enlarged by implication so as to render unlawful any act authorized by the former, and it is not claimed that result is accomplished by any express provision. If it were enacted by statute that a term of court should commence on the first Monday of September, it could not be doubted that the term so held would be lawful, and its proceedings valid, notwithstanding the statute making that day a holiday; and the effect cannot be different where that day is so fixed by the judges under the express authority conferred on them by statute. It was perfectly competent for the legislature to make any act lawful when done on Labor Day that is lawful on any other day, and to that extent the statute creating Labor Day must be regarded as qualified and restrained. It was upon this principle that the case of Perkins v. Jones, 28 Wis. 243, was decided. It was there held that a statute which declared that no court shall transact any business on the 22d day of February, "unless it be for the purpose of instructing or discharging a jury, or receiving a verdict," and another statute, which required that "in all cases where a verdict shall be rendered in a justice's court, the justice shall 'forthwith render judgment,'—must be construed together so as to prevent a failure of justice, and must be held to authorize an immediate entry of judgment where the verdict is received on the 22d of February." It is apparent that we have before us a much stronger case for the application of the principle than the one just cited, for there is, as has been seen, no express provision of our Labor Day statute that conflicts with § 457. Ordinarily it may be supposed that the judges would not fix a holiday for the commencement of a term of the court, but, if they choose to do so, or do so inadvertently, it is nevertheless an authorized exercise of the powers conferred on them, and neither their action nor that of the court held in pursuance thereof is, for that reason, void. It appears from the bill of exceptions that, after the grand jury had been sworn and charged, one of its members was discharged on account of sickness, and another person, having all legal qualifications, was sworn and substituted as a grand juror in the place of the one discharged; and the body thus constituted found the indictment in question. It is contended that body was not a legal grand jury; that, when the member was discharged, the grand jury of which he had been a member was dissolved, and, when the substitution was made, it was necessary to organize a new grand jury by the appointment of a foreman, and administering the necessary oath to him and to his fellow jurors. But the action of the court seems to have been in conformity with the statute, by which it is provided that, "in case of sickness, death, discharge, or nonattendance of a grand juror after the grand jury is sworn, the court, at its discretion, may cause another to be sworn in his stead." Rev. Stat. § 7202. When the new juror is so sworn, and takes his place, the vacancy is filled, and the grand jury again complete; and in their deliberations, findings, and presentments all of the grand jurors are bound by the same oath. The readministration of the oath to the foreman and to the members as a body, could add nothing to its obligation, is not required by the statute, and would at most be an idle ceremony, the omission of which could work no substantial injury.

48 L. R. A.

The remaining objection to the indictment is sufficiently answered by what has already been said. It is not necessary that the records of the court should show how, or by whom, the grand jurors were selected and drawn. The presumption of law is that duty was regularly performed by the proper officers, but, if it was not so done, the objection, if it can be of any avail, must be made in a different mode.

Exceptions sustained.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

STATE of Connecticut ex rel. Morgan G.
BULKELEY et al.

v.

Samuel H. WILLIAMS, Treasurer of Glas-tonbury, Appt.

(68 Conn. 131.)

1. The legislature may require a town to contribute a portion of the cost of maintaining a highway or bridge wholly outside of its territorial bounds, but which specially benefits the town.
2. The representation of a town in the state legislature, which charges the town with a portion of the expense of a highway or bridge district in which the town is placed and which is under the control of commissioners not selected by the town, but who draw orders for funds upon it, is sufficient answer to the objection that the town is taxed by these commissioners without representation.

3. A town tax for moneys to be paid over to the treasurer of a bridge or highway district in which the town is included, for district expenditures, may be required by the legislature.
4. The right of a town to regulate its own finances and affairs, superior to all legislative control, is not among the rights and privileges "derived from our ancestors," to "define, secure, and perpetuate" which the Constitution of Connecticut was adopted, and to which its preamble refers.
5. Failure to require any estimate of the amount needed for the ensuing year to be submitted to a town by a bridge district which includes it, before the time for laying a tax, does not make void a statute

NOTE.—Power of the legislature to impose burdens upon municipalities and to control their local administration and property.

- I. Introductory.
- II. Power to impose burdens.
 - a. Generally.
 - b. Public and quasi-public improvements.
 - c. Compelling payment of non-legal demands.
 - d. Validating defective obligations.
- III. Power in respect to officers and local administration.
- IV. Power in respect to property and franchises.

I. Introductory.

Municipal corporations are, for the purposes of this note, deemed to include only incorporated villages, towns, and cities.

The general subject of legislative power over municipal corporations is discussed in the note to Daly v. Morgan (Md.) 1 L. R. A. 757.

Many of the cases assert a very extensive power of control in the legislature over municipal corporations.

Thus: The United States Supreme Court in affirming the principal case in Williams v. Eggleston, 170 U. S. 304, 42 L. ed. 1048, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617, says "a municipal corporation is, so far as its purely municipal relations are concerned, simply an agency of the state for conducting the affairs of government, and as such it is subject to the control of the legislature."

Cities are the auxiliaries of the state in the business of municipal rule, but they cannot have the least pretension to sustain their privileges or their existence upon anything like a contract between themselves and the legislature. Mount Pleasant v. Beckwith, 100 U. S. 514, 25 L. ed. 699.

This statement was made with reference to an act which extinguished a municipal corporation and annexed its territory to other corporations.

The legislature may, under proper limitation, change, modify, or restrain public corporations, which, like counties, towns, and cities, exist only for public purposes, securing, however, the property for the uses of those for whom and at whose expense it was originally purchased. Terrett v. Taylor, 9 Cranch, 43, 3 L. ed. 650.

A municipal corporation is a public institution created for public purposes, and is a political subdivision or department of the state government, regulated and constituted by public law. The original power to control as well as to create them is in the legislature. Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 221.

Private corporations cannot be deprived of their franchises except by a judicial judgment, but all such as are created merely for the purpose of city government are so far creatures of the legislature that they may be controlled and have their constitutions altered and amended by it in such manner as the public interest may require. State v. Savannah, R. M. Charlt. (Ga.) 250.

The division of laws which establish and regulate municipal corporations, into organic and ordinary, does not exist in Louisiana. "In the country from which we derive our ideas on the subject of municipal corporations, the charters of cities were . . . contracts entered into between the corporators on the one hand, and the king or feudal lord on the other, by which liberties and franchises were bartered for personal service or money. The rights and powers which those charters conferred were of the nature of those secured to the people at large by our constitutions. They were intended to be permanent, and could not be lawfully taken away. . . . But the relation existing between our municipal corporations and the sovereign is not the same." Reynolds v. Baldwin, 1 La. Ann. 162.

The legislature may extend, abridge, or abrogate by general law the powers and functions of the instrumentalities of government which it has created, and may impose additional duties and confer additional power upon the municipalities. Jones v. Lake View, 151 Ill. 663, 38 N. E. 688.

The legislature has power to create municipal corporations, to amend their charters, enlarge or diminish their powers, extend or limit their boundaries, consolidate two or more into one, overrule their legislative action whenever it is deemed unwise, impolitic, or unjust, and even abolish them altogether in the legislative discretion. Groff v. Frederick City, 44 Md. 87.

No principle is better established or more fundamental in its character than that a municipal corporation, being organized for political purposes, is constantly subject to the control of the legislature, and is liable at all times to have its public powers, rights, and duties modified, changed, or abolished as the legislature may deem proper. Frederick v. Groshon, 30 Md. 436, 96 Am. Dec. 591.

Where a municipal board is acting in its municipal capacity in the discharge of duties imposed upon it by the legislature for the pub-charging the town with a portion of the expenses of the district, on the ground that it does not provide the necessary funds.

6. The legislature may reconsider an apportionment of the expense of a highway and bridge over a river between a city and certain towns, although its former apportionment was based on a determination by judicial proceeding.
7. A statute taking the maintenance of a bridge upon the state has no element of a contract, and gives rise to no vested rights such that the legislature cannot afterwards charge the expense of the bridge upon towns specially benefited thereby.
8. The invalidating of a provision in and impairment of a contract between the state and a bridge company for the construction of a bridge, by a statute charging the burden of the bridge upon a city and towns specially benefited, instead of upon the state, will not avail to relieve the city and towns of their liability,—especially after a settlement between the state and the company.

9. A right to the equal protection of the laws is not secured to a municipal corporation as against the state by the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, so as to limit in any way the power of the state legislature to charge the municipality with public obligations; nor have the inhabitants in their capacity of members of such corporation any greater rights or immunities.
10. A town is not deprived of property without due process of law by a statute making it a part of an incorporated highway or bridge district under the control of commissioners who may draw upon the town for a fixed portion of the expenses of the district.
11. No such right of local self-government is given to a town, under the Constitution of the United States or that of the benefit, it may be said practically to be entirely within the control of the legislature. State ex rel. Cleveland v. Jersey City Bd. of Finance and Taxation, 38 N. J. L. 259.

The grant of powers of local government to a municipal corporation is not a contract, but an exercise of legislative power, and the legislature may at any time take away, resume, or limit such powers in the same manner as those conferred upon courts. Jersey City v. Jersey City & B. R. Co. 20 N. J. Eq. 360.

The legislature has the right to change or repeal a municipal charter, and such right is not changed or impaired by the fact that the charter is granted in the same act that creates a private corporation whose rights cannot be changed or repealed without its consent. Patterson v. Society for Establishing Useful Manufactures, 24 N. J. L. 385.

The legislature has entire control over municipal corporations, to create, change, or destroy them at pleasure, and they are absolutely created by the act of incorporation without the acceptance of the people, or any act on their part, unless otherwise provided by the statute itself. Berlin v. Gorham, 34 N. H. 266.

The legislature may recall to itself and exercise at its pleasure so many of the powers it has conferred upon the city corporation as are not secured to it by the Constitution. This necessarily results from the fact that all the legislative power of the people is granted to the legislature, except such as is expressly reserved. People v. Pinckney, 32 N. Y. 377.

A town is, as to the powers it shall possess and the functions it shall perform, the creature of the legislative will. Duanesburgh v. Jenkins, 57 N. Y. 177.

All the authorities are agreed that municipal corporations are within the absolute control of the legislature, and they may be abolished at any time in its discretion. Luehrman v. Shelby County Taxing Dist. 2 Lea, 425.

A city is entirely under the control of the legislature, and it has no vested right, which may not be taken away by the legislature, to tax particular property for municipal purposes. State Bank v. Madison, 3 Ind. 43.

Considered as mere agencies of government, municipal corporations are undoubtedly subject to the absolute control of the legislature, except, perhaps, as to their property rights.

Many of the cases, however, have recognized a twofold character in such corporations,—the one public, as regards the state at large in so far as they are its agents in government; the other private in so far as they are to provide the local necessities and conveniences for their own citizens,—and have denied the absolute control of the legislature over matters referable to the private, as distinguished from the public, character of such corporations.

The difficulty in placing a limit to the legislative control over municipal corporations, at least where their property rights are not concerned, is to find any constitutional restriction upon it.

This difficulty was obviated by Justice Cooley, in People ex rel. Le Roy v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 103, by resorting to the doctrine of an implied constitutional guaranty to municipal corporations of the right of self-government in respect to purely local affairs. He based this doctrine upon the fact that the Constitution was adopted in view of, and recognized the existence of, a system of local government well understood and tolerably uniform in character, existing from the early settlement of the country. The opinion says that the question, broadly and nakedly stated, is "whether local self-government in this state is or is not a mere privilege conceded by the legislature in its discretion, and which may be withdrawn at any time at pleasure." As already shown, he regarded it as a constitutional right, and not merely as a legislative privilege; but a different view of the question has been taken by other courts.

Thus: The maxim of republican government that local affairs shall be managed in the local district is subject to such exceptions as the legislative power shall see fit to make. The legislature has the power to do whatever is not expressly or by necessary implication forbidden by the Constitution. Luehrman v. Shelby County Taxing Dist. 2 Lea, 425.

There is strong reason to recognize the right of local self-government, but it is a matter pertaining to the policy of legislation, rather than a question of constitutional construction. Re Senate Bill, 12 Colo. 188, 21 Pac. 481.

In Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 147, 59 Am. Dec. 759, it was said in reply to a contention based upon the doctrine of an implied guaranty of self-government, that the constitutionality of an act must be determined by the body of the Constitution itself, and not by reference to general principles of justice, liberty, and right not contained or expressed in that instrument.

The opinion in the principal case says that the right of a town to regulate its own finances and affairs, superior to all legislative control, is not among the rights and privileges "derived from our ancestors," to "define, secure, and perpetuate" which the Constitution of Connecticut was adopted, and to which its preamble refers.

Connecticut, as precludes the legislature from exacting of the town payment of a portion of the expense of an incorporated highway or bridge district of which the town is made a part, although the town has no share in choosing the members or directing the affairs of such district.

12. Mandamus to the treasurer of a town to compel payment of a share of the expense of a bridge district to which it belongs is properly issued against him, without making the bridge district or the towns which belong to it parties defendant.

(Andrews, Ch. J., and Hamersley, J., dissent.)

(June 25, 1896.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Hartford County awarding a writ of mandamus to compel him to pay an order drawn on him

And the United States Supreme Court in affirming the decision in that case says: "Whatever may have been the practice of the state in the past, it cannot be doubted that the power of the legislature over all local municipal corporations is unlimited save by the restrictions of the state and Federal Constitutions."

It is to be observed, however, that the maintenance of the highway and bridges involved in that case was a matter in which the state at large, or the general public, had an interest, and therefore, as subsequently shown, comes within the exception to the doctrine of local self-government as laid down in People ex rel. Le Roy v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 103, supra.

There are expressions in the opinion of the state court, that seem broad enough to deny the doctrine of local self-government in toto, but there are other expressions indicating that the court had in mind the distinction between matters in which the state at large was interested, and those in which only the people of the town were interested, and intended only to deny the doctrine as applied to matters of the former kind.

The dissenting opinion in the state court seems to take a broader view of the right of local self-government, at least as applied to towns in Connecticut, and to include within the protection of the doctrine such matters as that involved in the action.

The doctrine as laid down in People ex rel. Le Roy v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 103, is confined strictly to matters which relate to the private as distinguished from the public functions of municipal corporations. Thus, its application was denied by Davock v. Moore, 105 Mich. 120, 28 L. R. A. 783, 63 N. W. 424, to an act to establish a board of health for the city of Detroit, to be appointed by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, upon the ground that the matter of the public health related to the public functions of the municipality, and was therefore within the control of the legislature.

And People ex rel. Park Comrs. v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 228, 15 Am. Rep. 202, infra, concedes that as to all matters of general concern the state may exercise compulsory authority, referring with approval to People ex rel. Drake v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 481, which upheld an act that in effect conferred a limited taxing power upon a police board designated by statute.

But it is held in Allor v. Wayne County Auditors, 43 Mich. 76, 4 N. W. 492, that no business which is in its nature municipal can be con-by the board of commissioners for the Connecticut river bridge to defray expenses incident to the maintenance of such bridge. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. J. R. Buck, Perkins & Perkins, Case, Bryant, & Case, Lewis E. Stanton, Olin R. Wood, and John H. Brocklesby, for appellant:

The act of 1895 denies the validity of the contract with the Berlin Iron Bridge Company, and compels the company to go to the court to establish its validity.

The act of 1893 provides that "the expense of repairing and maintaining said highway and bridges shall be incurred by said board of commissioners on behalf of the state."

The duty to rebuild the bridge in case public convenience, necessity, or safety requires it is put on the state by the act.

trolled by state or any other outside authorities.

The distinction between the public and private functions of municipalities in respect to the legislative control over them is recognized in many cases which are cited under the appropriate subdivisions in this note.

Louisville v. Com. 1 Duv. 295, 85 Am. Dec. 624, illustrates the extent to which this distinction has been carried. It holds that the property of a municipality "used for carrying on its municipal government"—e. g., a courthouse, prison, and the like—is exempt from state taxation though not expressly exempted by statute, upon the same principle that property owned by the state itself is exempt; but it holds that property owned and used by the city in its social or commercial capacity as a private corporation, and for its own profit,—such as vacant lots, market houses, fire engines, and the like,—is subject to state taxation.

The distinction is further explained and illustrated by the case of Bailey v. New York, 8 Hill, 531, 38 Am. Dec. 669, which was an action against the city of New York for injuries occasioned by negligence and unskilfulness in the construction of a dam which was to be used in connection with the water supply. The opinion says that, in separating the powers which pertain to the public character from those which pertain to the private character of a municipal corporation, regard should be had, not so much to the nature and character of the various powers conferred, as to the object and purpose of the legislature in conferring them. It held that the construction of the dam in question was for the purpose of the private advantage of the city, and that, therefore, the city was answerable.

David v. Portland Water Committee, 14 Or. 98, 12 Pac. 174, infra, seems to make the legislature the judge whether a particular matter appertains to the public or the private side of a corporation.

The application that has been made of the doctrine of local self-government, and the distinction between the public and private functions of municipal corporations, and the cases which decline to accept such doctrine and distinction, are shown by the citations made under the subsequent divisions of this note.

II. Power to impose burdens.

a. Generally.

The question as to the power of the legislature to impose burdens upon municipalities without their consent is closely connected with Mather v. Crawford, 36 Barb. 564; Hugans v. Riley, 125 N. Y. 91, 25 N. E. 993; Com. v. Deerfield, 6 Allen, 456.

The passage of the public act of May 24, 1895, and the special act of June 28, 1895, by the general assembly, impaired the obligation of the contract of the state with the Berlin Iron Bridge Company, and consequently those acts are null and void.

The obligations of a contract are that the contractor shall have the right under the law to have his contract enforced or performed, or, failing to have it enforced and performed, he shall recover in the courts of the state the full amount of damages that he is able to prove he has suffered by reason of breaking the contract.

Walker v. Whitehead, 16 Wall. 317, 21 L. ed. 357; Wolff v. New Orleans, 103 U. S. 367, sub nom. United States ex rel. Wolff v. New Orleans, 26 L. ed. 399; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 135, 3 L. ed. 177; Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 200, 4 L. ed. 549; Miller, Const. 530, 539, 540.

The act of May 24, 1895, provides a new remedy, and limits the amount of damages which the Berlin Iron Bridge Company may recover to $40,000.

One of the tests that a contract has been impaired is that its value has by legislation been diminished.

Planters' Bank v. Sharp, 6 How. 327, 12 L. ed. 458; Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. 320, 6 L. ed. 606.

A legislative act equivalent to a contract which is perfected, requiring nothing further to be done in order to its entire completion, is a contract executed; and whatever rights are thereby created, a subsequent legislature cannot impair.

the question as to the extent of the legislative power of taxation, including the apportionment of the burden.

Some of the cases seem to hold that the legislative power of taxation is absolute, or subject only to the limitation that it shall be for a purpose which the legislature deems for the benefit of the locality taxed, and that the power to tax includes the power to apportion the burden of the tax. New Orleans v. Clark, 95 U. S. 644, 24 L. ed. 521; Guthrie Nat. Bank v. Guthrie, 173 U. S. 528, 43 L. ed. 796, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 513; People ex rel. Blanding v. Burr, 13 Cal. 343; Sinton v. Ashbury, 41 Cal. 530; Creighton v. San Francisco City & County Supers. 42 Cal. 446; State ex rel. Cleveland v. Jersey City Bd. of Finance & Taxation, 38 N. J. L. 259; Gulford v. Chenango County Supers. 13 N. Y. 143; Thomas v. Leland, 24 Wend. 65; Davidson v. New York, 27 How. Pr. 342; Darlington v. New York, 31 N. Y. 164, 88 Am. Dec. 248; Gordon v. Cornes, 47 N. Y. 608; People ex rel. New York & H. R. Co. v. Havemeyer, 47 How. Pr. 494; Brewster v. Syracuse, 19 N. Y. 116; New York v. Tenth Nat. Bank, 111 N. Y. 446, 18 N. E. 618; Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 147, 59 Am. Dec. 759; Philadelphia v. Field, 58 Pa. 320; Erie v. Erie Canal Co. 59 Pa. 174.

This position apparently denies the right of the municipality to determine even the strictly local purposes for which taxes shall be laid, and if well taken it is difficult to place any limit on the power of the legislature to impose burdens upon municipalities, at least so long as its exercise may be referred to the power of taxation.

In addition to the cases which naturally fall under the other subdivisions, it has been held under the influence of this principle—

That the legislature may constitutionally make cities liable for damages caused by mobs. Pennsylvania Co. v. Chicago, 81 Fed. Rep. 317; Davidson v. New York, 27 How. Pr. 342; Luke v. Brooklyn, 43 Barb. 54. Other cases to the same effect are cited in a note to Glanfortone v. New Orleans (C. C. E. D. La.) 24 L. R. A. 592.

The opinion in Davidson v. New York, 27 How. Pr. 342, rests the decision in that case upon the theory that the act was a mere exercise of the power of taxation, and that the remedy by taxation provided by the act was exclusive, and held that if an execution could issue upon a judgment recovered under the act, against the city, the act would violate the constitutional objection against taking property without due process of law. The opinion, therefore, makes the power of the legislature 48 L. R. A.

to impose such a burden upon the municipality dependent upon the manner in which the power is sought to be exercised, and, while placing municipal corporations within the protection of the Constitution so far as their property is concerned, leaves them subject to the power of the legislature to dictate for what purposes they shall levy and raise taxes.

The same statute was involved in Darlington v. New York, 31 N. Y. 164, 88 Am. Dec. 248, where it was again upheld, but upon broader ground than that taken in the preceding case. The opinion, after showing that, so far as the act was an exercise of the power of taxation, it was not within the inhibition against taking property for public use without compensation, admitted that it could not be referred solely to the power of taxation, and that a judgment recovered under it might be enforced by execution against the city, under which its property held for the purpose of income or for sale, and unconnected with any use for the purpose of municipal government, might be levied on and sold. In answer to the contention that this construction of the statute rendered it obnoxious to such constitutional provision, the court repudiated the distinction between the public and the private character of municipalities, and held that such property of a municipality was not private within the sense of the constitutional provision.

In People ex rel. Park Comrs. v. Detroit, 23 Mich. 228, 15 Am. Rep. 202, however, the court denied the power of the legislature to compel a municipal corporation to contract a debt for local purposes against its will. Justice Cooley in his opinion said: "The constitutional principle that no person shall be deprived of property without due process of law applies to . . . municipal corporations in their private capacity as well as to corporations for manufacturing and commercial purposes. And when a local convenience or need is to be supplied, in which the people of the state at large, or any portion thereof outside the city limits, are not concerned, the state can no more by process of taxation take from the individual citizens the money to purchase it than they could, if it had been procured, appropriate it to state use." The opinion approves and reaffirms the doctrine laid down in People ex rel. Le Roy v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 108, of a constitutional guaranty of self-government in respect to purely local affairs; and it was upon that principle that the court in effect held that it is for the municipality, and not for the state, to determine for what purely Bishop's Fund Trustees v. Rider, 13 Conn. 94.

The state is under the same obligation to fulfil its contract that an individual is.

Com. v. Proprietors of New Bedford Bridge, 2 Gray, 339.

The prohibition of the Constitution embraces all contracts, executed or executory, between private individuals, or a state and individual, or corporations, or between the states themselves.

Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 1, 5 L. ed. 547; Wolff v. New Orleans, 103 U. S. 358, sub nom. United States ex rel. Wolff v. New Orleans, 26 L. ed. 395; Havemeyer v. Iowa County, 3 Wall. 294, 18 L. ed. 38; Louisiana v. Pilsbury, 105 U. S. 300, 26 L. ed. 1098.

Assuming the act to have been void before the state made the settlement, the effect of the claim of the relator is that the settlement gave validity to an act that before was void.

The respondent, being one of the five towns directly affected by said act, has a pecuniary interest in the matter, and consequently has a right to raise the question of the validity of the acts of 1895 in this action, which is brought to enforce a payment thereunder.

The issue in the case must be made upon the facts, rights, and duties of the parties as they existed at the time of the commencement of the suit, or, at the latest, at the time that they are actually joined.

State ex rel. Reed v. Ramsey, 8 Neb. 286; State ex rel. Willard v. Stearns, 11 Neb. 104, 7 N. W. 743; State ex rel. Franklin County v. Cole, 25 Neb. 342, 41 N. W. 245; Ex parte Candee, 48 Ala. 386; Day v. Callow, 39 Cal. 593.

local matters the power of taxation shall be exercised.

Atkins v. Randolph, 31 Vt. 226, held unconstitutional a provision of an act entitled "An Act to Prevent Traffic in Intoxicating Liquor for the Purpose of Drinking," which authorized an agent appointed by the county commissioner to purchase liquors at the expense of the town for which he is appointed, without its assent, either express or implied. This decision rests upon the ground that, so far as a municipal corporation is endowed by law with the power of contracting, and as such is made capable of acquiring, holding, and disposing of property, and subject to the liabilities incident to the exercise of such power and capacity, it must stand on the same ground of exemption from legislative control and interference as a private corporation.

It will be observed that neither of the latter two cases denies the power of the legislature to impose burdens upon municipalities in respect to matters which pertain to their public, as distinguished from their private, functions.

The following cases involve matters of general, rather than purely local, concern, and therefore do not trench upon the doctrine of local self-government.

The legislature may require a city to pay out of its treasury the salary of the stenographer of courts in the city having jurisdiction in cases of felony. Young v. Kansas City, 152 Mo. 661, 54 S. W. 535.

The legislature may constitutionally impose upon the city the expense of renting and keeping a place for holding court and for the offices of clerk, sheriff, and juries of the court. State ex rel. Aull v. Field, 119 Mo. 593, 24 S. W. 752.

The legislature may constitutionally provide that ordinances relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors in force in a municipality annexed to another city shall continue in full force and effect unless repealed in the manner provided in the act. Swift v. Klein, 163 Ill. 269, 45 N. E. 219.

The legislature may, in the exercise of its police power, impose upon counties, cities, incorporated villages, or townships the support of paupers. Fox v. Kendall, 97 Ill. 72.

Brunswick v. Litchfield, 2 Me. 28, however, held that if a resolution of the legislature validating marriages of paupers were to be construed to impose upon towns in which female paupers had derived derivative settlements by their marriages an obligation to pay for supplies furnished them prior to its passage, it would be unconstitutional.

The legislature may impose upon towns the debts of school districts which have been abolished by a previous statute. Whitney v. Stow, 111 Mass. 368.

It is within the power of the legislature in changing the boundaries of counties, towns, or cities, or in annexing one to another, to provide how the property of former corporations and the burden of paying their debts shall be distributed among them. Stone v. Charlestown, 114 Mass. 214.

The Illinois Constitution of 1848, art. 9, § 5, provided that corporate authorities might be vested with power to assess and collect taxes for corporate purposes.

Under that provision it was held that the legislature could not without the consent of a municipality, either directly or indirectly, create a debt or levy a tax upon the municipality for a purely local purpose. Wider v. East St. Louis, 55 Ill. 135; Cairo & St. L. R. Co. v. Sparta, 77 Ill. 505; Gaddis v. Richland County, 92 Ill. 119.

Other cases decided under that constitutional provision are cited in the following subdivision.

b. Public and quasi-public improvements.

People ex rel. Park Comrs. v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 228, 15 Am. Rep. 202, upon the ground already explained (see supra, II. a) denied the power of the state legislature to compel a municipal corporation to establish and pay for city parks.

Callam v. Saginaw, 50 Mich. 7, 14 N. W. 877, says, arguendo, that the legislature cannot compel a city to bear the whole expense of county buildings.

Bank of Sonoma County v. Fairbanks, 52 Cal. 196, which upheld an act authorizing city authorities to purchase a park, said that such an act could not, perhaps, have been made mandatory.

Baltimore v. Reltz, 50 Md. 574, however, holds that the legislature had power to pass a mandatory act to compel municipal authorities to condemn and acquire a particular tract of land for park purposes. The court in this case seems to take the view that the matter pertains to the public, rather than the private, functions of the municipality.

Under the provision of the Illinois Constitution of 1848, art. 9, § 5, providing that corporate authorities may be vested with power to assess and collect taxes for corporate purposes, it was held that the legislature could not compel a municipal corporation against its

If those parts of the acts of May 24 and June 28, 1895, which affect this contract, are void, then so much of those acts as puts the duty of maintenance on the five towns is void, because the sections relating to the contract are substantial and important sections of the acts, and if any substantial part thereof falls the whole law falls.

Warren v. Charlestown, 2 Gray, 84; State v. Wheeler, 25 Conn. 290; Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 158 U. S. 635, 39 L. ed. 1125, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 912; Powdexter v. Greenhow, 114 U. S. 304, 29 L. ed. 197, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 903, 962; Sprague v. Thompson, 118 U. S. 94, 30 L. ed. 116, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 988.

Said special act of June 28, 1895, is in violation of article 14 of the Amendments of the Constitution of the United States, and of § 1 of article 1 of the Constitution of this state, because it deprives the town of Glastonbury and the citizens thereof of their property without due process of law, and also denies to said town and the citizens thereof equal rights with the citizens of other towns under the law.

The general assembly cannot make a contract between two individuals or two corporations without their consent. It is impossible in the nature of things, for the essence of a contract is the agreement of the parties.

Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 165, 59 Am. Dec. 759; Bowdoinham v. Richmond, 6 Me. 112, 19 Am. Dec. 187; Hasbrouck v. Milwaukee, 13 Wis. 38, 80 Am. Dec. 718; Atkins v. Randolph, 31 Vt. 236; Hampshire County v. Franklin County, 16 Mass. 84; Ellis v. Marshall, 2 Mass. 269, 3 Am. Dec. 49.

Providing for public roads is one of the own will to issue bonds or incur a debt for a merely corporate purpose, like the creation of a public park or other local improvement. People ex rel. McCagg v. Chicago, 51 Ill. 17, 2 Am. Rep. 278; Marshall v. Silliman, 61 Ill. 218.

People ex rel. Wilson v. Salomon, 51 Ill. 37, while holding that several towns may be united in one district for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a public park, holds that the power of the legislature is subject to the limitation that a local burden of that character cannot be imposed upon the people by the district so created without their consent.

A mandatory statute compelling a town or other municipal corporation to become a stockholder in a railroad or other corporation by exchanging its bonds for stock, without its consent in any given way, is unconstitutional. People ex rel. Dunkirk, W. & P. R. Co. v. Batchellor, 53 N. Y. 128, 13 Am. Rep. 480. This decision rests upon the ground that such purpose is not solely public, but is in part private, and that the power of the legislature over municipal corporations is supreme only for public, and not for private, purposes.

In reply to the contention that the statute in question was but the mere exercise of the power of taxation, and that such power might be exercised upon the state at large, or any particular locality, in the discretion of the legislature, the court said that the act could not be maintained upon the taxing power; that a municipal corporation cannot be compelled to embark in a business of private character, because its prosecution by it will probably or certainly lead to its taxation for the capital to be invested or expenses incurred therein.

Williams v. Duaneburgh, 66 N. Y. 129, while holding under authority of People ex rel. Dunkirk, W. & P. R. Co. v. Batchellor, 53 N. Y. 128, 13 Am. Rep. 480, that the legislature cannot compel a municipal corporation to subscribe for railroad stock and to issue its bonds in payment, yet held that if the bonds are issued by the municipality without compulsion of judicial process, they are regarded as issued voluntarily, and are not invalidated by the compulsory character of the act.

The court in Duaneburgh v. Jenkins, 57 N. Y. 177, which was decided by the commissioners of appeals,—of concurrent jurisdiction and equal authority with the court of appeals,—expressed its opinion that the legislature has power to compel, as well as to authorize, a municipal corporation to aid in the construction of a railroad, in the construction of which, in the judgment of the legislature, it has a public interest. The opinion says with reference to People ex rel. Dunkirk, W. & P. R. Co. v. Batchellor, 53 N. Y. 128, 13 Am. Rep. 480, that its admission of the competency of a municipal corporation by its own assent and that of a majority of some sort, and with the authority of the legislature, to make such a subscription, is inconsistent with its decision denying the power of the legislature to compel a town to make a subscription without its assent. The argument of the court is that as the right of the majority of a municipal community to bind the minority to a subscription for stock is not inherent, but is derived from a grant of the legislature, the legislature may on the same principle make the duty imperative on both majority and minority, since if it may bind one citizen without his consent it may bind all.

It will be observed that this reasoning denies the right of municipalities to self-government in respect to local matters. It is true that whether the subscription is made with or without the assent of the municipal authorities, or a majority of the taxpayers or citizens, a burden is imposed upon the dissenting citizens or taxpayers without their consent, but in one case the right of self-government is preserved, and in the other denied.

The opinion on this point is obiter, since the decision of the case did not necessarily involve the overruling of People ex rel. Dunkirk, W. & P. R. Co. v. Batchellor, 53 N. Y. 128, 13 Am. Rep. 480, and the opinion in fact distinguished the case at bar from that case. The opinion was, however, alluded to in Thompson v. Perrine, 103 U. S. 806, 26 L. ed. 612, as being in conflict with People ex rel. Dunkirk, W. & P. R. Co. v. Batchellor, 53 N. Y. 128, 13 Am. Rep. 480, and as creating a doubt in respect to the power of the legislature to compel a subscription.

The decision in People ex rel. Dunkirk, W. & P. R. Co. v. Batchellor, 53 N. Y. 128, 13 Am. Rep. 480, admitting the power of the legislature to authorize, but denying its power to compel, a municipal subscription, was reaffirmed by a majority of the court in the case of Williams v. Duaneburgh, 66 N. Y. 129.

This question is incidentally discussed under subd. II. d, infra.

A statute which requires a city or town, if it desires to own its own water plant or system, to purchase whatever plant or system is owned or controlled by any person or corporation under any contract or franchise entered into with or granted by such city or town, is in violation of a constitutional provision prohibiting the legislature to levy taxes upon inhabitants or property of a municipality for recognized functions of government, and they may be supported and kept in repair by taxation of the state or of the several towns, each town paying for the highway within its limits.

The people who are to pay the taxes must vote them, either directly or by their legal representatives.

Any district of the state which demands taxes from the people must be able to show due authority from the state to make the demand.

Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. 243, 324.

The power to impose taxes cannot be delegated to administrative or ministerial officers.

Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. 61-66.

It is the settled custom and law of this state, and has been so for more than one hundred years, to allow the communities of the state to determine the character of their local improvements, the amount to be expended thereon, and to lay a tax upon the ratable estate of the inhabitants thereof, to raise the amount of money needed therefor.

The system of local taxation under compulsion of the legislature, adopted in a few of the states, has not been put in force here.

Cooley, Taxn. 1st ed. 494, 495.

This special act as a law of taxation does not comply with the custom and law of this state, and therefore is not a "due process of law," and is null and void.

Weimer v. Bunbury, 30 Mich. 202; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 102, 24 L. ed. 618.

Said act does not accord equal rights to the citizens of said Glastonbury, because by the settled custom and law of this state communities are entitled to vote their own municipal purposes. Helena Consol. Water Co. v. Steele, 20 Mont. 1, 37 L. R. A. 412, 49 Pac. 382. The opinion recognizes the distinction between private and public duties, and holds that the purchase of a water plant relates to the private, as distinguished from the public or governmental, functions of the municipality.

The legislature cannot deprive the city council or other legislative body of all discretion with respect to a local improvement within the limits of a city, when by the charter the matter of such improvements is confined to the judgment and discretion of that local body. People v. Lynch, 51 Cal. 15, 21 Am. Rep. 677.

This decision rests upon the following reasoning: The provision of the Constitution requiring the legislature to provide for the organization of cities and incorporated villages, and the provision that each town or city and incorporated village shall make provision for the support of its own officers, subject to such restrictions and regulations as the legislature may prescribe, contemplate cities and villages having the essential features of American cities and villages. The very idea of an American city or village involves the idea of local self-government, of local officers selected by the inhabitants and reflecting the wants and wishes of the inhabitants, and that such officers shall exercise their own judgment in respect to the internal affairs committed to their charge by the laws of their creation. The case substantially follows the reasoning of People ex rel. Park Comrs. v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 228, 15 Am. Rep. 202.

The opinion says with reference to Sinton v. Ashbury, 41 Cal. 530, infra, that it seems to have been conceded by counsel in that case that the legislature had power by special act to direct and control the disposition of the funds or property of a municipal corporation for a municipal purpose.

With reference to People ex rel. Blanding v. Burr, 13 Cal. 843, infra, it says: "The court does not seem to have addressed itself to the broader question which has now been considered, and which may be stated thus: Do the constitutional provisions which require the establishment of cities and incorporated villages, construed in the light of the history of such municipalities and the traditions of our people, restrict the general powers of the state legislature so that they can neither compel a city to create a debt or levy a tax for a particular city purpose, nor directly intervene to levy an assessment on the property of the whole body, or a portion of the 48 L. R. A.

citizens, for a particular municipal improvement?"

It also points out that the broader question above quoted was not considered in Gulford v. Chenango County Supers, 13 N. Y. 143; but that the court in that case merely held that none of the constitutional provisions relied on by counsel were violated by the act in question.

The six cases next cited do not trench upon the principle of local self-government, since they proceed on the theory that the matters involved pertain to the public side of the municipality, in respect to which it is a mere agency of government for the state.

The legislature, having determined that the intersection of two railways with a highway in a city at grade is a nuisance dangerous to life, in the absence of action on the part either of the city or the railroads, may compel them severally to become the owners of the right to lay out new highways and new railways over such land and in such manner as will separate the grade of the railways from that of the highways; may compel them to use the right for the accomplishment of the desired end; and may determine that the expense shall be paid by either corporation alone, or in part by both. Woodruff v. Catlin, 54 Conn. 277, 6 Atl. 849.

Pumphrey v. Baltimore, 47 Md. 145, 28 Am. Rep. 446, while admitting that the power of the legislature over municipal corporations is not absolute or unlimited, upholds the constitutionality of a mandatory act requiring a city to take charge of and maintain as a public highway a certain bridge within the city. The opinion says that the duty is one falling within the ordinary functions of municipal government.

People ex rel. McLean v. Flagg, 46 N. Y. 401, upholds the constitutionality of an act which required a town to issue bonds and use the proceeds in the improvement of highways. This decision was put upon the ground that the matter related to a public duty, and the court says if the object of the expenditure were private, or if the money to be raised were directed to be paid to a private corporation authorized to use the improvements for private gain, the question would be different.

The legislature has power to require a city without its consent to incur a debt for the acquisition of public bridges and ferries. Simon v. Northrup, 27 Or. 487, 30 L. R. A. 171, 40 Pac. 560. The opinion refers to People ex rel. Park Comrs. v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 228, 15 Am. Rep. 202, and other cases of that kind, and says taxes for local improvements, determine the amount of those taxes, and how the money shall be expended.

Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 157 U. S. 554, 39 L. ed. 809, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 673; M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 428, 4 L. ed. 606.

The act compels the citizens of Glastonbury to pay for the construction and maintenance of a highway and bridges that are wholly outside of the limits of that town.

Manifest injustice found in a legislative act can be corrected.

Washington Avenue, 69 Pa. 352, 8 Am. Rep. 255; Hammett v. Philadelphia, 65 Pa. 155, 3 Am. Rep. 615; People ex rel. Park Comrs. v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 228, 15 Am. Rep. 202; People ex rel. McCagg v. Chicago, 51 Ill. 17, 2 Am. Rep. 278; Lovington v. Wider, 53 Ill. 302; People ex rel. Wider v. Canty, that they hold, and perhaps properly, that a municipal corporation cannot be burdened with a debt without its consent for a matter of local, as distinguished from state, concern. It says, however, that it is substantially agreed that when the debt or liability is to be incurred in the discharge of some duty which is imposed upon the municipality exclusively for public purposes, and in the performance of which the general public, as distinguished from the inhabitants of the particular municipality, have an interest, it is within the power of the legislature to compel it to perform such duty and incur a debt therefor. It further held that the bridges and ferries referred to in the act, when acquired, would belong to the city in its public or governmental character, and that in acquiring them it but discharged a public or state duty which it was entirely proper for the legislature to impose upon it.

Kimball v. Mobile County, 3 Woods, 555, Fed. Cas. No. 7,774, upholds the power of the legislature to compel a county against its will to levy and collect a tax for the improvement of a river or harbor within the county limits, and in which the county is vitally interested, although other counties, and the state at large, may also derive benefit from the improvement. The court says it may be conceded that the legislature has no power against the will of a municipal corporation to compel it to contract debts for local purposes in which the state has no concern.

Prince v. Crocker, 166 Mass. 347, 32 L. R. A. 610, 44 N. E. 446, held that as to roads of all kinds, and bridges and sewers, the legislature may prescribe what shall be done, and require cities and towns to bear the expense to such an extent and in such proportion as it may determine.

So, also, the principal case upheld a statute which erected several towns into a district for road and bridge purposes, and compelled the town in whose behalf the action was brought to contribute to the cost of maintaining a highway and bridge wholly outside of its territorial bounds. The United States Supreme Court in affirming that decision in Williams v. Eggleston, 170 U. S. 804, 42 L. ed. 1047, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617, held that neither the constitutional guaranty of equal protection, nor that of due process of law, was violated by the statute.

The four cases next cited, however, seem to rest upon the theory that the legislature's power of taxation and apportionment is absolute, and therefore in effect deny the right of local self-government in respect to taxation for municipal purposes.

48 L. R. A.

55 Ill. 33; Wider v. East St. Louis, 55 Ill. 133; Gage v. Graham, 57 Ill. 144; East St. Louis v. Witts, 59 Ill. 155; Marshall v. Silliman, 61 Ill. 218; Cairo & St. L. R. Co. v. Sparta, 77 Ill. 505; Barnes v. Lacon, 84 Ill. 461.

A statute empowering the authorities of a city to construct sidewalks and make local assessments on the property fronting the same, "for so much of the expense thereof as they shall deem just and equitable," is unconstitutional in that there is no fixed, certain, and legal standard of assessment.

Barnes v. Dyer, 56 Vt. 469; Providences Bank v. Billings, 4 Pet. 562, 7 L. ed. 956; People ex rel. Griffin v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 426, 55 Am. Dec. 266; Allen v. Drew, 44 Vt. 174.

The Connecticut river at the place where the highway and bridge referred to in these

Thomas v. Leland, 24 Wend. 65, upholds the constitutionality of a statute levying a tax upon the owners of real estate in a city to pay the extraordinary expense of the termination of a canal at the city, instead of at the place originally contemplated. The decision is upon the ground that the statute was an exercise of the taxing power, and therefore not obnoxious to the objection that it took the individual taxpayers' property without compensation. In this case several private individuals had previously entered into a bond to pay the extra expense, and the statute operated to relieve them, but the court held that that fact did not affect the question.

Gordon v. Cornes, 47 N. Y. 608, upheld the constitutionality of an act which empowered the trustees of a village to raise money for a state normal school. It was urged that the institution for which the money was to be raised was not a local one, but was for the equal benefit of the whole state, and that the assessment ought to be imposed with equality upon all the property within the state. The court said, however, that the power of apportionment was included in the power to impose taxes vested in the legislature, and in the absence of any constitutional restraint the exercise of it could not be reviewed by the courts.

People ex rel. New York & H. R. Co. v. Havemeyer, 47 How. Pr. 494, upheld the constitutionality of an act which imposed upon the city a portion of the cost of the work of changing the mode of construction of railroad tracks in a city street, and directed that when the expenditure had been made the comptroller of the city should draw his warrant upon the treasury for the city's proportion of the cost, and that the amount thereof should be raised by taxation. The court said that even if the tax were to be deemed for the benefit of the railroad company the act would not, therefore, be unconstitutional, since there was no such limitation upon the taxing power of the legislature.

The legislature has power to appoint commissioners to build a free bridge over a river within the city, to create a loan for the purpose, and to require the municipal authorities of the city to provide for the payment of the loan. Philadelphia v. Field, 58 Pa. 320. The statute in question seems to be referred to the taxing power of the legislature.

Erie v. Erie Canal Co. 59 Pa. 174, while denying the power of the legislature to compel a quasi-public corporation, like a canal company, to rebuild and repair bridges over its canals, held that it might compel a municipal acts cross it is a navigable river, and is not located within the limits of the town. A bridge spanning that river would be a structure for the benefit of the general public, and being such a public work, the expense of construction cannot legally be put on the towns named in these acts, but the expense should be borne by the state.

Adams v. Pease, 2 Conn. 481; Middletown v. Sage, 8 Conn. 221; Chapman v. Kimball, 9 Conn. 38, 21 Am. Dec. 707.

Messrs. Lewis Sperry, George P. McLean, and Austin Brainard, for appellées:

The general assembly has the power to establish a bridge or highway district, and place the burden of the construction and maintenance of a highway or bridge upon the towns or localities included in said district.

corporation to construct and keep in repair bridges within its bounds.

It would seem that the decisions in the latter two cases might be upheld without denying the right of self-government in respect to taxation for purely local purposes, since the matters involved are of public concern, and therefore in any event within the control of the legislature: but the opinions evidently proceed upon the theory of unlimited control in the legislature without any distinction between public and private matters.

c. Compelling payment of non-legal demands.

It has been frequently held that the legislature may require a municipality to pay a claim which is just and equitable, but not legally enforceable.

Thus: It is competent for the legislature to impose upon a city the payment of claims just in themselves, for which an equivalent has been received, but which, from some irregularity or omission in the proceedings creating them, cannot be enforced at law. New Orleans v. Clark, 95 U. S. 644, 24 L. ed. 521. The opinion says: "The power of taxation which the legislature of a state possesses may be exercised to any extent upon property within its jurisdiction, except as specially restrained by its own or the Federal Constitution; and its power of appropriation of the moneys raised is equally unlimited. It may appropriate them for any purpose which it may regard as calculated to promote the public good. . . . The power which it may thus exercise over the revenues of the state it may exercise over the revenues of a city for any purpose connected with its present or past condition, except as such revenues may, by the law creating them, be devoted to special uses; and in imposing a tax it may prescribe the municipal purpose for which the moneys raised shall be applied. . . . In directing, therefore, a particular tax by such corporation, and the appropriation of the proceeds to some special municipal purpose, the legislature only exercises a power through its subordinate agent which it could exercise directly; and it does this only in another way when it directs such corporation to assume and pay a particular claim not legally binding for want of some formality in its creation, but for which the corporation has received an equivalent."

Guthrie Nat. Bank v. Guthrie, 173 U. S. 528, 43 L. ed. 796, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 513, holds that the territorial legislature of Oklahoma has power to create a special tribunal for hearing and deciding upon claims against a municipal corporation which had no legal obligation, but which the legislature thinks had sufficient equity to make it proper to provide for their investigation and payment when found proper. This decision rests upon the same ground as that in the preceding case. The opinion says that the legislature might have decided the facts for itself, but, instead of that, appointed a tribunal.

The legislature may require the payment by a municipal corporation of claims invalid in the forum of the law, but equitable and just in themselves. People ex rel. Blanding v. Burr, 13 Cal. 343.

Free highways and bridges are constructed and maintained for the benefit of the public. It is impossible to apportion the expense equally among the individuals that may use them. Whether the state, or Hartford county, or the five towns, or one town, is compelled to pay for the bridge and causeways in question, is unimportant.

Granby v. Thurston, 23 Conn. 416; Stonington v. State, 31 Conn. 214; Abendroth v. Greenwich, 29 Conn. 362; Webster v. Harwinton, 32 Conn. 131; State ex rel. Coe v. Fyler, 48 Conn. 158; Turney v. Bridgeport, 55 Conn. 414, 12 Atl. 520; Dailey v. New Haven, 60 Conn. 320, 14 L. R. A. 69, 22 Atl. 945; Chidsey v. Canton, 17 Conn. 478; Mower v. Leicester, 9 Mass. 247, 6 Am. Dec. 63; Reed v. Belfast, 20 Me. 246; Burn, Justice of the Peace, 164.

The power of the general assembly to es-

but which the legislature thinks had sufficient equity to make it proper to provide for their investigation and payment when found proper. This decision rests upon the same ground as that in the preceding case. The opinion says that the legislature might have decided the facts for itself, but, instead of that, appointed a tribunal.

The legislature may require the payment by a municipal corporation of claims invalid in the forum of the law, but equitable and just in themselves. People ex rel. Blanding v. Burr, 13 Cal. 343.

The act involved in that case provided for the issuance of bonds to the holders of the claims, and directed a levy of an annual tax for the payment of interest and the creation of a sinking fund. The opinion, which was by Field, J., held that the direction to levy the tax was a legitimate exercise of the taxing power of the legislature.

The legislature has the constitutional power to direct and control the affairs and property of a municipal corporation for municipal purposes, provided it does not impair the obligation of contracts, and by appropriate legislation may so control its affairs as ultimately to compel it, out of the funds in its treasury, or by taxation to be imposed for the purpose, to pay a demand, when properly established, which in good conscience it ought to pay, even though there be no legal liability to pay it. Slinton v. Ashbury, 41 Cal. 525.

The legislature may compel a city to pay a claim equitably due to a contractor on account of a street improvement, although it was not legally enforceable. Creighton v. San Francisco City & County Supers. 42 Cal. 446.

The legislature may, in strict conformity with its constitutional powers and duties, recognize a moral obligation of a municipal corporation as the sole basis for the imposition of taxes. Beals v. Amador County, 35 Cal. 624.

The authority of these California cases has been weakened, if they have not been entirely overruled, by People v. Lynch, 51 Cal. 15, 21 Am. Rep. 677, supra, II. b.

It is within the power of the legislature to relieve from the consequences of noncompliance with the formalities prescribed by a city charter in respect to city contracts, and give contractors their equitable right to compensation for services rendered and materials furnished in good faith for the public benefit under a contract in respect to which the formalities required by the charter have not been observed. State ex rel. Cleveland v. Jersey City Bd. of Finance & Taxation, 38 N. J. L. 259.

establish a bridge district without regard to municipal or political subdivisions, and place the burden of the construction and maintenance of the bridge upon such district, in such proportions and in such manner as the general assembly may provide, cannot be questioned.

Desty, Taxn. 5th ed. 276, 279, 285; Luehrman v. Shelby County Tazing Dist. 2 Lea, 425; Bowles v. State, 37 Ohio St. 35; Shaw v. Dennis, 10 Ill. 416; Malchus v. District of Highlands, 4 Bush, 547; Shelby County Judge v. Shelby R. Co. 5 Bush, 225; People ex rel. McSpedon v. Haws, 34 Barb. 69; People v. Central P. R. Co. 43 Cal. 398; People ex rel. Griffin v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 419, 55 Am. Dec. 266; Parker v. Challiss, 9 Kan. 165.

The power to determine what shall be the taxing district for any particular burden is purely a legislative power, subject to be controlled only by constitutional provisions.

Desty, Taxn. 276; People ex rel. Griffin v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 419, 55 Am. Dec. 266; Shaw v. Dennis, 10 Ill. 416; Conwell v. Connersville, 8 Ind. 358; Challiss v. Parker, 11 Kan. 394; Hingham & Q. Bridge & Turnp. Corp. v. Norfolk County, 6 Allen, 353; Malchus v. District of Highlands, 4 Bush, 547; Philadelphia v. Field, 58 Pa. 320; Langhorne v. Robinson, 20 Gratt. 661.

The legislature judges finally and conclusively upon all questions of policy, as upon all questions of fact, involved in the determination of a taxing district.

ITCHFIELD v. VERNON, 41 N. Y. 133.

Courts are without power to interfere with the legislative discretion, however erroneous it may be.

Scovill v. Cleveland, 1 Ohio St. 138; Gor-

Municipal corporations, being creatures of the legislative power, and subordinate parts of the government of the state, are subject to the legislative will to the extent that it may provide for the appointment of a tribunal for the adjustment of claims against them without a jury trial. Ibid.

The legislature has power to arrest work done upon a city reservoir, which is being done partly under contract and partly outside of the contract without legal authority, and compel a settlement, and may also declare what shall be the equitable terms of the settlement, even to the extent of declaring that the contractor shall not be charged with overpayments if any such have been made. Ibid.

State ex rel. Hernandez v. Flanders, 24 La. Ann. 57, upheld the validity of an act directing a city to include in its funded debt all registered certificates owned by bona fide purchasers. The certificate in question in this case was originally unauthorized because in the nature of a gratuity. The court said: "A municipal corporation is created for a political purpose.

It is invested with subordinate legislative powers, to be exercised for local purposes connected with the public good, and is subject to the control of the legislature.

When it holds specific property for municipal purposes, that property is said by some to be invested with the security of private rights, but in most other respects the state through the legislature has full control."

Gulford v. Chenango County Supers. 13 N. Y. 143, upheld the constitutionality of an act directing the board of supervisors to assess and collect from the taxable property of a town an amount sufficient to pay a claim which was unenforceable at law, and which had been rejected by the voters of the town. This decision rests upon the ground that the act was an exercise of the taxing power. The court said: The legislature is not confined in its appropriation of the public moneys, or the sums to be raised by taxation, in favor of individuals, to cases in which a legal demand exists against the state, and it can recognize claims founded in equity and justice in the largest sense of those terms, or in gratitude or charity. Independently of express constitutional restrictions, it can make appropriations of money whenever the public well-being requires or will be promoted by it, and it is the judge of what is for the public good. It can, moreover, under the power to levy taxes, apportion the public burden among all the taxpaying citizens of the state, or among those of a particular section or political division. It is well settled that the authority to raise money by the exercise of the 48 L. R. A.

taxing power is not in conflict with the constitutional provisions protecting private property from seizure.

The legislature may authorize the levy of a tax to pay a sewer contractor an addition to the contract price, which the corporation was forbidden by its charter to pay. Brewster v. Syracuse, 19 N. Y. 116.

Municipal corporations are the creatures of the state, and exist and act in subordination to its sovereign power. The legislature may determine what moneys they may raise and expend, and what taxation for municipal purposes may be imposed; and it does not exceed its constitutional authority when it compels a municipal corporation to pay a debt which has some meritorious basis to rest on. New York v. Tenth Nat. Bank, 111 N. Y. 446, 18 N. E. 618.

In this case an act requiring the comptroller of the city of New York to pay back to various banks moneys which had been advanced by them for the use of any of the departments or commissioners of the city or county was held to be a valid exercise of legislative power, although the advances in question were unauthorized, and part of them were misappropriated by conspirators, some of whom were directors of the bank.

The legislature has power to provide for the issuance of bonds by a municipality to pay an assessment against the town for its share of the cost of the construction of a highway, notwithstanding that the act providing for the construction of the highway and the assessment of a portion of the expense against the town was unconstitutional, the highway having been laid out in the meantime. Knapp v. Newtown, 1 Hun, 268.

Hoagland v. Sacramento, 52 Cal. 142, while admitting the power of the legislature to furnish a remedy or remove an impediment preventing the enforcement of a legal or equitable right or duty already existing, denied its right to compel a city to pay a claim which it was under no legal or moral obligation to pay. The distinction is between recognizing an existing claim which has a moral basis but is not legally enforceable, and creating a claim previously nonexistent.

So, also, the opinion in Guthrie Nat. Bank v. Guthrie, 173 U. S. 528, 43 L. ed. 796, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 513, supra, said: "It is not necessary to say in this case that the legislature had the power to donate the funds of the municipality for purposes of charity alone."

The legislature may require a municipal corporation to audit and allow a judgment pre-don v. Cornes, 47 N. Y. 611; Allen v. Drew, 44 Vt. 187; Alcorn v. Hamer, 38 Miss. 652; Arbogast v. Louisville, 2 Bush, 271.

The power of apportionment is included in the power to impose taxes, and is vested in the legislature.

Gordon v. Cornes, 47 N. Y. 608.

Making and improving the public highways, and the imposition of taxes, are among the ordinary subjects of legislation.

People ex rel. McLean v. Flagg, 46 N. Y. 406; East Portland v. Multnomah County, 6 Or. 62; Norwich v. Hampshire County Comrs. 13 Pick. 62.

The power of the general assembly to form a bridge district like the one in question, and to provide for the issue and payment of bonds for the construction of a public bridge, is in no way limited by the Federal or the state Constitution. The legislature has been viously rendered against it. In so doing the legislature neither attempts to create nor to adjudicate in respect to a debt against the corporation. People ex rel. O'Donnell v. San Francisco City & County Supers. 11 Cal. 206.

Johnson v. San Diego, 109 Cal. 468, 30 L. R. A. 178, 42 Pac. 249, held that the legislature had power to change and readjust the burden of municipal indebtedness after the division of a city, so as to impose a heavier burden of indebtedness upon the municipality than existed under the act of separation. The opinion does not deny that in respect to mere local, as distinguished from public, concerns municipal corporations are entitled to the same protection as a private corporation, but holds that the adjustment of the indebtedness related to the political and governmental affairs of the municipality.

It has been held, however, that—

The legislature has no power to provide means for the collection of a void obligation of a municipal corporation. Mosher v. Independent School Dist. 44 Iowa, 122.

That the legislature cannot definitely fix the amount due to persons named from a municipal corporation. State ex rel. Arlick v. Hampton, 13 Nev. 441. This decision is put upon the ground that such provision is an attempt on the part of the legislature to exercise judicial power.

State ex rel. McCurdy v. Tappan, 29 Wis. 664, 9 Am. Rep. 622, holds that an act which attempted to compel a municipality to pay a claim to reimburse the treasurer of a city for the amount paid by him as a bounty to a volunteer whom he supposed was credited on the quota of the city, but who was in fact credited on the quota of the town, was unconstitutional. The court said that the legislature might authorize, but could not compel, a municipality to levy taxes for public purposes not strictly of a municipal character, but from which the public have received or will receive some direct advantage, or where the tax is to be expended in paying claims founded upon natural justice and equity, or upon gratitude for public services or expenditures, or in discharging the obligations of charity and humanity.

While most of the cases that uphold the power of the legislature to compel municipal corporations to pay claims not legally enforceable trace it to the power of taxation, they do not seem to limit the doctrine to cases in which the legislation has taken the form of an exercise of the power of taxation, but seem to treat the imposition of such a burden as in effect an exercise of the taxing power, since 48 L. R. A.

is the sole judge of benefits and assessments and methods of payment.

Desty, Taxn. 280; People ex rel. McLean v. Flagg, 46 N. Y. 406; Williams v. Cammack, 27 Miss. 210, 61 Am. Dec. 508; Alcorn v. Hamer, 38 Miss. 652; Daily v. Swope, 47 Miss. 367; Slack v. Maysville & L. R. Co. 13 B. Mon. 28; State ex rel. Farren v. St. Louis, 62 Mo. 244; Talbot County Comrs. v. Queen Anne County Comrs. 50 Md. 245; Thomas v. Leland, 24 Wend. 65; Com. v. Newburyport, 103 Mass. 129; Luehrman v. Shelby County Taxing Dist. 2 Lea, 425; People ex rel. Le Roy v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 103; Baltimore v. State ex rel. Board of Police, 15 Md. 376, 74 Am. Dec. 572; Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 706, 26 L. ed. 243.

Statutes regulating the construction and maintenance of highways and bridges are in taxation is the source from which the funds to pay the claims must come. The statutes involved in Sinton v. Ashbury, 41 Cal. 525, and Creighton v. San Francisco City & County Supers. 42 Cal. 446, directed the issuance of warrants to be paid out of the city treasury.

It will also be observed that the Illinois cases treated the power to create a debt as the same thing as the power to direct the levy of a tax, for the purposes of the constitutional provision that the corporate authorities may be vested with power to assess and collect taxes for corporate purposes. See Wilder v. East St. Louis, 55 Ill. 135, and Gaddis v. Richland County, 92 Ill. 119, supra, II. a.

In People ex rel. Baldwin v. Hawa, 37 Barb. 440, however, the court held that a provision of a statute for the appointment of arbitrators to adjust and determine the damages to contractors from the Croton Aqueduct violated §§ 1 and 6 of article 1 of the Constitution providing that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. The court said that Guliford v. Cornell, 18 Barb. 615, related, not to the right or power of the legislature to compel an individual or corporation to pay a debt or claim, but to the power of the legislature to raise money by tax and apply such money when so raised to the payment thereof. It said, further, that under the decisions of the court made in that and other cases the court could not hold that the legislature had no authority to impose a tax to pay any claim, or to pay it out of the state treasury, and for that purpose to impose a tax upon the property of the whole state or any portion of it; but that neither that case nor People ex rel. Griffin v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 419, 55 Am. Dec. 266, warrants the opinion that the legislature has a right to direct a municipal corporation to pay a claim for damages for breach of a contract out of the funds or property of such corporation without a submission of such claim to a judicial tribunal.

The decision in the preceding case was reaffirmed in Baldwin v. New York, 45 Barb. 359, involving the same statute. The opinion of Ingraham, Ch. J., says: "The opinion of Denio, Ch. J., in Darlington v. New York, 28 How. Pr. 352, contained much not at all necessary to the decision of that case, and the unlimited power claimed in that opinion for the legislature over the property of municipal corporations should be authoritatively declared in a case which would make it binding as an authority, before it is adopted as law removing, as in this case, all the protection which the no sense contracts with the town affected. Towns cannot acquire vested rights under such laws, and the power of the legislature to change and redistribute these public burdens has always been conceded.

Scituate v. Weymouth, 108 Mass. 130; Brighton v. Wilkinson, 2 Allen, 27; Carter v. Cambridge & B. Bridge Proprs. 104 Mass. 236; Atty. Gen. v. Cambridge, 16 Gray, 247; Agawam v. Hampden County, 130 Mass. 530.

The respondent town is "specially benefited" by the highway and bridge in question.

The decision of a court of competent jurisdiction is final and conclusive upon the parties and as to the title claimed under it.

Rose v. Himely, 4 Cranch, 241, 2 L. ed. 608; Gelston v. Hoyt, 3 Wheat. 315, 4 L. ed. 398; Hopkins v. Lee, 6 Wheat. 113, 5 L. ed.

219; Elliott v. Peirsol, 1 Pet. 334, 7 L. ed. 107; Holcomb v. Phelps, 16 Conn. 132; Spratt v. Spratt, 4 Pet. 408, 7 L. ed. 902; 1 Van Fleet, Former Adjudication, 603; Ash-ton v. Rochester, 133 N. Y. 187, 30 N. E. 965, 31 N. E. 334.

The general assembly has power to order a locality or district to construct and maintain a public bridge or highway, and the proportion to be paid by each municipality cannot be reviewed by the courts.

Gordon v. Cornes, 47 N. Y. 608.

The alleged contract between the state of Connecticut and the Berlin Iron Bridge Company was clearly illegal and ultra vires.

The commissioners acting for the state could not exceed the authority of the act. An agent has no power to bind his principal outside the scope of his authority.

Mechem, Agency, § 274; Baltimore v.

Constitution has given to private property and to a trial by jury in case of disputed claims."

These cases do not wholly deny the power of the legislature to compel municipal corporations to pay claims not legally enforceable, but seem to limit the doctrine to statutes taking the form of an exercise of the power of taxation.

But when the case of Baldwin v. New York came before the court of appeals, Justice Peckham, in the prevailing opinion in 2 Keyes, 887, while distinguishing the case from Gulford v. Chenango County Supers. 13 N. Y. 143, and Brewster v. Syracuse, 19 N. Y. 116, questioned the decisions in those cases. He said that when, as in the case at bar, the legislature admitted the demand to be unliquidated, disputed, and denied, its adjudication belonged exclusively to the courts established under the Constitution, and that when the legislature assumed to direct an arbitration for its settlement, and ordered the award to be paid, it violated the constitutional provisions declaring that no person shall be deprived of property without due process of law, and guaranteeing the right of trial by jury; expressing his opinion that both of such constitutional provisions apply to municipal corporations. The opinion admits that, when the legislature orders a tax to be levied for the payment of any alleged claim against a locality, it is more delicate, and practically more difficult, to declare it void, but says if it appear or be conceded that the tax is for a claim for services or damages disputed and denied by the corporation, the act would be void as in violation of the foregoing constitutional provisions.

Re Jensen, 28 Misc. 378, 59 N. Y. Supp. 653, holds unconstitutional an act authorizing any official who has been prosecuted for an alleged crime in connection with his official duties, and has been acquitted, to proceed ex parte before the supreme court for an allowance of a claim for reasonable counsel fees and expenses incurred by him in the prosecution, and compelling the city to include the amount so allowed in its tax levy. The decision is put upon the ground that the act violates the constitutional provision against taking property without due process of law; the court holding that the term "person," in the constitutional provision, relates to municipal corporations in their private capacity.

d. Validating defective obligations.

The legislatures have frequently undertaken to impose burdens on municipalities by validating L. R. A.

ing contracts or obligations which without legislative aid would be unenforceable.

The power to do this has been upheld where the invalidity arose from some irregularity.

Thus: The legislature may cure irregularities in an election on a proposition for a municipal subscription to railroad stock. St. Joseph Twp. v. Rogers, 16 Wall. 644, 21 L. ed. 328.

The legislature may ratify a fraudulent or irregular issue of bonds by a municipality, where they were issued to redeem an outstanding valid indebtedness of the municipality. Black v. Cohn, 52 Ga. 621.

Gardner v. Haney, 86 Ind. 17, upholds the validity of an act validating bonds of incorporated towns which were void for irregularities in the conduct of the election on the proposition to issue them.

The legislature may cure irregularities in the execution of the power conferred upon a municipal corporation to take stock in a railroad. People ex rel. Albany & S. R. Co. v. Mitchell, 35 N. Y. 531.

Tift v. Buffalo, 82 N. Y. 204, holds that the legislature has power to adopt and legalize the acts of a municipality invalid because of irregularities merely in the mode of procedure, when there was municipal jurisdiction of the subject-matter. The statute involved in that case cured irregularities in proceedings for the repair of a city street. The opinion says: It is not meant to assert that the legislature may by a retrospective statute validate a municipal action that trenches upon vested rights or affects substantial equities, but to declare that where there was municipal jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and the defects in the exercise of it are irregularities in the mode of procedure, it is within the legislative discretion to adopt and confirm the result of the informal act, or send back the matter to the municipality, with power to begin again and go forward in the mode prescribed by the original authority.

The legislature may by a retrospective statute validate an irregular or defective execution of a power by the authorities of a municipal corporation acting under a former statute, where no contract is impaired and the rights of third persons are not injuriously affected. Here the ratification was of municipal bonds issued in payment of a subscription to railroad stock. Belv v. Forsythe County Comrs. 76 N. C. 489.

But the courts have gone still further, and upheld acts validating contracts or obligations which were void for want of authority. Thus: Bass v. Columbus, 30 Ga. 845, holds that it is within the power of the legislature to validate a subscription to railroad stock and the issu-Eckback, 18 Md. 282; United States v. Doherty, 27 Fed. Rep. 730; Hawkins v. United States, 96 U. S. 689, 24 L. ed. 607; White-side v. United States, 93 U. S. 247, 23 L. ed. 382; Moffat v. United States, 112 U. S. 24, 28 L. ed. 623, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10; Gibbons v. United States, 8 Wall. 269, 19 L. ed. 453; Pilor v. United States, 9 Wall. 45, 19 L. ed. 549; Mechem, Pub. Off. § 512; Moorhead v. Little Miami R. Co. 17 Ohio, 353.

If the bridge company had a contract with the state, this contract cannot be taken advantage of by the respondent in this or any other proceeding.

Changes in the forms of action and modes of proceeding do not amount to an impairment of the obligations of a contract, if an adequate and efficacious remedy is left.

Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 200, 4 L. ed. 540; Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. 349;

Mason v. Haile, 12 Wheat. 378, 6 L. ed. 663; Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How. 316, 11 L. ed. 145; Von Hoffman v. Quincy, 4 Wall. 553, sub nom. United States ex rel. Von Hoffman v. Quincy, 18 L. ed. 409; Drehman v. Stifle, 8 Wall. 602, 19 L. ed. 510; Gunn v. Barry, 15 Wall. 623, 21 L. ed. 215; Walker v. Whitehead, 16 Wall. 317, 21 L. ed. 357; Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 633, 24 L. ed. 386; Tennessee v. Sneed, 96 U. S. 69, 24 L. ed. 610; Louisiana v. Pilebury, 105 U. S. 301, 26 L. ed. 1098; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 132, 24 L. ed. 86; Jackson ex dem. Hart v. Lamp-hire, 3 Pet. 290, 7 L. ed. 683; Cooley, Const. Lim. 443.

The state may by public act interfere with a contract entered into by her agents without authority, and whether void or valid, if the party claiming under it cancels and surrenders it to the state for a valuable and ance of bonds to pay therefor by a municipality, although they were previously void.

Grenada County Supers. v. Brogden, 112 U. S. 261, sub nom. Grenada County Supers. v. Brown, 28 L. ed. 704, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 125, upholds the constitutionality of an act ratifying county bonds which were issued without legislative authority, but at a time when such authority might have been conferred by the legislature.

Dows v. Elmwood, 84 Fed. Rep. 114, is to the same effect. The court in the latter case says: "It is clear on principle as well as upon the authorities, that wherever the legislature has power to authorize the different municipalities of the state to vote and issue bonds under authority of an act of the legislature, if the people vote those bonds voluntarily, and the action of the electors is afterwards confirmed and approved by the legislature, and their acts made binding upon the town by an express act ratifying their action, it stands precisely on the same footing as though there had been an enabling act in advance."

The legislature may legalize an issue of scrip by a city to a railroad company in payment of a subscription to stock, notwithstanding that the submission of the question to the people was under a wrong law. Campbell v. Kenosha, 5 Wall. 184, 18 L. ed. 610.

The legislature may ratify a subscription by a municipal corporation to the stock of an incorporated company, though originally unauthorized. First Municipality v. Orleans Theater Co. 2 Rob. (La.) 209; State ex rel. Copes v. Charleston, 10 Rich. L. 491.

The legislature has power to ratify bonds issued by a municipal corporation without precedent authority, for the purpose of securing the location of a county seat within the city, and aiding in the erection of necessary county buildings. Schneck v. Jeffersonville, 152 Ind. 204, 52 N. E. 212.

The legislature has power to ratify a contract entered into by a municipal corporation for a public purpose, which is ultra vires. Brown v. New York, 63 N. Y. 239.

Baker v. Seattle, 2 Wash. 576, 27 Pac. 462, upholds an act validating municipal indebtedness, where the invalidity resulted from the fact that the indebtedness exceeded the amount authorized by the charter. The court held that the case fell within the principle that where a municipal corporation has done an act beyond its statutory powers, but within the powers which it was competent for the legislature to have conferred upon it, the act may be validated by a curative statute.

Morris v. State, 62 Tex. 728, held that the 43 L. R. A. legislature had power to validate a municipal ordinance which was passed for the benefit of a contractor but did not conform to the requirements of the charter.

Article 9, § 5, of the Illinois Constitution of 1849, contained a provision that the corporate authorities of counties, townships, school districts, cities, towns, and villages might be invested with power to assess and collect taxes for corporate purposes. As already shown, this provision was construed by the courts to prohibit the legislature from creating municipal indebtedness to be paid by taxation.

It was held in Marshall v. Stillman, 61 Ill. 218, and Wiley v. Stillman, 62 Ill. 170, that the legislature had no power to validate a vote on a proposition as to a municipal subscription to railroad stock, under which bonds had been issued, where such vote was void because the municipality had already exhausted its power by previously voting a subscription to the full amount of the statutory limit. These decisions rest upon the ground that the act attempts to compel a municipal corporation to incur a debt for a purely local municipal purpose, in violation of the foregoing constitutional provision.

A similar decision was made upon the authority of those cases by Cairo & St. L. R. Co. v. Sparta, 77 Ill. 505, although in the latter case the invalidity arose from a departure from the statute, in the proposition submitted to the people, in respect to the time, the proposed bonds should run. The opinion admitted that the former cases were stronger, there having been no color of authority for the election involved in them, and a mere excess of power in the case at bar; but the court thought that the same principle governed.

The same principle was applied by Gaddis v. Richland County, 92 Ill. 119, to a case where the election was called and ordered by unauthorized persons.

In Cairo & St. L. R. Co. v. Sparta, 77 Ill. 505, supra, a writ of mandamus was sought to compel the issuance of the bonds. In the other three cases the bonds had been issued.

St. Joseph Twp. v. Rogers, 16 Wall. 644, 21 L. ed. 328, involved an act passed by the Illinois legislature while the Constitution of 1848 was in force, which purported to validate municipal elections upon propositions respecting subscription to railroad stock. It was contended that the act was unconstitutional as creating a debt for a municipality, but the court said that, according to the repeated decisions of the supreme court of Illinois and of "this" court, defective subscriptions of the kind there made good consideration, and expressly waives all rights which he might otherwise have had to question its validity.

The act is left to operate in all other respects as though the contract had never existed.

Embury v. Conner, 3 N. Y. 511, 53 Am. Dec. 325; Detmold v. Drake, 46 N. Y. 318; Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. 197; Wellington, Petitioner, 16 Pick. 87, 26 Am. Dec. 631; Hingham & Q. Bridge & Turnp. Corp. v. Norfolk County, 6 Allen, 353; Heyward v. New York, 8 Barb. 486; Re Albany Street, 11 Wend. 149, 25 Am. Dec. 618; Sill v. Corning, 15 N. Y. 297; People ex rel. Burrows v. Orange County Supers. 17 N. Y. 235; Derby Turnp. Co. v. Parks, 10 Conn. 522, 27 Am. Dec. 700; People v. Rensselaer & S. R. Co. 15 Wend. 113, 30 Am. Dec. 33; Hartford Bridge Co. v. Union Ferry Co. 29 Conn. 210;

"may in all cases be ratified where the legislature could have originally conferred the power;" citing a number of earlier Illinois cases, but making no reference to those above referred to, although they had been decided at the time the opinion in this case was written. The bonds in question, however, were issued before those decisions, and the court may have thought that the earlier decisions should control.

Anderson v. Santa Anna, 116 U. S. 364, 29 L. ed. 635, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 413, involved the same act as that involved in the preceding case, and also upheld it. The court expressed its opinion that at the time the bonds were issued the Illinois decisions sustained such curative acts, and that the bonds could not be affected by the change of opinion evidenced by the later decisions above referred to. The opinion, however, upon the assumption that there were no decisions sustaining such acts when the bonds were issued, passes independently upon the power of the legislature, and upholds the act, notwithstanding an objection based on the constitutional provision already alluded to, upon the ground that such an act does not in any just sense impose a debt upon the township against the will of the corporate authorities, but merely gives effect to the previously declared will of the electors.

Bolles v. Brimfield, 120 U. S. 759, 30 L. ed. 786, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 736, is to the same effect as the preceding case.

The same court in Elmwood Twp. v. Marcy, 92 U. S. 289, 23 L. ed. 710, had held that an Illinois statute which ratified a subscription made pursuant to a vote at an election held after the town had exhausted its power to subscribe was unconstitutional, but, as explained in Anderson v. Santa Anna, 116 U. S. 364, 29 L. ed. 635, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 413, the court in that case felt bound by the later Illinois decisions, and did not intend to overrule St. Joseph Twp. v. Rogers, 16 Wall. 644, 21 L. ed. 328, supra.

It will be observed that the cases heretofore cited, which have upheld acts validating municipal subscriptions to the stock of railroad corporations, are cases in which the consent of the municipality had been given, though in some cases without any previous authority.

Horton v. Thompson, 71 N. Y. 513, involved an act which attempted to validate town bonds issued, without the consent of the town itself or its inhabitants, by town commissioners (whom the court held not to be town officers and not to represent the town) in exchange for the stock of a railroad.

The court held the act unconstitutional upon 48 L. R. A.

Holden v. James, 11 Mass. 396, 6 Am. Rep. 174; Adams v. Howe, 14 Mass. 340, 7 Am. Dec. 216; Norwich v. Norwich County Comrs. 13 Pick. 60.

The unconstitutional law must operate as far as it can.

Re Middletown, 82 N. Y. 196; Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. 213, 6 L. ed. 606; Adams v. Howe, 14 Mass. 340, 7 Am. Dec. 216; Williamson v. Carlton, 51 Me. 453; Jones v. Black, 49 Ala. 541; Smith v. McCarthy, 56 Pa. 359.

Baldwin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The provision of suitable means of communication between the opposite banks of the Connecticut river has been, from early colonial days, a frequent subject of legislation by the general assembly. Numerous the ground that it had been already decided (People ex rel. Dunkirk, W. & P. R. Co. v. Batchellor, 53 N. Y. 128, 13 Am. Rep. 480, supra) that a municipal corporation could not be compelled without its consent or that of its taxable inhabitants to become a stockholder in a railway corporation, or to incur a debt in its behalf; and that, since the legislature could not have originally authorized the issuance of the bonds without such consent, it could not ratify bonds issued without such consent.

Thompson v. Ferrine, 103 U. S. 806, 26 L. ed. 612, however, upheld the constitutionality of the act involved in the preceding case. The opinion reviews the New York cases upon the question as to the power of the legislature to require a municipal corporation without the consent of the people to aid, by a subscription to the capital stock, in the construction of a railroad, and to cure by retrospective enactment defects in the exercise of powers granted to municipal corporations, and held that the question could not be considered as at rest in the courts of that state so as to oblige the United States Supreme Court to follow the decision in Horton v. Thompson, 71 N. Y. 513, supra. The court also takes the position that at the time the act in question was passed (which was before the decision in People ex rel. Dunkirk, W. & P. R. Co. v. Batchellor, 53 N. Y. 128, 13 Am. Rep. 480) "it was the established doctrine of the highest court of New York, as it was of this court, that the legislature, unless restrained by the organic law of the state, could authorize or require a municipal corporation, with or without the consent of the people, to aid by a subscription of capital stock in the construction of the railroad: . . . that defects or omissions, upon the part of such municipal corporation or its officers, in the execution of the power conferred, or in the performance of the duty imposed, could be cured by subsequent legislation,—certainly where the corporation had received the benefits which the original subscription was designed to secure."

As already shown under subd. II. b. supra, the opinion in Duanesburgh v. Jenkins, 57 N. Y. 177, questioned the correctness of the decision in People ex rel. Dunkirk, W. & P. R. Co. v. Batchellor, 53 N. Y. 128, 13 Am. Rep. 480, that the legislature had no power to compel a municipal corporation to subscribe for railroad stock, but the decision upon the facts involved in the case only goes to the extent of upholding the constitutionality of an act ratifying bonds issued by a commissioner (whom the court treated as a town officer) after a vote by the taxpayers, a question having arisen as to whether the requirements of the original statferries have been set up, from time to time, at different points, by virtue of franchises, conferred in some cases upon towns, and in others upon individuals; and several toll bridges have been erected during the present century, under charters granted to private corporations.

One of these bridges took the place of an ancient ferry between the towns of Hartford and East Hartford, in which each town had a proprietary interest. The bridge company, by a voluntary settlement, paid to Hartford a satisfactory compensation for the revocation of its ferry franchise, but declined to recognize any claim of East Hartford, the original grant to which, by its express terms, was only during the pleasure of the general assembly, and had been repealed without qualification. Litigation resulted, and this court held (East Hartford v. Hartford Bridge

Co. 17 Conn. 78) that no rights of East Hartford had been violated,—a decision afterwards affirmed, upon proceedings in error, by the Supreme Court of the United States. In the opinion there delivered, it was held that the state, on the one hand, and the town of East Hartford, on the other, did not stand, with reference to the grant and repeal of the ferry franchise, in the attitude of parties to a contract. "The legislature," it was declared, "was acting here on the one part, and public municipal and political corporations on the other. They were acting, too, in relation to a public object, being virtually a highway across the river, over another highway up and down the river. From this standing and relation of these parties, and from the subject-matter of their action, we think that the doings of the legislature as to this ferry must be considered rather as ute in respect to the consents and proofs thereof had been complied with. The decision rests upon the ground that even under the doctrine laid down in People ex rel. Dunkirk, W. & P. R. Co. v. Batchellor, the legislature might originally have substituted the commissioners' consent for that of the taxpayers, and therefore might do so by a retrospective act.

Williams v. Duanesburgh, 66 N. Y. 129, decided by the court of appeals, involved the same statute and made substantially the same decision as Duanesburgh v. Jenkins, 57 N. Y. 177. Three of the five judges who sat in the case rested their decision on the ground that the legislature, while it could not compel, might authorize, municipal corporations to issue such bonds, and that it could have originally dispensed with the consent of the taxpayers and authorized the municipal authorities to issue the bonds without the consent of the inhabitants. Two of the judges were of the opinion, as an independent proposition, that the case of People ex rel. Dunkirk, W. & P. R. Co. v. Batchellor, 53 N. Y. 128, 13 Am. Rep. 480, had in effect overruled the prior decisions authorizing municipal corporations to subscribe for and hold stock, and that, therefore, the legislature had no power to pass an act like that in question, but concurred in the decision upon the ground that the court was bound in respect to the bonds in suit by the decision in Duanesburgh v. Jenkins, 57 N. Y. 177.

Katzenberger v. Aberdeen, 121 U. S. 172, 30 L. ed. 911, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 947, holds that the legislature has no power, after the adoption of a Constitution making the consent of two thirds of the voters of a city requisite to a subscription to stock of a railroad company, to ratify a subscription and issue of bonds to which the voters of the city had not consented as contemplated by the statute, although they were issued before the adoption of the Constitution, at a time when the legislature might in the first instance have dispensed with such consent.

The legislature may, without affecting the consents of taxpayers previously given to the issuance of bonds by a town in aid of a railroad, authorize a change in the form of the bonds before their issuance, where the legislature might in the first instance have authorized bonds in the changed form. Brownell v. Greenwich, 114 N. Y. 518, 4 L. R. A. 685, 22 N. E. 24.

Bridgeport v. Housatonic R. Co. 15 Conn. 475, also upheld the validity of an act which confirmed and made obligatory on the city a prior unauthorized subscription to the stock of a railroad company. In this case, however, 48 L. R. A.

the ratifying act, pursuant to a proviso thereof, was accepted and approved by the freemen of the city.

Sykes v. Columbus, 55 Miss. 115, denied the right of the legislature to ratify bonds originally issued by a town without authority, where in the meantime a new Constitution had been adopted forbidding the legislature to authorize any city or town to become a stockholder in any company, association, or corporation without the consent of two thirds of the qualified voters.

Hashbrouck v. Milwaukee, 13 Wis. 38, 80 Am. Dec. 718, held that a subsequent legislative ratification or recognition of a municipal contract for the construction of a harbor which exceeded the limit of expenditure was insufficient, proprio vigore, without evidence that the municipality assented to it or subsequently acted upon or confirmed it, to make the contract obligatory upon the corporation.

This decision was approved in Mills v. Charleton, 29 Wis. 400, 9 Am. Rep. 578.

The legislature cannot legalize the proceedings of a town whereby, without any authority, it undertook to pay bounties to drafted men, unless the town ratifies the curative act. Wahlschlager v. Liberty, 23 Wis. 362.

Fisk v. Kenosha, 26 Wis. 23, held an act recognizing the right of a city to redeem city scrip, issued in aid of a railroad, which was invalid because the act under which it purported to be issued did not, as required by the Constitution, place a limit on the amount of the issue, insufficient as a ratification of the scrip because it left the duty to limit the amount unperformed.

III. Power in respect to officers and local administration.

People ex rel. Le Roy v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 103, supra, which announced the doctrine of an implied guaranty of self-government in respect to purely local matters, involved a statute which established a board of public works and attempted to appoint, for the full terms, the members thereof. The opinion of Justice Cooley, which holds the statute unconstitutional as an unwarranted interference with the right of local self-government, does not deny all right of interference by the legislature in local concerns, but says that the right in the state is a right, not to run and operate the machinery of local government, but to provide and put it in motion. More specifically, it held that it was competent for the legislature to abolish the old municipal boards and provide for a new one to take their place, public laws than as contracts. They related to public interests. They changed as those interests demanded. The grantees likewise, the towns being mere organizations for public purposes, were liable to have their public powers, rights, and duties modified or abolished at any moment by the legislature. They are incorporated for public, and not private, objects. They are allowed to hold privileges or property only for public purposes. The members are not shareholders nor joint partners in any corporate estate which they can sell or devise to others, or which can be attached or levied on for their debts. Hence, generally, the doings between them and the legislature are in the nature of legislation, rather than compact, and subject to all the legislative conditions just named, and therefore to be considered as not violated by subsequent legislative changes.

It is hardly possible to conceive the grounds on which a different result could be vindicated without destroying all legislative sovereignty, and checking most legislative improvements and amendments, as well as supervision over its subordinate public bodies. Thus, to go a little into details, one of the highest attributes and duties of a legislature is to regulate public matters with all public bodies, no less than the community, from time to time, in the manner which the public welfare may appear to demand. It can neither devolve these duties permanently on other public bodies, nor permanently suspend or abandon them itself, without being usually regarded as unfaithful, and, indeed, attempting what is wholly beyond its constitutional competency. It is bound, also, to continue to regulate such public matters and bodies, as much as to organize them at first. Where and, further, that it might make provisional appointments to put a new system in operation, but that it exceeded its power when it made appointments which were not provisional and which were for full terms.

The limitations of the doctrine were still further explained in People ex rel. Park Comrs. v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 228, 15 Am. Rep. 202, in which Judge Cooley said, referring to People ex rel. Le Roy v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 103: "We intended in that case to concede most fully that the state must determine for each of its municipal corporations the powers it should exercise and the capacities it should possess, and that it must also decide what restrictions should be placed on these, as well to prevent clashing of action and interest in the state, as to protect individual corporators against injustice and oppression at the hands of the local majority. And what we said in that case we here repeat, that while it is a fundamental principle in this state, recognized and perpetuated by express provisions of the Constitution, that the people of every hamlet, town, and city of the state are entitled to the benefits of local self-government, the Constitution has not pointed out the precise extent of local powers and capacities, but has left them to be determined in each case by the legislative authority of the state, from considerations of general policy as well as those which pertain to the local benefit and local desires."

The limitations of the doctrine are further illustrated by People ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Detroit, 29 Mich. 108, which upholds a statute so far as it transfers to a board of public works, to be appointed by the mayor and common council, powers formerly exercised by the board of sewer commissioners. Judge Cooley, who wrote the opinion, assented to the position that the common council of a city—i. e., the board commonly known by that name—is a distinctive and inseparable feature in municipal government, and that the legislature can neither abolish it nor strip it of its legislative powers. He did not pass upon the question whether any of the powers conferred upon the board were legislative in their nature, or whether any of them were unconstitutional, but held that the powers formerly exercised by the board of sewer commissioners were not legislative, and that, therefore, the act was not unconstitutional in toto. That was as far as a decision was necessary.

As already observed in discussing the Michigan cases in subdivision I., the doctrine of local self-government is limited to matters pertaining to the private, as distinguished from the public, functions of the municipality.

48 L. R. A.

This distinction is illustrated by Davock v. Moore, 105 Mich. 120, 28 L. R. A. 783, 63 N. W. 424, which upholds an act establishing a city board of health to be appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the senate. The opinion refers to the distinction between public and private functions, and says that in the discharge of public duties there is no right of local self-government involved, and that the care of the public health is within the police power, and therefore within the control of the legislature.

So, also, People ex rel. Park Comrs. v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 228, 15 Am. Rep. 202, cites with approval People ex rel. Drake v. Mahaney, 18 Mich. 481, supra, which upheld an act appointing police commissioners for a city.

People ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Lothrop, 24 Mich. 235, held that the functions of park commissioners of the city of Detroit were local and municipal, and that their selection could not properly be made without the assent of the people of the city or the local authorities, but also held that the common council, by ratifying the acts of commissioners designated by statute in selecting a location for a park, admitted their right to assume the agency.

The right of local self-government is not infringed by a statute which leaves it to a state officer to supervise the appropriation of state lands to a local improvement. Sparrow v. State Land Office Commissioner, 56 Mich. 567, 23 N. W. 315.

As already observed, the matter involved in the principal case was one of public concern, and therefore the provisions of the act which place the highway and bridge district under the control of commissioners, not selected by the town, but who are empowered to draw upon it for funds, do not come within the doctrine.

The doctrine was recognized and enforced by State ex rel. Jameson v. Denny, 118 Ind. 382, 4 L. R. A. 79, 21 N. E. 252, which held that a statute which undertook to place in the hands of a board of public works appointed by the legislature the exclusive control of all the streets, alleys, lanes, thoroughfares, etc., of each city of a certain size, without the consent of those to be affected thereby, and with full power to improve, alter, or change them, was an unconstitutional interference with local self-government.

State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Moores, 55 Neb. 480, 41 L. R. A. 624, 78 N. W. 175, held an act authorizing the governor to appoint fire and police commissioners in cities of the metropolitan class void as an unlawful interference with the right of local self-government. The court held that, conceding the legislature might pro-not restrained by some constitutional provision, this power is inherent in its nature, design, and attitude; and the community possess as deep and permanent an interest in such power remaining in and being exercised by the legislature, when the public progress and welfare demand it, as individuals or corporations can, in any instance, possess in restraining it." East Hartford v. Hartford Bridge Co. 10 How. 511, 533, 13 L. ed. 518, 527.

In view of these principles of constitutional law, an act was passed by the general assembly in 1887, for the purpose of making this same bridge a free public highway, and throwing the burden of its support on the towns which would be especially benefited by such a change. At that time there were three toll bridges across the Connecticut river in Hartford county. By this act, which was entitled "An Act to Establish Free Public Highways across the Connecticut River in Hartford County" (Pub. Acts 1887, p. 746, chap. 126), the state's attorney was directed to bring a complaint, in the name of the state, to the superior court for that county, against the corporations owning these bridges, for the purpose of making each of them a free public highway. Notice of the pendency of the proceedings was to be given to all towns interested, and any town might appear and become a party. Commissioners were to be appointed by the court, who should "lay out and establish highways across the Connecticut river where the toll bridges in said county now are, and across said bridges, and across and along the causeways and approaches appurtenant to and connected therewith."

The commissioners, after such notice as vide the mode of selecting police officers, it had no power or authority to deprive the municipality of the right to select officers whose duties are solely of a local nature, such as officers connected with the fire department. The opinion adopts the doctrine of People ex rel. Le Roy v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 103, supra, as to an implied guaranty of local self-government, and expressly overrules State ex rel. Simeral v. Seavey, 22 Neb. 454, 35 N. W. 228, which upheld a similar statute.

And Evansville v. State ex rel. Blend, 118 Ind. 426, 4 L. R. A. 93, 21 N. E. 267, held that an act providing for a board of metropolitan police and a fire board to be appointed by the legislature for cities of a certain class, which is to have supreme control of both departments and power to contract debts, is unconstitutional as a denial of the right of local self-government. The opinion said that "if the act related alone to the management of the police department, and the state was proposing to take upon itself the burden of maintaining the department as well as its management, or if it were made to appear that the city had failed to furnish a police force or one that was sufficient for the protection of persons and property, then a very different question would be presented.

... Except so far as an efficient police department goes, which is for the protection of the public at large, the people of the state are not interested in any of the matters to which the said act of the legislature relates; ... the two cities to which the act applies are alone interested. It therefore becomes a question whether or not the legislature may take from the people of these two cities the right of local self-government, the right to manage and control their own purely local affairs in their own way, and place the management of all such local affairs under state control. We do not believe that the legislature has any such power. Before written constitutions the people possessed the power of local self-government. ... All the power which the people have delegated is what has passed from them by the Constitution."

State ex rel. Terre Haute v. Kolsen, 130 Ind. 434, 14 L. R. A. 566, 29 N. E. 595, upholds the constitutionality of an act establishing boards of metropolitan police consisting of commissioners to be appointed by state officers. This decision is put upon the ground that, in providing for the appointment of officers connected with the constabulary of the state, there is not an invasion of the right of local self-government, but simply the exercise of the power to provide for the selection of peace officers of the state.

48 L. R. A.

State ex rel. Atwood v. Hunter, 38 Kan. 578, 17 Pac. 177, upholds the validity of the metropolitan police act, which provides for the appointment of a board of police commissioners by the executive council, consisting of state officers. This case recognizes the distinction between private and governmental functions, and holds that the police is a matter pertaining to governmental functions.

Diamond v. Cain, 21 La. Ann. 309, holds that the omission from the Constitution of 1868 of article 133 of the Constitution of 1864, giving to the citizens of New Orleans the appointment of officers necessary for the administration of the police of the city, left the whole subject of the city police under the power and discretion of the legislature, enabling it to create a board of police commissioners to be appointed by the governor.

Baltimore v. State ex rel. Board of Police, 15 Md. 376, 74 Am. Dec. 572, upholds the constitutionality of an act providing a permanent police for the city of Baltimore, under the control of a board of police consisting of commissioners appointed by the legislature. The court held, in reply to the criticism of a section of the statute which transferred the use of the station house, etc., that that was not private property within the protection of the Constitution. It remarks that the use of the property is the same, and the character and title of the property is not changed by authorizing only a change in the agency by which the use is to be directed.

The legislature has power to create a board of police for a city, to be appointed by the governor and council from the two principal political parties. It was suggested that the act in question was unconstitutional because it took from the city the power of self-government in matters of internal police. The court said that there was no provision of the Constitution with which it conflicted, and that the court could not declare an act of the legislature invalid because it abridged the exercise of the privilege of local self-government in a particular in regard to which such privilege is not guaranteed by any provision of the Constitution. Com. v. Plaisted, 148 Mass. 375, 2 L. R. A. 142, 19 N. E. 224.

But see Rathbone v. Wirt, 150 N. Y. 459, 34 L. R. A. 408, 45 N. E. 15, infra, to the contrary effect.

State ex rel. Atty Gen. v. Covington, 29 Ohio St. 102, upheld the constitutionality of an act which vested police powers and duties of cities in a board to be appointed by the governor. It was urged that the statute violated art. 1, § 2, of the Constitution, which provided that all the court should prescribe as to those towns which they should deem interested, were to "estimate and assess the damages caused by the layout and establishment of such free highways, and shall estimate and assess said damages upon the several towns which they shall find will be specially benefited by the layout and establishment of said highways, as benefits accruing to said several towns, in such proportion as said commissioners shall find to be equitable." Their report, if accepted by the court, was to be "final and conclusive as to all matters therein contained, and said court shall render judgment thereon against said several towns for the amount assessed against them respectively; and the clerk of said court shall forthwith notify each of said towns of the judgment against it by mailing to the clerk thereof a notice specifying the date and amount of such judgment."

powers not delegated remain with the people. The argument was that, at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, the police of the several cities and villages were elected by the electors resident therein, or appointed by boards or officers elected by such electors. The opinion rejects this view, and cites as in harmony with its position, People ex rel. Wood v. Draper, 15 N. Y. 532.

As the cases last cited involved matters relating to the police power, they did not fall within the doctrine of local self-government as laid down by the cases previously cited, but the opinions do not refer to the distinction between public and private functions of municipalities.

The right of local self-government in respect to local officers was recognized by article 10 of the New York Constitution of 1846, which required all county, city, town, and village officers whose election or appointment was not provided for by the Constitution to be elected by the electors of the respective localities, or appointed by such authorities thereof as the legislature designates for that purpose. This provision seems to make no distinction between the public and private character of municipal corporations, and it was held by People ex rel. Wood v. Draper, 15 N. Y. 532, that officers of the police department of a city would be within the constitutional provision if the act which attempted to make appointments of such officers was limited territorially to the city. The act involved in that case, however, was not so limited, but purported to create a metropolitan police district including the cities of New York and Brooklyn. The opinion admitted that the recognition by the Constitution of counties and cities had the effect, not only to guarantee their preservation, but to prevent the legislature from doing anything respecting them which would render them less suitable for the purposes for which they were recognized and employed by the Constitution. It says, however, that the matters of police, though they have generally been of local cognizance, have not by any constitutional provision or arrangement been irrevocably committed to the civil divisions recognized by the Constitution, and therefore it was competent for the legislature to create new districts for police purposes.

That case also held that the constitutional provision was limited to officers existing at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, and upon the authority of that decision People v. Pinckney, 32 N. Y. 377, upheld the constitutionality of an act which created a metropolitan fire district, notwithstanding the commissioners whose appointment is directed by the act were limited in their authority and functions to the city of New York alone, and therefore were not in any real sense officers of a new civil district. The act was upheld upon the ground that the officers created by the act were new in respect to their substantial functions, and therefore not within the constitutional provision, although if their duties and functions had been substantially the same as those of corresponding officers under the city of New York the act would have been unconstitutional.

The act also contained the following provisions:

"Sec. 5. Said towns so assessed shall, within three months from the rendition of said judgment, deposit with the treasurer of this state the sums so severally assessed against them, and at the expiration of said three months the comptroller shall draw his order on the treasurer in favor of the several persons or corporations in whose favor damages have been assessed, for the amount of damages so assessed respectively, and said treasurer shall hold the amount thereof for the benefit and subject to the order of the several parties in whose favor said orders were drawn, and shall notify said several parties that he so holds said amounts, and thereupon said highways so laid out as aforesaid shall become and remain public highways. In case any town shall fail to pay the judgment rendered against it as aforesaid, withtionality of an act which created a metropolitan fire district, notwithstanding the commissioners whose appointment is directed by the act were limited in their authority and functions to the city of New York alone, and therefore were not in any real sense officers of a new civil district. The act was upheld upon the ground that the officers created by the act were new in respect to their substantial functions, and therefore not within the constitutional provision, although if their duties and functions had been substantially the same as those of corresponding officers under the city of New York the act would have been unconstitutional.

People ex rel. McMullen v. Shepard, 36 N. Y. 285, upheld the constitutionality of an act which included in a new police district certain cities and the territory between them included within the lines of the property of a railroad company. The court refused to inquire into the motives of the legislature in creating the new district.

People ex rel. Bolton v. Albertson, 55 N. Y. 50, however, held that the constitutional requirement that city officers shall be elected by the electors of the city was violated by an act establishing a new police district which included a city and a small fragment of territory outside of the city limits, and providing for the appointment by the governor of magistrates of the proposed district, and the appointment of the police force by commissioners to be appointed by the governor. The decision is put upon the ground that the purpose of the constitutional provision is to secure to the several recognized civil and political divisions of the state the right of local self-government, that the police powers are among the most important conferred upon city governments, and that the main object of the act in question was the establishment of a police force under a new organization, for the city. The opinion criticises People ex rel. Wood v. Draper, 15 N. Y. 532, but distinguishes it upon the ground that in that case there was occasion for the exercise of legislative discretion in the creation of a police district, while in the case at bar there was not. The opinion says if any civil division other than those recognized by the Constitution is allowable, it can only be when neither of the others will serve or answer the purpose, or the objects cannot be accomplished by organizing the territory in view under one or the other forms of municipal government authorized by the Constitution.

People ex rel. Townsend v. Porter, 90 N. Y.

in the time aforesaid, said court shall order execution upon said judgment to be issued against said town in favor of the state."

Each town so assessed was given, by § 6, power to issue bonds to raise the money to pay its assessment.

"Sec. 7. When said highways, so established as aforesaid, shall have become free public highways as aforesaid, the same shall thereafter be maintained by said towns so assessed in proportion to the assessment upon said towns as hereinbefore provided. The first selectmen of said several towns shall meet on the 2d Monday after said highways shall have become free highways as aforesaid, at the office of the selectmen in Hartford, and annually thereafter and at such other times as they shall deem necessary, and said several first selectmen shall constitute a board for the care, maintenance, and control of said highways. Said board shall appoint a chairman, secretary, and treasurer; and said board shall apportion the expense of repairing and maintaining said highways upon the said several towns in proportion to the assessment against said towns as aforesaid, and said chairman shall draw his order on the respective treasurers of said towns to the order of the treasurer of said board for the proportional amount payable by said towns, as aforesaid, for such repairs and maintenance. Any damages resulting from the defective condition of said highways or the bridges upon the same shall be paid by said towns in proportion to the said assessment. For the purpose embraced in this section said board shall be a body politic and corporate by the name of the "Board for the Care of Highways and Bridges across the Connecticut River in Hartford County," and actions may be brought against said board by service upon its secretary, and any 68, condemned an act creating a separate police district upon the same ground as the preceding case.

Rathbone v. Wirth, 150 N. Y. 459, 34 L. R. A. 408, 45 N. E. 15, held that such constitutional provision was violated by an act which in effect conferred upon the members of the common council of a city who are members of the political party having a minority representation in the council the appointment of two of the four police commissioners. The decision is placed by a majority of the court upon the ground that such minority is not a city authority within the meaning of the constitutional provision.

Livingston v. Wider, 53 Ill. 302, and Wider v. East St. Louis, 55 Ill. 135, denied the constitutionality of an act which vested the control of the police department of certain cities in commissioners appointed by the governor with the consent of the senate, and authorized them to incur indebtedness in behalf of the city. These decisions, however, do not rest upon the general doctrine of an implied guaranty of local self-government, but upon the express provision of the Illinois Constitution, already cited, that the legislature may give the corporate authorities of cities and towns the right to tax for corporate purposes. The court held that this constitutional provision prevented the legislature from granting the right of corporate or local taxation to any other person than the corporate or local authorities; that such commissioners were not corporate authorities, since they were neither directly elected by the people nor appointed in a mode to which the people had given their assent; and that the power to create a debt against the city is substantially the same thing as power to levy a tax. The ground on which the decision rests is illustrated by the remark in the latter case that the police force organized by the police commissioners appointed under the act would doubtless have a legal right to serve, if they chose to do so, gratuitously, and to that extent the law might be upheld.

Speed v. Crawford, 3 Met. (Ky.) 207, holds that the members of a police board of a city are officers for the city within the meaning of a constitutional provision providing that officers for cities and towns shall be "elected for such terms and in such manner as may be prescribed by law," and that an act providing for the appointment of such members by the chancellor or governor is unconstitutional.

Metropolitan Bd. of Health v. Helster, 37 N. Y. 661, held that the constitutional provision already alluded to did not prevent the legislature from establishing new civil districts for the administration of the health laws.

But it was held by People v. Acton, 48 Barb. 524, to be violated by an act investing the board of metropolitan police, appointed by the governor, with the powers and duties previously conferred upon the mayor and the common council in respect to places of public amusement, etc. The opinion says that, although the legislature might have the power to take the discharge of such duties from the mayor or common council, they were required to place the performance of them with local officers or boards, and could not vest officers appointed under authority of the state with the performance thereof.

A similar decision was made by Schuster v. Metropolitan Bd. of Health, 49 Barb. 450, in respect to an act which attempted to confer upon the metropolitan board of health, holding office under appointment of the governor, legislative powers previously exercised by the common council of the city.

Re Central Park Comrs. 35 How. Pr. 255, held that the act of 1865, so far as it authorized the commissioners of Central Park, instead of the common council of the city of New York, to apply to the court for the opening of a road or public drive above 59th street, was not unconstitutional. This decision rests upon the ground that the common council has never had authority since 1807 to lay out streets or public places in that part of the city. The court says, however, that the right to grade the streets in the city has always been exercised by the common council, and that it may be doubted whether the legislature can take from the common council this power and confer it on state officers.

Astor v. New York, 62 N. Y. 507, held that the provision of the New York Constitution already cited was not violated by the act of 1867 which confers upon the commissioners of Central Park the exclusive care, management, and control of a portion of an avenue and certain streets for the purpose of regulating, grading, and otherwise improving it. This decision rests upon the ground that the acts referred to have an especial relation to and connection with the park system. The opinion says it would be carrying the doctrine of noninterference with local officers far beyond any reported case, to hold that in no case whatever could any of the powers existing in a local officer at the time of the adoption of the Constitution be taken away without violating the constitutional provision.

State ex rel. Howe v. Des Moines, 103 Iowa, 76, 39 L. R. A. 285, 72 N. W. 639, holds that judgment recovered therein shall be paid by said towns in said proportions and in the same manner as herein provided for the payment of the expenses of repairs and maintenance as aforesaid. Said board shall annually report to said several towns the expenses incurred and paid by them during the preceding year."

By a joint resolution, approved on the same day, it was provided that this act should not affect the bridge between Windsor Locks and Warehouse Point, nor that between Suffield and Enfield.

Due proceedings were had under the act, resulting in a final judgment, in 1889, establishing a free public highway across the river between Hartford and East Hartford, including the bridge and causeway of the Hartford Bridge Company, and awarding it $210,000 damages. The court also "found that the towns of Hartford, East Hartford, Glastonbury, South Windsor, and Manchester will be specially benefitted by the layout and establishment of such free highway, and estimated and assessed said damages upon said several towns as benefits accruing to said several towns in such proportion as said commissioners found to be equitable; that is to say, as follows: To the town of Hartford, ninety-five thousand ($95,000) dollars; to the town of East Hartford, sixty-six thousand ($66,000) dollars; to the town of Glastonbury, twenty-five thousand ($25,000) dollars; to the town of South Windsor, twelve thousand ($12,000) dollars; to the town of Manchester, twelve thousand ($12,000) dollars."

Pending the action, the general assembly in 1889 appropriated $84,000 from the treasury of the state, for the purpose of paying the legislature cannot delegate the power to fix and determine the amount of a tax for a public library which must be levied by the common council, to a board not chosen by and directly responsible to the taxpayers, unless the people assent thereto. This decision rests upon the ground that there is an implied limitation upon the power of the legislature to delegate the power of municipal taxation, and that it cannot delegate it to other than municipal authorities.

The legislature has power to appoint officers within a city for a specific purpose, such as laying out a street and assessing the damages and benefits arising to the property taken for that purpose. Daly v. St. Paul, 7 Minn. 390, Gil. 311.

People ex rel. Killmer v. McDonald, 69 N. Y. 362, holds that the constitutional provision before referred to did not prohibit the legislature from appointing commissioners to widen a designated highway in a village by proceedings different from those which could be taken by the commissioners of highways under the existing laws of the state, the commissioners of highways to continue in office, and to have charge of the widened avenue after the fulfillment of the office of the avenue commissioners.

The validity of a statute providing for the laying out or improvement of a city street is not affected by the fact that the power to do the work is conferred upon commissioners appointed by the act, instead of upon the municipal authorities. Re Woolsey, 95 N. Y. 135.

Illinois Constitution, art. 9, § 9, providing that for corporate purposes all municipal corporations may be vested with authority to assess and collect taxes, and § 10, providing that the general assembly shall not impose taxes upon municipal corporations or the inhabitants or property thereof for corporate purposes, but shall require that all the taxable property within the limits of municipal corporations shall be taxed for the payment of debts contracted under authority of law, prevent the legislature from granting the right to assess and collect taxes to any other than the corporate authorities of the municipalities or districts to be taxed, and prevent such taxation from being imposed without the consent of the taxpayers to be affected. Wetherell v. Devine, 116 Ill. 631, 5 N. E. 596, 8 N. E. 788. This case holds that "corporate authorities" are those authorities who are directly elected by the population to be taxed, or are appointed in some mode to which they have given their assent, but that when the people of the city, by a vote duly authorized, adopt an election law providing for the appointment of election commissioners who are to be appointed by the county court, and are to incur indebtedness, such commissioners will be regarded as corporate authorities.

The taxpayers of a village have no inherent right to have the assessment of their property made by an officer elected by them, or to have their taxes collected by such officer. Jones v. Kolb, 56 Wis. 263, 14 N. W. 177.

David v. Portland Water Committee, 14 Or. 98, 12 Pac. 174, upholds the constitutionality of an act which empowers a city to establish or purchase waterworks, and provides that such power shall be exercised by a committee appointed by the act. The opinion recognizes the distinction between the public and private functions of a municipal corporation, and says the power of the legislature over municipal corporations, in the absence of constitutional restrictions, is unlimited except so far as they are endowed with rights incident to a private corporation, and refers to the fact that some decisions have undertaken to draw lines between powers which are governmental in their nature and those which relate to local convenience for the citizen, and to place those relating to water, gas, and public parks on the quasi-private side of the corporation, but says: "Public parks, gas, water, and sewage in towns and cities may, ordinarily, be classed as private affairs, but they often become matters of public importance; and when the legislature determines that there is a public necessity for their use in a certain locality I do not think they can be designated as mere private affairs. That is a relative question." The court further said that it must regard the matter in question as public in character, in view of the legislative action.

Luehrman v. Shelby County Taxing Dist. 2 Lea, 425, upheld the constitutionality of the provisions of an act creating municipal corporations, conferring legislative power upon a legislative council, one half of the members of which are to be appointed for the full term by the governor with the consent of the senate, all of the members to be elected by the people after the expiration of the first term. The court says, conceding that it may admit a doubt whether the legislature could permanently appoint, under "our" Constitution and the democratic character of "our" institutions, the officers and governing body of a municipal corporation, its right to make provisional appointments is beyond doubt, citing People ex rel. Le Roy v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 103.

The Colorado supreme court, in Re Senate Bill, 12 Colo. 183, 21 Pac. 481, held that a bill creating a board of public works for a city

40 per cent of these damages. Special Laws, vol. 10, p. 1321. In view of this, the judgment of the superior court concluded with an order that "the town of Glastonbury shall, within three months from the date of rendition of this judgment, deposit with the treasurer of this state the sum of fifteen thousand ($15,000) dollars, the same being 60 per cent of the sum so assessed against it," and a like provision with respect to the assessment against each of the other four towns, and a further order that, "at the expiration of said three months from the date of the rendition of this judgment, the comptroller of the state shall draw his order on the treasurer in favor of the Hartford Bridge Company for the sum of $210,000, the same being the amount of the damages that have been so assessed in its favor, and that the treasurer shall hold the amount thereof, viz., said two hundred and ten thousand ($210,000) dollars, for the benefit and subject to the order of said Hartford Bridge Company, and shall forthwith notify said Hartford Bridge Company that he so holds said amount, and thereupon, as soon as the treasurer shall give said notice, said highway so laid out as aforesaid shall become and remain a public highway. The treasurer of the state shall at the same time give notice to the first selectman of each of said towns, viz., Hartford, East Hartford, Glastonbury, South Windsor, and Manchester, that said highway has become a free public highway to be thereafter maintained by said towns."

After this judgment had been fully executed the general assembly, in 1893, passed an act (Pub. Acts 1893, p. 395, chap. 239) declaring that the highway, which included the bridge and its approaches, should there-whose members are to be appointed by the governor with the consent of the senate, and which is charged with numerous duties and endowed with extensive powers in relation to the expenditure of city funds, the payment and cancellation of outstanding city warrants, and the making of public improvements, does not violate art. 5, § 35, of the Constitution, prohibiting the legislature from delegating to any special commission power to make, supervise, or interfere with any municipal improvement, money, property, or effects, or perform any municipal function whatever. The court said that there was strong reason to recognize the right of local self-government, but that was a matter pertaining to the policy of proposed legislation rather than a question of constitutional construction.

Coyle v. Gray, 7 Houst. (Del.) 44, 30 Atl. 728, was a quo warranto proceeding by one appointed chief engineer of the waterworks of a city by a board of water commissioners appointed by the legislature, who were vested with full authority to appoint and discharge officers and employees, and to contract indebtedness in behalf of the city for the improvement and extension of a water plant. The court upheld the appointee's right to the office upon the ground that all the agencies of the city can be abolished or changed at the will of the legislature. The court, however, expresses no opinion as to the constitutionality of the act so far as it undertakes to authorize the commissioners to incur indebtedness on the part of the city. Counsel for defendant urged the dual character of municipal corporations, and that the matter in question pertained to the private as distinguished from the governmental functions of the corporation, and therefore was beyond the control of the legislature. The court apparently repudiates the doctrine of the dual character of such corporations. It says, however, that while the corporation exists by authority of the state, authorized to purchase and hold property for the inhabitants, it would not be competent for the state to take away the property and give it to other corporations or persons.

State ex rel. Herron v. Smith, 44 Ohio St. 348, 7 N. E. 447, 12 N. E. 829, upholds the constitutionality of an act creating a board of public affairs for cities of a certain class, to be appointed by the governor and to have all the powers, perform all the duties and be the successor of the board of public works. This decision is made upon the authority of State v. Corington, and proceeds upon the theory that there is no constitutional restriction against the appointment of municipal officers by the governor, and rejects the theory of local self-government adopted in People ex rel. Le Roy v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 103.

Municipal charters are subject to repeal or amendment at the pleasure of the legislative power granting them, and the absolute and unconditional repeal of a municipal charter, abolishes all offices under it. People ex rel. Fowler v. Brown, 83 Ill. 95.

Corporations having municipal powers are mere tenants at will of the legislature so far as the officers thereof are concerned. State v. Jennings, 27 Ark. 419.

The legislature may fix the salary of a municipal officer, and unless restrained by the Constitution may change it at any time, even during the official term, and may delegate such power to the common council. Wyandotte v. Drennan, 46 Mich. 478, 9 N. W. 500.

The legislature may fix the salary of a city officer, if it has not delegated the power to do so to the city. Speed v. Detroit, 100 Mich. 92, 58 N. W. 638.

A municipal corporation is a legislative creation, and its offices are mere agencies or instrumentalities through which the corporate power is exercised and the corporate duty discharged, and it is competent for the legislature to provide for filling such offices, either by election or appointment, or any other mode deemed expedient. Moulton v. Reid, 54 Ala. 320.

A statute which requires the mayor of a city to prepare rules for the selection of city officers which rules must be approved by the state civil service commission before they can go into effect, does not subordinate the power of the local authorities to that of the state authorities in violation of a constitutional provision delegating the appointing power to the municipal authorities. Rogers v. Buffalo, 123 N. Y. 173, 9 L. R. A. 579, 25 N. E. 274.

IV. Power in respect to property and franchises.

The necessity of invoking the doctrine of an implied guaranty of local self-government is not so apparent when the legislature undertakes to deprive a municipality of property which it has already acquired, and holds, in its private capacity, as when the legislature undertakes to prescribe the local municipal purposes for which taxes shall be levied. As already shown, some of the courts, while admitting the power of the legislature to compel municipal corporations to exercise their power of taxation for a particular purpose, deny its after be maintained by the state at its expense, and providing for the appointment, on the nomination of the governor, of a board of three commissioners, for the care, maintenance, and control of the highway; such expenses as they might incur for repairing and maintaining it to be paid from the state treasury on the order of the comptroller. All acts inconsistent therewith were repealed.

Commissioners were duly appointed under this act, who soon afterwards, the bridge having become unsafe, executed a contract in behalf of the state with the Berlin Iron Bridge Company for the erection of a new one at a cost of over $300,000. After the company had begun the work of construction, the old bridge was accidentally destroyed by fire, and the commissioners thereupon ordered, under one of the provisions of the contract, the erection of a temporary bridge by the same company.

While it was fulfilling this order an act was passed, which was approved and took effect May 24, 1895 (Pub. Acts 1895, p. 530, chap. 168), repealing the act of 1893, and requiring the towns of Hartford, East Hartford, Glastonbury, South Windsor, and Manchester thereafter to maintain the highway across the Connecticut river where the old bridge formerly was, with the proper approaches, and to erect a new bridge whenever necessary, and maintain the same, contributing to any expenses to which they might be thus subjected "in proportion to the assessment made upon said towns by the superior court in the proceedings in which said highway was laid out and established; that is to say, Hartford, 95-210; East Hartford, 66-210; Glastonbury, 25-210; South power to subject to such purpose the property acquired by a municipal corporation in its private capacity. Davidson v. New York, 27 How. Pr. 342, supra; People ex rel. Baldwin v. Haws, 37 Barb. 440; Baldwin v. New York, 45 Barb. 359, 2 Keyes, 387.

The following cases hold that the property acquired by a municipal corporation in its private capacity is within the constitutional provision as to due process of law: People ex rel. Park. Comrs. v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 228, 15 Am. Rep. 202; Davidson v. New York, 27 How. Pr. 342; People ex rel. Baldwin v. Haws, 37 Barb. 440; Baldwin v. New York, 45 Barb. 359, 2 Keyes, 387; Re Jensen, 28 Misc. 378, 59 N. Y. Supp. 653.

A municipal corporation exercising powers conferred, not for public purposes, but for its private benefit and emolument, will be regarded quod hoc as a private corporation. Patereson v. Society for Establishing Useful Manufactures, 24 N. J. L. 385.

Towns and other public corporations may have private rights and interests vested in them under their charter, and as to those rights they are to be regarded and protected the same as if they were the rights and interests of individuals or of private corporations. Montpeller v. East Montpeller, 29 Vt. 12, 67 Am. Dec. 748.

So far as a municipal corporation is endowed by law with the power of contracting, and as such is made capable of acquiring, holding, and disposing of property, it must stand on the same ground of exemption from legislative control and interference as a private corporation. Atkins v. Randolph, 31 Vt. 228.

The doctrine is well settled in respect to public corporations created for public purposes, that the legislature has the exclusive right, as trustee of the public interest, to regulate, control, and direct the corporation and its funds and franchisees, for the reason that the whole interest and franchisees are given by the act of incorporation for the public use and advantage. Bush v. Shipman, 5 Ill. 190.

Mr. Justice Story, in his opinion in the case of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 694, 4 L. ed. 873, remarked: "Corporations for mere public government, such as towns, cities, and counties, may in many respects be subject to legislative control. But it will hardly be contended that even in respect to such corporations the legislative power is so transcendent that it may at its will take away the private property of the corporation or change the uses of its private funds acquired under the public faith."

Terrett v. Taylor, 9 Cranch, 43, 3 L. ed. 650, says: "In respect also to public corporations, 48 L. R. A.

which exist only for public purposes, such as counties, towns, cities, etc., the legislature may under proper limitations have a right to change, modify, enlarge, or restrain them, securing however, the property for the uses of those for whom and at whose expense it was originally purchased."

Mr. Justice Matthews, in New Orleans, M. & T. R. Co. v. Ellerman, 105 U. S. 186, 26 L. ed. 1015, says: "Whatever powers the municipal body rightfully enjoys over the subject is derived from the legislature. They are merely administrative, and may be revoked at any time, not touching, of course, any property of the city actually acquired in the course of administration."

Savannah v. Steam Boat Co. R. M. Charl. (Ga.) 342, while admitting that the legislature has a superintending and controlling power over a municipal corporation, holds that it cannot take away property acquired by it, or vested in such corporation by legislative acts.

Even municipal corporations, though their charters are in no sense contracts, are protected by the Constitution in the property they rightfully acquire for local purposes, and the state cannot despoil them of it. Detroit v. Detroit & H. Pl. Road Co. 43 Mich. 140, 5 N. W. 275.

A city, though a civil institution created to be employed to some extent as an instrument of government, is not the government itself, but a distinct though subordinate being, and although as a public corporation it holds its existence and peculiar forms and faculties at the will of the government of which it is an instrument, or in some sense a part, it is not so identified with it that all its acts and acquisitions must necessarily be ascribed to the government or inure to its benefit, and it may acquire corporate rights beyond the control of the government. Louisville v. University of Louisville, 15 B. Mon. 642.

The legislature has no power, either directly or indirectly, to divest a municipal corporation of its private property without the consent of its inhabitants. Milwaukee v. Milwaukee, 12 Wis. 94. This decision was made in a case involving the question whether an act extending the limits of a city so as to embrace land formerly included in a town divested the town's title to land within the annexed territory. The court remarked it did not hold that the legislature might not, upon a repeal of the charter of a municipal corporation or a division of its territory, provide for a fair and equitable disposition or division of its public property; but where the legislature takes from a town a portion of its territory which Windsor, 12-210; Manchester, 12-210." Half the taxes received by the state during the next five years from any street-railway companies using the bridge was to be paid over to the towns in proportion to their assessments, and 10 per cent of such receipts during each succeeding year. A commission was also appointed to hear and determine all legal claims, not exceeding in all $40,000, for any contract obligations already incurred by the bridge commissioners,—their decision in favor of such claimants to be final against the state, and any sums awarded by them, not exceeding $40,000, to be paid from the state treasury. If any claimant was dissatisfied with their decision, he was at liberty to bring suit against the state in the superior court, and should the Berlin Bridge Company so sue, then whether it proved the existence of any valid contract with the bridge commissioners under the act of 1893, or not, it was to be entitled to recover for all materials furnished or expenses incurred under or in connection with any contract with the commissioners, including all legal expenses. Any judgment of the court in favor of the claimant in any suit was to be paid from the state treasury. If the contract already described between the Berlin Iron Bridge Company and the bridge commissioners should be adjudged valid, then the comptroller was directed to carry it out and pay the contract price. In such case the towns were not to receive half the railway taxes for five years, but were to receive 10 per cent of them annually, and were to remain charged with the perpetual maintenance and repair of the highway over the river, including the new bridge.

On June 28, 1895 (Special Acts 1895, p.

includes lands to which it has the exclusive title, and annexes the same to another town or municipality without providing for the disposal of such lands, and under such circumstances that the assent of the town to part with its title cannot be presumed, such town still continues to be the owner of such lands, notwithstanding the separation.

But Bristol v. New Chester, 3 N. H. 524, upholds the constitutionality of a provision of an act forming a new town from parts of two existing towns, that certain portions of the property of the old towns shall belong to the new. The court says that, even if the act incorporating the original town is a contract the obligation of which cannot be impaired, still, the provision in question does not have the effect to impair it.

Grogan v. San Francisco, 18 Cal. 590, held that an act which attempted to confirm an unauthorized sale of property granted to a city by the state was invalid. The opinion, which was by Field, Ch. J., afterwards an associate justice of the United States Supreme Court, based the decision upon the ground that a legislative grant was an executed contract, and as such within the clause of the Federal Constitution prohibiting the state from impairing the obligations of contracts, and that there was no difference in the inviolability of the contract between a grant of property to an individual and a like grant to a municipal corporation. Chief Justice Field said: "Though a municipal corporation is the creature of the legislature, yet when the state enters into a contract with it the subordinate relation ceases, and that equality arises which exists between all contracting parties. And however great the control of the legislature over the corporation, it can be exercised only in subordination to the principle which secures the inviolability of contracts." The opinion distinguishes Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 530, and Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 222, which asserted authority of the legislature over pueblo lands held by municipal corporations, upon the ground that those lands were held originally by the pueblo, and afterwards the city as its successor, in trust for public municipal purposes, the trust being subject to the direction, supervision, and control of the government, and the cases were, therefore, held to have no application to a case like the one at bar, where the legislature had undertaken to divest property not held upon any such trust, without the city's previous consent or subsequent acceptance of its acts.

The same distinction applies to Gordon v. San Diego, 101 Cal. 522, 36 Pac. 18, which held that the legislature might validate a conveyance of pueblo lands by the city of San Francisco, originally invalid for want of a corporate seal.

Proprietors of Mount Hope Cemetery v. Boston, 158 Mass. 509, 33 N. E. 895, denied the power of the legislature to compel the city of Boston to transfer without compensation to a private corporation property purchased and improved by it for the purpose of a cemetery. The decision rests upon the ground that such property is held in the private, and not in the public or political, character of the city. The court said that the legislative power over municipal property, when it exists, does not extend so far as to enable the legislature to require a transfer, without compensation, to a private person or private corporation. The control which the legislature may exercise is limited. It must act by public agencies and for public uses exclusively. If the city has purchased property for purposes which are strictly and purely public, as a mere instrumentality of the state, such property is so far subject to the control of the legislature that other instrumentalities of the state may be substituted for its management and care, but even the state itself has no power to require the city to transfer the title from public to private ownership.

Webb v. New York, 64 How. Pr. 10, held that the provision of an act for the removal of a reservoir situated upon land the fee-simple absolute of which was 'n the city of New York was unconstitutional. The opinion says that the property, which New York holds in its proprietary or private character, and which concerns the private advantage of the corporation as a distinct legal personality, is stamped with so many of the rights and powers of natural persons or private corporations as that the city cannot be deprived of the reservoir without due process of law and without just compensation. The opinion further says that the contention of defendants that the legislature may direct to what use such property shall be put may within certain limits be conceded to be correct. "Indeed, in the exercise of its superintending and governmental powers as parens patriæ, the legislature doubtless may designate the particular instrument in the varied and somewhat complex machinery of this vast municipality for discharging its duties, and for the protection of its rights. But I cannot assent to the proposition that the state may absolutely and unqualifiedly direct the use which shall be made by the city of its property held in fee, when the use named by necessary intentment, and the mode adopted of changing an old public use to another, involve a denial of all the essentials entering into proprietorship."

485, chap. 343), a private act was passed, entitled "An Act Creating the Connecticut River Bridge and Highway District." By this the towns of Hartford, East Hartford, Glastonbury, Manchester, and South Windsor were constituted a corporation under the name of the "Connecticut river bridge and highway district," "for the construction, reconstruction, care, and maintenance of a free public highway across the Connecticut river at Hartford, and the causeway and approaches appertaining thereto, as described in a decree of the superior court of Hartford county, passed on the 10th day of June, 1889, in which decree said highway was laid out and established."

Four citizens of Hartford and one from each of the other towns were appointed "commissioners for said district, with authority to maintain said free public highway, and, whenever public safety or convenience may require, to erect new bridges along or upon said highway, to reconstruct, raise, and widen the causeway and approaches appertenant to or a part of said highway, at the expense of the towns named in § 1 of this act, and composing said bridge district, at a cost not exceeding $500,000." This board was to report annually to the several towns the expenses incurred and paid by it during the year preceding. It was authorized to issue the bonds of the district to an amount not exceeding $500,000 to provide means for building a new bridge or improving the highway across the river. Each of the five towns, in order to meet the principal and interest due and to become due upon these bonds, was to pay over to the treasurer of the commission, on his written order, annually, 25 cents on each $1,000 of its grand

In State v. Savannah, R. M. Charl (Ga.) 250, the city of Savannah had built a county jail, and afterwards by an act of the legislature was vested with the sole and entire government of the jail. That act was afterwards repealed by an act which vested the jail in the justice and the sheriff. The court upheld the latter act. It says that private corporations cannot be deprived of their franchises except by a judicial judgment, but that all such are made merely for the purpose of city government are so far creatures of the legislature that they may be controlled by it, and have their constitutions altered and amended by the government in such manner as the public interest may require.

Columbus v. Columbus, 82 Wis. 374, 16 L. R. A. 695, 52 N. W. 425, decided that where a town holds the naked legal title, in trust for the inhabitants of a town and city, of cemetery grounds within the city, exclusively for burial purposes, the legislature may enact that the city shall have exclusive care and management of the cemetery for the beneficiaries. The court distinguishes the case from Milwaukee v. Milwaukee, 12 Wis. 94, upon the ground that the town in that case held the absolute title in fee to the land, and that there was no trust for a particular purpose.

In Skinkie v. Essex Public Road Board, 47 N. J. L. 93, the court discussed the question whether property purchased by a municipal body for unpaid taxes laid to enable it to exercise its granted functions of government passes beyond legislative control, save through the power of eminent domain, and expressed its opinion that it does not. It says the cases draw a distinction as to property rights of a strictly private character vested in municipal corporations, and remarks that if such a corporation has power to hold devises and legacies to charitable uses the legislature cannot seize and appropriate them to other purposes, but even in such a case the legislature may deprive the public body of the capacity to act as trustee, in which event equity will substitute a trustee to perpetuate the trust, as was done in Montpelier v. East Montpelier, 29 Vt. 12, 67 Am. Dec. 748. With reference to municipal property, such as city halls, markets, waterworks, and ferries, it says, upon general principles, immunity from legislative control must be conceded to an extent that will prohibit the lawmakers from divesting the title for the purpose of devoting it to private uses, or diverting it to the support or benefit of other municipal bodies.

State, Millburn, Prosecutor, v. South Orange, 55 N. J. L. 254, 26 Atl. 75, upheld an act which requires the consent of the township committee within whose boundaries the lands are located, 48 L. R. A.

before any city which has theretofore acquired land outside its limits, may use the same for sewage purposes. The court says the authority granted to a municipal corporation to purchase property must be presumed to be for the purpose of enabling it to discharge its public functions in a beneficial way, and its title cannot be regarded as so absolute as to strip the legislature of all control whatever over its uses, in exercising its unquestionable right to regulate and modify the powers bestowed upon the local government. It further says that while it may be conceded that the legislature cannot deprive a municipality of the title to its land and bestow it upon another political district, the legislature has not denuded itself of the capacity to prescribe the mode in which such property shall be enjoyed by the public corporation. If a contract between the state and the public corporation can be deduced from the fact that there is legislative authority to purchase property for a specified public purpose, the extreme limit of the restraint it imposes upon the legislature is that, while it may regulate or change the uses to which such property may be devoted, it cannot deprive the corporation of it.

Poultney v. Wells, 1 Alk. (Vt.) 180, held that a share or right of land, granted by the charter of a township to those persons whose names are entered on the back of the charter, for the benefit of a school in the town, belongs to the town so that the legislature can exercise no power over it to vary the appropriation without the consent of the town, and that such consent must be by those who are inhabitants of the town at the time the assent is given. The legislature had set off a part of one town to another, and it was held that they could not give the latter the control of any part of the fund arising from the school lot in the former, without the former's consent.

The legislature cannot without the consent of a town make any change in the appropriation of the rents from a right of land reserved by its charter for the use of schools in the town. White v. Fuller, 38 Vt. 193.

Grants of property to municipal corporations in trust for other purposes than corporate and municipal use are not more the subject of legislative control than are the private and vested rights of individuals. Montpelier v. East Montpelier, 29 Vt. 12, 67 Am. Dec. 748. In this case a town was a trustee of certain rights of land reserved for public uses, such as the support of the Gospel and schools. The original town was extinguished and the territory incorporated into two new towns. The court held that a new trustee should be aplist, until its share of the whole had been fully satisfied, in the proportion of Hartford, 79-100, East Hartford, 12-100, Glastonbury, 3-100, Manchester, 3-100, and South Windsor, 3-100; and for the ordinary support and maintenance of said highway each town was also directed to pay upon the orders of the commission, from time to time, such further sums as the commission might determine as its proper proportion of the total expense under the provisions of the act, and to provide for such payments in voting its annual tax levy. Half of all taxes received by the state during the next five years from street-railway companies using the bridge, and 10 per cent annually of all future receipts of the same character, were to be paid to the treasurer of the commission. The commissioners were given full power to construct and reconstruct all necessary bridges and approaches, and their orders were made obligatory upon the towns, and sufficient authority for the town treasurers to pay any sums to the treasurer of the commission which the commission might direct. The courts were empowered to enforce, by mandamus or otherwise, any orders of the commissioners made under authority of the act. The commissioners under the act of 1893 were directed to turn over all property and papers in their hands to the new board. The latter was authorized to assume the cost of constructing the temporary bridge which was in course of erection under the contract made by the commissioners under the act of 1893. So much of the public act of May 24, 1895, as fixed the proportion in which each town was to contribute to the cost of constructing and maintaining the bridge and highway, was repealed.

pointed to take charge of the property and execute the trust for the benefit of the inhabitants of the territory which comprised the original township.

Philadelphia v. Fox, 64 Pa. 169, upheld the constitutionality of an act which transferred the discharge of charitable trusts from a city to a board composed in part of persons to be appointed by the courts. The court said: "The city is merely an agency instituted by the sovereign for the purpose of carrying out in detail the objects of government,—essentially a revocable agency,—having no vested right to any of its powers or franchises, . . . and therefore fully subject to the control of the legislature, who may enlarge or diminish its territorial extent or its functions, may change or modify its internal arrangement, or destroy its very existence with the mere breath of arbitrary discretion. . . . It is nothing to the purpose, then, to show that a city may act in certain particulars as a private corporation, may make contracts as such, and that it cannot impair the obligation of a contract entered into by it in that capacity. . . . When, therefore, the donors or testators of these charitable funds granted or devised them in trust to the municipality, they must be held to have done so with the full knowledge that their trustee so selected was a mere creature of the state, an agent acting under a revocable power. . . . No one, I think, can doubt that it was entirely competent for that authority to vest the entire management and control of all municipal affairs in just such a body as that constituted by this act. If they could do the greater they can do the less."

An act incorporating a city, and relinquishing to the corporation certain lands in trust for the use and benefit of the city, with power to sell and apply the proceeds to the erection of a jail and courthouse for the use of the county, the balance to be applied to the purposes of education, did not confer a vested right in the city to have the property so applied, and until the trust had been executed it was competent for the legislature to change or abolish it; and both trusts were in fact extinguished by the repeal of the charter, so that a trustee could not be appointed by the court to administer them. Bass v. Fontleroy, 11 Tex. 698.

Hagerstown v. Schner, 37 Md. 180, holds that even if a private individual or corporation would have a vested right to immunity from liability after the fall of the bar of the statute of limitations, which could not be divested by the repeal of the statute of limitations or the extension of the limitation, a 48 L. R. A. municipal corporation would not have such a right. The action was ex delicto against the city for damages caused by a mob.

Lawrence v. Louisville, 96 Ky. 595, 27 L. R. A. 560, 24 S. W. 450 (an action against a city for damages for personal injuries caused by a defective bridge), however, holds that the right to plead the statute of limitations after the fall of the bar is a vested right which cannot be taken away by a subsequent repealing statute. The opinion does not recognize or consider the question whether there is any distinction in this respect between actions against private individuals or corporations and municipal corporations.

Spaulding v. Andover, 54 N. H. 38, held that an act which attempted to divert to certain individuals a portion of a fund previously assigned by the legislature to a town was invalid as in violation of the Federal Constitution, art. 1, § 10, declaring that no state shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts. This case recognizes the distinction between the public and private characters of municipal corporations.

The legislature has power to direct that fines collected in the enforcement of city ordinances shall be applied to the support of incorporated homes for friendless women situated within the city. Indianapolis v. Indianapolis Home for Friendless Women, 50 Ind. 215. The court held that the home in question was so far a public institution that to appropriate the funds in question to its support was not an appropriation of money to a private purpose.

State ex rel. Board of Edu. v. Haben, 22 Wis. 660, denies the power of the legislature, without the assent of a city or its inhabitants, to divert money raised in a city by taxation for the erection of a high school building to the purchase of a site for a normal school.

The legislature may relieve a city from the trust to hold for public use as a park land the title of which is in the city, and authorize a sale of the land free from the trust. Brooklyn Park Comrs. v. Armstrong, 45 N. Y. 234, 6 Am. Rep. 70.

The control of city parks is a matter of purely local concern, as held and owned by the city not in its political or governmental capacity, but in a quasi-private capacity, in which the municipal authorities act for the exclusive benefit of the corporation whose interests they represent. State ex rel. Wood v. Schweickardt, 109 Mo. 496, 19 S. W. 47.

The legislature has power to regulate the use of piers and wharves in the city of New York, although the same are the property of

The judgment brought up for review by this appeal directed the issue of a writ of peremptory mandamus to enforce the payment by the treasurer of the town of Glastonbury of an order drawn upon him by vote of the commissioners for the Connecticut river bridge and highway district for 3-100 of the sum of $500, required to meet expenses incurred by the board for the ordinary support and maintenance of the highway under their charge. In behalf of the town it is contended that it cannot thus be compelled to contribute, at the dictation of officials not of its own choosing, to the cost of maintaining a highway which is wholly outside of its territorial bounds.

It has undoubtedly been the general policy of the state to leave the expense of public improvements for highway purposes to the determination of the municipal corporations within the limits of which the highways may be situated, and to charge them only with such obligations as may be incurred in their behalf by officers of their own selection. But when the state at large or the general public have an interest in the construction or maintenance of such works, there is nothing in our Constitution, or in the principles of natural justice upon which it rests, to prevent the general assembly from assuming the active direction of affairs by such agents as it may see fit to appoint, and apportioning whatever expenses may be incurred among such municipalities as may be found to be especially benefited, without first stopping to ask their consent. Norwich v. Hampshire County Comrs. 13 Pick. 60; Rochester v. Roberts, 29 N. H. 380; Philadelphia v. Field, 58 Pa. 320; Simon v. Northrup, 27 Or. 487, 30 L. R. A. 171, 40 Pac. 560. As the corporation. New York v. Fulton Market Fishmongers' Asso. 3 How. Pr. N. S. 491.

No principle is better established or more fundamental in its character than that a municipal corporation, being organized for political purposes, is constantly subject to the control of the legislature, and is liable at all times to have its public powers, rights, and duties modified, changed, or abolished as the legislature may deem proper. Frederick v. Groshon, 30 Md. 436, 96 Am. Dec. 591. This case held that the power or privilege conferred upon a town to open and widen a creek vested in the town no rights beyond the interference of the legislature, and that it might be absolutely abolished by the legislature. The action was to restrain the city from appropriating land after the power had been abrogated.

In New Orleans v. New Orleans Waterworks Co. 142 U. S. 70, 35 L. ed. 943, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 142, it was held that an act of the legislature incorporating a waterworks company, which provided that the city should be allowed to use water for municipal purposes free of charge, and in consideration thereof the franchise and property of the company should be exempt from taxation, did not constitute a contract within the protection of the clause of the Federal Constitution forbidding the impairment of the obligation of contracts. The opinion says that the authorities are full and conclusive to the point that the municipality, being a mere agent of the state, stands in its governmental or public character in no contract relation with its sovereign, at whose pleasure its charter may be amended, changed, or revoked without the impairment of any constitutional obligation, while with respect to its private or proprietary rights and interests it may be entitled to the constitutional protection. The case seems to assume that the matter in question pertains to the governmental or public, rather than to the private or proprietary, character of the city.

As contra-distinguished from a private corporation, municipal or public grants of franchises are always subject to the control of the legislative power for the purpose of amendment, modification, or entire revocation. Memphis v. Memphis Water Co. 5 Heisk. 495.

This case held that the power of a city to erect waterworks to supply the city and its inhabitants with water was one of the powers subject to amendment, modification, limitation, or revocation by the legislature, and that the power in question had been impliedly abrogated by an act incorporating a private corporation with exclusive power to erect waterworks in the city, which was passed before the city had taken any steps under the power conferred upon it, other than causing maps, estimates, etc., to be made, preparatory to commencing the actual construction of waterworks. The opinion says that the question to what extent, if at all, the legislature can interfere with interests acquired and vested in the due exercise of its corporate powers by a public corporation is not necessary to be examined or determined.
48 L. R. A.

The exclusive right to regulate, improve, and lease wharves, conferred upon a city by statute, is a private right of the corporation, and not subject to divestiture without due legal process and compensation therefor, as contra-distinguished from a public right, which may be abrogated by the state at its pleasure. Ellerman v. McMains, 30 La. Ann. 190, 31 Am. Rep. 218.

St. Louis v. Shields, 52 Mo. 351, upheld the constitutionality of an act repealing all former acts which in any manner authorized municipal corporations to collect a wharfage or tonnage tax, so far as concerned a city which was a party to the action, and which had been authorized by a previous act to apply all net receipts from wharfage to the credit of the wharf funds, and had issued bonds, as security for which the revenues to be derived from the wharfage were pledged. The courts said this decision was put upon the ground that the legislature can alter or repeal at will all the acts giving power to municipal corporations, unless the language of the act is clear that they parted with that power, and that if the law impairs the rights of the bondholders they are the proper parties to apply for relief.

East Hartford v. Hartford Bridge Co. 10 How. 511, 13 L. ed. 518, holds that an act discontinuing a ferry did not violate the provision of the United States Constitution forbidding the states to pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts, although the legislature had previously granted the franchise to the town. This decision rests upon the ground that, in view of the public character of the state and the town (the parties to the grant of the franchise) and the subject-matter, there was nothing in the nature of a contract, though there might have been if the grantee of the privilege had been an individual or a private corporation, instead of a public corporation.

Benson v. New York, 10 Barb. 223, holds that the grant of a franchise to a municipal corporation to maintain a ferry creates a vested right which cannot be taken away by the legislature, first because it is protected by the provision of the Federal Constitution prohibiting the states from impairing the obligation of against legislation of this character, American courts generally hold that no plea can be set up of a right of local self-government, implied in the nature of our institutions. People ex rel. Wood v. Draper, 15 N. Y. 532, 543; People ex rel. Mc Lean v. Flagg, 46 N. Y. 401-404; Com. v. Plaisted, 148 Mass. 375, 2 L. R. A. 142, 19 N. E. 224.

The Constitution of Connecticut was ordained, as its preamble declares, by the people of Connecticut. It contemplates the existence of towns and counties, and without these the scheme of government which it established could not exist. It secured to these territorial subdivisions of the state certain political privileges in perpetuity, and, among others, the election by each county of its own sheriff, and by each town of its own representatives in the general assembly, and its own selectmen, and such officers of local police as the laws might prescribe. It secured them because it granted them, not because they previously existed. Towns have no inherent rights. They have always been the mere creatures of the colony or the state, with such functions, and such only, as were conceded or recognized by law. Webster v. Harwinton, 32 Conn. 131. The state possesses all the powers of sovereignty, except so far as limited by the Constitution of the United States. Its executive and judicial powers are each distributed among different magistrates, elected some for counties, and some for the state at large; but its whole legislative power is vested in the general assembly. Our Constitution imposes a few, and only a few, restrictions upon its exercise, and except for these the general assembly, in all matters pertaining to the domain of legislation, is as free and untram-contracts, and, second, because of the sacredness of vested rights. It says franchises of this description are partly of a public, and partly of a private, nature. So far as the accommodation of passengers is concerned they are publici juris; so far as they require capital and produce revenue they are privati juris. The opinion distinguishes this case from East Hartford v. Hartford Bridge Co. 10 How. 511, 13 L. ed. 518, upon the ground that the franchise in that case was claimed by a town, which is at most but a quasi-corporation, differing essentially from a chartered city, and that the grant was made to the town during the pleasure of the legislature, and not in fee. The opinion on this point was, however, obiter as shown by Darlington v. New York, 81 N. Y. 164, 88 Am. Dec. 248.

Police Jury v. Shreveport, 5 La. Ann. 661, held that a provision of an act incorporating a town, giving the municipal authorities the exclusive right to establish ferries across a river, did not create a contract or vested right in that corporation which the legislature could not change or annul. The court says the incorporation of a town is established for public purposes alone, and to administer a part of the sovereign power of the state over a small portion of its territory. It is created by the legislature, and is entirely subject to legislative control.

A city has no vested right to the privilege conferred upon it by a provision of the act incorporating it, giving it the exclusive right to fix license rates for the sale of spirituous liquors. Sloan v. State, 8 Blackf. 361.

The legislature may take from a city the power conferred by its charter to grant licenses to sell spirituous liquors, notwithstanding that the receipts from such licenses are appropriated to the support of paupers. Gutzweiler v. People, 14 Ill. 142.

A town acquires no vested rights under a statute by virtue of which the expense of maintaining a bridge is apportioned between certain towns, to have such towns contribute, which cannot be devested by a subsequent statute. Weymouth & B. Fire Dist. v. Norfolk County Comrs. 108 Mass. 142.

Davock v. Moore, 105 Mich. 120, 28 L. R. A. 783, 63 N. W. 424, while conceding that the property which a municipal corporation acquires in the exercise of its corporate powers is protected from legislative interference as vested rights, holds that the legislature may change, modify, or altogether take away a particular source of revenue,—e. g., a liquor tax.

The power or franchise of a village to grant licenses to grocers to sell spirituous liquors is 48 L. R. A.

not a vested right which cannot be impaired or taken away by the legislature. The court says that the power conferred by the charter is wholly political. People v. Morris, 13 Wend. 325.

Aberdeen v. Saunderson, 3 Smedes & M. 603, and Aberdeen Female Academy v. Aberdeen, 13 Smedes & M. 645, hold that a provision of a charter of a town granting it the sole power to grant liquor licenses, and to appropriate the money arising therefrom to city purposes, created a vested interest in the avails of the exercise of the franchise which cannot be devested by the legislature so long as the franchise exists, although the legislature has power to destroy the franchise itself. In the latter case the decision seems to rest upon the ground that the franchise is both public and private in character; i. e., that the power to grant a license was given for public purposes, and may have been intended as a municipal and police regulation, but that the fund itself arising from the license is for the private advantage and emolument of the town.

Williamson v. New Jersey, 130 U. S. 189, 32 L. ed. 915, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 453, upholds the power of the legislature to repeal an act providing that a poor farm belonging to a city and situated in a township should at all times be liable and subject to taxation by the township. The court says that such a grant of the power of taxation does not form a contract between the state and the township, within the protection of the clause of the Federal Constitution against impairing the obligation of contracts.

Bowdoinham v. Richmond, 6 Me. 112, 19 Am. Dec. 197, held that a town acquired a vested right to have a new town contribute a proportionate part of the expense of maintaining the paupers of the original town at the time of the division, and that the legislature had no power to impair that right.

The species of property which shall be the subject of municipal taxation or exemption is a matter purely within the legislative discretion, and a city charter is not a contract between the state and the city securing to the latter the absolute power of taxation beyond the control of modification by the legislature. Richmond v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 21 Gratt. 604.

A city is entirely under the control of the legislature, and its charter may be repealed or modified by the legislature, and 't has no vested right to tax particular property for municipal purposes, which may not be taken away by the legislature. State Bank v. Madison, 3 Ind. 43.

A judgment that a town shall be assessed for the erection and maintenance of a bridge in meled as the people would themselves have been, had they retained the law-making power in their own hands, or as they are in adopting such constitutional amendments from time to time as they think fit. Pratt v. Allen, 13 Conn. 119, 125; Booth v. Woodbury, 32 Conn. 118, 126. It has not infrequently, from early colonial days, made special provision for particular highways or bridges, and in several instances, by the appointment of agencies of its own to construct or alter them at the expense of those upon whom it thought fit to cast the burden. 1 Col. Rec. p. 417; 5 Col. Rec. p. 80; 13 Col. Rec. p. 601; 14 Col. Rec. pp. 605, 630; 1 Private Laws, 282, 285. By legislation of this nature the city of Hartford was recently compelled to contribute a large sum for a separation of grades at the Asylum street railroad crossing, and we held the act to be not unconstitutional. Woodruff v. Catlin, 54 Conn. 277, 6 Atl. 849; Woodruff v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 59 Conn. 63, 83, 20 Atl. 17. That so many laws of this general description have been enacted by the general assembly, both before and since the adoption of our Constitution, is, of itself, entitled to no small weight in determining whether they fall within the legitimate bounds of what that instrument describes as "legislative power." Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 190, 204, 31 L. ed. 654, 658, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 723; Wheeler's Appeal, 45 Conn. 306. One of those to which reference has been made (1 Private Laws, p. 285) required the town of Granby to build and maintain a bridge across the Farmington river, half of which was in the town of Windsor, and was adjudged to be valid by this court, notwith-

an adjoining town does not vest in the latter a right to have the former contribute to the cost of erection and maintenance, which cannot be taken away by the legislature. Underhill v. Essex, 64 Vt. 28, 23 Atl. 617.

But Stratford v. Sharon, 61 Vt. 126, 4 L. R. A. 499, 17 Atl. 793, 18 Atl. 308, held that a town, by recovering a judgment for contribution against another town under a statute providing for contribution between the towns in the construction of bridges, acquired a vested right.

Layton v. New Orleans, 12 La. Ann. 515, holds that a provision of the statute consolidating municipalities, that the debt of the consolidated municipality should be borne by the respective constituent municipalities in proportion to the debts which they had incurred before the consolidation, did not create a vested right in such constituents, and that the legislature might change its policy, and direct that the taxes should be equal and uniform within the entire limits of the consolidated municipality.

The opinion of Judge Beck, in Dubuque v. Illinois C. R. Co. 39 Iowa, 56, denies the right of the legislature to release a railroad company from municipal taxes already levied, upon the ground that the city had a valid legal claim against the railroad company for the amount of the assessment, which was within the constitutional provisions against depriving persons of property without due process of law and impairing the obligations of contracts. The opinion says that the right of a city to hold property, and the binding nature of obligations entered into with it, are protected by those constitutional guaranties. A municipal corporation, though a public and political institution, deriving its life and powers from the state, possesses a private and proprietary character, and, as such, may acquire and hold property and make contracts. It is protected in its property by the same constitutional guaranties that extend over natural persons, and rights held by it in that character are beyond legislative control and interference. In reply to the argument of counsel that "rights" exercised by a municipal corporation, which, like the right to collect taxes, can never be exercised by a private person or corporation, are necessarily public and subject to the legislative control, the opinion says that rights cannot be classified or distinguished as public and private; that rights held by political corporations, as to every element inhering therein which is necessary to create a right, differ in no respect from rights secured by the law to private persons, and that while such rights may be subject to control that cannot be exercised over the rights of an individual, they cannot be taken away or impaired by any power in the state. The point of the opinion seems to be that while the powers of a municipal corporation may be distinguished as public and private, and that while the powers of a municipal corporation are conferred by the legislature and may be taken away by the same authority, a right acquired by the exercise of a power while in existence cannot be affected by the abrogation of the power. For instance, the power under which the levy was made may be taken away by the legislature, but the property right in the liability for the taxes cannot be taken away. The opinion on this point must be regarded as merely expressing the view of the judge who wrote it, as none of the other judges concurred with him on this point.

Upon the general question as to the authority of the legislature over city streets, see note to Iron Mountain R. Co. v. Bingham (Tenn.) 4 L. R. A. 622.

Upon the question as to the power of the legislature to vacate or discontinue city streets, see note to Moffitt v. Brainard (Iowa) 26 L. R. A. 821.

The plenary control of the legislature over the streets has been generally upheld. Thus:

The legislature may authorize the construction of railroads along streets without the consent of municipal authorities. State ex rel. Jacksonville v. Jacksonville Street R. Co. 29 Fla. 590, 10 So. 590.

The legislature may grant to a street railway the right to run through the streets and squares of a city without compensation to it. Savannah & T. R. Co. v. Savannah, 45 Ga. 602.

Clinton v. Cedar Rapids & M. River R. Co. 24 Iowa, 455, upholds the right of the legislature to authorize a railroad to construct its road through streets, the fee of which was in a city, without the consent of, or compensation to, the city. The opinion says that the city holds the fee in trust for the public, not for the people of the city alone, but the general public as well. It says a city by its constituent act may be authorized to acquire property for a market house, a public hall, or the like, and that of that kind of property the city cannot be deprived by the legislative act, except it be taken for public use, and if so taken the city is entitled to compensation.

The legislature may grant to a street railroad company the right to lay its tracks in the streets of a city without the consent of the municipal authorities, notwithstanding that the city charter confers upon the city the super-standing then, as now, the General Statutes provided that bridges over rivers dividing towns should be built and maintained at their joint cost. Granby v. Thurston, 23 Conn. 416. There is no principle of free government or rule of natural justice which demands that the support of highways and bridges shall be imposed only on those territorial subdivisions of the state in which they are situated. If it be required of them, it is only by virtue of a statute law, which the legislature can vary or repeal at pleasure. Chidsey v. Canton, 17 Conn. 475, 478. The burden is one that the legislature can put on such public agencies as it may deem equitable, and transfer from one to another, from time to time, as it may judge best for the public interest. Dow v. Wakefield, 103 Mass. 267; Agawam v. Hampden County, 130 Mass. 528; Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 703, 26 L. ed. 238, 241; Washer v. Bullitt County, 110 U. S. 558, 28 L. ed. 249, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249.

The defendant urges that taxation and representation are indissolubly connected by the underlying principles of free government, and that this—the commission which directs the affairs of the bridge district and makes requisitions on the towns for such funds as it deems necessary not having been selected by them—is a sufficient defense against the payment of the order which has been drawn upon him, since it can be paid only out of moneys raised by town taxation.

Taxes can, indeed, under our system of government, only be imposed by the free consent of those who pay them, or their representatives, and for purposes which they approve. But the inhabitants of these towns were represented in the general assembly by which the laws now brought in question were enacted. The legislative power, after defining the general purposes of taxation, to confer upon local public corporations the right to determine the amount of the levy within the territory under their jurisdiction, is unquestionable; and in its exercise it is immaterial whether the corporations to which that function is entrusted or between which it is shared be called counties or vision of the public streets. Jersey City v. Jersey City & B. R. Co. 20 N. J. Eq. 360.

People v. Kerr, 27 N. Y. 188, upheld the right of the legislature to authorize a railroad company to construct its road through the streets of New York without the consent of or compensation to the city. This decision rests upon the ground that the fee of the streets acquired by the city under the act of 1813, § 118, was held in trust for the public use of all the people of the state, and not as a corporate or municipal property.

New Orleans, M. & T. R. Co. v. Ellerman, 105 U. S. 166, 26 L. ed. 1015, held that the charter of New Orleans and a statute of Louisiana authorizing the city to erect and maintain wharves within its limits, and to collect wharfage, did not prevent the legislature from granting to a railroad company the authority to inclose and occupy for its purposes and uses a portion of the levee and batture, and maintain the wharf it had theretofore erected on its property within those limits, or from exempting it from the supervision and control which the municipal authorities exercised in the matter of public wharves.

New Orleans, M. & C. R. Co. v. New Orleans, 26 La. Ann. 478, holds that the legislature had no power to grant a railroad company the right to construct and maintain a depot upon public squares, the title of which in fee was vested in a city. The court says that after a careful consideration of the question it has come to the conclusion that a municipal corporation may own property to and over which the legislature has, while such corporation exists, no right of control in opposition to or independently of the will or consent of the corporation. That a municipal corporation possesses two classes of powers and two classes of rights, public and private. In all that relates to one class it is merely the agent of the state and subject to its control; in the other it is the agent of the inhabitants of the place, and is not subject to the absolute control of the legislature, its creator. Among this latter class is the right to acquire, hold, and dispose of property.

Portland & W. Valley R. Co. v. Portland, 14 Or. 188, 58 Am. Rep. 299, 12 Pac. 265, holds that the title which a city has in its streets or public places is not private property in the 43 L. R. A.

sense that it cannot be taken for public use without just compensation, but it is public, and the power of regulating the use thereof resides in the legislature. The power of the legislature over property dedicated to a public use is not absolute. It may regulate the use of the property or promote its improvement, but cannot divert it or subject it to any use clearly inconsistent with the contract of dedication. The act involved in this case granted a railroad the right to use for its depot buildings and tracks property dedicated by the owner to public use as a levee or public landing and subsequently deeded to the city by the dedication.

People ex rel. New York v. Brooklyn Bd. of Assessors, 111 N. Y. 505, 2 L. R. A. 148, 19 N. E. 90, held that a landing place in Brooklyn, owned by the city of New York and used by it as an incident to its ferry franchise, was exempt from taxation under the principle that property of a municipality acquired and held for governmental and public uses and used for public purposes is not a taxable subject within the purview of the tax laws. The court says it does not desire to express an opinion on the question whether there is in principle a distinction between taxation of the property of a municipality strictly devoted to public use, and property which it owns, though not acquired for a public use, although it may be held on the general trust applicable to all property of the corporation, but the acquisition or holding of which has no connection with the public functions of the municipality,—illustrating by supposing that the city of New York had acquired a building lot in Brooklyn. The opinion says that the ferry franchise in connection with which the landing place was used was conferred for a public use, and that that fact 'is clearly recognized in all the charters.

A municipal corporation has no proprietary rights in streets, levees, or other public grounds within its territorial limits, but whatever rights it has in them are held merely in trust for the public. St. Paul v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 63 Minn. 330, 34 L. R. A. 184, 63 N. W. 267, 65 N. W. 649, 68 N. W. 458.

G. H. P.

towns, school districts or bridge districts. When a levy is voted, the action is corporate action, deriving its obligatory force wholly from the authority of the state. Towns cannot tax their inhabitants for any purpose except by virtue of statute law. That law for many years required them annually to tax for moneys to be paid over to the state treasurer for state expenditures. It now requires them to tax, as occasion may require, for moneys to be paid over to the county treasurer for county expenditures. It can equally require any town or towns to tax for moneys to be paid over to the treasurer of a bridge or highway district in which they are included, for district expenditures. Kingman, Petitioner, 153 Mass. 566, 12 L. R. A. 417, 27 N. E. 778.

It has been suggested that in colonial times it was the right of the inhabitants of every town themselves to order the municipal duties assigned to them, and choose the officers by whom only it could be placed under a pecuniary obligation, and that this is one of those rights and privileges "derived from our ancestors," to "define, secure, and perpetuate" which our Constitution was adopted, and to which its preamble refers. If it can be said that such a right ever existed, it was not one of the nature of those which were described by the framers of the Constitution. They were speaking of rights personal to the individual, as a citizen of a free commonwealth, civil as distinguished from political, and belonging alike to each man, woman, and child among the people of Connecticut. Such of them as they deemed most essential they proceeded to specify in the Declaration of Rights, and here we find asserted (art. 1, § 2) that "all political power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority," and subject to such alterations in form, from time to time, "as they may think expedient." If there were any absolute right in the inhabitants of our towns to regulate their town finances and affairs, which was superior to all legislative control, it would be a great "political power." It would create an imperium in imperio, and invest a certain class of our people—those qualified to vote in town meetings—with the prerogative of defeating local improvements which the general assembly deemed it necessary to construct at the expense of those most benefited by them, under the direction of agents of the state, unless the work were done and its cost determined under town control. No set of men can lay claim to such a privilege under the Constitution of Connecticut.

The defendant further insists that the act of June 28th is void because, in § 4, it requires payments from the town treasuries without providing the necessary means; the authority given to raise the necessary funds in the annual tax levy being of no avail, because the bridge district is not required to submit any estimate of the amount needed for the ensuing year before the time for laying the tax. There is no substance to this objection. So far as concerns the principal and interest of any bonds that may be issued, each town is expressly directed to pay to the district annually 25 cents for each $1,000 of its grand list, until enough has been thus received to satisfy its proportionate share. As to the ordinary expenses of maintenance, the commission is to draw orders on each town from time to time for such sums as it may determine as the proportion of such town under the provisions of the act. The rule for ascertaining this proportion is that previously laid down in the same section, and it is to be presumed that the commission will make such reports to each town before its annual town meeting as will enable it to lay all taxes necessary to meet its probable expenses for the succeeding year. As to those of the first year, there is nothing on the record to indicate that the share of any town could have been large enough to cause it the slightest embarrassment.

No valid exception can be taken to this rule of apportionment, according to which the expenses of the bridge district are to be distributed among the several towns.

The acts of 1895, under which the present action has arisen, both refer to, and in a sense rest upon, the act of 1887. That was designed to secure the perpetual maintenance of the Hartford bridge as a free highway at the expense of those towns to which it might be found to be of especial benefit. The duty of ascertaining which towns would be thus benefited was intrusted to the superior court. It might have been undertaken by the legislature itself, but it was entirely proper to make it the subject of proceedings of a judicial character, to be instituted by the state. Salem Turnp. & C. Bridge Corp. v. Esser County, 100 Mass. 282. This duty was fulfilled, and since the date of the final decree in that cause there has been, and there could be, no material change in any of the conditions by which it was determined. Whatever towns were most benefited in 1889 by the perpetual maintenance of a free bridge must be most benefited by it in 1895. This was purely a question of proximity. Hartford is the natural market of all the neighboring towns lying within easy driving distance. From several of these she is separated by a navigable river, which is outside of her boundaries as well as of theirs. Ferries had been tried as a means of communication, and found inadequate. A toll bridge had then been established, and with the same result. The next step, naturally, was to provide for a free bridge. Four towns east of the river have been judicially found to derive a special benefit from this, and, while the proportionate benefits accruing to each, as well as those to Hartford, may vary from time to time, with changes in population and industrial or social conditions, some benefit, and some especial benefit, to each of the group, must, in the nature of things, always be felt. On this point they were fully heard before a competent tribunal, which, after due notice to every town in the state, and long consideration, selected them out of all the rest.

Complaint is made because, while, by the decree of the superior court, Glastonbury was charged with 25-210 of the cost of erecting and maintaining a bridge at this point, and this proportion was reaffirmed by the general assembly in the act of May 24, 1895, by that of June 28, 1895, it was cut down to 3-100, and other changes made, with the result of reducing the assessment of every town except Hartford, the burden thrown upon which was largely increased. There is no reason why the relative amount of benefits, which each of the five towns, as compared with the rest, derives from the bridge, may not vary from one period of time to another, and any such variation might present an equitable ground for making a corresponding change in its proportionate assessment for the expenses of construction or maintenance. That what was the proper share of each was determined in 1889 by a judicial proceeding did not preclude a readjustment for due cause, in 1895, by a legislative proceeding; nor did the act of May 24, 1895, put it out of the power of the general assembly to reconsider its action, as was in effect done by the act of June 28. Scituate v. Weymouth, 108 Mass. 128. We are bound to presume that there was due cause for making the apportionment finally determined on, for it is certain that there might have been. A comparison of the censuses of the United States for 1880 and 1890, between which dates the proceedings under the act of 1887 were brought to a conclusion, shows that while, during the intervening decade, the population of Hartford, East Hartford, and Manchester had been largely increased, that of Glastonbury and South Windsor had suffered a substantial loss. The organization of modern society is such as to foster the growth of cities and their suburbs, at the expense of country towns dependent for their prosperity on agricultural pursuits. The street railways, from the taxes paid by which the treasury of the bridge district was to be in part supplied, run from Hartford to the towns across the river, and from their inhabitants a large part of the fares collected may be derived. In view of all these matters the general assembly may well have concluded, when by the act of June 28 they were about to supply the necessary machinery for carrying into effect the main object of the act of May 24, that Hartford, with its rapidly increasing business and population, ought in fairness to relieve the lesser towns in the bridge district of part of the burden to which they were subject under previous legislation.

Nor is it of any importance that in 1893 the state had taken the maintenance of the bridge upon itself. This was merely a gratuitous act, with no element of a contract, and gave rise to no vested rights, except such as might accrue from obligations on the part of the state subsequently assumed by virtue of its provisions.

It is contended that such an obligation was contracted in favor of the Berlin Iron Bridge Company, and was impaired by the legislation of 1895. If so, this legislation would be so far forth invalid, as against that § L. R. A. company, under article 1, § 10, of the Constitution of the United States. The result would be that the contract made between it and the bridge commissioners, acting under the act of 1893, would remain in force, but not that the state could not compel the towns especially benefited by its execution to pay for the benefits received. In fact, however, the pleadings show that the bridge company, availing itself of the remedy tendered by the act of May 24, 1895, presented its claim for breach of contract to the commission appointed to examine it, and pending this action has accepted their award, and discharged the state from all demands. This, at all events, left the towns or their representatives in no position to raise this objection on constitutional grounds. In mandamus proceedings, matters occurring after the suit is brought can be properly considered in determining whether the writ shall be made peremptory.

The defendant also urges that the act of June 28 violates the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, in that it deprives the town of Glastonbury of property without due process of law, and denies to it the equal protection of the laws. No right, as against a state, to the equal protection of the laws, is secured to its municipal corporations by this amendment, which can limit in any way legislation to charge them with public obligations. Nor have their inhabitants, in their capacity of members of such corporations, any greater rights or immunities. New Orleans v. New Orleans Waterworks Co. 142 U. S. 79, 93, 35 L. ed. 943, 948, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 142. No property of the town of Glastonbury has been or is to be taken. Booth v. Woodbury, 32 Conn. 118, 130; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Otose County, 16 Wall. 667, 676, 21 L. ed. 375, 381. A duty to lay taxes for public purposes has been imposed, and for reasons already stated it was competent to the general assembly to create that duty, as it was created. Their proceedings were due proceedings. The process by which it is now sought to compel the defendant to pay the sum in controversy is due process. The town can found no claim, under the Constitution of the United States, any more than under that of Connecticut, to such right of local self-government as precludes the general assembly from exacting this payment, notwithstanding the demand comes from another municipal corporation, the bridge district, in choosing whose members or directing whose affairs it has had no share. Giozza v. Tiernan, 148 U. S. 657, 662, 37 L. ed. 599, 601, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 721.

We have spoken of the bridge district as a municipal corporation, although it may not answer the common-law definition of that term, since not composed of the inhabitants of any territory as such. In modern times corporations, both public and private, have often been constituted by a union of other corporations. Such were the United States of America after the Declaration of Independence, and until the adoption of their present Constitution. Such are the various counties of this state, once quasi-corporations and now full corporations, the constituents of which have always been the several towns within their boundaries. The power of the bridge district over the towns composing it is no less than it would have been had their inhabitants individually been made its members. The district and the towns are alike agencies of the state for governmental purposes, and, whether they be styled public or municipal corporations, their relations to it and to each other are the same, and equally subject to modification at its pleasure.

The defendant having refused to pay an order lawfully drawn upon him in behalf of the bridge district the writ was properly issued against him. There was no necessity for making the several towns or the bridge district parties defendant. The bridge district was in effect the relator, no town other than Glastonbury had any legal interest in the controversy, and Glastonbury itself had none in this suit, by which it was charged with no wrong, and in which the only remedy sought was one to compel the performance of a statutory duty incumbent on its treasurer as such. The writ of mandamus must run singly to the party who is bound to do the particular act commanded. Farrell v. King, 41 Conn. 453. While not necessary parties, the superior court might and, no doubt, would, have summoned in any or all of the five towns, or the bridge district, or admitted any of them as interveners, had application to that effect been made; for each had a vital interest in the questions of law on which the case must turn. Gen Stat. §§ 884, 887, 890. No order of this nature, however, having been sought from any quarter, their absence can furnish no ground of appeal.

There is no error in the judgment appealed from.

Torrance and Fenn, JJ., concur. Andrews, Ch. J., and Hamersley, J., dissent.

Andrews, Ch. J., dissenting:

I deem it clear and certain that the duty which the act referred to authorized the relators to perform was a town duty. Nowhere in the act are relators made state officers and charged with state duties. But, on the contrary, they are spoken of as town officers set to transact town affairs. The maintenance of the highway of which the relators have the care cannot be regarded as anything other than a town duty without imputing to the legislature the intent to inflict on these towns the monstrous injustice of making their inhabitants liable to pay the damages caused by the nonfeasance or a misfeasance of a duty not imposed on them by law. The relators are totally unlike the commissioners appointed in the case of the Asylum street railroad crossing. In that case the state in the exercise of its sovereign authority appointed its own officers to abate a nuisance dangerous to human life, for the existence of which the three corporations 48 L. R. A.

named were jointly responsible. Woodruff v. Catlin, 54 Conn. 295, 6 Atl. 849; Woodruff v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 59 Conn. 63, 20 Atl. 17.

The relators, although appointed to transact town affairs, are—six of them—not inhabitants of Glastonbury. They were not elected by the inhabitants of that town, nor has that town any control over their conduct. And from so much of the opinion as holds that the order of the relators is obligatory on that town through the town treasurer, I wholly dissent.

It would be admitted without dispute that it would be incompetent for the legislature to engage in the performance of the affairs of a private corporation by officers of its own appointment. The legislature chartered the New York, New Haven, & Hartford Railroad Company, and may alter or repeal that charter at pleasure. But the legislature cannot appoint a superintendent or a general manager of the affairs of that company without its consent, for whose acts or negligence the corporation should be liable. Such an appointment, if by any possibility the legislature should ever make one, would probably be held void as not being a legislative act. But if held valid it could only be on the ground that, as the legislature might put an entire end to the existence of that corporation, it could do the same thing by piecemeal or by indirection.

The difficulty with the appointment of these commissioners is not with the power of the legislature to establish agencies for the execution of governmental functions, nor with its power to provide for the maintenance of certain public highways through the state, as distinguished from municipal agencies, and for the cost of such maintenance by taxation of the inhabitants of those localities most directly interested in such maintenance. The real difficulty is with the power of the legislature, under the provisions of the state Constitution, to give the whole execution and control of duties and powers assigned to towns, to persons in whose selection the towns have no agency, direct or indirect, and over whose conduct they have no control.

It will be a surprising doctrine to the people of this state, even if only suggested, that the Constitution by the grant of legislative power has conferred on the legislature the authority to take from them the management of their local concerns and the choice of their own local officers. It would be hardly more surprising to them to be told that by adopting the Constitution they had granted to their own representatives the legal authority to take away their liberties altogether.

The building and repair of highways has always been one of the principal duties of a town. In Ludlow's Code of 1650 it was ordered that each town should every year choose one of its inhabitants as surveyor to take care of the highways, with power to call out the persons fit for labor for as many days as might be necessary to keep the same in repair. Subsequently the work was provided for by town taxation, and the oversight committed to the selectmen, who were specially charged with mending and repairing the bridges and roads used by the stage that carried the mails. From 1643 to the present time the duty and the corresponding powers in reference to the support of highways has been recognized as essentially a corporate duty belonging to the towns to be performed by town officers (New Haven v. Sargent, 38 Conn. 53, 9 Am. Rep. 360; Suffield v. Hathaway, 44 Conn. 521, 26 Am. Rep. 483); and it cannot now be maintained that such burden can be imposed on towns while all the powers necessary for their performance are committed to persons not officers or agents of the town, without holding that the inhabitants of the several towns may be held responsible to the whole extent of their property for the performance of every corporate duty, without the power of selecting or controlling the persons who are charged with the performance of such duties.

The legislature has appointed the relators, and has authorized them to perform a town duty respecting a highway. If the legislature may do this, it may appoint the same or other commissioners to perform any or all other town duties. There is no argument which will sustain the former which will not sustain the latter. And if this is the law,—that the legislature in this state may take to itself the entire and exclusive government of a town through officers of its own appointment,—then this judgment is correct; and if the legislature may not do so, then this judgment is erroneous. Stated broadly and nakedly, the question in this case can be nothing short of this: Is or is not town government in this state a mere privilege conceded by the legislature in its discretion, and one which may be withdrawn at any time at its pleasure? While the majority of the court do not assert so extreme a view, yet the argument of the majority opinion involves the theory of the existence in the legislature of this plenary and sovereign right. And unless such right exists that argument fails.

It is true that in some decisions the courts of this state have spoken of towns possessing no inherent, original, or reserved powers, but only such powers as have been delegated to them and which may be regulated and controlled by the legislature. It is from these expressions that the claim is made that towns are nothing but mere agencies which the state employs for the convenience of government, clothing them from time to time with a portion of its sovereignty, but recalling the whole or any part thereof whenever the necessity or the usefulness of the delegation is no longer apparent. In those cases where these expressions have been used they may not have been inappropriate. In none of them was the actual exercise by the legislature of any such power the subject of the decision. Such expressions, however, are very seldom true in anything more than a general sense. They never are, and in this state, never can be, literally accepted in practice. There are also cases the conclusion in which is not consistent with the existence in the legislature of the power claimed, and one in which the conclusion is antagonistic. Farrell v. Derby, 58 Conn. 234, 7 L. R. A. 776, 20 Atl. 460; Taylor v. Danbury Public Hall Co. 35 Conn. 430; Burlington v. Schwarzman, 52 Conn. 181, 52 Am. Rep. 571.

The people of this state, when they formed the present Constitution, found the whole of its territory occupied by those municipal corporations called towns, each embracing all the inhabitants of a certain portion of the territory. These corporations were governed by their own inhabitants in town meetings, and their affairs were managed by officers chosen by themselves, and who were always inhabitants of the town. And they provided in that instrument that the rights and duties of all corporations should remain as if the Constitution had not been adopted, except so far as therein restricted or limited. Art. 10, § 3. They also provided (art. 6) that electors should only be admitted from the inhabitants of a town and by the selectmen and town clerk. And by articles 3 and 4, that meetings by the electors for the choice of state officers should be held in the several towns and carried on by town officers. And by article 3, that the house of representatives should consist of representatives from each town, being electors and residents in that town, and that town representation should be substantially equal, and that no town should be abolished or deprived of its representation without its own consent. And by art. 10, § 2, that each town should annually elect selectmen and such other officers of local police as the laws may prescribe.

The relation of the towns in this state to the state government is different from that in other states. Prior to the adoption of the Constitution the state government consisted mainly of an assembly of delegates from the towns; and those towns had been uniformly treated as entitled to local self-government. While it could not be said that an act of that assembly vesting the functions of a town meeting or the duties of selectmen in a commission appointed by the assembly would be unconstitutional,—strictly there was in those days no constitution,—yet everyone familiar with our history knows that such an act would have been regarded as revolutionary, and that its passage was practically impossible.

This right of the inhabitants of a town to themselves order the municipal duties assigned to the town was plainly one of those "rights and privileges derived from their ancestors" which the Constitution was adopted "in order more effectually to define, secure, and perpetuate." By the several articles of the Constitution above mentioned, that instrument intended to make sufficient provisions to that end. It did guarantee the perpetual existence of the several towns, with selectmen to manage their local affairs, and a town clerk to record their doings at town meetings, although it left the variety and duties of the officers of the local police subject to legislative change.

In studying these parts of the Constitution we should always keep in mind that the terms used had a settled meaning before it was adopted. So far as it relates to the form of administration the Constitution is in the main no more than a recognition and re-enactment of an accepted system. The rights preserved are ancient rights, and the municipal bodies recognized in it and required to be perpetuated were already existing, with known elements and functions. And when the Constitution guarantees the perpetual continuance of towns it means towns with the same essential characteristics which towns at that time exercised; for if these essential characteristics do not remain, the town as known to the Constitution does not remain. It is the town as it then actually existed with which the Constitution deals.

Let us, then, ascertain what a town was as then existing. In that way only can we give to these provisions of the Constitution respecting towns their full and true effect. The form of words by which a town corporation was created sufficiently appears in a single instance. In the year 1779 Southington was incorporated, and the record, abbreviated, is that, "upon the memorial of the inhabitants of the Society of Southington by their agents shewing that . . . and praying to be incorporated into a distinct town . . . it was: Resolved by this Assembly that the memorialists (i. e., the inhabitants of the territory named) with all the lands lying within the following limits and bounds . . . be and the same are hereby incorporated into a distinct and separate town with all the powers and privileges that other towns by law have and do enjoy." 2 State Records, 429. For all the general purposes of municipal administration the state was divided only into towns. And what the town was as an actual living entity is shown by the statutes then in force. Statutes of 1808: Titles, Towns, Town Meetings, Town Clerk, Selectmen, and Highways. The towns were substantially the only territorial subdivisions used. Counties as municipal corporations or agencies did not exist. They were the mere territorial limits within which the jurisdiction of the county courts was exercised, and they were named and designated in connection with the establishment of such courts. 2 Col. Records, 35. And the courts administered the construction as well as the management of the jails and courthouses, as well as the other matters pertaining to the maintenance of such courts. Statutes 1808: Title, Gaols. Counties had no powers except such as were exercised by the courts and no officers except those appointed by the courts and a sheriff appointed by the general assembly. Towns are the only subdivision mentioned in the Constitution, save that the general assembly is required to appoint a sheriff in each county who shall serve for three years.

These statutes and rules respecting towns were a necessary result from the origin, formation, and history of the peculiar form of government in this state. In stating that history, in order to have it as connected as possible, some slight repetition will be made.

48 L. R. A.

In 1633-34 a strong dissent developed in some prevailing notions of government in the infant colony of Massachusetts Bay. The opposition was strongest in the towns of Dorchester, Newtown, and Watertown. In 1631 Watertown had protested against paying a tax assessed by the board of assistants on the ground that they could not be taxed, save by their own consent. All these towns were foremost in insisting on a general government based on town representation. From these three towns, induced largely by dissatisfaction with the ecclesiastical and centralizing views of the dominant party in the Bay, the pioneers of Connecticut came. By 1636 three towns or plantations were established in Connecticut, and were called Dorchester, Newtown, and Watertown, but shortly after called Windsor, Hartford, and Wethersfield. In March of that year the general court of Massachusetts named eight persons "to govern the people at Connecticut for the space of a year." At the end of that year the three towns on their own behalf appointed committees and magistrates who, as a general court, directed the affairs common to the three towns, and so until January 14, 1638-39. At this time the essential features of town government became fixed, and have never since been changed. They were: A town meeting composed of all the inhabitants exercising all power; an executive board for the general management of town affairs; and a constable for the service of the town warrants and the conduct of the necessary physical force,—all chosen by the town meeting.

The "Fundamental Orders," or Constitution of 1639, was a combination and confederation entered into by the inhabitants and residents of Windsor, Hartford, and Wethersfield, "to associate and conjoin ourselves to be as one public state or commonwealth," and to be "guided and governed in our civil affairs" according to such laws as shall be made in the manner provided. The Orders provided that each year there should be held two general courts composed of deputies from each town chosen by "all that are admitted inhabitants in the towns."

To said general courts was committed the supreme power of the commonwealth.—i. e., they only shall have power:—(1) To make and repeal laws; (2) To grant levies for the commonwealth; (3) To admit freemen only those already admitted inhabitants by the towns; (4) To dispose of lands undisposed of, not belonging to some particular town; (5) To discipline either towns or magistrates or any other person for any misdemeanor, and "to deal in any other matter that concerns the good of the commonwealth."

This power, exclusive and permissive, given to the general court, developed to the unlimited extent which afterwards characterized it—not so much from this (the tenth order) as from the eighth order, which provided that Windsor, Hartford, and Wethersfield should each have power to send four of their freemen as their deputies to every general court, "which deputies should have the power of the whole town to give their votes and allowance to all such laws and orders as may be for the public good and unto which the said towns are to be bound." The power which any one of said general courts might exercise was unlimited, but the power was that of the several towns exercised by its deputies for the purpose of binding the towns by all laws and orders made for the public good. For this purpose the inhabitants of the towns as self-governing bodies did "associate and conjoin themselves to be as one public state or commonwealth," and did "for ourselves and our successors,—i. e., inhabitants of each town,—and such as shall be adjointed to us at any time hereafter,—i. e., towns hereafter admitted,—enter into combination and confederation together" to be governed by such laws as are made in accordance with the fundamental orders; and as a further means by which each town might protect itself against unequal treatment by the confederacy the final order prohibits the levy of any tax on the towns unless the amount of the whole tax to be paid by each town is apportioned by a committee consisting of an equal number out of each town. Five years later Farmington was admitted and the order provided: "They also—the inhabitants—are to have the like liberties as the other towns upon the river for making orders among themselves." 1 Col. Records, 134.

About the same time Southampton on Long Island was admitted. Owing to its separation by the sound from the jurisdiction of Connecticut, and the greater difficulties of participating in the doings of the general court, as well as the doubt whether its inhabitants were included among those subject to the power of the original towns, a formal combination was negotiated by which the town of Southampton, as the then river towns had already done, did "by their said deputies for themselves and their successors associate and join themselves to the jurisdiction of Connecticut." 1 Col. Records, 566.

In 1662 fortified by the charter of Charles II. in their claim of jurisdiction, the general court admitted by simple vote the town of Southold. L. I., and the following year ordered that Southold "shall have and enjoy th same privileges as Southampton doth by virtue of their combination." 1 Col. Records, 386, 406.

The Fundamental Orders consummated the union of independent and self-governing bodies for the purposes of their own better government and of extending their jurisdiction. The combination provided for an exercise of power, limited only by the fact that the governing body could last but six months, and must consist of deputies from each town, clothed with the whole power of the town; but by the very terms of the combination each town must continue a self-governing body; and from that time on the power of local self-government was recognized as necessarily involved in the existence, as well of the original towns who had associated and conjoined themselves to be as one state, as of those described as such towns "as shall be adjointed to us at any time hereafter." The Fundamental Orders were adopted January 14, 1638-39. The first general court was held in May, 1639. The second in September. There was an adjourned meeting of this court held in October; and in this the existing self-governing power of the towns was recognized. "The towns of Hartford, Windsor, and Wethersfield, or any other of the towns within this jurisdiction, shall each of them have power to dispose of their own lands undisposed of, . . . as also to choose their own officers and make such orders as may be for the well ordering of their own towns, being not repugnant to any law here established." 1 Col. Records, 36. That this declaration was not regarded as a law necessary to give towns power not before possessed is certain, because if it were so, such law would have been passed at the first court held in the preceding May, which held several sessions, or the illegal acts previously passed by the towns would have been validated; because a law necessary to enable a town to exercise any power must have been approved in Ludlow's Code, adopted in 1650; and because if a law were necessary to enable towns to dispose of their own property it was equally necessary to have such a law to authorize them to establish and define the duties of their principal officers. Now, the office and duty of townsmen (not known as selectmen until 1691 or later) had been established in the several towns, with power defined, by a town vote prior to the adoption of the Fundamental Orders (Hartford Town Records, January 1, 1638-39); and these votes remained unchanged, except by town meetings, for many years afterwards. In fact, the towns after, as well as before, the "Constitution" of 1639 conducted by town meeting their own affairs and chose their own officers, and continued so to do until the Constitution of 1818; the only interruption being an edict of Sir Edmund Andros, during his brief usurpation, which strictly defined the duties of selectmen, and prohibited any town meeting except the necessary annual one for their choice. 3 Col. Records, 429.

In 1818 the town was a territorial and municipal corporation exercising the rights of local self-government through a town meeting and officers of its own choosing. It had existed with these rights from a time prior to the combination of the first towns under a joint jurisdiction. It had been continuously the main instrument by which all the operations of government were set in motion and carried on; and when the provisions of the Constitution speak of "towns" they speak of that kind of a municipal corporation whose character, rights, and privileges had been thus defined and settled for nearly two centuries.

After a struggle of more than thirty years the general assembly yielded to the general demand that the people have an opportunity to frame a Constitution for their own government; that is, embody in one fundamental plan "their supreme, original will, in respect to the organization and perpetuation of a state government; the division and distribution of its powers; the officers by whom those powers are to be exercised, and the limitation necessary to restrain the action of each and all for the preservation of the rights, liberties, and privileges of all . . . to which the legislature, as well as every other branch of the government, and every officer in the performance of his duties, must conform." Opinion of the Judges, 30 Conn. 593. For this purpose in May, 1818, a resolution was passed, recommending to the people to assemble in their respective towns, at their usual place of holding town meetings, and, having chosen their presiding officer, to elect as many delegates as said town now chooses representatives, to meet in convention in the following August, and when so convened, if by them deemed expedient, to "proceed to the formation of a Constitution of civil government for the people of this state." A copy of which Constitution when so formed was to be transmitted by said convention forthwith to each town clerk, to be by him submitted to the voters in his town, assembled at such time as said convention might designate for their approbation and ratification. Said Constitution, "when ratified and approved by such majority of said qualified voters convened as aforesaid as shall be directed by said convention, shall be and remain the supreme law of this state." Journal Const. Conv. p. 5. The committee which framed this resolution in their report say that "from resolutions adopted in many towns and petitions from . . . citizens in others" they can entertain no doubt of a general manifestation of a desire for "the establishment of a constitutional compact," and that the political happiness heretofore enjoyed "is to be ascribed to other causes rather than to any peculiar intrinsic excellence in the form and character of the government itself. Destitute of fundamental laws defining and limiting the powers of the legislature, the citizen has no security against encroachments on his most sacred rights and violations of the first principles of a free government, except what may be found in the dependence of that body on the frequency of popular elections. Yet even these boasted barriers against arbitrary power may at any time be prostrated by the legislative will." J. H. Trumbull's Notes on Const. Conn. 43.

Upon the ratification by a majority of the people of the state of the Constitution formed by the delegates from each town appointed for that purpose in town meetings, the former government by general assembly was finally and forever dissolved. The people in the exercise of their sovereignty established a new government in three separate and independent departments, whose powers were to be exercised, and exercised only, in accordance with their "supreme original will embodied in the Constitution." As declared in its preamble the main object in establishing this Constitution by the people was "in order more effectually to define, secure, and perpetuate the liberties, rights, and privileges which they have derived from their ancestors." This purpose was accomplished, first by the declaration of certain principles of free government which were made a fundamental condition on which all powers to each department of government were granted; and, second, by incorporating into the framework of the government established such provisions as were deemed apt and necessary to preserve the most essential of their ancient privileges. Among these the one cherished above all others was the right and privilege of local self-government as represented in the towns, the town meeting, and the town officers. The town was the germ from which all government in Connecticut has developed, and under the Constitution, as this court has recently said, "The annual town election is the single entrance to our whole system of state government." O'Flaherty v. Bridgeport, 64 Conn. 165, 29 Atl. 466. Through all its history it had played the most conspicuous part; with all the arbitrary power from time to time exercised by the general court, the ordering of town affairs through its own officers had never been disturbed. The suppression of the town meeting was associated with tyranny under the usurpation of Andros, and its maintenance was by common consent deemed both the source and protection of that sturdy independence and respect for law which had ever characterized our people. It was to be expected that when the delegates from the towns met in convention to form a constitution that should perpetuate their ancient rights and privileges a local self-government would not fail to be secured; and so we find this principle embodied in the whole framework of the new government.

When article 8 provides that electors should only be admitted from the inhabitants of a town and by the selectmen and town clerk of the several towns, the perpetual existence of the several towns, with an executive board to manage their affairs and a town clerk to record the doings at town meetings, is guaranteed. The same is true when article 3 prohibits any meeting of the electors for the choice of state officers except in the towns and when carried on only by town officers; and the same article in providing that the house of representatives should consist of representatives from each town, being electors residing in that town, and that town representation shall be substantially equal, and that no town should be abolished or deprived of its representation without its consent, not only established a legislative department where the people as corporators of town corporations are represented in the lower branch, and as individuals in the upper branch, but guaranteed the right and privilege in the inhabitants of each town to remain, so long as they will, a town corporation.

The legislature may regulate the conduct of the town corporations, may determine the local duties to be assigned to them,—and in that sense the towns derive their powers from the legislature,—but the possession of some local duties and powers, the administration of such duties by themselves or their own officers, is inherent in the town, which the Constitution makes the basis of the new government, and the legislature has no power to destroy this town. The Constitution assumes the existence of towns as local municipalities, and contemplates that they shall continue as they have hitherto been. It does not expressly provide that every portion of the state shall have a town organization. It names certain officers who are to be chosen by the inhabitants of the towns, and confers on the inhabitants the right to choose these officers, but it does not define their duties, nor preclude the legislature from establishing new offices and giving the incumbents the general management of the municipal affairs. If, therefore, there are no restraints imposed upon the legislative discretion beyond those specifically stated, the towns of this state might be abolished and their people subjected to the rule of commissioners appointed at the state capitol. The people of these towns might be kept in a sort of pupillage for any period of time or to any extent the legislature might choose. And it assumes either an intention that the legislative control should be constant and absolute, or, on the other hand, that there are certain fundamental principles in our general framework of government which were within the contemplation of the people when they agreed upon the Constitution, subject to which the delegation of authority to the several departments of government was made. That this last is the case appears too plain for serious controversy. The implied restrictions upon the power of the legislature as regards local governments, though their limits may not be as plainly defined as express provisions might have made them, are nevertheless equally imperative in character; and whenever a question arises that is clearly within them, there is no alternative but to bow to their authority.

Article 10, in providing that each town shall annually elect selectmen and such officers of local police as the laws may prescribe, guarantees the management of town affairs by town officers of their own choice. By directing the selectmen—the more modern name for the ancient townsmen, to whom had been committed the important affairs of the town since the first settlement of the river towns—to be elected by each town annually, the direction that all officers and agents of the town shall derive their appointment from the town is affirmed by an implication so absolute as not to be escaped; otherwise every officer and agent of the town except selectmen and the local police prescribed by law may be appointed by the legislature. The town clerk is certainly not a selectman; if he is an officer of local police he is not such an one “as the laws may prescribe.” His title comes directly from the Constitution. Yet no one would have the hardihood to claim that the next legislature may appoint every town clerk for a term of twenty years. The selectmen must be elected by the towns annually, because they are the ordinary and permanent agents of the town, and unless this provision means that all these agents must derive their authority from the town, then the legislature may direct that the town duties appertaining to selectmen, as well as every function of a town, shall be performed by special town agents to be appointed by the legislature. I do not understand the majority of the court to justify such legislation; plainly it would be void, but it would be void only because the Constitution in placing a town beyond the power of the legislature to destroy takes under its protection the right (without which the towns of the Constitution cease to be municipal corporations, and become something unknown to our laws) of self-government through its own officers and agents in all those matters included by law within its municipal powers and duties.

This right of local self-government is assured by the provisions of articles 3, 6, and 10 of the Constitution. It enters into the whole framework of the government. Because of its existence the continuance of the body of electors, the election of state officers, the constitution of the house of representatives, were made dependent on the towns and subject to the specific provisions mentioned. A guaranty so bulwarked should be more potent than any naked restriction. When the Bill of Rights forbids the taking of private property for public use without compensation it forbids the taking of such property for any but a public use, and the guaranty implied is not less sacred than the guaranty expressed.

When, therefore, the legislature had included within the municipal duties of Glastonbury and the four other towns named the maintenance of the highway described, it could not appoint the agents who on behalf of the town were to exercise those duties and powers. “The theory of the Constitution is that the several . . . towns . . . are of right entitled to choose whom they will have to rule over them; and that this right cannot be taken from them and the electors and inhabitants disfranchised by any act of the legislature, or of any or all of the departments of the state government combined.” People ex rel. Bolton v. Albertson, 55 N. Y. 56. “Local self-government having always been a part of the English and American systems we shall look for its recognition in any such instrument. And even if not expressly recognized, it is still to be understood that all these instruments are framed with its present existence and anticipated continuance in view.” Cooley Const. Lim. 6th ed. 47; People ex rel. Le Roy v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 103; People ex rel. Park Comrs. v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 228, 15 Am. Rep. 202; People ex rel. McCagg v. Chicago, 51 Ill. 17, 2 Am. Rep. 278. “The right of local self-government cannot be taken away because all our constitutions assume its continuance as an undoubted right of the people and as an incident to republican government.” Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 207. "In the examination of American constitutional law we shall not fail to notice the care taken and the means adopted to bring the agencies by which power is to be exercised as near as possible to the subjects upon which the power is to operate. In contradistinction to those governments where power is concentrated in one man, or one or more bodies of men, whose supervision and active control extend to all the objects of government within the territorial limits of the state, the American system is one of complete decentralization, the primary and vital idea of which is that local affairs shall be managed by local authorities and general affairs only by the central authority." Id., 233; Ordronaux, Const. Legislation, 62.

This opinion has been drawn out further than was intended. The question of local self-government as an ingredient essential to constitutional administration has been set forth so clearly in the language of Judge Cooley, in People ex rel. Le Roy v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 103, already cited, a case in which the legislature had undertaken to appoint commissioners to govern the city of Detroit, that I quote the passage in full. After reviewing the history of local and municipal government in various states he said: "In view of these historical facts and of these general principles the question recurs whether our state Constitution can be so construed as to confer upon the legislature the power to appoint for the municipalities the officers who are to manage the property, interests, and rights in which their own people alone are concerned. If it can be, it involves these consequences. As there is no provision requiring the legislative interference to be upon any general system, it can and may be partial and purely arbitrary. As there is nothing requiring the persons appointed to be citizens of the locality, they can and may be sent in from abroad, and it is not a remote possibility that self-government of towns may make way for a government by such influences as can force themselves upon the legislative notice at Lansing. As the municipal corporation will have no control, except such as the state may voluntarily give it, as regards the taxes to be levied, the buildings to be constructed, the pavements to be laid, and the conveniences to be supplied, it is inevitable that parties from mere personal considerations shall seek the offices and endeavor to secure from the appointing body, whose members in general are not to feel the burden, a compensation such as would not be awarded by the people who must bear it, though the chief tie binding them to the interests of the people governed might be the salaries paid on the one side and drawn on the other. As the legislature could not be compelled to regard the local political sentiment in their choice, and would in fact be most likely to interfere where that sentiment was adverse to their own, the government of cities might be taken to itself by the party for the time being in power, and municipal governments might easily and naturally become the spoils of party, as state and national offices unfortunately are now. All these things are not only possible, but entirely within the range of probability, if the positions assumed on behalf of the state are tenable. It may be said that these would be mere abuses of power, such as may creep in under any system of constitutional freedom; but what is constitutional freedom? Has the administration of equal laws by magistrates freely chosen no necessary place in it? Constitutional freedom certainly does not consist in exemption from governmental interference in the citizen's private affairs; in his being unmolested in his family, suffered to buy, sell, and enjoy property and generally to seek happiness in his own way. All this might be permitted by the most arbitrary ruler, even though he allowed his subjects no degree of political liberty. The government of an oligarchy may be as just, as regardful of private rights, and as little burdensome as any other; but if it were sought to establish such a government over our cities by law it would hardly do to call upon a protesting people to show where in the Constitution the power to establish it was prohibited; it would be necessary, on the other hand, to point out to them where and by what ungarded words the power had been conferred. Some things are too plain to be written. If this charter of state government which we call a constitution were all there was of constitutional command; if the usages, the customs, the maxims that have sprung from the habits of life, modes of thought, methods of trying facts by the neighborhood, and mutual responsibility in neighborhood interests; the precepts which have come from the revolutions which overturned tyrannies; the sentiments of manly independence and self-control which impelled our ancestors to summon the local community to redress local evils, instead of relying upon king or legislature at a distance to do so,—if a recognition of all these were to be stricken from the body of our constitutional law a lifeless skeleton might remain, but the living spirit; that which gives it force and attraction; which makes it valuable and draws to it the affections of the people; that which distinguishes it from the numberless constitutions so-called which in Europe have been set up and thrown down within the last hundred years, many of which in their expressions have seemed equally fair and to possess equal promise with ours, and have only been wanting in the support and vitality which these alone can give,—this living and breathing spirit which supplies the interpretation of the words of the written charter would be utterly lost and gone.

"Mr. Justice Story has well shown that constitutional freedom means something more than liberty permitted; it consists in the civil and political rights which are absolutely guaranteed, assured, and guarded in one's liberties as a man and a citizen; his right to vote, his right to hold office, his right to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience; his equality with all others who are his fellow citizens;

all these guarded and protected and not held at the mercy and discretion of any one man or of any popular majority. Story, Miscellaneous Writings, 620. If these are not now the absolute right of the people of Michigan [this state] they may be allowed more liberty of action and more privileges, but they are little nearer to constitutional freedom than Europe was when an imperial city sent out consuls to govern it. The men who framed our institutions have not so understood the facts. With them it has been an axiom that our system was one of checks and balances; that each department of the government was a check upon the others, and each grade of government upon the rest; and they have never questioned or doubted that the corporations in each municipality were exercising their franchises under the protection of certain fundamental principles which no power in the state could override or disregard. The state may mould local institutions according to its views of policy or expediency; but local government is matter of absolute right, and the state cannot take it away. It would be the boldest mockery to speak of a city as possessing municipal liberty, where the state not only shaped its government, but at discretion sent in its own agents to administer it; or to call that system one of constitutional freedom under which it should be equally admissible to allow the people full control of their local affairs or no control at all."

In this state we are not obliged to invoke the underlying principle of American constitutional law in order to protect the inhabitants of our towns in their right to local self-government; the express provisions and necessary implications of our own Constitution plainly guarantee that right. Therefore, the private act by which the legislature undertook to appoint these relators to execute the powers and perform the duties committed by the public act to the town of Glastonbury and the four other towns as town corporations violates a clear mandate of the Constitution, and to that extent is void.

I think there is error in the judgment of the superior court.

Hamersley, J., dissenting:

I dissent from the decision of a majority of my colleagues, and cannot but believe that a different conclusion would have been reached had it seemed to them as clear as it seems to me that the legislation in question necessarily involves the appointment of the relators by the legislature, not as state officers, but as town officers; not to perform duties directly in behalf of the state, but duties by the very terms of the statute assigned to the towns as the local municipal duties of a town corporation.

I dissent from the opinion as announced by Judge Baldwin, and concur in the opinion of Chief Justice Andrews.

The decision in this case was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States under the name of Williams v. Eggleston, in 170 U. S. 304, 42 L. ed. 1047, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, FOURTH CIRCUIT.

W. T. WALTERS et al.

v.

CHARLESTON MILLS et al.

John H. MONTGOMERY et al., Petitioners, Appts.,

v.

City of CHARLESTON et al., Respts.

(99 Fed. Rep. 825.)

1. A purchaser of land of a corporation on foreclosure, who, before the sale is approved or he has complied with his bid, voluntarily pays a claim for taxes, without knowledge of any dispute as to its validity, and is denied credit therefor when completing his purchase, may be subrogated to the claim for such part of the taxes as the property was clearly subject to; but the court will not require a receiver of the property to recognize such voluntary payment of that part of the taxes which was in dispute, or to assume the burden and responsibility of litigation upon it.

NOTE.—For subrogation to lien for taxes in case of foreclosure of mortgage, see also Ran-kin v. Coar (N. J.) 11 L. R. A. 661.

For subrogation of persons paying tax, see, in general, note to Bibbins v. Clark (Iowa) 29 L. R. A. on page 282; also Ferguson v. Quinn (Tenn.) 33 L. R. A. 688; and Mercantile Trust Co. v. Hart (C. C. App. 8th C.) 35 L. R. A. 352.

48 L. R. A.

2. A purchaser at a sale under foreclosure is not such a party to the suit as to entitle him to bring in a new party or to raise new issues, although he becomes subject to the jurisdiction of the court for all orders necessary to compel the perfecting of his purchase, with the right to be heard upon all questions thereafter arising which affect his bid and are not foreclosed by the terms of the decree of sale, or are expressly reserved to him by such decree.

(Waddill, District Judge, dissents.)

(February 6, 1900.)

A PPEAL by intervening petitioners from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of South Carolina refusing to return to a petitioner money paid by him as taxes upon property which he had purchased at a sale in a suit for foreclosure of a mortgage thereon. Modified.

Before Simonton, Circuit Judge, and Paul and Waddill, District Judges.

Statement by Simonton, Circuit Judge:
This case comes up on appeal from the circuit court of the United States for the district of South Carolina. In order to a complete understanding of the case, it is necessary to state the facts somewhat in detail:

On 8th February, 1888, there was incorporated the Charleston Cotton Mills, a corporation organized for the purpose of manufacturing cotton cloth in the city of Charleston, South Carolina. It erected a mill building on its lands, and owned real estate adjacent thereto, on which were a cotton warehouse and residences for its operatives. In March, 1896, it became embarrassed, ceased operations, and finally, under decrees for foreclosure, its property was sold under two mortgages executed by it,—the one to secure certain bondholders, and the other to secure a debt due to O. H. Sampson & Co. O. H. Sampson & Co. purchased the parcel of realty mortgaged to them. The bondholders through a committee purchased the mill site, buildings, and machinery. On 6th April, 1897, the Charleston Mills was incorporated under a general law, composed of the bondholders of the Charleston Cotton Mills and new stockholders. To this corporation the committee of bondholders conveyed all the property purchased by them under the foreclosure proceedings. The new company expended large sums of money in providing new machinery and repairing that purchased at the sale, and engaged in the business of manufacturing cotton goods.

The Constitution of South Carolina adopted 4th December, 1895, authorized cities and towns to exempt from all taxes, except those for school purposes, manufactories established within their limits; the exemption to be for five years; the exempting ordinance to be ratified by a majority of the qualified electors of the municipality. Article 8, § 8. In 1896 the city council of Charleston, under this authority, passed an ordinance exempting for five years from taxation, except for school purposes, all manufactories established after the ratification of this ordinance by the qualified voters of Charleston, within the corporate limits of said city, and doing business therein, employing ten hands, and having a paid-up capital of $10,000, with this proviso: "Provided, however, that should any manufactory entitled under this ordinance to such exemption from taxes fail in business, and be reorganized or convey its plant and property to another person, firm, or new company or corporation, the exemption of said plant or property shall be continued or extended for the five years from the original establishment of said manufactory, and no longer." This ordinance was ratified by popular vote on the 4th Tuesday in April, 1896.

The Charleston Mills set up a claim for exemption under this ordinance, and so notified the city authorities. On 19th November, 1898, pending this claim for exemption on the part of the Charleston Cotton Mills, Walters and others filed their bill for foreclosure in the circuit court of the United States for the district of South Carolina against the Charleston Mills, praying sale and foreclosure of its property; and under it C. O.

Witte, Esq., was appointed receiver. On 13th December, 1898, the city council of Charleston filed its petition in the cause, setting forth that the Charleston Mills was indebted to it for municipal taxes in the sum of $3,356.52, and that they were unpaid, and, recognizing that the property of its debtor was in the hands of a receiver of that court, and so out of reach of an execution, prayed that provision be made for these taxes out of the first moneys coming into the hands of the receiver. After that an order for the sale of the property under a decree for foreclosure was had. The property was sold for $100,000, and was bid in by John H. Montgomery for himself and others, who organized themselves into a corporation in due form of law, under the name of the Vesta Mills. Before he complied with his bid,—indeed, the day after the sale,—Mr. Montgomery paid the state and county taxes due upon the property of the Charleston Mills, and also paid, without protest or exception, the amount of the taxes claimed by the city council of Charleston, and took full acquittance and discharge therefor. When he was ready to comply with his bid, he produced the receipted tax bill for state and county purposes, and asked the special master that it be received as so much cash. This was assented to. He then produced the tax receipt of the city council, and made a similar request. This was refused, the special master (knowing that the claim was disputed) not feeling himself authorized so to receive it without the decision and order of the court. Thereupon it was agreed between them that the matter be brought before the court. Accordingly Mr. Montgomery and the Vesta Mills filed their petition in the cause, setting forth the matters above stated; "that Mr. Montgomery now has been informed that the liability of the property of the Charleston Mills to general municipal taxes is denied;" that, wholly ignorant of this, on the day the property was sold he paid the city taxes upon it, securing thereby a remission of all penalties, and also in order to anticipate a levy on the property under execution; that, having so paid this tax, he sought credit therefor in completing the terms of sale, and that the special master declined to recognize the payment of the taxes made to the city; "that thereafter your petitioners arranged with the said special master to pay into his hands the purchase money for the property bought at said sale, including the amount of the city taxes aforesaid (the said special master not feeling himself authorized to allow such reduction without the decision and order of the court); but that it was at the same time agreed that the said matter of the city taxes should be forthwith brought to the attention of the court in this case, so that the said court could decide whether or not the city taxes were by law due and payable and a lien upon the property of the Charleston Mills, and that if the said taxes were decided by the said court to have been so due and payable, and a lien as claimed, then the said amount should be refunded to your petitioners by the special master, as having been already paid on account of the purchase money; but that, if the said court should decide that the taxes were not due and payable, then, by proper order of this court, the city council of Charleston should be directed, after proper hearing and adjudication, to refund and repay into the registry of this court the amount of city taxes paid to it by the said John H. Montgomery, to wit, the sum of $3,076.02." The petition prayed that a copy of it be served on the city council of Charleston and on C. O. Witte, special master, and that the court would afford relief. The city council of Charleston answered the complaint, stating, in effect, that the tax on the Charleston Mills was due and unpaid, and that execution had been issued therefor in the sum of $3,356.52; that it was stayed by the proceedings in the circuit court, and that petition had been filed for its payment under the order of court; that afterwards Mr. Montgomery paid the sum of $3,076.02, and obtained a receipt in full; "that the said payment was made freely and voluntarily, and for the purpose of obtaining remission of the penalties." The answer denies in toto the exemption claimed for the Charleston Mills, and adds that this honorable court has no jurisdiction to adjudicate the matters set forth in said petition, as between John H. Montgomery and the said city, for the reason that it is simply an attempt on the part of the said John H. Montgomery to recover money from the city council of Charleston in a matter entirely foreign and outside of the purpose and purport of the bill filed herein. The answer of the special master admits the offer of Mr. Montgomery to deduct the amount paid to the city, and insists that the Charleston Mills are exempt from taxation.

The matters set out in the petition and answers, with testimony, were heard by the circuit court. The court was of the opinion that the city council of Charleston, having received satisfaction in pais, was no longer a party to the controversy, and declined, under these circumstances, to pass upon the validity of the exemption. To this action on the part of the court, exception was taken, an appeal was allowed, and the cause is here on several assignments of error directed to the reasons given by the court for its action, and ending with the following: "Because his honor should have held that the city taxes were a lien on the property purchased, legally, and payable by the seller, and that under the law, and in accordance with the agreement made at the time of settlement with the receiver and special master, referred to and set out in the record, the portion of said purchase money so paid twice—to wit, the sum of $3,076.02, by the purchaser—should be repaid him; it being against the law and equity and good conscience to have such sum retained by said special master and receiver."

Messrs. Smythe, Lee, & Frost, for appellants:

The petitioners were the purchasers, under the decree of the court, of property sold by its receiver under its decree. The purchaser thus became a quasi-party to the proceedings, with the right to bring his suit in the main cause, and prosecute his rights against all parties to the said cause.

2 Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. p. 1052, note 5; Gordon v. Saunders, 2 M'Cord Eq. 165; Dunham v. Minard, 4 Paige, 441; Dorsey v. Campbell, 1 Bland Ch. 363; 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 229.

The original bill in the main cause was a creditor's bill. An order had been filed directing creditors to come in and prove their claims. In accordance with this order the city council of Charleston filed its intervening petition setting up its lien for taxes.

By this act the city council of Charleston became a party to the case.

Hack v. Chicago & G. S. R. Co. 23 Fed. Rep. 356; Ex parte Jordan, 94 U. S. 248, 24 L. ed. 123; Wright v. Herlong, 16 S. C. 620; Wardlaw v. Erskine, 21 S. C. 361; Gee v. Humphries, 49 S. C. 256, 27 S. E. 101; Bethia v. McKay, Cheves, Eq. 97; 2 Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. p. 1212; Chesnut v. Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 2 Hill, Eq. 84.

The receiver and special master appointed by the court had a perfect right to expect instruction from the court.

Gluck, Receivers, § 45, p. 130; Cammack v. Johnson, 2 N. J. Eq. 163; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Texas & P. R. Co. 31 Fed. Rep. 862, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 434.

The city council of Charleston had not the right to withdraw its petition, and thus retire from the case.

An order dismissing the pleading will not be granted, if such dismissal will be injurious to the rights of the other parties to the case.

Bethia v. McKay, Cheves, Eq. 93; 1 Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. p. 790, and note, p. 793; Bank of the State v. Rose, 1 Rich. Eq. 292; Foster, Fed. Pr. p. 434.

The court can construe the ordinance, even if the city is not a party.

De Treville v. Smalls, 98 U. S. 517, 25 L. ed. 174; Sherry v. McKinley, 99 U. S. 498, 25 L. ed. 330; Van Brocklin v. Tennessee, 117 U. S. 179, sub nom. Van Brocklin v. Anderson, 29 L. ed. 854, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 670; Philadelphia Asso. for Relief of Disabled Firemen v. Wood, 39 Pa. 73; Denegre v. Gerac, 35 La. Ann. 952; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 731; Sharp v. Speir, 4 Hill, 76; Beaty v. Knowler, 4 Pet. 152, 7 L. ed. 813; Conway v. Cable, 37 Ill. 82, 87 Am. Dec. 240; Thompson v. Roe, ex dem. Carroll, 22 How. 422, 16 L. ed. 387.

Money paid by a person to prevent an illegal seizure of his person or property by an officer claiming authority to seize the same, or to liberate his person or property from illegal detention by such officer, may be recovered back in an action for money had and received, on the ground that the payment was compulsory or by duress or extortion.

Lamborn v. Dickinson County Comrs. 97 U. S. 185, 24 L. ed. 928; Union P. R. Co. v. Dodge County Comrs. 98 U. S. 543, 25 L. ed. 197; Little v. Bowers, 134 U. S. 547, 33

L. ed. 1016, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 620; Torbitt v. Louisville (Ky.) 4 S. W. 345; Louisville v. Anderson, 79 Ky. 334, 42 Am. Rep. 220; Murray v. Moorer, Cheves, L. 113; Hopkins v. Mazzyck, 1 Hill, Eq. 251; Loundes v. Chisolm, 2 M'Cord, Eq. 455, 16 Am. Dec. 667; Broun v. Boyce, 4 Rich. L. 385; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 469; Ætna Ins. Co. v. New York, 153 N. Y. 340, 47 N. E. 593.

When it is contrary to the rule of ex æquo et bono, that the city should retain the money illegally collected, the court will order its return.

Culbreath v. Culbreath, 7 Ga. 67, 50 Am. Dec. 378; Stotsenburg v. Fordice, 142 Ind. 490, 41 N. E. 313, 810; Lawrence v. Beau-bien, 2 Bail. L. 647, 23 Am. Dec. 155; Galveston v. Sydnor, 39 Tex. 236.

Money paid under a mistake of fact can be collected back again.

Glenn v. Shannon, 12 S. C. 572.

The ordinance in this case was an ordinance of the city of Charleston, of which Mr. Montgomery, a citizen of the city of Spartanburg, could not be presumed to have knowledge.

2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 854; Haven v. Foster, 9 Pick. 112, 19 Am. Dec. 357.

Mr. Montgomery was acting, not for himself, but as agent for other parties who afterwards organized the Vesta Mills. As such agent he had no authority to pay an illegal tax, and, even assuming that Mr. Montgomery had knowledge, which he did not, the principals for whom he acted were not chargeable with that knowledge, and the payment cannot be considered as a voluntary payment by them.

Ætna Ins. Co. v. New York, 153 N. Y. 341, 47 N. E. 593.

Mr. W. A. Holman, with Mr. George S. Legare, for appellee City Council of Charleston:

The city council of Charleston was not a party to the original proceedings, and only came into the case by filing its petition praying that funds arising from the sale of the property of the Charleston Mills be applied first to the satisfaction of its claim for taxes. The property of the Charleston Mills then being in custodia legis, the city could not enforce its execution for taxes against such property, and it was therefore proper that the city council should file its petition addressed to the court, praying that its claim for taxes be recognized and declared a first lien, and be paid accordingly.

Montgomery paid the taxes due as claimed by the said city council of Charleston. The object and purpose of the petition filed by the city council of Charleston was thus fully met when said taxes were paid, and there was nothing upon which the court could make any adjudication in respect to the matter, and this ended the whole case in so far as the city council of Charleston was involved or concerned, and terminated its connection therewith.

Shipp v. Williams, 22 U. S. App. 380, 62 Fed. Rep. 4, 10 C. C. A. 247; Wetherby v. Stinson, 18 U. S. App. 714, 62 Fed. Rep. 173, 10 C. C. A. 243.
48 L. R. A.

An action will not lie to recover the amount of taxes illegally assessed and voluntarily paid.

Dunnell Mfg. Co. v. Newell, 15 R. I. 233, 2 Atl. 766; Louisville v. Anderson, 79 Ky. 334; California v. San Pablo & T. R. Co. 149 U. S. 308, 37 L. ed. 747, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 876.

When the taxes were paid to the city by the appellant, John H. Montgomery, there was no substantial controversy between any of the parties in so far as the city was concerned; and this court will not now pass upon or consider the validity of the law under which such assessment was made, or whether the Charleston Mills was liable therefor.

California v. San Pablo & T. R. Co. 149 U. S. 308, 37 L. ed. 747, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 876.

Where a tax is paid voluntarily and without protest, the same cannot be recovered back under any circumstances, whether the law under which such tax is collected is legal or illegal.

Peebles v. Pittsburgh, 101 Pa. 304, 47 Am. Rep. 714; Bucknall v. Story, 46 Cal. 589, 13 Am. Rep. 220; Phelps v. New York, 2 L. R. A. 626, 112 N. Y. 216, 19 N. E. 408; 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 220; Little v. Bowers, 134 U. S. 547, 33 L. ed. 1016, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 620.

Mr. Henry A. M. Smith, also for appellees:

A mere volunteer is not favorably regarded in equity. The assistance of the court is very reluctantly given him.

Fonblanque, Eq. 349; Jefferys v. Jefferys, Craig & P. 141.

One of the principles lying at the foundation of subrogation in equity is that the person seeking subrogation must have paid the debt under some necessity to save himself from loss which might arise or accrue to him by the enforcement of the debt in the hands of the original creditor.

Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Middleport, 124 U. S. 534, 31 L. ed. 537, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625; Sheldon, Subrogation, § 240; Gadsden v. Brown, Speers, Eq. 41; Hedges v. Dixon County, 150 U. S. 191, 37 L. ed. 1048, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 71; Prairie State Bank v. United States, 164 U. S. 231, 41 L. ed. 416, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 142; McNeil v. Miller, 29 W. Va. 480, 2 S. E. 335; Suppiger v. Garrels, 20 Ill. App. 625.

Mr. J. N. Nathans for Charleston Mills et al.

Simonton, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

In discussing this case, these facts must be kept in mind: That under the Walters bill the property of the Charleston Mills had been put into the hands of a receiver, and, under an order of the court, had been sold. That pending the suit the city council of Charleston had presented its claim for the tax of 1898, and had prayed that it be paid out of funds in the hands of the receiver. That anterior to the suit the Charleston Mills had set up its claim to exemption from the tax. That the petitioner, John H. Montgomery, was the highest bidder at the sale. That the day after the sale he paid to the city the sum of $3,076.02 in full of its claim against the Charleston Mills. That, in settlement of his bid, Mr. Montgomery demanded credit for this payment, which demand the special master did not recognize, and refused to admit, except under the instruction of the court. Thereupon John H. Montgomery and the Vesta Mills, a corporation for which he had been acting, filed their petition praying that the court pass upon the validity of the tax, and, if it be declared valid, that the money paid by Montgomery on account thereof be refunded to him out of the purchase money, and, if it be declared invalid, that the city council be instructed to return it to him.

If the tax be valid, he, in effect, claims the equity of subrogation; that is, having paid the tax, he stands in the place of the city council, and is entitled to the money paid to it. He was under no obligation whatever to pay the tax, nor was any proceeding threatened against the property of which he was the prospective owner. The city council had already submitted itself to the court, and had asked that it be paid out of funds in the control of the court; in effect transferring its claim from the property to these funds. Its hand was stayed, and any attempt by execution to collect its claim would have been in contempt of court. Re Tyler, 149 U. S. 164, 37 L. ed. 689, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 785. Mr. Montgomery was not bound to pay the tax, and he had an unquestionable right to demand that it be satisfied before complying with his bid.

In Gadsden v. Brown, Speers, Eq. 37, David Johnson, Chancellor, lays down the law of subrogation, and his language has received the unqualified approval of the Supreme Court of the United States in Hedges v. Dixon County, 150 U. S. 191, 37 L. ed. 1044, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 71; and in Prairie State Bank v. United States, 164 U. S. 231, 41 L. ed. 416, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 142. "The doctrine of subrogation," says the chancellor, "is a pure, unmixed equity, having its foundation in the principles of natural justice, and, from its nature, never could have been intended for the relief of those who were in a condition in which they were at liberty to elect whether they would or would not be bound."

In Etna L. Ins. Co. v. Middleport, 124 U. S. 534, 31 L. ed. 537, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625, the Supreme Court says: "One of the principles lying at the foundation of subrogation in equity, in addition to the one already stated, that the person seeking this subrogation must have paid the debt, is that he must have done this under some necessity to save himself from loss which might arise or accrue to him by the enforcement of the debt in the hands of the original creditor." The same case adopts this language of Sheldon, Subrogation, § 240: "The doctrine of subrogation is not applied for the mere stranger or volunteer who has paid the debt of another, without any assignment or agreement for subrogation, without being under any legal obligation to make the payment, and without being compelled to do so for the preservation of any rights or property of his own." And in Suppiger v. Garrels, 20 Ill. App. 625, it is said: "A stranger, within the meaning of this rule, is not necessarily one who has nothing to do with the transaction out of which the debt grew. Anyone who is under no legal obligation or liability to pay the debt is a stranger, and, if he pays the debt, a mere volunteer."

A mere volunteer is not favorably regarded in equity. Fonblanque, Equity, 349. Volenti non fit injuria. Apart from this, the creditors of the Charleston Mills, to whom the proceeds of sale belong, and who must suffer by any diminution of them, repudiate the act of Mr. Montgomery, and deny all liability for the tax. Nor is this position without plausibility. The Constitution of South Carolina of 1895 gave authority to municipalities to grant exemption from taxation to manufacturers for five years, upon certain conditions. The city council of Charleston fulfilled these conditions, and by ordinance exempted from taxation all manufactories established after the 4th Tuesday in April, 1896, within the corporate limits of said city, and doing business therein, employing ten or more hands, and having a paid-up capital of $10,000. The Charleston Mills, having over $50,000 capital, and employing more than ten hands, was established April 6, 1897, within the corporate limits of Charleston, and doing business therein, and thus may be said to come within the words of the ordinance, and would be entitled to the exemption, unless precluded by the proviso. This proviso is in these words: "Should any manufactory entitled under this ordinance to such exemption from taxes fail in business, and be reorganized or convey its plant and property to another person, firm, or a new company or corporation, the exemption of said plant or property shall be continued or extended for the five years from the original establishment of said manufactory, and no longer."

The mill and a large part of the plant owned by the Charleston Mills were formerly the property of the Charleston Cotton Mills, which failed, was put up for sale, and its mill house and plant were purchased by persons who subsequently formed the Charleston Mills. But the Charleston Cotton Mills was incorporated and established February 8, 1888,—anterior to the constitutional provision, and anterior to the ordinance of 1896. It therefore can, with much plausibility, be said not to have been one of the manufactories referred to in the proviso of the ordinance, as it was not a manufactory entitled under the ordinance of 1896 to such exemption from taxes, and so the Charleston Mills may not be affected by that proviso. Under these circumstances the creditors may well complain of the action of John H. Montgomery, and, as far as they can, repudiate the same. There can exist here no equity of subrogation.

The petitioner again sets up an equity of mistake. He knew nothing of the claim of exemption set up by the Charleston Mills, nor had he any knowledge of the petition of the city council in the main cause. There is no question that a court of equity will relieve a party from the consequences of a mistake of fact,—sometimes of a mistake of law, if the matter be executory. But it will grant such relief only when the mistake is mutual, material, and not caused by the negligence of the party seeking relief. Foster, Fed. Pr. § 2. Mr. Story, in his Equity Jurisprudence, vol. 1, § 146, says: "It is not, however, sufficient in all cases, to give the party relief, that the fact is material, but it must be such as he could not, by reasonable diligence, get knowledge of when he was put on inquiry; for if, by such reasonable diligence, he could have obtained knowledge of the fact, equity will not relieve him, since that would be to encourage culpable negligence. Thus, if a party has lost his cause at law from the want of proof of a fact which by ordinary diligence he could have obtained, he is not relievable in equity; for the general rule is that if a party becomes remediless at law by his own negligence, equity will not relieve him."

In the case at bar Mr. Montgomery, before the sale was approved, before he had complied with his bid, and, under the rules of the court, before he could comply, paid off this claim. A question to his counsel would have informed him of the course taken by the city council in applying to the court for its claim. A question put to the special master selling the property would have put him in the possession of the fact that the claim of the city was denied. The fact that he was a stranger in the community, with no opportunity theretofore of knowing the laws of the municipality, should have put him doubly upon his guard, and have induced inquiry before action. Instead of this, consulting no one, asking no question, relying upon his own knowledge, he paid off a claim, not his own or which could affect him, anticipated and forestalled the action of the court, and, in so far as lay in his power, decided the controversy of the creditors with the city against them. The petitioner cannot set up this equity. Nor can he, under it, obtain relief from the city council. Asking no questions, making no protest, threatened with no proceedings, of his own motion he paid this sum in full of the tax.

In Little v. Bowers, 134 U. S. 548, 33 L. ed. 1016, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 620, there had been a controversy between the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey and the city of Elizabeth relative to its taxes. The decisions of the courts of New Jersey were against the railroad company, and by writ of error the case was carried to the supreme court. Pending the writ of error the taxes in dispute were paid. This ended the case, notwithstanding that the appellants insisted that there was no right to the tax in the city of Elizabeth. In that case the Supreme Court quote with approval the language of Chief Justice Shaw in Preston v. Boston, 12 Pick. 7: "Where, therefore, a party not liable to taxation is called on peremptorily to pay upon such a warrant, and he can save himself and his property in no other way than by paying the illegal demand, he may give notice that he so pays it by duress, and not voluntarily, and, by showing that he is not liable, recover it back as money had and received." But, say the court, this rule does not apply when no attempt has been made by the treasurer to serve his warrant, no demand personally made on the company, nothing done to show an intent to use the legal process; when all that appears is that the company was charged with the tax on the tax list; that it was delinquent; that, before any active steps were taken to enforce collection, the company presented itself at the treasurer's office, and, in the usual course of business, paid in full everything against it, under protest.

In Robinson v. Charleston, 2 Rich. L. 319, 45 Am. Dec. 739, the plaintiff had been called upon to pay, and had paid, a tax imposed by the city council of Charleston, which the court, in Charleston v. State ex rel. Adger, 2 Speers, L. 719, had decided unlawful. He brought his action to recover it back. It was dismissed. Says the court: "In the case under consideration, the plaintiff paid his money without objection or reservation. He could have tendered the sum really demandable, and have gone on and submitted to legal proceedings against him, and in such proceedings he must have succeeded. . . . In waiving his legal right, he may be regarded as having voluntarily given so much money to the city council for the privilege of letting his slaves work in the city without molestation. Like many others who have not complained, he may not have thought the tax wrong at the time, and may have regarded it . . . as the price of protection and profitable employment." In Peebles v. Pittsburgh, 101 Pa. 304, 47 Am. Rep. 714, it was held that an assessment for municipal improvements, voluntarily paid, cannot be recovered back, although the payment was under protest and the law authorizing the assessment was subsequently adjudged unconstitutional. Many cases are cited in the opinion.

The petitioner cannot rely upon his want of knowledge. The means of knowledge were within his touch. He sought none, used none. His own ignorance suggested inquiry. This cannot avail him. Under these circumstances the court below refused to entertain the petition. It was of the opinion that the city council of Charleston was not properly a party to the petition. But, even admitting that it was a party, how could the court pass upon the question of the validity or invalidity of this tax, when the action of the petitioner precluded absolutely any question? The creditors and the corporation wished the question decided. At the threshold the court was met by the fact that a decision was unnecessary, and could not be made, as the tax was already paid. California v. San Pablo & T. R. Co. 149 U. S. 308, 37 L. ed. 747, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 876; Little v. Bowers, 134 U. S. 558, 33 L. ed. 1016, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 620.

Exception was taken and error assigned to the ruling of the circuit court that the city council was not a party before it. When the main case was pending, the city council, pursuing the course most advisable under the circumstances, intervened in the cause, and presented its petition that the tax claimed by it be paid by the receiver. The only means of paying the tax was out of the proceeds of sale. Before this petition was answered, before it could be heard, before the only funds out of which it could be paid (the proceeds of sale) were realized, Mr. Montgomery forestalled the action of the court, and paid the tax, satisfying the claim of the city. Thenceforward there was no controversy. There was nothing upon which the petition or the court could operate, and the whole thing fell to the ground. San Mateo County v. Southern P. R. Co. 116 U. S. 141, 29 L. ed. 591, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 317; Kimball v. Kimball, 174 U. S. 163, 43 L. ed. 934, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 639. The sole purpose of the intervention was accomplished, and the connection of the city council with the case, due solely to this intervention, ceased. When, therefore, the present petitioner filed his petition the city council was practically out of the court; and he endeavored to bring it in again, not upon an issue necessarily or incidentally arising out of the main case and the issues there involved, but to protect himself from an improvident act on his part. A purchaser at a sale under foreclosure is not a party to the suit for all intents and purposes. By his bid he makes himself a party to the proceedings, and subject to the jurisdiction of the court for all orders necessary to compel the perfecting of his purchase, and with a right to be heard on all questions thereafter arising affecting his bid, which are not foreclosed by the terms of the decree of sale, or are expressly reserved to him by such decree. Kneeland v. American Loan & T. Co. 136 U. S. 95, 34 L. ed. 379, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 950. But this does not authorize him to bring in a new party, or to raise new issues.

The court below, having reached the conclusion that the city council was not a party to the suit, declined to pass upon the question of the validity of the exemption claimed by the Charleston Mills, in the absence of the city council. This is assigned as error. That the appellant considered the city council a necessary party is shown by his seeking to make it a party. By his prayer he demonstrated the necessity. He sought reimbursement for his outlay in paying this tax,—from the receiver if the claim for exemption was invalid, and from the city council if the claim for exemption was valid. Indeed, under the well-known principle of equity “that a court of chancery will not make a decree unless all those who are substantially interested be made parties to the suit” (Osborn v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat. 842, 6 L. ed. 204), the city council was a necessary party. It is said, however, that it was competent for the court to go on and decide this question, as between the receiver and Mr. Montgomery, without the presence of the city. Cases are cited in 43 L. R. A.

which a course like this was pursued. Thus, courts frequently pass upon the validity of acts of the legislature, and construe acts whose validity is not disputed, in questions between citizen and citizen, without requiring or deeming it necessary to make the state a party. This is perfectly true, and the rule exists because of the impossibility of making the state a party without imperiling the jurisdiction of the court. See Osborn v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat. 842, 6 L. ed. 204. In cases arising under tax titles from municipalities, the municipality has no interest in the result of the action; for its interest had ceased, and the purchaser had taken under the rule of caveat emptor. But in the present case there is no question of the invalidity of the ordinance. The question made is one in which the city council had a direct, immediate pecuniary interest involving the right to $3,076.02. One of the alternatives relied on by the petitioner is that, when he paid the money to the city sheriff, it was a gratuitous act; that the money was received in violation of the contract of exemption made by the city with the Charleston Mills, under which the former exempted the latter from taxation for five years; that under these circumstances, ex æquo et bono, the city must return it. The other alternative is that there was no such contract of exemption. The petitioner, standing in court, claims that one or other—the receiver or the city council—must make him whole. To sustain him, both of these parties must be before the court. The conclusion reached by the circuit court in dismissing the petition is affirmed.

Waddill, District Judge, dissenting:

I am unable to concur with the reasoning or in the result reached by the majority in this case. The appellant John H. Montgomery was a purchaser at a judicial sale, and, after making his purchase (imprudently, it may be, but in good faith), paid the taxes due on the property for the year 1898 to the city of Charleston. The special master, from whom he purchased, refused to allow him, in making settlement, a credit for the taxes thus paid; and he thereupon, in good faith, paid the same again to the special master, who brought the amount into court. The court, in my judgment, should at least have determined the question of whether the taxes were due to the city. If due, the fund was not prejudiced by payment of the same to the city, and the amount paid to the special master should be refunded. If the taxes were, as a matter of fact, due, the city will have received the same from this purchaser at a judicial sale, and the court by this decision will take the same money, and give it to the lien creditors, who, confessedly, would not be entitled to the amount if the city was. A purchaser at a judicial sale is neither a volunteer nor a stranger to the proceedings. The city council having, prior to the sale, intervened to have this question of the right to its taxes for that year settled, the city and the purchaser were before the court, and subject to its jurisdiction in the matter of the determination of their rights in the premises.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, the following response was afterwards handed down:

Per Curiam:

The opinion of the court having been filed in this case, affirming the conclusions reached by the circuit court, the appellant has filed a petition for rehearing. This petition has been carefully considered. The cause was fully argued before this court by able and exhaustive briefs and oral arguments. No new point has been presented, and no change has been effected in the mind of the court in the general principles set forth in the opinion. It cannot see why the receiver should be instructed to recognize the voluntary payment of the claim of the city council made by Mr. Montgomery, while the validity of the claim is denied, and we think with reason, by the creditors of the Charleston Mills. Nor would it be proper to order the receiver to indemnify Mr. Montgomery for his voluntary payment, and to assume the burden and responsibility of litigation upon it with the city council of Charleston.

The prayer of the petition, therefore, will not be granted.

But the petition for rehearing brings to the attention of the court a fact which has been overlooked in the case, and which was not considered. The ordinance of the city council of Charleston exempts manufacturing companies from all municipal taxes, except taxes for school purposes. When he paid the claim of the city council, Mr. Montgomery paid the entire claim, in which was included a tax for school purposes. The Charleston Mills was certainly liable for this school tax. To this extent Mr. Montgomery is clearly entitled to be repaid. Provision for such repayment should have been made for him. It is therefore ordered that the circuit decree appealed from be modified in this respect. The cause is remanded to the circuit court, with instructions in this respect to modify its decree, and to order that, out of the funds in court, repayment be made to John H. Montgomery of so much of the claim of the city council paid by him as embraces the tax for school purposes. The costs of this court will be paid, one half by the appellant, and the other half out of funds in the hands of the receiver and special master.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

ARKANSAS FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

J. B. WILSON et al.

(.....Ark.....)

1. Whether or not an accepted offer to purchase insured property constitutes a breach of a condition in the policy against change of ownership is a question for the court, and not for the jury.
2. The acceptance of a proposition to buy real property, which is definite in nothing except the amount to be paid, does not defeat insurance thereon, under a policy providing that it shall be void if the interest of the assured becomes other than "the entire, unconditional, unencumbered, and sole ownership."

(March 3, 1900.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Faulkner County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a policy of fire insurance. Affirmed.

Statement by Wood, J.:

This suit was brought by appellees to recover on a fire insurance policy. The defense was that the policy was void because of a violation of a provision of the policy that if the property be unoccupied for more than fifteen days consecutively, the policy would be void unless agreement therefor was indorsed on the policy; also, because of a violation of the provision that if the interest of the assured became other than the entire, unconditional, unencumbered, and sole ownership, the policy should be void unless agreement therefor was indorsed on the policy.

The answer enumerates four particulars in which this provision was violated, namely: "First, that the property had been placed in the hands of a receiver, and was burned while in his hands; second, that at the July term, 1896, of the Faulkner circuit court, judgments had been rendered against Wilson which were liens on the property; third, that Wilson had sold the property before the fire; fourth, that at the April term, 1897, of the Faulkner probate court a judgment had been rendered against Wilson, as administrator, which was a lien on the property." The cause was submitted to a jury, who, after hearing the evidence and the instructions of the court, rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs (appellees). Judgment was entered, and this appeal duly prosecuted.

Mr. J. H. Harrod for appellant.

Messrs. John G. B. Simms, E. A. Bolton, J. T. Young, and Sam Frauenthal, for appellees:

The placing of this property in the hands of the receiver in no wise changed, altered, abridged, or encumbered the interest of J. B.

NOTE.—For executory agreement to sell, as a change of title or interest in property, see Forward v. Continental Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 25 L. R. A. 637; and Erb v. German-American Ins. Co. (Iowa) 40 L. R. A. 845.
48 L. R. A.

Wilson in this property, and in no way violated this clause in the policy.

Keeney v. Home Ins. Co. 71 N. Y. 396, 27 Am. Rep. 60; Terpenning v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 14 Hun, 299; 1 May, Ins. § 276; German Ins. Co. v. Churchill, 26 Ill. App. 206; Haight v. Continental Ins. Co. 92 N. Y. 51; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. 101 Ind. 392.

An agreement to sell the property would not be such a change in the interest or ownership, nor would any such agreement executed by Wilson in writing, to sell this property, be a change in the interest or ownership of the property, until such proposed sale was carried out by the execution of some legal conveyance of the property.

Grable v. German Ins. Co. 32 Neb. 645, 49 N. W. 713; Kempton v. State Ins. Co. 62 Iowa, 83, 17 N. W. 194; Hill v. Cumberland Valley Mut. Protection Co. 59 Pa. 474; Biddle, Ins. § 206; Richards, Ins. § 147; Ayres v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 17 Iowa, 176, 85 Am. Dec. 553.

No executory contract would affect his interest or ownership, and certainly no parol contract within the statute of frauds (as this is) would affect his title, interest, or ownership.

Keatts v. Rector, 1 Ark. 421; Purcell v. Coleman, 4 Wall. 513, 18 L. ed. 435; Lester v. Foxcroft, 1 Colles, P. C. 108; 1 White & T. Lead. Cas. in Eq. Am. notes, pt. 2, p. 1027; Peckham v. Balch, 49 Mich. 179, 13 N. W. 506.

Wood, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The propositions upon which appellant relies for a reversal are: First, that the conditions of the policy were broken, and the policy thereby forfeited, and upon the undisputed facts the court should have directed a verdict for defendant; second, that the court erred in not declaring that the evidence showed a sale of the property by Wilson to Dunaway; third, that the court erred in not giving the sixth instruction asked by defendant; fourth, that the court erred in refusing to permit the defendant to introduce in evidence the judgments against Wilson; fifth, that the court erred in refusing to allow defendant to read in evidence the transfer of the policy to Kincheloe; sixth, that the court erred in directing the jury to find a special verdict as to whether there had been a sale of the property. We will consider these in the order named.

It is contended that the policy was forfeited by a sale of the property to one Dunaway. The proof upon this proposition was substantially as follows: Dunaway testified that he bought the property from Wilson; that he wrote Mr. Wilson a letter making him an offer for the property, and received in answer the following letter:

Pettus, Ark., May 6, 1897.

Mr. J. G. Dunaway.

Kind Sir:—

I will take your proposition in regard to my place at Conway. I would have written 48 L. R. A.

to you sooner, but I saw Mr. Collier and Bolton and Young, and they advised me to wait until I heard from the Building & Loan. So I will be up to Little Rock about next Sunday or Monday, and I will stop and see you, if you are in. I told your pa that I would let you have the place at your figures. So I will see you soon.

Yours, truly,

[Signed] J. B. Wilson.

He says that he paid Wilson $2.50 on the property when he bought it; that this payment was made on the 13th of May, 1897,—two days before the fire; that on the 12th of November, 1897, Wilson tried to get him to take the money back that he had paid. He did not take possession or exercise any control over the property. On May 17, 1897, he wrote Wilson the following letter:

May 17, 1897.

J. B. Wilson, Esq., Pettus, Ark.

Dear Sir:—

I suppose that you have heard before this that your house was burned on last Friday night. I believe pa wrote me, so I guess this will break into our trade. There was a mistake or two in the deed, anyway; and I had prepared new deed for you to sign, but will not send it now, until matters are settled. I understand that you have $1,500 insurance on it; so, if you can get that, it will, no doubt, help you out. Pa stated that there was a man by the name of Jones in the house at the time, and that it was not known how the fire caught. Please bring the deed in with you when you come.

Yours, truly,

J. G. Dunaway.

Dunaway says that he supposed he used the language "your house was burned," in the letter, just hurriedly, in writing same. He says that he had written a deed for the property, and Wilson had consented to the terms of it, but had never signed and returned it; that the proposition he made Wilson was to give him $100, and assume the mortgage that the building and loan association held, and that was the proposition he answered in the letter of May 6th. Dunaway said that he never wrote the building and loan association a letter agreeing to assume the Wilson mortgage, and never told anyone representing it that he would assume the mortgage, but considered that he had assumed it; that he never took any receipt for the $2.50 he paid Wilson at the time of the trade, and never tried to enforce specific performance. Wilson, on this point, testified: That he never sold the house to Dunaway; that he borrowed $2.50 from Dunaway, but did not accept it as payment for the house. He and Dunaway were just talking about a trade. He offered to pay the $2.50 at one time when there were no witnesses, and at another time when he took witnesses with him, but Dunaway would not take it.

At plaintiffs' request the court instructed the jury as follows: "The court instructs the jury that if you believe from the evidence that the defendant did insure the plaintiffs' frame building, on the lot described in the policy, for $1,500, against direct loss by fire from September 29, 1894, to September 29, 1897, and that said building was between said dates totally destroyed by fire, and that no condition contained in the policy of insurance was violated, then you will find for the plaintiffs the amount for which said building was insured by said policy." And at the defendant's request, on this point, as follows: "(3) You are instructed that if you find from the evidence that at any time after the issuance of the policy, and before the fire, the interest of Mr. Wilson in the insured property became other than entire, unconditional, unencumbered and sole ownership, you will find for the defendant, except the mortgage of the plaintiff building and loan association." But refused to grant defendant the following requests: "(5) You are instructed that the evidence shows that Wilson sold the property to Julian and Sharp Dunaway, and that such sale forfeited the policy, unless you find that the defendant's agreement or consent was indorsed on the policy, or was otherwise given. (6) If you find from the evidence that after the issuance of the policy, and before the fire, Julian and Sharp Dunaway made to J. B. Wilson a written offer to buy the property insured, for $100, and assuming the mortgage to the building and loan association, and that J. B. Wilson before the fire accepted the offer, in writing, you are instructed that this avoided the policy unless defendant consented thereto, and plaintiffs cannot recover in this action."

The instruction given at plaintiff's request was proper, as was also No. 3 given at the request of the defendant. No. 5 was properly refused. The evidence, at most, only showed an executory contract for the sale of the property. There was no sale, but only an offer on the one side, and an acceptance of such offer on the other, but the absolute sale could not take place until the execution and delivery of a deed to the property. But as to whether or not the written offer of Dunaway to buy the property, and the acceptance thereof by Wilson, constituted a breach of the policy which barred recovery, was a question for the court, and not for the jury. The offer was shown to have been in writing, and the acceptance was in writing. Judge Parsons, in his chapter on the "Interpretation and Construction of Contracts," lays it down as the very first rule "that what a contract means is a question of law." 2 Parsons, Contr. 8th ed. pp. 492, 610, and authorities cited. The court, then, should have granted appellant's request No. 6, supra, if an executory contract of that kind would avoid the policy, under the provision that "the policy should be void if the interest of the assured became other than the entire, unconditional, unencumbered, and sole ownership." This is the real and only serious question in the case. In proceeding to a discussion of this provision of the policy we must remember that such clauses are always and justly construed, when there is any doubt about the intent, with the utmost strictness against the insurer, and always with reference to their only legitimate object; i. e., the protection of the insurer against risks that are materially different from those which he has undertaken. Smith v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 91 Cal. 323, 13 L. R. A. 475, 27 Pac. 738. As Judge Dillon expresses it: "The object of the insurance company, by this clause, is that the interest shall not change so that the assured shall have a greater temptation or motive to burn the property, or less interest and watchfulness in guarding and preserving it from destruction by fire." Ayres v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 17 Iowa, 176. We think there is sufficient ambiguity in the condition under consideration to invoke the application of the rule that courts do not favor forfeitures under such provisions. Chandler v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 21 Minn. 85, 18 Am. Rep. 385; Symonds v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 23 Minn. 491; Hoffman v. Aetna F. Ins. Co. 32 N. Y. 406, 414, 88 Am. Dec. 337; Catlin v. Springfield F. Ins. Co. 1 Sumn. 434-440, Fed. Cas. No. 2,522; McAllister v. New England Mut. L. Ins. Co. 101 Mass. 553, 3 Am. Rep. 404; Kentucky Mut. Ins. Co. v. Jenks, 5 Ind. 103.

It is a matter of nice discrimination to determine whether the word "interest," as used in the condition, is synonymous with the word "title," or whether it means that and something besides. The authorities generally establish the rule that, where the condition is against any change in the legal title, an executory contract of sale is not a violation of the condition; so that if the word "interest," as used in this proviso, meant "title," there would be no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that the policy was not forfeited. Smith v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 91 Cal. 323, 13 L. R. A. 475, 27 Pac. 738; Kempton v. State Ins. Co. 62 Iowa, 83, 17 N. W. 194; Grable v. German Ins. Co. 32 Neb. 645, 49 N. W. 713; Washington F. Ins. Co. v. Kelly, 32 Md. 421, 3 Am. Rep. 149; Home Ins. Co. v. Bethel, 142 Ill. 537, 32 N. E. 510; Masters v. Madison County Mut. Ins. Co. 11 Barb. 624; Hill v. Cumberland Valley Mut. Protection Co. 59 Pa. 474; Browning v. Home Ins. Co. 71 N. Y. 508, 27 Am. Rep. 867. What, then, does the word "interest," in the provision, "if the interest of the assured be or become other than the entire, unconditional, unencumbered, and sole ownership of the property," etc., mean? Is it synonymous with "title?" In Gibb v. Philadelphia F. Ins. Co. 59 Minn. 267, 61 N. W. 137, the provision was, "This entire policy, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, shall be void . . . if any change, other than by the death of an insured, take place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of insurance," etc. The facts, as they pertained to this provision, were that the assured had made a contract in writing whereby he sold and agreed to convey to the grantee the insured premises, by deed of warranty, on prompt and full performance by her of the agreement, which was that she (grantee) was to pay therefor the sum of $2,500—$300 cash, and $1,000 in instalments of $50 every sixty days thereafter until paid; the balance to be paid in assuming a certain mortgage. The grantee was to have possession of the premises until default in payment, and in case of default she agreed to surrender possession on demand, and that the agreement should be void at the option of the vendor. She (the grantee) entered into possession of the buildings and premises, and occupied the same until the time of the fire, and made all her payments during that time, and was not in default in any manner upon said contract. Upon these facts, the court ruled that there was a forfeiture of the policy. In Germond v. Home Ins. Co. 2 Hun, 540, a policy of insurance provided that if the property should be sold or conveyed, or the interest of the parties therein changed, it should be null and void. After the issuing of the policy the owner contracted, under seal, to sell the property covered thereby to one S., who paid part of the purchase price. In an action upon the policy it was held that such contract of sale and payment constituted a change of interest in the property insured, and rendered the policy void. These cases are relied upon by the learned counsel for appellant to support its contention for a forfeiture of the policy, and, indeed, they are more nearly in point than any others we have been able to find. In the Minnesota case there is a very marked difference in the language of the provision from that in the case at bar. That provision is, "if any change," etc., "take place in the interest, title, or possession." Here the grammatical arrangement and punctuation (a comma being used between the words "interest" and "title") would indicate clearly that "interest" and "title" were intended to represent different ideas,—were not used synonymously,—while in the provision of the policy under consideration, "if the interest of the assured be or becomes other than the," etc., "sole ownership," there is nothing to indicate that the word "interest" was used in any other sense than as synonymous with "ownership" or "title." The New York case, however, on this point, is perfectly analogous, and directly decides, under the facts of that case, that the policy was forfeited. But if we concede, upon the authority of these cases, that the word "interest" is not used synonymously with "title," the question still remains, Was there such a change of interest, under the facts of this case, as, in the contemplation of the parties, worked a forfeiture? In the Minnesota case, above, there could be no question about that, for the reason that the grantee had gone into and was in possession at the time the loss occurred, and had fully complied with the terms of the contract, which was definite as to the manner and time of performance. Likewise, in the New York case the contract was under seal, and, we may therefore assume, was definite and certain in its terms. A part of the purchase price had been paid,—how much is not stated. In both cases the courts might very well have concluded that the contracts to convey conferred rights on the grantee therein, capable of enforcement according to their terms, which materially changed the status of the insurer and the insured towards each other, as to the risks to the premises, which such condition is intended to protect against. Not so under the facts here. Dunaway had made a proposition by letter to buy the premises, which is definite in nothing except the amount he was to pay. Wilson accepted the proposition. There was no proof as to when the contract was to become executed. Dunaway says he paid $2.50 on the purchase price just two days before the fire occurred, and that the money was paid when the trade was made. Wilson denies that the $2.50 was paid as purchase money. But it is evident that, under the indefinite executory contract (if we may so call it) for the sale of the property, the same was not to be performed until after the loss occurred, because a part of that performance on the part of Dunaway involved, in addition to the payment of $100, the assumption of a mortgage; and, of course, the deed was not to be executed and delivered and possession taken by Dunaway until the purchase money was paid. At least, such would be the presumption in the absence of proof to the contrary. Under such circumstances the loss by fire would necessarily fall on Wilson. He still had the insurable interest in the property. He could not after the fire, have compelled Dunaway to take the place. Wells v. Calnan, 107 Mass. 514, 9 Am. Rep. 65, and authorities cited. Both parties seem to have recognized the fact that the letters were simply an offer by the one to buy, and an agreement by the other to sell at some time in the future, when the purchase money should be paid and the deed made and delivered. Before that time came both recognized that the consideration had failed, and the contract was not enforceable. We are of the opinion that the alleged contract for the sale of the premises did not in any manner affect the risk which the parties to the contract of insurance contemplated and provided against in the condition named. Hence the court did not err in refusing to grant appellant's request for instruction numbered 8. The other grounds urged for reversal are not well taken.

The judgment of the Faulkner Circuit Court is therefore in all things affirmed.

DELAWARE SUPREME COURT.

Nathan LIEBERMAN, Appt.,
v.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK of Wilmington
et al.

(.....Del.....)

1. The published reports of a bank, purporting to show its resources and liabilities, but not made to induce a person to sign the bond of an employee of the bank, will not relieve such surety, who relied upon them, from liability because the reports failed to show previous defalcations by such employee, which he had concealed by false entries.
2. Statements made by the cashier of a bank without authority, for the purpose of inducing a person to become a surety on the bond of a teller, will not bind the bank so as to relieve the surety if the statements are not true.
3. Concealment of the defalcation of a bank teller prevents the running of the statute of limitations in favor of the surety on his bond, as well as in his own favor, until the discovery of the defalcation.

(January 19, 1900.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Chancery Court in favor of defendants in a proceeding brought to enjoin the enforcement of executions under judgments upon bonds given by the teller of the defendant bank upon which plaintiff was surety. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Benjamin Fields, for appellant:

If the false statements made by the cashier, or the false statements made by the bank, which complainant believed to be true and thereby became surety, were negligently or carelessly made without knowing whether the same were true or false, such statements are held in equity to be fraudulent representations.

The false statements made by the cashier, or the false statements made by the bank, upon which statements complainant relied and became surety, are in equity fraudulent representations, notwithstanding the cashier and the directors may have believed them to be true.

2 Brandt, Suretyship, 2d ed. § 422; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 887, 888.

Any contract, of however solemn character, may within certain limits be rescinded for constructive, and a fortiori for actual, fraud.

1 Bigelow, Fraud, p. 411.

In order to sustain an action for deceit there must be proof of fraud.

Derry v. Peek, L. R. 14 App. Cas. 337; Arkwright v. Newbold, L. R. 17 Ch. Div.

NOTE.—As to liability of surety on bond of bank employee, see McShane v. Howard Bank (Md.) 10 L. R. A. 552; Walden Nat. Bank v. Birch (N. Y.) 14 L. R. A. 211; Westervelt v. Mohrenstecher (C. C. A. 8th C.) 34 L. R. A. 477; and First Nat. Bank v. Briggs (Vt.) 37 L. R. A. 845.
48 L. R. A.

320; Smith v. Chadwick, L. R. 9 App. Cas. 193.

In a suit in equity for the rescission or avoidance of a contract, it is only necessary to prove that there was misrepresentation. Notwithstanding it may have been honestly made, the contract, having been obtained by misrepresentation, cannot stand.

Derry v. Peek, L. R. 14 App. Cas. 337; Recse River Silver Min. Co. v. Smith, L. R. 4 H. L. 64; Rawlins v. Wickham, 3 DeG. & J. 304; Central R. Co. v. Kisch, L. R. 2 H. L. 99; Redgrave v. Hurd, L. R. 20 Ch. Div. 1; Graves v. Lebanon Nat. Bank, 10 Bush, 23, 19 Am. Rep. 50; Deposit Bank v. Hearne, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1019, 48 S. W. 160; Americus Surety Co. v. Pauly, 170 U. S. 133, 42 L. ed. 977, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 552; Holden v. New York & E. Bank, 72 N. Y. 286.

The facts in this case clearly warrant the court in determining, not only that the complainant could avoid the bond on the ground of misrepresentation, but that the facts constitute fraud which would be a ground of action, and a fortiori a ground of defense.

1 Bigelow, Fraud, p. 509; Townsend v. Williams, 117 N. C. 330, 23 S. E. 461; Solomon v. Bates, 118 N. C. 311, 24 S. E. 478; Tate v. Bates, 118 N. C. 287, 24 S. E. 482; Cole v. Cassidy, 138 Mass. 437, 52 Am. Rep. 284.

The right of the First National Bank to proceed on said bonds, or either of them, is barred by the statutes of this state.

Martin v. Talley, 72 Ala. 23.

The cause of action having accrued more than two years before the execution was issued, the execution is such an action as comes within the terms of the statute, and is barred.

Grimsshaw v. Wilmington, 5 Del. Ch. 183.

Equity will not enlarge the legal liability of a party who is under no moral or equitable obligation. Equity will not hold a surety liable where he is discharged at law.

United States v. Price, 9 How. 83, 13 L. ed. 56; Hunt v. Rhodes, 1 Pet. 1, 7 L. ed. 27; Wright v. Russell, 3 Wils. 530; Simpson v. Field, 2 Cas. in Ch. 22; Waters v. Rilcy, 2 Harr. & G. 310, 18 Am. Dec. 302; Harrison v. Field, 2 Wash. (Va.) 136; Weaver v. Shryock, 6 Serg. & R. 262; Kennedy v. Carpenter, 2 Whart. 361; Dixon v. Vandenberg, 35 N. J. Eq. 47; Pickersgill v. Lahens, 15 Wall. 140, 21 L. ed. 119; United States v. Marks, 3 Wall. Jr. 358, Fed. Cas. No. 15,722; Fielden v. Lahens, 6 Blatchf. 525, Fed. Cas. No. 4,773; Pratt v. Northam, 5 Mason. 95, Fed. Cas. No. 11,376.

A surety cannot, either at law or in equity, be bound farther than he is bound by the very terms of his undertaking.

Miller v. Stewart, 4 Wash. C. C. 28, Fed. Cas. No. 9,591; Leggett v. Humphreys, 21 How. 66, 16 L. ed. 50; Weaver v. Shryock, 6 Serg. & R. 262; Getty v. Binsse, 49 N. Y. 385, 10 Am. Rep. 379; Bank of Wilmington v. Wollaston, 3 Harr. (Del.) 91; Sparks v. Farmers' Bank, 3 Del. Ch. 274.

The statute of limitations commences running in favor of a surety or guarantor from the time he is liable to suit; and this may or may not be at the same time the principal becomes so liable.

1 Brandt, Suretyship, ¶ 143; State use of St. Louis County v. Dailey, 4 Mo. App. 172; United States v. Babbitt, 95 U. S. 334, 24 L. ed. 480; People v. Burkhart, 76 Cal. 606, 18 Pac. 776; The Governor v. Stonum, 11 Ala. 679.

Mr. Lewis C. Vandegrift, for appellees:

"Concealed fraud" is a good replication to such a plea of the statute of limitations.

Sparks v. Farmers' Bank, 3 Del. Ch. 274; Bradford v. McCormick, 71 Iowa, 129, 32 N. W. 93; Boone County v. Jones, 54 Iowa, 699, 2 N. W. 987, 7 N. W. 155; Bailey v. Glover, 21 Wall. 342, 22 L. ed. 636; Kirby v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 120 U. S. 130, 30 L. ed. 569, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 430; Reynolds v. Hennessy, 17 R. I. 174, 20 Atl. 307, 23 Atl. 639; Snodgrass v. Branch Bank, 25 Atl. 161, 60 Am. Dec. 505.

What estops the principal estops the surety.

McCabe v. Raney, 32 Ind. 309; Com. v. Kendig, 2 Pa. 448; Zent v. Heart, 8 Pa. 337; Wayne v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 52 Pa. 343; Amherst Bank v. Root, 2 Met. 522; Weston v. Sprague, 54 Vt. 395; Charles v. Hoskins, 14 Iowa, 471, 83 Am. Dec. 378; Pendleton v. Bank of Kentucky, 1 T. B. Mon. 181; Sparks v. Farmers' Bank, 3 Del. Ch. 274; Bradford v. McCormick, 71 Iowa, 129, 32 N. W. 93; Boone County v. Jones, 54 Iowa, 699, 2 N. W. 987, 7 N. W. 155.

To plead any statute in this case is against good conscience, and therefore equity will not permit such a plea.

Reynolds v. Hennessy, 17 R. I. 174, 20 Atl. 307, 23 Atl. 639; Sparks v. Farmers' Bank, 3 Del. Ch. 274; Com. v. Kendig, 2 Pa. 448; Bond v. Hopkins, 1 Sch. & Lef. 413, Appx.

The statute of limitations is a good shield, but it should not be used to protect fraud. Chambers v. Fennemore, 4 Harr. (Del.) 376.

Reports to the Comptroller of the Currency are not made or published for the benefit of those persons likely to become sureties on the bonds of the officers of the bank.

Ashuelot Sav. Bank v. Albee, 63 N. H. 152.

Connivance on the part of the bank—the corporation—would be the only thing that would discharge the surety.

Sparks v. Farmers' Bank, 3 Del. Ch. 301; United States v. Kirkpatrick, 9 Wheat. 720, 6 L. ed. 199; Minor v. Mechanics' Bank, 1 Pet. 46, 7 L. ed. 47; Taylor v. Bank of Kentucky, 2 J. J. Marsh. 565; Phillips v. Bosard, 35 Fed. Rep. 99.

There was no concealment of the bank's condition intended by the published statements, because it was not known that anything was wrong.

Wayne v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 52 Pa. 343; Ashuelot Sav. Bank v. Albee, 63 N. H. 152.

Representations by the cashier were not 48 L. R. A.

within the course of the business intrusted to him, nor near it, within the authority conferred upon him.

American Surety Co. v. Pauly, 170 U. S. 133, 42 L. ed. 977, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 552.

The recital and condition of the bonds are amply broad to cover any duty the bank should choose to assign to Smith as teller.

Minor v. Mechanics' Bank, 1 Pet. 46, 7 L. ed. 47; New York v. Kelly, 98 N. Y. 467; Detroit Sav. Bank v. Ziegler, 49 Mich. 157, 43 Am. Rep. 456, 13 N. W. 496.

Mere delay of the creditor to proceed against the principal is not sufficient to discharge the surety.

Hunt v. Bridgman, 2 Pick. 584, 13 Am. Dec. 458.

The only limitation of the appellant's liability as surety was Smith's employment by the bank, his payment and delivery to it, at the end of his employment, of all money and property in his hands, and otherwise fully complying with the terms of the bonds.

Bank of Wilmington v. Wollaston, 3 Harr. (Del.) 96; Sparks v. Farmers' Bank, 3 Del. Ch. 289.

If the statutes of limitations ever were applicable, the bar of the statutes was raised by Smith's acknowledgment of the debt.

Burlingame v. Stott, 8 Barn. & C. 36; Channell v. Ditchburn, 5 Mees. & W. 494; Boone County v. Jones, 54 Iowa, 699, 2 N. W. 991, 7 N. W. 155; Zent v. Heart, 8 Pa. 341; Com. v. Kendig, 2 Pa. 452; Chambers v. Fennemore, 4 Harr. (Del.) 374; Newlin v. Duncan, 1 Harr. (Del.) 204, 25 Am. Dec. 66; Robinson v. Burton, 1 Houst. (Del.) 540.

There is no difference in the liability of principal and sureties on an official bond.

Harris v. Clap, 1 Mass. 308, 2 Am. Rep. 27; Wyman v. Robinson, 73 Me. 384, 40 Am. Rep. 360.

Lore, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Nathan Lieberman, the appellant, one of the sureties on two official bonds of Peter T. E. Smith, late paying teller of the First National Bank of Wilmington, has appealed in this case from the decree of the chancellor made December 3, 1898, which dissolved a preliminary injunction granted by the late Chancellor Wolcott November 6, 1893, restraining the bank from collecting the amount of certain defalcations of Smith, made by him while acting as teller of the said bank. The bonds bore date, respectively, November 1, 1879, and July 6, 1885. Each bond was in the penal sum of $15,000, and set forth that said Smith had been duly elected and chosen teller of the bank during the pleasure of the board of directors; that each was conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office as teller of the said bank. Annexed to each bond was a joint and several warrant of attorney to enter judgment thereon. During the life of the first bond, between November 1, 1879, and July 6, 1885, Smith fraudulently abstracted funds of the bank to the amount of $11,650. During the life of the second bond, between July 6, 1885, and July 5, 1891, he so ababstracted $27,750. These defalcations were fraudulently concealed by false entries made by Smith on the books of the bank. The defalcations were discovered about February 18, 1893, and a full confession was made by Smith. Upon the 24th day of February, 1893, judgment was entered in the superior court of the state of Delaware on each of said bonds; said judgments being No. 299 to February term, 1893, on the bond of November 1, 1879, and No. 301 to the said term on bond of July 6, 1885. On the latter judgment, execution was issued October 19, 1893, and thereunder the goods and chattels of Lieberman were taken in execution, and were about to be advertised and sold, when further proceedings were restrained by the preliminary injunction of November 6, 1893.

The chief assignments of error relied on and urged in the brief and argument in behalf of the appellant were (1) that the bonds were void as to Lieberman because he was induced to become surety thereon by fraudulent representations of the respondent; (2) that, at the time of the entry of the judgments, action on the bonds was barred by the statute of limitations.

1. The appellant contends that under the evidence in this case there is clear proof that immediately before complainant became surety on the bond of November 1, 1879, he had a conversation with George D. Armstrong, cashier of said bank; that Armstrong then told him that he would run no risk in becoming surety for Smith, as he was "a good, reliable, honest man, and his accounts are all straight, and as paying teller he cannot take anything," and that he had read the published statements of the bank, showing its then resources and liabilities; that immediately before complainant became surety on the bond of July 6, 1885, he had a further conversation with George D. Armstrong, cashier of the bank; that Armstrong then told him that Smith's books and everything were straight, and that "there was no risk whatever in going on his bond again;" and that he had read the statements of the bank, with its then resources. Complainant avers that he was induced to become surety for Smith because of such statements made to him by the cashier, and by the published reports of the bank, showing its resources and liabilities, immediately before he became surety; that these reports were made and published pursuant to an act of Congress, and the cashier, who made oath thereto, and the directors, who certified to the correctness thereof, did so under the authority conferred upon them, and in discharge of a duty imposed upon them by law; that, from the facts thus proved, the bonds signed by the complainant are void as to him because he became surety thereon by reason of such fraudulent representations of the respondent. It nowhere appears in the testimony that Armstrong, the cashier, was authorized by the bank in any way to make representations in this matter of surety on Smith's bonds, or that it was in the line of his duty as cashier to do so. Any statements made by him to Lieberman as to

Smith's honesty, the condition of his books and accounts, and the probable risk to his surety could, therefore, in no wise bind the bank. Lieberman took them at his own risk, as the individual judgments of Armstrong. The supreme court of Kentucky, in Graves v. Lebanon Nat. Bank, 10 Bush, 23, 19 Am. Rep. 50, held that published reports of the assets and liabilities of a national bank, under the acts of Congress, which were false, but which, under the proof, induced a person to become surety on the official bond of the cashier of the bank, made the bond void as to such surety, and relieved him from liability thereon. The contrary doctrine is maintained in Ashuelot Sav. Bank v. Albee, 63 N. H. 152, where, after reviewing the Graves Case, the court says: Such "report was not due to persons considering the question of becoming sureties of the treasurer. It was a duty imposed by statute for the benefit of depositors, and not to enable a reader of the published reports to determine whether the treasurer was a man whose official bond he could safely sign." This reason applies with equal force to the case now before us. It is difficult to perceive upon what principle of law or equity such published reports of the bank can be held as an inducement to Lieberman to become surety on Smith's bond. They were not made by the bank for that purpose. Their publication from time to time had no relation to such suretyship, nor did they disclose upon their face whether Smith was honest or dishonest. If Lieberman saw fit to draw from such reports the conclusion that he could safely become surety on Smith's official bond, it was unquestionably his own volition, and without participation of the bank, and for which the bank should not be held responsible. There seems to be, therefore, nothing either in the statements of the cashier, Armstrong, or in the published reports of the bank, that would relieve Lieberman of his liability as surety on the bonds.

2. The main and most important question in this case is raised by the statute of limitations. The statute relating to bonds of this character is as follows: "No action shall be brought upon any bond given to the president, directors, and company of any bank, or to any corporation, by any officer of such bank or corporation, with condition for his good behavior or for the faithful discharge of the duties of his station, or touching the execution of his office, against either principal or sureties, after the expiration of two years from the accruing of the cause of such action; and no action shall be brought, and no proceeding shall be had, upon any such bond or upon any judgment thereon, against either principal or sureties, for any cause of action accruing after the expiration of six years from the date of such bond." Rev. Laws, p. 889, § 11. No question in this case arises under the last clause of the law, as the evidence shows that all the defalcations occurred within six years from the date of the bond under which they are claimed in each case. We have, therefore, only to deal with the two years' limitation in the first clause. Judgment was entered February 24, 1893. Three items of defalcation under the bond of July 6, 1885,—viz., April 11, 1891, $500; July 2, 1891, $500; July 3, 1891, $1,500; amounting to $2,500,—are within the two years, and would not be affected by the statute in any event. The residue of the defalcations are without the two years. Does the statute of limitations bar recovery, as claimed by the appellant? It was shown in the evidence that Smith had fraudulently abstracted $4,600 of bank funds at the date of the first bond, November 1, 1879; that under that bond he so abstracted $11,650, and under the bond of July 6, 1885, $27,750; that all these peculations were fraudulently concealed by entries and alterations so skilfully made by him on the books of the bank as to escape detection until he made disclosure of the same about February 18, 1893; that during all that time he was a capable and trusted officer of the bank, enjoying the confidence of his employers and of the community. The respondent contends that the bar of the statute is removed by the concealed fraud of Smith.

The question whether the fraudulent concealment of the existence of the cause of action will hinder the operation of the statute of limitations is one which has been much discussed, and upon which there has been a radical difference of opinion. On one side it is said that the statute in plain terms fixes the time when action shall be brought after the cause of action accrues; that the cause of action accrues when the act is done and the fraud is consummated, and from that time, and not from the time the plaintiff discovered it, the statute interposes as a protection; that while courts of equity may make an exception in cases of fraud, because they are not strictly bound by the statute, yet for courts of law to do the same is to except from the law cases which are plainly within its terms. On the other side it is said that the statute must be expounded reasonably, so as to suppress, and not to extend, the mischiefs it was intended to cure; that it was intended to suppress fraud by preventing unjust claims from starting up after a great lapse of time, when evidence by which they might be repelled was forgotten or had ceased to exist; that it should not, therefore, be so construed as to encourage fraud by enabling those who, through falsehood or deceit, have managed to keep one in ignorance of the fact that he had a cause of action, to take advantage of their own wrongdoing, under a plea of the statute. "We think," says the court in Reynolds v. Hennessy, 17 R. I. 174, 20 Atl. 307, 23 Atl. 639, "the latter position is best sustained by reason and authority. It is certainly in the line of justice and morality, and the only objection to it is that it introduces an exception into the statute." The same objection lies to claims in favor of the government, and to cases of new promise. The statute does not take away the debt, but simply affects the remedy. Hence, if one by fraud conceals the fact of a right of action, it is not ingrafting an exception on the statute 46 L. R. A.

to say that he is not protected thereby, but it is simply saying that he never was within the statute, since its protection was never designed for such as he. By fraud he has put himself outside of its pale. Whether this be taken as an exception, or only a limitation of the statute, it rests upon sound reason and just policy. Ibid.; Bree v. Holbeck, 2 Dougl. 655 (Lord Mansfield); South Sea Co. v. Wymondsell, 3 P. Wms. 143. Such a construction has been so frequently applied to the statute that it is now said to have the weight of authority in its favor. Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Indiana, and Texas are among the states supporting this view, while the contrary has been held in New York, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and New Jersey. In First Massachusetts Turnp. Corp. v. Field, 3 Mass. 201, 3 Am. Dec. 124, Chief Justice Parsons uses this language: That, where "the delay of bringing the suit is owing to the fraud of the defendant, and the cause of action against him ought not to be considered as having accrued until the plaintiff could obtain the knowledge that he had a cause of action. If this knowledge is fraudulently concealed from him by the defendant, we [the court] should violate a sound rule of law if we permitted the defendant to avail himself of his own fraud." The reason given by Lord Redesdale in Hovenden v. Annesley, 2 Sch. & Lef. 634, why the statute should not operate as a bar where fraud has been concealed by one party until it has been discovered by the other, is "that the statute ought not, in conscience, to run; the conscience of the party being so affected that he ought not to be allowed to avail himself of the length of time." Whatever may be the conflict in courts of law upon this point, it is, without controversy, the settled doctrine in courts of equity. Angell, Limitations of Actions, § 183; Coster v. Murray, 5 Johns. Ch. 522.

But it is insisted that, while this rule prevails against the person who committed the fraud, a different rule exists in favor of innocent sureties, who had no knowledge of, and did not participate in, such fraud; that while Smith, who fraudulently concealed his peculations, would not be suffered to shield himself behind the statute, Lieberman, his surety, who is innocent of fraud, has a right to set up the statute as his protection. In cases like this, is there any such distinction between the liability of principal and surety? In Charles v. Hoskins, 14 Iowa, 473, 83 Am. Dec. 378, which was an action against sheriff's sureties for wrongful seizure of goods under an execution, the court says: "The governing principle is that the liability of the surety is dependent upon that of the principal." In Zent v. Heart, 8 Pa. 337, which was an action against a surety on a promissory note barred by the statute, where the principal had paid interest within six years, Chief Justice Gibson held that "the decisions at length have settled that the payment of one is the acknowledgment by both, wherever it has been made during their joint responsibility,—in other words before it has been severed by the death of one of them." In Boehmer v. Schuylkill County, 46 Pa. 452, which was an action against sureties on a county treasurer's bond, where the defense was that the county commissioners had exceeded their power in borrowing the money which came into the treasurer's hands, and that the money so received was not within the bond, the court (Chief Justice Woodward) says: "In so far as the principal is liable by the mere force and terms of the bond, the surety is bound with him." In Patterson's Appeal, 48 Pa. 342, the sureties of an absconding assignee, who was trustee for the benefit of creditors, were held not entitled to credit on account which their principal could not claim, by reason of fraud. Strong, J., says: "The sureties stand in no better position than Smith, their principal. . . . The measure of his responsibility is the measure of theirs." In Bradford v. McCormick, 71 Iowa, 129, 32 N. W. 94, which was an action against the sureties of a justice of the peace for money collected and fraudulently concealed until the statute had run, the court says: "The statute in this case is pleaded by the sureties, and they have not been guilty of any fraud; but they, without doubt, we think, are bound by the fraudulent conduct of the principal defendant. The liability of a surety is dependent upon the liability of the principal. The ordinary rule is, if the principal is bound, so is the surety." This point has been directly adjudged in this state. In Sparks v. Farmers' Bank, 3 Del. Ch. 275,—a case against the sureties of a defaulting cashier of the bank,—the precise question was determined. The chancellor there held that the bank was entitled to collect of the sureties so much of the defalcations as occurred more than two years previous to the entering of the judgment on the bond, for the reason that "their equity to do so arises out of the fact that the defalcation was a fraud concealed from the bank, with respect to which a court of equity will not permit the statutory bar to be set up until the lapse of the prescribed term after discovery of the fraud." This case was argued by some of the ablest lawyers of the state. While it is true that the distinction between the liability of surety and principal in cases like this, where there is concealed fraud, does not seem to have been raised and dwelt upon by counsel for the sureties, still it is only fair to assume that the failure to do so did not arise from any lack of knowledge or research, but, rather, from lack of material for, and confidence in, such a defense. The case of Grimshaw v. Wilmington, 5 Del. Ch. 183, which was against the sureties of a defaulting treasurer of the city of Wilmington, has been urged as countervailing this doctrine. The chancellor, in his opinion, expressly excepts cases like the present out of his consideration, in the following language: "I shall not enter into a general discussion of the principle applicable to a case where a concealment of fraud has been proved to exist on the part of the defendant in a suit brought against him after the discovery of the fraud has been made, but not within the period mentioned in the statute in that respect, to make him account for the amount of said fraud, because I am of the opinion that the principles adjudged in cases of that kind, where the statute of limitation has been pleaded as a bar to the cause of action, are not applicable to the case before me. . . . It is true . . . that where one person defrauds another of his just rights, and the fraud is concealed at the time of its commission, and not discovered within the period embraced by the statute of limitations, the party defrauded has a right to bring his action for the recovery of the amount of which he has been defrauded at any time within the proper legal period for bringing actions." The cases of Hudson v. Bishop, 32 Fed. Rep. 519; United States v. Mark, 3 Wall. Jr. 358, and of Pratt v. Northam, 5 Mason, 95, Fed. Cas. No. 11,376, relied upon by counsel for the appellant, do not seem to modify this principle relating to sureties.

It therefore seems to be established that, in cases on official bonds, concealed fraud on the part of the principal will deprive both principal and surety of the benefit of the statute of limitations; that the statute does not begin to run until the fraud is discovered. The reason seems to be that in such bonds the sureties guarantee the good conduct and faithfulness of the principal in the discharge of the duties of his office, and that, in equity and good conscience, they should not be exempt from liability for his misconduct and speculations because by fraudulent concealment he has prevented discovery until the time limited by the statute to bring action has expired. Any other construction would make the very frauds against which the sureties covenanted the means for relief from liability. The bond in such case, instead of securing the faithfulness of the officer, would tend to promote on his part skillful and fraudulent concealed speculations, and would be an inducement to fraud. If concealed fraud, which the principal undertakes not to perpetrate, deprives such principal of the protection of the statute, is it not equally reasonable that the undertaking of the surety that such fraud should not be perpetrated excludes the surety, also? The principal undertakes not to commit fraud. The surety guarantees that he shall not commit fraud. There would seem to be no substantial reason why their respective liabilities for such fraud should be different. It may seem hard that, by reason of the fraud of a principal, the liability of an innocent surety should be continued for many years after the expiration of the time named in the statute of limitations. The hardship would be greater if another equally innocent person should be made to suffer by such fraud in cases where the surety undertakes that the principal shall be faithful and honest in that very matter. The equities being equal as to innocence, the added burden of his obligation rests upon the surety.

"It is true that equity will not relieve against the bar of the statute, in favor of a party who has been in laches in not using means within his power to discover the fraud." Sparks v. Farmers' Bank, 3 Del. Ch. 306. It must be remembered that in these bonds Lieberman undertook for the fidelity of Smith absolutely and at all events, and engaged unconditionally to make good his defaults. True it is, he contracted in view of the statute of limitations. It is equally true that he contracted in view of the law contained in adjudged cases in this state controlling the application of the statute. The rule is that "it is good faith, and not diligence, which is required of the creditor as a condition of his right to hold the surety; . . . but the creditor or obligee in a bond is not obliged, for the benefit of sureties, to watch the principal. It is because it is really impracticable for this to be done effectually and at all times, on the part of large institutions, that official bonds are required. To subject the responsibility of sureties to so indefinite a question as whether due diligence has been exercised by directors would render these securities worthless." Id. 302. Judge Thompson, in Wayne v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 52 Pa. 349, thus defines the diligence required in the officers of a bank: "I know of no positive duty resting on the officers of the bank to investigate with a view to inform a surety, in the absence of any inquiry or request of him to do so. Had such a request been made, and it had been denied or evaded, a different question might have been presented. . . . Neither the bank nor its officers knew or had reason to suspect, so far as we can learn, the defalcation afterwards discovered." Chief Justice Shaw tersely says in Amherst Bank v. Root, 2 Met. 540, that "negligence of directors and their agents is no excuse." In a case cited by the appellants (Graves v. Lebanon Nat. Bank, 10 Bush, 28, 19 Am. Rep. 50) the measure of diligence is thus defined: "The directors may have been negligent in the discharge of their duties, and this negligence may have enabled Mitchell for the time to misappropriate the funds of the bank, and to conceal its true condition by the false reports made to the Comptroller of the Currency, and by false entries upon the books of the association. But this negligence cannot avail the sureties, who covenanted that their principal should well and truly perform the duties of his position. . . . Their covenant is unconditional, and no failure of duty, upon the part of the directors of the association, short of actual fraud or bad faith, can be deemed sufficient to exonerate them from its performance." The testimony in this case discloses no such laches as would discharge the surety. It shows that Smith was generally esteemed as an honest and capable officer; that the usual examinations of the condition of the bank from time to time were had both by the officers of the bank and by a government examiner; that no suspicion of the defalcations of Smith existed in the mind of anyone at any time prior to February, 1893; that Lieberman made no request for an examination of Smith's accounts; that the defalcations were therefore concealed by Smith, who was a skilled accountant. There is no claim that the bank did not exercise good faith towards the surety at all times.

A careful examination of this case discloses no ground for the relief of the surety. The decree of the chancellor in that respect is therefore affirmed. Inasmuch, however, as it appears from the entire record that certain errors have been inadvertently incorporated into the decree of the chancellor in respect to the date of the first bond, the duration of the defalcation under the second bond, and the allowance of interest on the penal sum of each bond, it is the judgment of this court that said surety is liable for the defalcations of said Smith, with interest from the date of each defalcation to the 3d day of December, 1898, the date of the decree of the chancellor in this case, provided the aggregate sum of the principal and interest ascertained to said date on each bond shall not exceed the penalty thereof; and the said surety is also further liable for interest on such aggregate sum so ascertained from the said 3d day of December, 1898, the date of said decree. And now, to wit, this the 19th day of January, 1900, it appearing to the court that on the 3d day of December, 1898, it was ascertained by the decree of the chancellor in this case that there was due on each of the said bonds a sum in excess of $15,000, the penalty thereof: Now, therefore, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said the First National Bank of Wilmington, the respondent, have liberty to collect on each of its judgments entered on each of the said bonds in the superior court of the state of Delaware, in and for Newcastle county, against Nathan Lieberman, the appellant, the sum of $15,000, with interest thereon from the 3d day of December, 1898, the date of the said decree, and the date of the authoritative and legal ascertainment of the amount due on each of the said bonds. And it is further ordered that the appellant pay the costs in this case within three months, or attachment issue.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

TRUST COMPANY OF GEORGIA et al.,
Plffs. in Err.,
v.

STATE of Georgia.

(.....Ga.....)

*1. When an action is instituted in the name of the state for the purpose of preventing a violation of the provisions of par. 4, § 2, art. 4, of the Constitution (Civil Code, § 5800), the questions whether such action is well brought and is maintainable depend upon the pleadings and the evidence introduced in support thereof, and not upon the motives inspiring those at whose instance the governor was induced to order the suit to be filed, or the arguments presented to him to that end.

a. The remedy for such a purpose may be injunction, and it is not in every instance essential to resort to the harsher proceeding to forfeit a charter.

3. That portion of the above-mentioned paragraph of the Constitution which denies to the general assembly "power to authorize any corporation to buy shares or stock in any other corporation" is not absolute in its terms, but it was designed only to prevent the general assembly from authorizing one corporation to purchase shares or stock in another when doing so "may have the effect, or be intended to have the effect, to defeat or lessen competition in their respective businesses, or to encourage monopoly."

4. This clause of the Constitution applies to and includes all corporations, and consequently is applicable to street-railway companies, and enforceable as to them whenever they directly or indirectly violate its provisions.

5. Under the charter of the Trust Company of Georgia, that corporation has authority to buy the shares or stock of any other corporation, provided that in so doing it does not violate the provisions of the Constitution of this state.

6. Placing upon the word "competition," as used in this paragraph, the interpretation given to it in the case of State v. Central of Georgia R. Co. (decided at this term) 35 S. E. 37, and taking into view the evidence in the present record, the court erred in holding that the proposed purchase of stock would be violative of the constitutional provisions referred to, and in granting on that ground the injunction sought.

(February 27, 1900.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Fulton County to review a judgment in favor of the state in a proceeding brought to prevent the consolidation of certain street-railway companies. Reversed.

*Headnotes by LEWIS, J.

NOTE.—As to right of corporation to deal in stock of other corporations, see Buckeye Marble & F. Co. v. Harvey (Tenn.) 18 L. R. A. 252, and note; Cowling v. Zenith Iron Co. (Minn.) 33 L. R. A. 508.

As to what constitutes competing railroads within prohibition against consolidation, see State ex rel. Nolan v. Montana R. Co. (Mont.) 45 L. R. A. 271, and note on Restrictions on consolidation of parallel or competing railroads. 48 L. R. A.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. King & Anderson and Lewis W. Thomas for Trust Company of Georgia, Goodwin & Hallman and C. F. Goree for Atlanta Railway & Power Company, and Payne & Tye, for Atlanta Railway Company, plaintiffs in error:

Suits to prohibit combinations and bringing about monopoly will not be entertained by the courts where they are inspired by rival interests.

People ex rel. Moloney v. General Electric R. Co. 172 Ill. 129, 50 N. E. 158; 3 Cook, Corp. § 913, p. 2231.

Quo warranto is the proper remedy; direct suit in the name of the state for injunction is not proper; and the proceeding should have been on the relation of the attorney general.

5 Thomp. Corp. §§ 6033, 6035, and notes; 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 410; High, Extr. Legal Rem. § 660; Wheelchel v. State ex rel. Wiley, 76 Ga. 644; People v. Albany & V. R. Co. 24 N. Y. 261, 82 Am. Dec. 295; Hovelman v. Kansas City Horse R. Co. 79 Mo. 632; Prescott Nat. Bank v. Butler, 157 Mass. 548, 32 N. E. 909.

Paragraph 4, § 2, art. 4, of the Constitution prohibits the legislature from authorizing corporations to purchase stocks, or make contracts, as therein specified. It is not self-acting, and legislation to vivify and make it effective is indispensable. Nor does it apply to companies not engaged in the same lines of business, so as to prohibit one of such companies from buying stock in the other; e. g., a trust company and a street-railroad company, where the charter of the former authorizes it to buy stock in other companies.

Clarke v. Richmond & W. P. Terminal R. & Warehouse Co. 23 U. S. App. 597, 62 Fed. Rep. 333, 10 C. C. A. 387.

If the contract is limited as to time and place, and is not a general restraint upon freedom of trade or on the exercise of one's vocation, the court upholds it; otherwise it is declared invalid.

Rakestraw v. Lanier, 104 Ga. 188, 30 S. E. 735.

If prices are not raised above reasonable amounts, though contracts made to prevent competition, the same are not void.

Manchester & L. R. Co. v. Concord R. Corp. 66 N. H. 100, 9 L. R. A. 689, 3 Intera. Com. Rep. 319, 20 Atl. 383.

There must be real, substantial competition between the companies, to render the consolidation illegal. Incidental competition, or competition insignificant in amount when compared to the volume of business transacted by the companies, will not render the consolidation or combination illegal.

Kimball v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 46 Fed. Rep. 888; Cumberland Valley R. Co. v. Gettysburg & H. R. Co. 177 Pa. 519, 35 Atl. 952; People v. O'Brien, 111 N. Y. 64, 2 L. R.

A. 255, 18 N. E. 692; Alexander v. Car Floats Nos. 1, 3, 4, & 5, 64 Fed. Rep. 888; Rogers v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 62 U. S. App. 49, 697, 91 Fed. Rep. 317, 33 C. C. A. 517; Cooke, Trade & Labor Combinations, 120; Manchester & L. R. Co. v. Concord R. Corp. 66 N. H. 100, 9 L. R. A. 689, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 319, 20 Atl. 383; State v. American Cotton Oil Trust, 40 La. Ann. 8, 3 So. 409.

It is not illegal for two corporations engaged in the same general line of business to consolidate.

Cameron v. New York & Mt. V. Water Co. 62 Hun, 269, 16 N. Y. Supp. 757, 133 N. Y. 336, 31 N. E. 104; Holmes & G. Mfg. Co. v. Holmes & W. Metal Co. 127 N. Y. 252, 27 N. E. 831.

The leasing of competing lines, or the bringing of them under one friendly management, does not violate such a provision as that in our Constitution.

State ex rel. Nolan v. Montana R. Co. 21 Mont. 221, 45 L. R. A. 271, 53 Pac. 623.

The question is one of mixed law and fact, and the jury on final hearing can settle the matter.

South Florida R. Co. v. Rhodes, 25 Fla. 40, 3 L. R. A. 733, 5 So. 633.

Street-railroad companies, from their very nature, do not fall within the provisions of statutes or constitutions prohibiting combinations to defeat competition, and such statutes and constitutional provisions do not apply to them.

Rooth, Street Railways, § 429; Gyger v. Philadelphia City Pass. R. Co. 136 Pa. 96, sub nom. Montgomery v. Philadelphia City Pass. R. Co. 9 L. R. A. 369, 20 Atl. 399.

Messrs. J. M. Terrell, Attorney General, Gray, Brown, & Randolph, and Frazier & Hynds, for defendant in error:

It is a part of the sworn duty of the chief executive of the state to enforce the laws, and to prevent violations of the same where it is brought to his knowledge that such violations have been or are about to be committed. Instituting the suit thus, in the discharge of his official duties, it is neither necessary to show the grounds which moved the governor to institute the suit, nor are such grounds germane to the questions raised thereby.

McDaniel v. Gate City Gaslight Co. 79 Ga. 61, 3 S. E. 693; Alexander v. Searcy, 81 Ga. 546, 8 S. E. 630; Macon & B. R. Co. v. Gibson, 85 Ga. 22, 11 S. E. 442; People v. Milk Exchange, 145 N. Y. 267, 27 L. R. A. 437, 39 N. E. 1002; Mayo v. Renfro, 66 Ga. 408; Alexander v. State, 56 Ga. 478; Parker v. Hughes, 25 Ga. 374; Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Macon, 43 Ga. 605; Atlanta v. Gate City Gaslight Co. 71 Ga. 106.

The suit is properly brought in the name of the state.

State v. Southern P. R. Co. 24 Tex. 80; State ex rel. Clapp v. Minnesota Thresher Mfg. Co. 40 Minn. 213, 3 L. R. A. 510, 41 N. W. 1020; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Com. (Pa.) 4 Cent. Rep. 495, 7 Atl. 368; 5 Thomp. Corp. § 6614; Com. ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Pittsburg & C. R. Co. 58 Pa. 45; State ex rel. Childs v. 48 L. R. A.

American Sav. & Loan Asso. 64 Minn. 349, 67 N. W. 1; Atty. Gen. v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 35 Wis. 530; People v. Ballard, 134 N. Y. 269, 17 L. R. A. 737, 32 N. E. 54; 2 Cook, Corp. § 635; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Com. 97 Ky. 675, 31 S. W. 476.

The attorney general is the proper officer to bring this action in the name of the state, and an injunction and receiver is the appropriate remedy.

3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1093; Atty. Gen. v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 35 Wis. 434; Ang. & A. Priv. Corp. § 734, p. 793; Com. v. Fowler, 10 Mass. 290; People v. Milk Exchange, 145 N. Y. 267, 27 L. R. A. 437, 39 N. E. 1062; People v. Geneva College, 5 Wend. 212; Stockton v. Central R. Co. 50 N. J. Eq. 52, 17 L. R. A. 97, 24 Atl. 964; State v. Moore, 19 Ala. 514; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 1043; Beach, Monopolies & Trusts, § 221; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Com. (Pa.) 4 Cent. Rep. 501, 7 Atl. 374.

Article 4, § 2, ¶ 4, of the Constitution provides: "The general assembly of this state shall have no power to authorize any corporation to buy shares or stock in any other corporation in this state or elsewhere."

The clause of the Constitution in question is self-operative, and needs no legislation to enforce it.

Hamilton v. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. 49 Fed. Rep. 424; Central R. Co. v. Collins, 40 Ga. 582; Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Woods, 88 Ala. 630, 7 L. R. A. 605, 7 So. 108; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, §§ 667-672; Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 139 U. S. 24, 35 L. ed. 55, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 478; Langdon v. Branch, 37 Fed. Rep. 449, sub nom. Langdon v. Central R. & Bkg. Co. 2 L. R. A. 120.

A constitutional provision is to be construed with reference to the principles of the common law.

6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 931; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 75; State ex rel. Hovey v. Noble, 118 Ind. 366, 4 L. R. A. 101, 21 N. E. 244.

The common law will be upheld in the absence of an apparent contrary intention.

McGinnis v. State, 9 Humph. 43, 49 Am. Dec. 607; Cadwallader v. Harris, 76 Ill. 370; Brown v. Fifield, 4 Mich. 322; State v. Lash, 16 N. J. L. 380, 32 Am. Dec. 397; Moyer v. Pennsylvania State Co. 71 Pa. 293.

The constitutional or statutory provision against the consolidation of competing railways includes any agreement whereby the roadbed, rolling stock, and equipment of one competing line are to be operated or controlled by another. The word is used in the sense of "join" or "unite," and is held to include leases by the one to the other.

6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 825; State ex rel. Leese v. Atchison & N. R. Co. 24 Neb. 164, 38 N. W. 43; Manchester & L. R. Co. v. Concord R. Corp. 66 N. H. 100, 9 L. R. A. 689, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 319, 20 Atl. 383; Currier v. Concord R. Corp. 48 N. H. 325; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Owens, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) § 384, p. 163; McCutcheon v. Merz Capsule Co. 71 Fed. Rep. 787, 37 U. S. App. 586, 19 C. C. A. 108, 31 L. R. A. 415; American Preservers' Trust v. Taylor Mfg. Co. 46 Fed. Rep. 152; People ex rel. Peabody v. Chicago Gas Trust Co. 130 Ill. 268, 8 L. R. A. 497, 22 N. E. 798; Pearson v. Concord R. Corp. 62 N. H. 537; Elkins v. Camden & A. R. Co. 36 N. J. Eq. 5; People v. North River Sugar Ref. Co. 121 N. Y. 582, 9 L. R. A. 33, 24 N. E. 834; Mallory v. Hanaur Oil Works, 86 Tenn. 598, 8 S. W. 396; Langdon v. Branch, 37 Fed. Rep. 449, sub nom. Langdon v. Central R. & Bkg. Co. 2 L. R. A. 120; Hamilton v. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. 49 Fed. Rep. 412; Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 139 U. S. 24, 35 L. ed. 55, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 478; East St. Louis Connecting R. Co. v. Jarvis 92 Fed. Rep. 735, 34 C. C. A. 639; Morrill v. Boston & M. R. Co. 55 N. H. 531; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. State, 72 Tex. 404, 1 L. R. A. 849, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 335, 10 S. W. 81; Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co. 101 U. S. 71, 25 L. ed. 950; Clarke v. Central R. & Bkg. Co. 50 Fed. Rep. 338, 15 L. R. A. 683; Stockton v. Central R. Co. 50 N. J. Eq. 52, 17 L. R. A. 97, 24 Atl. 964.

A railroad company has no power to lease its road unless the power has been expressly conferred upon it.

Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co. 101 U. S. 71, 25 L. ed. 950; Stockton v. Central R. Co. 50 N. J. Eq. 52, 17 L. R. A. 97, 24 Atl. 964; Black v. Delaware & R. Canal Co. 24 N. J. Eq. 456; Mills v. Central R. Co. 41 N. J. Eq. 4, 2 Atl. 453.

To warrant a lease, both companies must have the requisite authority; the one to make and the other to take the lease.

East Line & R. River R. Co. v. Rushing, 69 Tex. 313, 6 S. W. 834; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 691, 40 L. ed. 856, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 714; Stockton v. Central R. Co. 50 N. J. Eq. 52, 17 L. R. A. 102, 24 Atl. 964; Camden & A. R. Co. v. May's Landing & E. H. City R. Co. 48 N. J. L. 559, 7 Atl. 523; Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co. 101 U. S. 71, 25 L. ed. 950; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. 118 U. S. 309, 30 L. ed. 92, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1094; Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 139 U. S. 24, 35 L. ed. 55, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 478.

The consolidation of competing roads is without authority of law as against public policy and as tending to monopoly, and is a public injury.

People ex rel. Peabody v. Chicago Gas Trust Co. 130 Ill. 268, 8 L. R. A. 497, 22 N. E. 798; Richardson v. Buhl, 77 Mich. 632, 6 L. R. A. 457, 43 N. W. 1102; People v. North River Sugar Ref. Co. 121 N. Y. 582, 9 L. R. A. 33, 24 N. E. 834, 54 Hun. 354, 5 L. R. A. 386, 7 N. Y. Supp. 406; State ex rel. Watson v. Standard Oil Co. 49 Ohio St. 137, 15 L. R. A. 145, 30 N. E. 279; Morris Run Coal Co. v. Barclay Coal Co. 68 Pa. 184, 8 Am. Rep. 159.

Two lines of railroad need not be geographically parallel in order to be competing lines.

East St. Louis Connecting R. Co. v. Jarvis, 92 Fed. Rep. 735, 34 C. C. A. 639; East Line & R. River R. Co. v. State, 75 Tex. 434, 12 S. W. 690; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. State, 48 L. R. A.

72 Tex. 404, 1 L. R. A. 849, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 335, 10 S. W. 81; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Southern P. R. Co. 41 La. Ann. 970, 6 So. 888; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 677, 40 L. ed. 849, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 714.

The fact that rates of freight had not been raised, or that schedules had not been changed, or that there is no intention to do either, cannot affect the case.

Pearshall v. Great Northern R. Co. 161 U. S. 648, 40 L. ed. 839, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 705; State ex rel. Watson v. Standard Oil Co. 49 Ohio St. 137, 15 L. R. A. 159, 30 N. E. 279; Richardson v. Buhl, 77 Mich. 632, 6 L. R. A. 465, 43 N. W. 1102; Stockton v. Central R. Co. 50 N. J. Eq. 52, 17 L. R. A. 102, 24 Atl. 964.

A corporation cannot do any act, nor make any contract, not expressly nor impliedly authorized by its charter.

Central R. Co. v. Collins, 40 Ga. 582; Hazlehurst v. Savannah, G. & N. A. R. Co. 43 Ga. 13; Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co. 101 U. S. 71, 25 L. ed. 950; Marbury v. Tod, 22 U. S. App. 267, 62 Fed. Rep. 342, 10 C. C. A. 393; Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 139 U. S. 24, 35 L. ed. 55, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 478; Hamilton v. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. 49 Fed. Rep. 412; Frederick v. Augusta, 5 Ga. 561; McLeod v. Savannah, A. & G. R. Co. 25 Ga. 457; Vernon Shell Road Co. v. Savannah, 95 Ga. 389, 22 S. E. 625.

The bank has not only become an investor in the stock of other corporations not connected with its legitimate banking business, but it has by its own confession bought the entire stock of two railroad corporations.

It has transgressed all of the powers conferred upon it by its charter, and has embarked in a speculation to the amount of nearly twenty times its capital.

People ex rel. Peabody v. Chicago Gas Trust Co. 130 Ill. 268, 8 L. R. A. 504, 22 N. E. 798; Hazlehurst v. Savannah, G. & N. A. R. Co. 43 Ga. 13; Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co. 101 U. S. 71, 25 L. ed. 952.

Doubtful provisions of the charter are construed against the company.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 685, 40 L. ed. 853, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 714.

It is utterly without authority to make the purchase which it is admitted it has made; its ownership of the stock of these two railway corporations is illegal and void, ultra vires, and without authority of law; and the court should have appointed a receiver to take charge of all of these securities and dispose of them for the interest of those who are legitimately entitled to the proceeds, and, if the securities are out of the court's jurisdiction, then of the property.

Franklin Bank v. Commercial Bank, 36 Ohio St. 355, 38 Am. Rep. 594; Franklin Co. v. Lewiston Inst. for Savings, 68 Me. 46, 28 Am. Rep. 9; Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 139 U. S. 59, 35 L. ed. 68, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 478; Columbian Athletic Club v. State ex rel. McMahon, 143 Ind. 98, 28 L. R. A. 727, 40 N. E. 914; Smith, Receivers, 364, and note; Stockton v. Central R. Co. 50 N. J. Eq. 489, 25 Atl. 942.

Lewis, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 1st day of July, 1899, certain citizens of Fulton county, Georgia, filed with the governor of the state a petition charging that certain corporations, namely, the Trust Company of Georgia, the Atlanta Railway Company, and the Atlanta Railway & Power Company (formerly known as the Atlanta Consolidated Street-Railway Company), had, by certain contracts and agreements, violated art. 4, § 2, par. 4, of the Constitution of the state, and were about to enter into other contracts in violation of this clause of the Constitution. They prayed for an executive order requiring the attorney general to bring such suits in the name of the state as might be necessary to set aside such contracts and have them declared null and void. His excellency, the governor, passed an order directing a suit to be brought as prayed for; and accordingly the attorney general filed, in the name of the state, a petition in the superior court of Fulton county against the corporations named. This petition alleged, in substance, that the Atlanta Railway Company for a number of years operated lines of street railroads extending from the central portion of the city of Atlanta, along Forsyth, Fair, Cooper, Richardson, and other streets, to McPherson Barracks, outside of the city, and in Fulton county, Georgia, in one direction, and by way of Forsyth, Church, Ellis, and other streets, to Decatur, in Dekalb county, Georgia, in another direction; also, another line running along Forsyth, Cooper, and other streets to Grant Park, in said city. The Atlanta Railway Company purchased this property at receiver's sale, the former owner being the Atlanta Traction Company. The Atlanta Railway & Power Company during the same time operated competitive lines of street railroad running on Decatur street and other streets in the city of Atlanta, to Decatur; also, along Alabama and Pryor streets and Georgia avenue to Grant Park, in the city of Atlanta; and also along Fair street and Park avenue to Grant Park. Said company also operated a line out Whitehall street, in said city, and had lately applied for a franchise running on and along various streets to McPherson Barracks, for the purpose of constructing a competing line with the Barracks line of the Atlanta Railway Company. It finally changed this franchise and constructed a line practically to Ft. McPherson. This company (the Atlanta Railway & Power Company) also owned and operated a line out Edgewood avenue to Inman Park, and, beyond Inman Park, to and along Euclid avenue, to Moreland Park and the county line, where it paralleled and finally crossed the tracks of the Atlanta Railway Company. It also operated other lines competing with the Atlanta Railway Company at many points. The notable places of competition were in the vicinity of Grant Park, at Decatur, Moreland Park, Edgewood, the intersection of Pryor and Ormond streets, Whitehall and Fair streets, Peachtree and Ellis streets, Ellis street and Courtland avenue, Houston and Hilliard streets, Irwin and Jackson streets, Irwin street and the Boulevard. A map was attached to the petition, showing the various routes of the lines operated by the two companies. The petition further charged that the Trust Company of Georgia had recently, contrary to the Constitution and laws of the state, bought up all the stocks and securities of the Atlanta Railway Company, for the purpose of causing said company to convey all its property to the Atlanta Railway & Power Company, or whatever new company should be organized, in order to control both systems of railway, and for the same purpose bought up all or nearly all of the stock of said power company, and is now practically the holder of all the stock of both companies. The trust company caused to be elected for the principal officers of the Atlanta Railway Company the same persons who were managers of the Atlanta Railway & Power Company namely, Woodruff, elected president of each company; Hurt, superintendent of each company; and Glenn, the secretary of each company,—so that the Atlanta Railway Company passed under the complete management of the officers who controlled the other company. Practically all the stock and securities of both companies were held and owned by the Trust Company of Georgia, and the Atlanta Railway Company was operated by persons who controlled both the trust company and the Atlanta Railway & Power Company. The purpose of the managers of the trust company was to have the properties of both these corporations conveyed, so that one corporation would own, control, and operate both properties, to the destruction of competition between the two. The combination results in injury to property along the lines of the railways and at competing points, and with the exception of about 10 miles of tracks running along Walton and other streets to the Chattahoochee river, and lying mainly outside of the city limits, the other two lines of railway were the only two competing lines in the city. The petition alleges somewhat in detail that the effect of these contracts, which it attacks as illegal, has been to lessen competition at the various points named: that, since the reported combination of the two lines, the service and accommodations thereon have not been as satisfactory to the people generally, and especially to those patronizing the street railways. The petition charges that if the threatened illegal acts of the defendants were not enjoined, and the illegal combination be allowed to stand, the street-railway accommodations and facilities of the city of Atlanta, and the means of transportation for the people of Fulton and Dekalb counties, and of the cities of Atlanta, Decatur, Edgewood, and Oakland City, and the people of the state visiting this territory, will be placed in the sole control and power of one corporation, competition will be excluded, and the rates of fare controlled in the interest of those connected with the monopoly. One among the prayers of the petition was that the trust company be enjoined "from voting said stock in the Atlanta Railway & Power Company, and said stock in Atlanta Railway Company," and that the two railway companies be enjoined from receiving the votes of said stock controlled by the trust company; that the Atlanta Railway & Power Company be enjoined from purchasing or acquiring the ownership, control, or operation of the lines of railway, franchises, and property of the Atlanta Railway Company, and that it be enjoined from selling its roads, railways, franchises, etc., to the Atlanta Railway & Power Company, or any other corporation, that will have the effect to defeat or lessen competition or to encourage monopoly; that the defendant corporations be enjoined from entering into any agreement whatever by which the properties of said two railway companies would be consolidated, merged, or combined; that a receiver be appointed by the court to take possession of the stocks and bonds of the Atlanta Railway Company, to hold, manage, and dispose of the same under the orders and direction of the court, in order that competition may be preserved, which was guaranteed to the public, and the public interests protected. There was a prayer that a restraining order be granted, restraining the defendant corporations from doing or performing the acts against which injunction was prayed until the final hearing of the cause. To this petition each of the defendant companies filed demurrers upon various grounds; and the trust company, the Atlanta Railway Company, and the Atlanta Railway & Power Company filed their answers, specifically answering the charges in the petition, denying its various allegations about defeating or lessening competition, or tending to defeat or lessen competition; denying that the two railway systems were competing lines, in the sense of the Constitution and laws of the state; and setting up advantages that would accrue to the public generally if the two systems were consolidated, and particularly in respect to the reduction of fares by transfer tickets from the lines of one to the other, which would often enable passengers to travel for one fare on various routes through the city, which would otherwise require the payment of two fares. In this way expense in the operation of these various lines would be greatly reduced, accommodations and conveniences to the traveling public increased, roads better equipped, etc.

48 L. R. A.

At the September term, 1899, of the superior court of Fulton county, the case came on to be heard on the prayers above stated, for injunction, receiver, etc., before Judge John S. Candler, of the Stone Mountain circuit, who presided because of the disqualification of Judge J. H. Lumpkin, of the Atlanta circuit. Quite a volume of evidence was introduced, both in behalf of the plaintiff and defendants. The decision of the judge on the issues made by the demurrers and answers was reserved until November 7, 1899. He enjoined the Trust Company of Georgia from selling or transferring any of the stock or bonds owned by it in and of the Atlanta Railway Company and the Atlanta Railway & Power Company, and from transferring any of the stock or bonds of the latter company to the Atlanta Railway Company, and from transferring the stock or bonds of either of the railway companies to any other company or association of persons the object of which transfer would bring about the consolidation of said street-railroad companies into one company. The Atlanta Railway & Power Company was enjoined from purchasing or in any way acquiring the possession or control of any of the stock or bonds of the Atlanta Railway Company, and the latter company was enjoined from purchasing or acquiring any of the stock or bonds of the Atlanta Railway & Power Company. Both companies were enjoined from taking up any of the tracks of their respective lines, or from discontinuing the running of reasonable schedules upon the same, without first obtaining the consent of the city or county authorities from whom they hold franchises, or without further order from the court, in cases where said lines of road are not located in the streets of any city or town, or where the public roads are not occupied under franchises granted by county authorities. The judge denied the prayer for the appointment of a receiver, and further provided in his judgment that as the interests of the two defendant street-railroad companies, as well as those of the public, may be subserved by the interchange of business between said roads, and by transfer of passengers from the lines of one road to those of the other, they were permitted to make any physical connections with the rails of each other, and enter into such traffic arrangement as may be necessary to enable each of said companies to grant transfers or interchangeable tickets over the lines of the other. To this judgment of the court the defendant companies, in their bill of exceptions, assign error.

1. It appears from the record that the defendants' counsel called upon the plaintiff or its attorneys to produce, upon notice which had been duly served, the contracts between the parties petitioning the governor to direct the suit brought, and also the contract under which the attorneys filing the suit were employed. In the bill of exceptions complaint is made that the court erred in not requiring the production of the papers called for. In the argument of the case here in behalf of plaintiffs in error, it is contended that the contracts made by the parties petitioning the governor would have disclosed that rival interests were actuating this proceeding, and that the contracts between counsel for defendant in error and their clients would have disclosed that their authority was limited to appearing before the mayor and council of Atlanta to prevent the removal of the tracks on Richardson street alone. It appears from the evidence that a petition was presented by the president of the Atlanta Railway Company to the city council of Atlanta, asking for the privilege of removing the tracks of that company on Richardson street. This was protested against by certain citizens on that street, whereupon the application for removal of such tracks was withdrawn by the president of that company. It further appears that the names of those persons appearing in the petition presented to the governor for this suit were some of the citizens on that street. We think it was immaterial in this case to have entered into an investigation as to the motives of the parties who petitioned the governor for the institution of this suit, with the view of determining whether the cause of action was properly brought. That question—as to whether the action is well brought or maintainable—must necessarily depend upon the pleadings before the court trying the case, and the evidence introduced in support thereof. The court trying the issue has nothing to do with the motives actuating the parties who instigated the proceedings before the governor. The governor is presumed to take care of himself in such matters, and we do not think that his action is the subject-matter of review by the courts in a case that he has directed to be brought. We are inclined to the opinion that the attorney general has the power to institute suits necessary to the protection of the interests of the state (in a case, for instance, where the state's property is involved, or where public rights are jeopardized) without direction from the governor; but when directed by the governor, as in this case, to proceed, he has no discretion in the matter, but should obey the mandates of the chief executive. Whether or not the action is maintainable is dependent at last upon the pleadings and the evidence introduced in support thereof, and not upon the motives inspiring those at whose instance the governor was induced to order the suit filed.

2. Among the several grounds of demurrer, the main one that seems to be relied upon by counsel for plaintiffs in error is that the suit was improperly brought in the name of the state for injunction, but that quo warranto was the proper remedy for the wrongs complained of, and the proceeding should be on the relation of the attorney general. Upon this point neither the authorities in England nor in this country are entirely reconcilable; some holding that the remedy by injunction in favor of the state will not lie to restrain a corporation from the exercise of powers ultra vires, and others holding that this is the proper remedy. We have reached the conclusion that the sounder reasoning is in favor of allowing to the state relief by injunction whenever it is proceeding in the interest of the public to prevent a threatened injury. As harsh as the remedy by injunction is generally considered, it is certainly not as severe as would be a proceeding in the nature of quo warranto, instituted for the purpose of forfeiting the charter of a corporation. The one is instituted, not for the purpose of causing a destruction of the corporation, but to prevent it from entering into transactions violative of the public policy of the state, and to protect the interest of the public against a threatened wrong. The other remedy, if enforced, would cause the death of the corporation,—thus forever preventing it from serving the public interests or meeting the public demands upon its business,—and often result in a wreckage of the property of its owners. We can, therefore, see no reason why, if the remedy for the wrongs threatened can be as well prevented by injunction, it would not be the more readily and properly applied, than the harsher one of forfeiture or confiscation. This question is discussed in 2 Cook, Corp. p. 1223, § 635. It is there recognized that the state has four remedies for relief against corporations exercising powers ultra vires: (1) The legislature may repeal the charter of the corporation, under the reserved right of the state to repeal; (2) or the state may institute a proceeding to forfeit the charter for misuser of powers; (3) or such proceeding may be only to oust the corporation from the exercise of the usurped power; (4) or, according to some authorities, a suit may be commenced in equity for an injunction restraining the corporation from committing the ultra vires acts. On page 1227, however, the author says: "It is very doubtful whether the state may file a bill in equity to enjoin a corporation from committing an ultra vires act. The remedy of the state is quo warranto." The author recognizes, however, considerable English and American authorities to the contrary. In this same connection he declares: "The state may enjoin a railroad corporation from purchasing a competing line in violation of the Constitution." We gather from the entire text that the author seems to conclude that the weight of authority is that the remedy of the state is by quo warranto, and not by bill in equity for an injunction; but we do not think all the authorities cited in support of the text fully sustain it. For instance, in the case of Atty. Gen. v. Great Northern R. Co. 1 Drew. & S. 154, it was held that the attorney general cannot enjoin a corporate act merely because it is ultra vires. Some injury to the public must be involved. The attorney general's suit, at the instance of a manufacturer, to enjoin one railroad from leasing its rolling stock to another, failed. This decision probably at last gives the clew by which apparent conflict of authorities on this subject may be reconciled, and we think it is the correct doctrine. The state has no right to an adjudication by the courts declaring void such contracts merely and solely for the reason that they are ultra vires, but she is entitled to this relief when injury to the public is involved.

4S L. R. A.

This question was directly made in the case of Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Com. 97 Ky. 675, 31 S. W. 476. It was there held: "A court of equity has jurisdiction in an action by the state to enjoin a corporation from exceeding its chartered powers, or doing acts otherwise illegal and injurious to the public. Therefore the state may by injunction prevent a railroad company from consummating the purchase of a 'parallel or competing line' in violation of § 201 of the state Constitution." This case was carried to the Supreme Court of the United States, and there the judgment was affirmed. See Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 677, 40 L. ed. 849, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 714. In Atty. Gen. v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 35 Wis. 425 et seq., this right of the state, acting through the attorney general, and the remedy by injunction, are clearly recognized. See headnotes 4 and 43. In that case an elaborate opinion was written, thoroughly discussing this subject, which will appear on pages 523 to 553, where the decisions both in England and this country are well considered and analyzed. It was there concluded that the English court of chancery entertains jurisdiction in such cases, and it was declared that the "English books leave little room for a denial of such jurisdiction." On page 532 it is stated: "We have not found this jurisdiction as directly and succinctly stated in American treatises as in English, although it is fully recognized by the best of our elementary writers." The author quotes from 2 Redf. Railways, the following principle: "Injunctions in courts of equity, to restrain railways from exceeding the powers of their charters, or committing irreparable injury to other persons, natural or artificial, have been common for a long time in England and this country." Says the court in the Wisconsin case above cited, on page 524, in speaking of the right to proceed by injunction: "It seems to proceed on the presumption that it may better serve the public interest to restrain a corporation than to punish it by penal remedies, or to forfeit its charter." In Atty. Gen. v. Delaware & B. B. R. Co. 27 N. J. Eq. 631, it was decided: "The attorney general has the right, where the property of the sovereign or the interests of the public are directly concerned, to institute suit for their protection by an information at law or in equity, without a relator." See also Stockton v. Central R. Co. 50 N. J. Eq. 52, 17 L. R. A. 97, 24 Atl. 964, where the court enjoined a lease, upon application of the attorney general, when its effect was to create a combination in transportation of coal, and to destroy competition in production and sale. See also State v. Merchants' Ins. & Trust Co. 8 Humph. 235, 254, where an insurance company was restrained from banking. We quote the following from 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. p. 1623, § 1093: "When the managing body are doing or are about to do an ultra vires act, of such a nature as to produce public mischief, the attorney general, as the representative of the public and of the government, may maintain an equitable suit for preventive relief." In a note to that text it is recognized that some of the cases seem to hold that the attorney general may thus interfere to restrain every ultra vires proceeding of a corporation, on the ground that the public and governmental rights must necessarily be invaded thereby. But it is declared, "The later decisions, however, have established the limitation as stated in the text."

As far as our investigation has extended in reviewing the authorities cited to the contrary in the text-books and by counsel for plaintiffs in error, we fail to find such conflict as seems to be contended for. For instance, in the case of Atty. Gen. v. Tudor Ice Co. 104 Mass. 239, 6 Am. Rep. 227, it was simply decided that there was no jurisdiction in equity of an information by the attorney general against a private trading corporation whose proceedings are not shown to have injured or endangered any public or private rights, and are objected to solely on the ground that they are not authorized by the act of incorporation, and are therefore against public policy. Gray, J., in his opinion in that case, on page 242, Am. Rep., page 230, draws a clear distinction between that case and modern English cases upon the subject. He says: "The modern English cases cited in support of this information were of suits against public bodies or officers exceeding the powers conferred upon them by law, or against corporations vested with the power of eminent domain, and doing acts which were deemed inconsistent with rights of the public." In Atty. Gen. v. Utica Ins. Co. 2 Johns. Ch. 371, it was held that equity had no jurisdiction over offenses against a public statute, or to restrain a person from carrying on business of banking in violation of a certain act of the legislature; and a motion to enjoin by the attorney general was refused. But in the opinion delivered in that case, on page 377, it was stated that the acts complained of were too much in the nature of a criminal offense, penalty being prescribed therefor by the statute; and on pages 378-380 of the same opinion it appears that no public mischief was threatened in that case, and hence it was distinguished from several cases cited in which this remedy was recognized as a proper one in case public interests were involved. Our conclusion, therefore, both from reason and a decided weight of authority, is that the state, in her sovereign capacity, can appeal to the courts for relief by injunction, whenever either her property is involved, or public interests are threatened and jeopardized by any corporation—especially one of a public nature, like a railroad company—seeking to transcend its powers and to violate the public policy of the state. We think this court has clearly recognized this sovereign right of the state. As stated by Judge Warner in case of Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Macon, 43 Ga. 642: "If the state had any interest in the controversy, it was in her sovereign capacity, as the representative of the whole people of the state, and should have appeared before the court in her sovereign capacity, by the appropriate mode of procedure in such cases." We are equally well satisfied of the correctness of the proposition that, if the state has no interest in the matter in controversy, she will not be heard to ask for such extraordinary relief, and she can have no interest unless her property rights or the public interests are involved. The allegations in the petition for such relief in this case are sufficiently full, clear, and explicit touching the rights of the public involved to give the court jurisdiction of the complaint, and we therefore think there was no error in overruling the demurrer to the petition.

It is further contended by counsel for plaintiffs in error that the constitutional provision in question is not self-active, and that some legislation was necessary in order to give a court of equity jurisdiction to grant the extraordinary relief prayed for. This question was practically decided in the case of State v. Central of Georgia R. Co. (decided at this term) 35 S. E. 37, where it was held that the provision in the Constitution in question declared no new principle, but was simply the embodiment of the common law. In sustaining the jurisdiction of courts of chancery in such matters, both in England and this country, the decisions are really based upon the principles of the common law, and not upon special legislation prescribing the particular procedure that should be instituted in court in such cases. This will clearly appear by an investigation into the cases above cited.

3. It is further contended that under the Constitution (Civil Code, § 5800) the provision in relation to corporations buying shares or stock in any other corporation has no reference whatever to the effect of such purchases upon competition or monopoly, and that they are absolutely void, although they may have no tendency to defeat or lessen competition or to encourage monopoly. We think that this is an entire misconception of this provision in the Constitution. The prohibition against the legislative grant to corporations of power to buy shares of stock in another corporation is clearly qualified by that portion of the section cited which restricts such purchases only when they have the effect, or are intended to have the effect, to defeat or lessen competition in their respective businesses, or to encourage monopoly. This necessarily follows from the punctuation of the clause itself. That portion of it in relation to the purchase of shares or stock is only separated from the balance of the sentence by a comma, and the relative clause that follows with the words "which may have the effect," we think, was evidently intended to relate to what was said about shares and stock, just as much as to the words "contract or agreement." If the convention that framed the Constitution intended to enact an absolute prohibition against the purchase of shares or stock by one corporation from another, their meaning could have been made manifest and clear by a separation of the first clause, either by a period or semicolon from what followed; and, if such had been the purpose of the convention, the construction of the sentence, as to its punctuation, would evidently have been quite different. Besides, the view of an absolute prohibition of such a sale and purchase would be entirely inconsistent with the provision in the Constitution just preceding, embodied in § 5799 of the Civil Code. In that section the policy is indicated of encouraging "any existing road to take stock in or aid in the building of any branch road." Our view of this question has been the uniform construction placed upon this provision 48 L. R. A.

in the Constitution by the legislature after its adoption. One of the first charters granted by the legislature after the adoption of this Constitution will be found in Acts 1878-79, p. 196, where the power of a corporation to invest its money "in any good stocks" was granted. Various acts were passed by subsequent legislatures delegating to corporations the power of purchasing and selling stock. It is true, such acts would be void if clearly shown to be in violation of a constitutional provision; but we think the legislative construction in this matter was reasonable and proper, and, if there be any serious doubt as to what the convention meant by the words employed, the benefit should be given to the interpretation placed upon it by the legislative branch of the government, and acted on for over twenty years by the people of the state in transactions involving important rights. See Pulaski County v. Thompson, 83 Ga. 274, 275, 9 S. E. 1065. We are cited by counsel for plaintiffs in error to the decision of Judge Speer in the case of Hamilton v. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. 49 Fed. Rep. 412. It will be seen in the opinion, on page 422, that Judge Speer indorsed a statement relating to this question, made by Mr. Walter G. Charlton, in which an analysis of the section of the Constitution under consideration was made, to the effect that what the provision meant was that the general assembly shall have no power to authorize any corporation to buy shares or stock in any other corporation in this state or elsewhere, which may have the effect, or be intended to have the effect, to defeat or lessen competition in their respective businesses.

4. It was further contended by counsel for plaintiffs in error that street-railway companies, from their very nature, do not fall within the provisions of statutes or constitutions prohibiting combinations to defeat competition. From the language in § 5800, it was evidently the intent to apply the principle to all corporations; for it declares, "The general assembly of this state shall have no power to authorize any corporation to buy shares or stock," etc. There is certainly, then, nothing in the words to authorize the inference that street-railway companies were not contemplated, just as much as any other corporation. This construction of the Constitution was placed on it by the legislature under Acts 1890-91, p. 170, embodied in § 2184 of the Civil Code. There the power was given street-railroad companies to lease or sell their roads, franchises, and other property to any other corporation for street-railroad purposes; but it is stipulated that the act shall not be construed to authorize any such company to sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of any of its property or franchises so as to defeat or lessen competition or to encourage monopoly. The only authority relied on by counsel is Booth, Street Railways, § 429, which simply refers to a decision on this subject by the supreme court of Pennsylvania. The case referred to is Gyger v. Philadelphia City Pass. R. Co. 136 Pa. 96, sub nom. Montgomery v. Philadelphia City Pass. R. Co. 9 L.

R. A. 369, 20 Atl. 399. It was simply held in that case that, on account of the meaning in which the terms "railroad" and "railway" were used in the Constitution of Pennsylvania, the word "railroad" applied to steam railroads and "railway" to street railways, and that therefore the provision in the Constitution against consolidation of "railroads" with parallel or competing lines did not apply to street-railway companies, and the latter, though parallel, would not be enjoined from consolidating. It is quite patent, then, that this authority has no bearing upon the question before us; for the word employed in the Constitution of this state is neither "railroad" nor "railway," but "any corporation." It is true, it may be a much more difficult matter to show that by a consolidation of street railways in a populous city any effect is had upon competition and monopoly contemplated by the Constitution. On page 108, 136 Pa., page 371, 9 L. R. A., and page 400, 20 Atl., in the Pennsylvania case cited, Green, J., delivering the opinion, said: "It is quite clear that the sense of 'competing,' which is the essential sense of the prohibition, is not applicable to the travel upon the streets of cities and towns over passenger railways." He further said: "The travel over parallel streets is not necessarily a competing travel. Each street has travel of its own, which is conducted upon its own railway." But the argument of the court in that case only tends to show the greater difficulty in showing a defeating or lessening of competition, to the injury of the public, by combining two parallel street-car lines, than would be the case between two steam railroads engaged in competition for traffic between distant points. The question is, at last, one of fact, and, in its adjudication in any particular case, the courts should be governed by the fundamental principle as to whether there was such a creation of a monopoly or defeating of competition as would result in injury to the public.

5. It is further insisted that the Trust Company of Georgia has, under its charter, no power to purchase stock in other corporations. It is claimed that it was chartered as a banking company, and that the investing in stock in railroad companies has nothing whatever to do with the business for which it was created. It is true that this trust company was incorporated, by an act approved September 21, 1891, as the Commercial Travellers' Savings Bank. See 2 Acts 1890-91, pp. 310-313. That act was amended so as to change the name and capital stock. See Acts 1893, p. 142. In the original act are incorporated, and made a part of its charter, the provisions in §§ 6, 7, 8, and 11 of an act to incorporate the Oglethorpe Savings & Trust Company, approved December 18, 1886. By reference to the provisions in that act, it will be seen that there was an unmistakable delegation of power by the legislature to this Commercial Travelers' Savings Bank (now known as the Trust Company of Georgia) to purchase stock. It further appears from the record that, while it was chartered as a banking company, 48 L. R. A.

other powers were given it, almost ad infinitum, and that the main business it has been following is that of a trust company, rather than a regular banking company. It is insisted by counsel that there was at common law no power in any corporation to purchase stock in another; but it is equally true that at common law corporations had no power to make contracts, or enter into transactions that would defeat competition or promote monopoly. But it has never been questioned that, in the absence of any constitutional provision on the subject, the legislature can confer such power upon corporations. The truth is that a corporation, which is a creature of the state, can exercise no power except what is delegated to it, expressly or impliedly, by its creator, the legislature. This power of purchasing stock the Trust Company of Georgia has, under its charter, and the only limitation upon it is that it cannot exercise it for the purpose of creating a monopoly or defeating competition, to the injury of the public.

6. The only question remaining in this case for consideration is whether or not, under the evidence before the judge below on the trial of this application for temporary injunction, such wrong, injury, or damage to the public interests was either contemplated or threatened as would justify a court of equity in granting the prayers of the petition. The interpretation given the word "competition" in the case of State v. Central of Georgia R. Co. (decided at this term) 35 S. E. 37, renders it unnecessary to enter into a further discussion of that subject. It is well enough, however, to bear in mind in this connection the vast difference between the business of street-railway companies, constructed generally simply for the purpose of passenger travel from one portion of a city to another, and steam-railroad companies, whose business is the transportation of freight and passengers for long distances, and involving business in extensive territory. The Atlanta Railway & Power Company (formerly known as the Consolidated Street-Railway Company) owned and operated about 65 miles of street-car lines. This company was formed in 1891 by a consolidation of half a dozen street-car companies, each of which operated independently a line of small mileage,—some run by dummy, and some by horse or mule power, and none of them having systems of transfers, or extending through lines across the city. The evidence shows that in many instances these lines were parallel to each other, running upon streets only a block apart for considerable distances, and at many places crossing or intersecting each other. These systems were in 1891 brought together and consolidated, not only under authority given by the city council of Atlanta, but under general and special legislative enactments of the general assembly. See Civil Code, § 2184. For the special act on this subject, see Acts 1890-91, vol. 1, p. 279, where the Metropolitan Street-Railroad Company was authorized to extend and operate its road in any part of Dekalb and Cobb counties, increase its stock to $1, 000,000, and to sell its railroad property and franchises to any other company; also to purchase property and franchises of any other company, or to unite with the same, and in such event to change its name to the Consolidated Street-Railroad Company of Atlanta. See also special acts in same volume, on pages 283, 340. After this consolidation the lines were electrically equipped. It does not appear that there has been any opposition to this consolidation during the eight or nine years of its operation, and the record indicates that it was of great benefit to the public, by the connection of disconnected lines, and affording to the public generally much greater facilities for transportation. The other defendant, the Atlanta Railway Company, comprised a system of about 15 miles of street-car lines. It was composed of two companies, known as the Atlanta Street-Railroad Company and the Atlanta Traction Company. These two companies after existing for several years, became unsuccessful in business, passed into the hands of a receiver, and were finally consolidated by purchase and combination as the Atlanta Railway Company. This last-named company has never paid any dividends to its stockholders, according to the evidence, and had acquired from the city franchises to enter territory into which no street-car lines had been built, but, for want of means, was unable to avail itself of this privilege. It is contended in behalf of counsel for the Trust Company of Georgia that that company realized that the Atlanta Railway Company was not in a position to complete the lines under the franchises it had acquired, thus making of it a really important system, and if the lines of that company should then be connected with those of the Atlanta Railway & Power Company, and transfers issued to and from all the lines of the entire system, there would be an increase in the volume of business, because of increase in facilities to the public, and that the public would even be more benefited by this arrangement than it had been by the consolidation in 1891. It was made patent that with the disconnected lines a passenger, by paying the usual fare of 5 cents, could only go in one direction, and only to a point on the line which he first takes; and, with the separate lines connected, one could start upon any line of the system, and for the same fare, by procuring a transfer to any other line in the system, he could reach at the same expense any point upon any of the lines that are controlled by the entire system. It further appears from the evidence that a street-car company could not be operated, except at a loss, unless there was considerable patronage from those resident along the route of line it operated; that short-trip passengers left a profit with the company which would pay the expenses of transporting the one taking the long trip. We think the evidence in this record fully sustains the conclusion, to say the least of it, that the consolidation of these two lines would probably lead to granting the public generally along their routes greater and less expensive facilities and conveniences of transportation. This is certainly a most important consideration, when a court of chancery is appealed to, to restrain by injunction the accomplishment of such an end, for the only business of street-car companies is the transportation of passengers who patronize their lines. This record indicates there was on the trial below testimony from over 100 witnesses to the effect that a combination of these two systems as contemplated would inure to the general interests of the people interested in the operation of these roads as means of transportation. After a careful review of the entire testimony in the case, which consumed about one and one half days of our time in its investigation, we have reached the conclusion that there is really no serious conflict among the witnesses touching the general effect upon the public interest of the transactions sought to be enjoined. The main point of conflict seems to us to be limited to certain intersections and terminal points of these two railway companies. There was quite a quantity of evidence introduced in behalf of the state showing competition at some intersections of these roads within the city, and also at some of their terminal points. There was, on the other hand, much evidence in behalf of the railway companies showing that whatever competition existed at these points was insignificant in its nature, and amounted to nothing compared to the extent of the business transacted by the companies. There was testimony in behalf of the state to the effect that, while these two lines were running absolutely independent one of the other, schedules at some points were so arranged as to be more convenient to the public; and, on the other hand, there was testimony in behalf of the railway companies to show that at other points schedules and accommodations to the public were increased since the two roads were acting more in harmony one with the other. In this connection we will allude to the Decatur lines of the two roads as being the lines which, counsel seem to insist upon, were most strongly in competition with one another. This line of the power company runs from near the center of the city of Decatur, on the north side of the stream railroad. The other line also runs from near the center of the city, on the south side of the steam railroad. They both terminate in the town of Decatur, at points about 500 or more feet apart. Under the evidence there was no competition whatever, it seems, between them after leaving Decatur along their routes to the city, their distance being about a mile or more apart; and the evidence shows that the amount of business at Decatur, where there was some competition for passengers en route to Atlanta, did not amount to more than 8 per cent of the entire business of the line. We will not undertake to give in this connection a synopsis of the conflicting evidence touching the competing points on these lines particularly at Grant Park, Oakland, Ft. McPherson, and some points of intersection on the streets. Our conclusion is that the evidence, fairly considered, is that the competition at these points is unimportant and insignificant when compared to what appears to be the general interests of the public, and to the amount of business done by these companies along their lines where no manner of competition exists at all. Street-car companies, like all other transportation companies, should be operated in such a way as to afford the greatest convenience, comfort, and facilities for traveling to the greatest number of people who live near enough their lines to want, and to be able readily, to use them for transportation. It is utterly impracticable for the same facilities to be granted every one, so that the people at every point would fare exactly alike; and, when the question arises whether a few shall suffer some inconsiderable inconvenience by the inauguration of a system which is of advantage to the general public, we know of no safer principle to apply than the old adage of "the greatest good to the greatest number." In any event, as we think we have shown both by reason and authority, whenever the state proceeds in such a matter in its sovereign capacity, in law the foundation of its action must be based upon the public good, and when it fails to show any danger to the public interests a right of action of this sort fails.

The judge below, in his decision, states that the determination of the matter before him "rests upon the finding as to the truth of the following questions of fact, viz.: Does the consolidation of these two street railroads in question defeat competition at any point on any of their lines? Does it tend to defeat competition? Does it lessen competition? If either proposition, under the evidence offered, is determined in favor of the petitioner, then such consolidation will be violative of the organic law of the state, and will not be permitted." It is true, this court has repeatedly decided, and it is unquestionably a sound rule in such matters, that when a decision of the court below granting an interlocutory injunction is based upon a conflict of evidence, if there be sufficient testimony to sustain the judgment of the court below, under the law, its discretion in granting or refusing an injunction will not be controlled. The question involved in this case, as well as in nearly all cases which are litigated, depends upon the facts developed by the evidence. But evidently, from the decision itself, we think the judge below, in reaching a conclusion on the case, has applied to it a wrong principle of law. His conclusion is that if the consolidation of the two street railroads defeats competition at any point on any of their lines, or tends to defeat such competition, or lessen it, the courts will interfere to restrain and set aside such a combination. This thought in his opinion, coupled with the character of the evidence in this record, which we have only in general terms undertaken to outline above, we think necessarily leads to the conclusion of misconception on the part of the judge below as to the true meaning and spirit of the Constitution and laws of the state on this subject, as construed by this court in the case of State v. Central of Georgia R. Co. We therefore conclude that the judgment of the court below granting the injunction prayed for should be reversed.

We have said nothing in the foregoing opinion touching the allegations in the pleadings and the evidence in regard to the Atlanta Railway Company removing its tracks from Richardson street. The judge below, in his judgment, enjoins the street-railroad companies from taking up any of the tracks of their respective lines. In the bill of exceptions the plaintiffs in error expressly "except to so much of the order as prohibits them from taking up any part of the tracks of their respective lines, except the track of the Atlanta Railway Company on Richardson street, particularly referred to in the petition." The effect of not excepting to that portion of the order leaves that part of the court's order unaffected by this judgment. In giving the reasons for his judgment, the judge below says: "Where these lines are in cities, and where they hold their franchises from city government, it is possible for them to be controlled; but large parts of the lines of each of these companies are located outside of cities, and are not even located on public roads." We think, however, in the consideration of this case, although some of the lines run in the country and in an adjoining county, yet all of them being connected with the lines permeating the city in various directions, constituting a comparatively small portion of a grand system of street railways, the effect of consolidation upon the public generally should be considered, including, not only the interests of the people in the country,—and, so far as the record discloses, they do not seem to be complaining,—but also the people interested in all portions of the lines. In the latter part of his decision the judge states: "Believing, further, that the interests of the two defendant street-railroad companies, as well as those of the public, may be subserved by the interchange of business between said roads, and by transfer of passengers from the lines of one of the roads to those of the other, said companies are permitted to make any physical connections with the rails of each other, and they are further permitted to enter into any traffic arrangement which may be necessary to enable each of said companies to grant transfers or interchangeable tickets over the lines of the other." The evidence is uncontradicted that the purpose of the transactions among the defendant companies was substantially to effect this result; that the trust company purchased the stock in both companies, and the bonds in one of them, none of which it now holds, but, it seems, had sold or hypothecated them for the purpose of raising money, partly with the view of carrying out this scheme, and also with the view of aiding the Atlanta Railway Company in completing its contemplated lines through territory and to points in the city where, it seems, there are but little or no street-car accommodations. While the judge seems to recognize in this connection the public interests, yet the effect of his injunction, it seems to us, would be to restrain the parties in such a way that they could not avail themselves of the means of accomplishing the end which he himself thinks desirable.

Judgment reversed.

All the Justices concur.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

TERRE HAUTE & INDIANAPOLIS RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

Alfred FOWLER, Admr. of Robert P. Fowler, Deceased.

(.....Ind.....)

1. The conductor of a freight train, who takes the engine and goes forward a mile or two from a station by order of the road superintendent, to see whether certain culverts are safe, or whether they have been injured by a recent heavy storm, is within the scope of his employment while riding on the engine between two of such culverts over a trestle, which breaks down, causing his death.
2. The breaking of a railroad trestle by a flood and the drift carried thereby renders the railroad company liable to an employee injured thereby, on the ground of negligence, if the character of the flood and drift is such as might reasonably be anticipated.
3. The question whether or not a flood which broke a railroad trestle was such as could have been reasonably anticipated is for the jury.
4. The negligence of the conductor of a freight train in going forward with the engine to examine culverts after a storm, under the order of the roadmaster, is a question for the jury.

(February 23, 1900.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Montgomery County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John G. Williams and Thomas & Whittington for appellant.

Messrs. Crane & Anderson for appellee.

Hadley, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Suit by appellee to recover damages for wrongfully causing the death of Robert P. Fowler. After formal averments, it is alleged in the complaint that "for twenty-five years prior to the 1st day of March, 1896, said road was carried over a stream in said

Montgomery county, known as 'Walnut fork,' on a Howe truss bridge of one span of about 150 feet between the abutments on the banks of said stream; that the bottom of said bridge was about 25 feet above the bed of said stream, which at that point consisted of smooth rock in place; that said stream flowed between well-defined banks about 150 feet apart, and said road and said bridge crossed said stream at an angle of about 30 degrees; that said stream, at the place crossed by said bridge, has a great fall, and for some distance above said bridge the current is very rapid, and the stream approaches said bridge upon a curve or bend, being about 300 feet up stream from the bridge; that said stream has always been accustomed to sudden and great floods, rising with great rapidity, and carrying great quantities of water and driftwood down said stream and under said bridge, frequently rising to a height of 12 or 15 feet above the ordinary flow of the water; that frequently, during the time prior to the taking down of said bridge, as hereinafter alleged, said stream rose suddenly to a height of 12 or 15 feet above the ordinary stage, carrying with it large quantities of driftwood, consisting in part of logs, stumps, and tops of large trees, all of which safely passed through and under said bridge without injury thereto or to said railroad, of all of which facts then, and at all times thereafter, the defendant had full notice and knowledge; that on the said 1st day of March, 1896, the defendant removed said bridge, and in the place thereof carelessly, negligently, and unskillfully constructed and placed on the smooth surface of the bottom rock of said stream another bridge, consisting of a series of bents constructed of pine timber about 16 inches square, resting on mudsills placed upon the smooth surface of said rock bottom, without stays or anchors or other fastenings to hold them in place, at about an angle of 30 degrees with the thread of the stream, and at right angles with the line of said road; that twelve of said bents were placed parallel to each other, at the angle and in the manner aforesaid, on said rock bottom, 12 feet apart, and in such position with reference to said stream that an unobstructed opening of 1 to 2 feet was left for the passage of water and driftwood between said bents; that said bents acted as an obstruction to the flow of said stream, and caught the driftwood in time of high water; that about 6 o'clock on the afternoon of July 28, 1896, while said trestlework was standing as aforesaid, a heavy and severe rain fell in said county, along the line of said stream, above said trestlework, and said stream rose suddenly to a height of about 10 feet above the ordinary stage of said stream, carrying upon and against said trestlework large quantities of drift, stumps, and large trees, which lodged against said trestlework, and about 12 o'clock P. M. of said day the force of the current of said stream, and the back-water caused by said trestlework and drift, forced said bents out of position, and carried them several feet down stream, and out of line with said road, and so destroyed said trestle that it was impossible for a locomotive engine or train to cross the same with safety; that on said July 28, 1896, plaintiff's decedent was in the employ of the defendant in the capacity of a conductor of a freight train, and upon said day had in charge a freight train running from Terre Haute to Logansport; that plaintiff's decedent arrived with his train at 11:30 P. M. on said day at Crawfordsville Junction, a point on said road about 1 mile south of said trestlework, and was there informed by John S. Brothers, who was then road superintendent of said road, of the severe rainstorm above mentioned, and of apprehended danger to said road at a culvert about halfway between said junction and said trestlework, and at another place a mile or so north of and beyond said trestlework; that said Brothers was the roadmaster of defendant, having in charge the care, maintenance, and inspection of the line of said road, and knew and had knowledge of the condition of the roadbed, bridges, and trestles, and resided in Crawfordsville, in said county, within 1 mile of said trestlework, and upon the night of said storm was looking after the line of said road to ascertain the extent of the injuries that might have resulted from said storm; that said Brothers was at said junction, and informed decedent of the apprehended injuries to said road at the two points above mentioned, and no others, and, after said Brothers and said decedent had consulted with reference to said matters, said locomotive was detached from said train, and run forward, with said Brothers and plaintiff's decedent and the engineer and fireman and a brakeman thereon, to said culvert, where it was stopped, and the road inspected and found to be uninjured; that thereupon the plaintiff's decedent, and said engineer, brakeman, and fireman boarded said engine, and, without any notice or knowledge of the faulty construction and condition of said trestlework, and believing the same to be safe, and upon the order of said Brothers, started forward to inspect said place of apprehended danger north of and beyond said trestlework; that, as said locomotive approached said trestlework, the engineer discovered that said trestle and track were out of line, and before said locomotive could be stopped, or the persons thereon could get off from said locomotive, it ran upon said trestlework, which gave way, and precipitated said locomotive to the ground below and into said stream, whereby the decedent was caught between the engine and tender of said locomotive, and crushed, and carried into the water below, and drowned and killed,"—all without fault of the decedent. Demurrer to the complaint overruled. Answer in general denial. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff. Motion for new trial overruled. Error assigned by appellant on both adverse rulings.

NOTE.—For a flood considered as an act of God, see also Blythe v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. (Colo.) 11 L. R. A. 615, and note; also Smith v. Western Railway of Alabama (Ala.) 11 L. R. A. 619; Long v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Pa.) 14 L. R. A. 741; Lang v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Pa.) 20 L. R. A. 360; Libby v. Maine C. R. Co. (Me.) 20 L. R. A. 812; and Wald v. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. (Ill.) 35 L. R. A. 356.
48 L. R. A.

48 L. R. A.

The point made against the complaint is that the decedent, at the time he lost his life, was, without the direction or acquiescence of his employer, acting without the scope of his employment; that, being the conductor of a freight train, it was no part of his duty to inspect the track; and that when he detached the locomotive, and went forward on it to inspect reported impairments, he was performing work which he was not employed to perform, and in respect of which appellant owed him no duty to furnish him a safe trestle over which to pass; and he was therefore guilty of contributory negligence. We concede the rule to be as contended,—that the master's duty to the servant only extends to the particular work, or class of work, which the servant is employed to perform, and that when the servant, without the command or acquiescence of the master, voluntarily undertakes hazardous work outside of his employment, he puts himself beyond the protection of the master's implied obligation, and if he is injured he is without remedy. Brown v. Byroads, 47 Ind. 435; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Adams, 105 Ind. 151, 5 N. E. 187; Jorgenson v. Johnson Chair Co. 169 Ill. 429, 48 N. E. 822; Mellor v. Merchants' Mfg. Co. 150 Mass. 362, 5 L. R. A. 792, 23 N. E. 100; Knob v. Pioneer Coal Co. 90 Tenn. 546, 13 S. W. 255; Freeberg v. St. Paul Plow-Works, 48 Minn. 99, 109, 50 N. W. 1026. But the rule stated does not have strict application in all cases. In the presence of an emergency, when an unusual situation presents itself, and the employee, having in view the general scope of his duty, voluntarily steps outside the strict bounds of his employment, he is justified if, under the circumstances of the case, common prudence fairly and reasonably called for the act. The principle is clearly stated by an eminent author in these words: "While, as a general rule, the servant has no claim for damages for injury received while voluntarily assuming to do something which the master did not employ him to do, yet, in case of emergency, he may of his own volition step outside of the line of his usual duties, and if this departure is only such as the necessities of the case fairly and reasonably call for, keeping in view the character of the work he is required to do, it will not of itself defeat a recovery of damages in case he is injured. Whether he is guilty of negligence is a question for the jury, and his conduct must be tried in the light of all the surroundings. Hence it was held that an engineer who left his engine in charge of the fireman, in violation of the rules of the company, and stepped on the main track, and signaled the fireman to move his train on the side track, and while thus engaged was run over and killed by a hand car in charge of section men, was not so without the scope of his employment, or negligent, but that his representatives could recover from the master damages for his death." 2 Bailey, Personal Injuries relating to Master and Servant, § 3524. In the case referred to by the author it is said: "While it was not the duty of an engineer to leave his engine for the purpose of getting signals, still it cannot be ruled, as a matter of law, that the plaintiff must fail in this suit because Barry stepped out on the main track to get the signals, even though it was no part of his general duties thus to do." Barry v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 98 Mo. 62, 11 S. W. 308. In Seley v. Southern P. R. Co. 6 Utah, 319, 23 Pac. 751, it was held that the duties of a freight conductor are "somewhat general," and that when the conductor, upon failure of the brakeman to successfully make a coupling, stepped in, and, in attempting to make it, lost his life, he was not so far from the scope of his employment as to preclude a recovery. In Somersett & C. R. Co. v. Galbraith, 109 Pa. 32, 1 Atl. 371, it was said: "Galbraith was the conductor of the train. He was bound to exercise, in the interest of his employer, all due care and caution. If he knew of any obstruction on the track, or had reason to expect any, it was his clear duty to guard against it. 'The conductor . . . is held responsible for the safe transport of his train, and that requires of him,' in cases of this kind, to use 'judgment.' . . . He was held, of course, to the reasonable observance of all these rules, but he had a general duty and discretion to exercise in an emergency." To the same effect see Bailey, Personal Injuries relating to Master and Servant, § 3400. See also Thomp. Neg. 1017; Sears v. Central R. & Bkg. Co. 53 Ga. 630.

As conductor of the train it was Fowler's duty to take it safely to its destination on schedule time, or in accordance with such special orders as he might receive from his superiors. In the orderly, timely, and safe movement of the train, he was the responsible agent, and, in respect of controlling and safeguarding the train in its progress, the scope of his employment required of him such care and caution as the nature and magnitude of his trust fairly demanded. The complaint shows that he arrived at the junction about midnight. He was there informed that there had been a heavy rainfall in the vicinity; that two culverts, one $\frac{1}{2}$ mile and the other about 2 miles north of the junction, had probably been rendered unsafe to the passage of his train. His informant was appellant's roadmaster in charge of all that particular part of the road, and who lived in the neighborhood, and but a mile distant from the fatal trestle, and whose duty it was to keep well informed of the condition of the road, and who, in describing to Fowler apprehended injuries to the track, had made no mention of the trestle. As an employee alert to his employer's interest and to the discharge of his duty as the responsible manager of the train, what was the deceased to do? To have run the train forward heedless of the warnings would have been positive negligence. To have run the whole train forward to the first point of apprehended injury, with the probable result of being forced to return for materials and men to make repairs, would seem unwise and a needless waste of time. To have remained impassive at the junction with his train, until the roadmaster could have found his way to the questionable places and returned with information that it was safe to proceed, would seem wholly inconsistent with his general duty to move his train safely and on time. In any view of the case, it is very clear that his prompt detaching of the engine, and taking on board one of his brakemen and the roadmaster, probably as helpers if need be, and proceeding to the reported danger points for personal inspection, to see, with his own eyes, the character and extent of the new peril to be encountered by his train, was not such a departure from the work he was employed to perform as will warrant the court in ruling, as a matter of law, that he was thereby guilty of negligence. Beyond all question, the averments of the complaint are sufficient to withstand a demurrer.

As a reason for a new trial, it is insisted that the verdict is not sustained by sufficient evidence. It is claimed that there is no evidence to show either negligence on the part of appellant or freedom from contributory negligence on the part of the deceased. The negligence charged against appellant is in constructing and maintaining the trestle, in failing and neglecting to maintain a proper and suitable bridge to carry the railroad over the stream, and in failing to properly guard and inspect the bridge. The evidence tends to prove that the stream of Walnut Fork runs through a timbered district; that its current is rapid, and subject to sudden rises, and when at flood carries a large amount of driftwood. On three previous occasions, namely, 1875, 1883, and September, 1895, the stream was as high, and in 1883 2 feet higher, than it was on the night of July 28, 1896, when Robert P. Fowler lost his life. For more than twenty-five years prior to 1896 appellant had maintained across the stream a Howe truss bridge, having a span of more than 100 feet of clear space between the abutments, and during the previous floods of 1875, 1883, and 1895 the stream was well known to have carried down, with its other drift, large trees and logs, and passed them, without injury, under the railroad bridge. In January, 1896, the appellant removed its Howe truss bridge, and replaced it with a trestle bridge. In the new bridge there were ten bents, placed at right angles with the line of the railroad, and 12½ feet apart from center to center, with 11 feet of clear space between them, the trestle posts standing upon mudsills resting on the leveled rock stratum at the bottom of the creek. The rock stratum dipped to the southwest, or down stream, and the level for the mudsills was, as a rule, but not without exception, produced by hewing down the rock at the upper end. There were no anchors placed in the mudsills. The railroad crossed the stream at an angle less than a right angle, and there was evidence tending to prove that the trestle bents were placed at such an angle to the channel and current of the stream that a straight line up and down the center of the channel would show not exceeding 3 feet of clear space between the bents for the passage of driftwood. On the morning after the accident four or five posts of the trestle were found broken and lodged in a drift down stream, and a large tree that had never been there before was found resting on the bank a few hundred yards below the bridge. The trestle was new, well constructed for a bridge of its kind, except as may be inferred from the failure to anchor the mudsills, in good repair, and sufficient to carry four times the weight of the locomotive that fell through it, or four times the weight of the decedent's train. As the party on the engine approached the trestle, the engineer, a moment before the accident, but not in time to stop the engine, discovered that the track on the bridge was several feet out of line down stream. It is argued that the flood of July 28th was most unusual and extraordinary, and carried an unusual amount and quality of drift, and that the law does not require the appellant to provide against such events, and that, the bridge being sufficient and safe against usual floods and drifts, negligence cannot be imputed to it in the erection of the trestle. If the flood of July 28th had been unprecedented, there would be substance in this contention. If such flood had never occurred within the memory of those residing in the neighborhood, prior to the erection of the trestle, then the appellant had the right to assume that it would not occur at all, and would have been excused in not providing against it. But the evidence tends to show that in 1875, 1883, and in September, 1895, the stream had been as high, and the drift as great, and in 1883 higher and greater, than at the time of the accident. Of these events appellant was bound to take notice. It had been in possession of that part of the stream for twenty-seven years, and must be held to know, concerning its nature and characteristics as to floods and drift, what it might have known upon reasonable inquiry. The master carpenter in charge of that division of appellant's road, and who had been in its employ for twenty-seven years, testified that he had known the stream for twenty-seven years, remembered the floods of 1875 and 1895, and had frequently seen brush, rails, and logs being carried by its current, and that he knew as much about the stream as the neighbors when the trestle was put in. Because the flood was unusual and extraordinary will not excuse the appellant, if the character and history of the stream showed that such a flood might at some time be reasonably expected. In constructing the trestle, it was required to provide against such dangers as could have been reasonably foreseen, and to adopt such precautions as men of ordinary sagacity and caution would anticipate and look forward to. Scagel v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 83 Iowa, 380, 388, 49 N. W. 990; Bogart v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 145 N. Y. 233, 40 N. E. 17; Doyle v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co. 77 Iowa, 607, 4 L. R. A. 420, 42 N. W. 555; Corney v. Carquet R. Co. 29 N. B. 425. In the last case cited it is said at page 431: "I have no doubt . . . that, if the bridge had given way whilst a train with passengers had been crossing over it, the railway company would have been liable in law for all damage which resulted, and that liability would have arisen because the bridge had been insecurely and insufficiently built. There was no 'act of God,' or cis major about it. The bridge yielded and gave way when there came more ice, a higher tide, and a greater storm than usual, but not greater nor higher than a person living in that section of the country might reasonably expect would come." If, therefore, the flood and character of the drift that broke the bridge on the night of July 28th might have reasonably been foreseen, the railroad company was required to provide against it; and, however substantially constructed and strong the trestle, we cannot say, as a matter of law, that the appellant was free from negligence in placing the bents athwart the current of the stream, which was known to be liable to sudden and great floods, and to carry a large amount of heavy and dangerous drift to beat against it. The question of appellant's negligence was properly left to the jury, as was also the question of the decedent's contributory negligence, and the verdict is sufficiently sustained by the evidence.

The action of the court in refusing to give to the jury appellant's request No. 7 is complained of. It presents the appellant's theory that the detaching of the engine by the decedent, without the order or acquiescence of appellant, and voluntarily proceeding on the engine to inspect the track, was such a departure from the duties of his employment as constituted negligence per se. The same question arose on the demurrer to the complaint, and, for reasons there given, we hold that the instruction was properly refused. We find no error in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

Rehearing denied.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

William HIBBS, Appt.,
v.

Board of Directors, etc., of District TOWNSHIP OF ADAMS et al.

(..... Iowa)

1. The right of the voters of a district township to rescind a vote for a tax to build a schoolhouse in a subdistrict, at a regular meeting subsequent to that at which the tax is voted, exists by necessary implication from the power to vote the tax, when they rescind the vote before the tax has been collected, levied, or certified to the board of supervisors for that purpose.
2. A vested right to have a tax for building a schoolhouse levied and collected is not acquired, so as to prevent rescission of the vote for the tax, by commencing an action to compel the certification of the tax for levy and collection.

(Given, J., dissents.)

(January 23, 1900.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Mahaska County in favor of defendants in a proceeding brought to compel the certification of a tax for the erection of a schoolhouse. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. L. C. Blanchard, for appellant:

After the tax is voted, the duty of the board of directors is clearly specified by the statute: They shall make all contracts, purchases, payments, and sales necessary to carry out any vote of the district.

Code 1873, § 1723; Austin v. Colony Dist. Twp. 51 Iowa, 102, 49 N. W. 1051.

And § 1777 of Code 1873 (McClain's Anno. Code, § 2895) requires the board at their regular annual meeting in March of each year to "cause the secretary to certify the same, together with the amount voted for schoolhouse purposes, within five days thereafter, to the board of supervisors."

This statute is mandatory; the board has no discretion in the matter.

When a positive official duty is enjoined by law upon any officer, and as to the mode or manner of performance he has no discretion, the only adequate remedy, ordinarily, is that of mandamus.

Benjamin v. Malaka Dist. Twp. 50 Iowa, 648.

Plaintiff's rights had become vested long before the action to rescind was taken. Such a tax cannot be rescinded after rights become vested.

Ibid.; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 443; 2 Beach, Modern Law of Contracts, § 1637, note; Henderson & N. R. Co. v. Dickerson, NOTE.—The above case is believed to make the first precedent on the question of the right to rescind a vote for a tax.

48 L. R. A.

17 B. Mon. 173, 66 Am. Dec. 148; Pacific Mail S. S. Co. v. Joliffe, 2 Wall. 450, 17 L. ed. 805; Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 679, 24 L. ed. 558; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 956, and notes; Jordan v. Wimer, 45 Iowa, 65.

We commenced this action to secure the rights which the law gave us. We have expended time and money in good faith in the endeavor to compel the board to do what the law said they should do. Our rights under such conditions are vested rights.

Wilson v. Tucker, 105 Iowa, 55, 74 N. W. 908; McDonald v. Jackson, 55 Iowa, 37, 7 N. W. 408; Brodt v. Rohkar, 48 Iowa, 36.

Messrs. Bolton, McCoy, & Bolton, and J. C. Williams, for appellees:

There was no necessity for two schoolhouses in this district. The schoolhouse is shown to be in good repair and large enough to accommodate all the pupils. Under these facts the tax is illegal, and should not be levied, and the board was justified in refusing to instruct the clerk to certify the tax.

Cusey v. Nutt Independent Dist. 64 Iowa, 659, 21 N. W. 122; Seaman v. Baughman, 82 Iowa, 216, 11 L. R. A. 354, 47 N. W. 1091.

The power that creates law can certainly destroy. If the plaintiffs in this case had no vested rights by reason of the vote in favor of the tax, then they have no legal right to complain of the rescinding of the tax. A repeal of the law authorizing the vote takes away the power to levy the tax, even though a favorable vote has been already taken, but the rate not fixed.

Covington & L. R. Co. v. Kenton County Ct. 12 B. Mon. 150; 2 Desty, Taxn. p. 1122.

Under an act authorizing counties and townships to aid in the construction of railroads, a railroad company has not, and cannot acquire, any legal right to or interest in a tax voted, until such tax has been levied and collected and a valid subscription made on behalf of the township.

Jager v. Doherty, 61 Ind. 528; 2 Desty, Taxn. p. 1204; Crawford County Comrs. v. Louisville, N. A. & St. L. Air Line R. Co. 39 Ind. 192; Bittinger v. Bell, 65 Ind. 453; Sankey v. Terre Haute & S. W. R. Co. 42 Ind. 402.

The mere vote of the electors to subscribe to the stock of a railroad company is not an executed contract, under the protection of the Federal Constitution.

Land Grant R. & Trust Co. v. Davis County Comrs. 6 Kan. 256.

The act of voting a tax is not of itself a levy.

School Dist. No. 6 v. School Dist. No. 9, 13 Neb. 173, 12 N. W. 921; Iowa Railroad Land Co. v. Woodbury County, 39 Iowa, 172.

A tax, to be valid, must be levied. A vote of the people alone does not make it valid.

Iowa Railroad Land Co. v. Woodbury County, 39 Iowa, 172.

Deemer, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The district township of Adams is divided into eight subdistricts. In each of these there is a schoolhouse. The village of Lacey, a station on the Illinois Central Railroad, is situated near the west line of the township, about $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles from the schoolhouse in that subdistrict, and has sixteen or seventeen pupils of school age. At the regular annual meeting of the electors of the district township held March 8, 1897, it was voted "that there be levied a tax by Adams township to build a schoolhouse at Lacey, not to cost more than seven hundred (\$700) dollars." Twenty-one votes were cast in favor of the proposition and twelve against. This proceeding seems to have been entirely regular, but the board and secretary failed to certify the tax to the board of supervisors for levy and collection, as required by law. On the 29th day of March, 1897, plaintiff commenced this action to compel the certification of the tax so voted. After the action was commenced, and on the 1st day of March, 1898, a petition was presented to the district township board, signed by thirteen electors and property owners of the township, asking the board to submit to the voters of the district township at the regular meeting to be held March 14, 1898, a proposition to rescind the tax voted at the previous annual meeting for the purpose of building the schoolhouse at or near Lacey. The board ordered the submission of the proposition at said meeting, and instructed the secretary to insert the same in the annual call for the election, which was accordingly done. At said annual meeting in the year 1898, and before the trial of the case in the court below, said proposition was voted on by ballot, fifty-six votes being cast, fifty-three of which were for rescinding and three against. While other matters are presented in answer, the only question for us to consider is the effect of this vote rescinding the former vote authorizing the tax. That it was the duty of the board to certify the tax voted at the 1897 meeting there can be no question. But it did not do so, and, before any tax was in fact certified or levied, the electors, at a regular meeting, and by a large majority, voted to rescind the order voting the tax. What effect is to be given to the order or vote of rescission? Appellant contends that, having once voted the tax, the electors have no power of rescission. It is fundamental that electors of a district township can only exercise such powers as are conferred by statute, either expressly or by reasonable implication. Washington Dist. Twp. v. Thomas, 59 Iowa, 50, 12 N. W. 767. By section 2749 of the Code of 1897 they are given power "to vote a schoolhouse tax, not exceeding 10 mills on the dollar in any one year, for the purchase of grounds, construction of schoolhouses, the payment of debts contracted for the erection of schoolhouses," etc. Having the power to vote the tax, they, by necessary implication, have the right to rescind that vote, unless by so doing they interfere with vested rights. Power to do necessarily implies the power not to do; so that, having voted at one regular annual meeting to vote a schoolhouse tax, they may, at a subsequent meeting, vote not to levy a tax, unless, as we have said, some vested right has intervened. Whenever the electors meet in annual session, and fail to vote a schoolhouse tax, they virtually determine that no schoolhouse tax shall be levied; and the mere fact that they have previously voted to levy such a tax is not in itself controlling on the question of power.

But it is said that, as soon as the tax was voted by the electors, plaintiff and others, interested in securing the schoolhouse, became possessed of a vested right, which could not be interfered with by subsequent vote. Let us see what that right is. As has been stated, the board and its officers failed to certify the tax to the board of supervisors for levy and collection. Plaintiff's right was to bring action to compel them to do so. Oden Dahl v. Russell, 86 Iowa, 673, 53 N. W. 336. No tax had, in fact, been levied, and none had been collected. The electors had simply determined that a tax should be levied, but, before anything had been done thereunder, they decided to rescind their action. True, plaintiff had commenced his action to compel the board of directors to certify the tax, but this did not give him a vested right. Huff v. Cook, 44 Iowa, 639. A case must be decided on the facts as they appear at the time of trial. In Benjamin v. Malaka Dist. Twp. 50 Iowa, 648, relied on by appellant, the tax had been levied and collected, and, as said in the opinion, "by the payment of the taxes levied and collected for the purpose of erecting the house, the plaintiff's right there-to became vested, and no subsequent action of the electors without his consent could have the effect of depriving him of such right." The distinction between that case and this is so apparent that we need not say more.

The trial court was right in dismissing plaintiff's petition, and the judgment is affirmed.

Granger, Ch. J., not sitting.

Given, J., dissenting:

I do not concur in the conclusion that the voters had power to vote, in 1898, to rescind the tax regularly voted in 1897. Their powers being expressed in the statute, all powers not expressly or by reasonable implication conferred are excluded. The power to rescind is not expressly given, and, as I view it, may not be reasonably implied. The power to vote on a question of a tax implies the power to vote against it, but not to vote to rescind it after it has been regularly authorized. As well may it be implied that power to vote for or against a person for an office confers power to rescind his election regularly made by a subsequent vote of the electors. The law provides how the will of the voters shall be ascertained, and, when their will is expressed, as provided by law, nothing remains but to carry it into effect.

It is said that the power to rescind exists

"unless by so doing they interfere with vested rights." While I do not agree that the power to rescind exists, yet, conceding that it does until some adverse right is vested, how is it in this case? By the vote of 1897 the tax was regularly authorized, and it was then the duty of the defendants to cause that tax to be certified for levy and collection, and to apply it to the authorized use; but this they wrongfully and obstinately refused to do. It is beyond question that, as matters stood on March 29, 1897, the day plaintiff filed his petition, he was entitled to an order commanding the certification of said tax. It was because he, in common with others alike interested, had become vested with the right to have the tax certified, collected, and applied as authorized by the vote of 1897. This right was completely vested long before the attempted rescission, and, according to the opinion, barred a rescission. A is regularly elected to an office, and thereby has become vested with the right to qualify and hold the office. Will it be pretended that no right has become vested until he qualifies, and therefore the voters may rescind the election before he qualifies? I am of the opinion that no power is given to rescind the vote by which this tax was authorized; that none such should be implied; and that, if it may, the right of plaintiff to have the tax certified, collected, and applied had become a vested right. I do not think it was intended to introduce such an element of uncertainty into the administration of the affairs of school districts as may follow under sanction of this opinion.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

FORT JEFFERSON IMPROVEMENT COMPANY et al., Appts., v.

J. B. DUPOYSTER et al.

(..... Ky.)

1. A deed of a tract of land by one in possession of only a part of it, at a time when third persons were in possession of the greater portion claiming under a superior title, is not absolutely void under the champerty statute, but only voidable at the instance of the parties in adverse possession.
2. A deed to one who purchases when a portion of the tract is in adverse possession of third persons cannot be attacked by his vendee after the former has purchased in the outstanding title, to avoid taking the title tendered under the contract.
3. A deed to one during his natural life, who is to deed or will the lands to the bodily heirs of another, the former having the discretion of allotting the lands as to may see proper, confers a life estate on the first taker, with vested remainder to the heirs of the other person mentioned, which will open to let in afterborn children; and the interests of children dying before the life tenant will pass to their heirs.
4. Upon rescission of a deed of real estate because the grantors had, to their knowledge, no title which they could convey, of which fact the vendee was ignorant, a lien for purchase money wrongfully received by the vendors may be decreed upon any portion of the land of which the vendors were the owners.

(June 15, 1899.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Ballard County in favor of cross complainants in a proceeding to enforce specific performance of a contract to purchase real estate which was rescinded without awarding a lien on the property for the money already paid. Reversed.

NOTE.—On the question of the effect of adverse possession upon the validity of a deed, see also Reyes v. Middleton (Fla.) 29 L. R. A. 66.

48 L. R. A.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. M. Nichols & Son, for appellants:

All sales or conveyances, including those made under execution, of any land, or of the pretended right or title to the same, of which any other person, at the time of such sale, contract, or conveyance, has adverse possession, shall be null and void.

Ky. Rev. Stat. chap. 12, § 2.

Void acts are not good to some purpose.

Wait, Fraud. Conv. § 412; Cardwell v. Sprigg, 7 Dana, 36; Chiles v. Conley, 9 Dana, 385; Griffith v. Dicken, 4 Dana, 563; Balcy v. Deakins, 5 B. Mon. 161; Crowley v. Vaughan, 11 Bush, 518; Gately v. Wilder, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 621, 14 S. W. 680.

The deed is not only void as to the occupant of the land, but it is void as between the parties to the deed.

Graves v. Leathers, 17 B. Mon. 667.

The deed being void, no estoppel can be founded upon it.

Cardwell v. Sprigg, 1 B. Mon. 372; Kercheval v. Triplett, 1 A. K. Marsh. 493.

A champertous deed is void, and confers no right of entry.

Bentley v. Childers, 7 S. W. 629; Bowling v. Roark, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 409, 24 S. W. 4; Wait, Fraud. Conv. § 413; 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 475.

If a man has accepted and holds a void deed which gives him no right to enter, and the land being occupied, he cannot enter; and he then buys the same land from the party in possession, who has the title and possession; and after this second purchase he enters and takes possession,—his entry and holding will be in right of and under this second purchase.

Taylor v. Watkins, 4 B. Mon. 566.

The claim that all the purchases of this land made after the deed of March 16, 1859, were made to quiet that title, has no foundation in law or fact.

Bowling v. Roark, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 499, 24 S. W. 4.

When Dupoyster bought from the parties who had the title, and took possession, his allegiance was to that title, and he was never under an estoppel as to the deed of March 16, 1859, nor on those who hold under him.

Lyne v. Bank of Kentucky, 5 J. J. Marsh. 579.

Innocent purchasers are protected in a deed which was not acknowledged or proved and lodged for record as prescribed by law.

Dozier v. Barnett, 13 Bush, 457; Patrick v. Marshall, 2 Bibb, 45, 4 Am. Dec. 670; Duvall v. Guthrie, 3 Bibb, 532; Hughes v. Easten, 4 J. J. Marsh. 573, 20 Am. Dec. 230; Dickerson v. Talbot, 14 B. Mon. 62; Lyne v. Bank of Kentucky, 5 J. J. Marsh. 558; Winlock v. Hardy, 4 Litt. 273; Womack v. Hughes, Litt. Sel. Cas. 295.

A deed, though acknowledged and left in the clerk's office for registration, is not constructive notice until the tax is paid thereon (Rev. Stat. chap. 24, § 32) and as to them the vendee has but an equitable title.

Phillips v. Clark, 4 Met. (Ky.) 348, 83 Am. Dec. 471.

If the certificate is insufficient, the fact that the deed was deposited for record in due time and recorded avails nothing.

Miller v. Henshaw, 4 Dana, 327.

The clerk fails to make the certificate as required by the statutes, in this: he fails to "certify the time when the instrument was lodged in his office for record." This is a fatal defect.

Womack v. Hughes, Litt. Sel. Cas. 294; Lyne v. Bank of Kentucky, 5 J. J. Marsh. 558; McConnell v. Brown, Litt. Sel. Cas. 464; Walker v. Walker, 42 Ill. 311, 89 Am. Dec. 445; Rivard v. Walker, 39 Ill. 413; Robinson v. Gould, 26 Iowa, 89.

The recording of a deed is not constructive notice of its contents, where it is not entitled to be recorded.

Prentice v. Duluth Storage & Forwarding Co. 19 U. S. App. 100, 58 Fed. Rep. 438, 7 C. C. A. 293; Lowry v. Harris, 12 Minn. 255, Gil. 166; Morton v. Smith, 2 Dill. 316, Fed. Cas. No. 9,867; O'Brien v. Gaslin, 20 Neb. 347, 30 N. W. 274; Greenwood v. Jenswold, 69 Iowa, 53, 28 N. W. 433; Ely v. Wilcox, 20 Wis. 523, 91 Am. Dec. 436; Fisher v. Vaughn, 75 Wis. 609, 44 N. W. 831.

No deed can take effect, as having been delivered, until such act of delivery has been assented to by the grantee, and he has done something equivalent to an actual acceptance.

2 Washb. Real Prop. p. 581; Com. v. Jackson, 10 Bush, 429; Walker v. Walker, 42 Ill. 311, 89 Am. Dec. 445; Rivard v. Walker, 39 Ill. 413; Robinson v. Gould, 26 Iowa, 89; Ford v. Gregory, 10 B. Mon. 180.

The words "bodily heirs of J. C. Dupoyster," used in the deed, do not mean the children of J. C. Dupoyster.

True v. Nicholls, 2 Duv. 547; Johnson v. Johnson, 2 Met. (Ky.) 331.

The grantor used the words "bodily heirs" in their legal and technical sense, meaning 48 L. R. A.

the lineal descendants of J. C. Dupoyster to the remotest degree.

This is simply a deed to B. S. Dupoyster for his life, and then to the heirs of J. C. Dupoyster, whoever they may happen to be.

Appellees must lose this action, though it may be true that if their father was dead, and it was thus ascertained that they were the heirs of J. C. Dupoyster, they might recover.

Williamson v. Williamson, 18 B. Mon. 363.

There have been born to J. C. Dupoyster four children, two of whom are dead, and they died in infancy and without issue. J. C. Dupoyster is their next of kin and heir at law. Therefore he owned an undivided one-half interest in the land, which by his deed passed to appellant, and in which appellees have no interest.

Walters v. Crutcher, 15 B. Mon. 10.

Dupoyster represented the title to the land clear and perfect. It was not, and he is guilty of a fraud which cannot be cured.

Breckinridge v. Moore, 3 B. Mon. 635; Bibb v. Prather, Sneed (Ky.) 136, 2 Am. Dec. 711; Upshaw v. Debow, 7 Bush, 442.

Mr. Thomas F. Bashaw, also for appellants:

If the habendum discovers a plain intention to invest Ben S. Dupoyster with a life estate only, the granting clause, standing alone, gives him the fee.

There is then a clear repugnancy between the granting clause and the habendum,—the former giving him the fee, the latter a life estate only, with absolutely nothing else anywhere in the deed throwing the least light on the intention of the grantor.

The grantee will take the fee.

Ratliffe v. Marrs, 87 Ky. 26; 3 Washb. Real Prop. 439; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law. p. 798, and note; Cornwell v. Orton, 126 Mo. 355, 27 S. W. 536.

If Mrs. Edwards and Joe B. Dupoyster actively participated in the fraud, they are, by way of estoppel, divested of their interest in the lands as against appellees.

Heck v. Fisher, 78 Ky. 643; Holloway v. Louisville R. Co. 92 Ky. 244, 17 S. W. 572; Bull v. Sevier, 88 Ky. 515, 11 S. W. 506.

Mr. D. G. Park, for appellees:

By the terms of the deed, Ben S. Dupoyster took a life estate, with contingent remainder to the bodily heirs of J. C. Dupoyster, as a class, with power of allotment among them by the life tenant by deed or will.

Williamson v. Williamson, 18 B. Mon. 365; Thompson v. Vanoe, 1 Met. (Ky.) 670; Howell v. Ackerman, 89 Ky. 22, 11 S. W. 819; Leavis v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 95 Ky. 79, 23 S. W. 667; Turman v. White, 14 B. Mon. 570.

The language of the deed: "Then to said heirs of said J. C. Dupoyster, and second party has the discretion of allotting said lands between said heirs as he may see proper,"—precludes the vesting of the land until the death of Ben S. Dupoyster.

Turman v. White, 14 B. Mon. 570; Howell v. Ackerman, 89 Ky. 22, 11 S. W. 819; Williamson v. Williamson, 18 B. Mon. 373; Lewis v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 95 Ky. 83, 23 S. W. 667.

The power created in the life tenant was not general, but special, and could not be exercised in favor of any other than the class named.

The appellants are in no attitude to rely on either the statutes of champerty or limitation. Having purchased from and come into possession through the life tenant, Ben S. Dupoyster, they can no more deny the validity of his title, or allege his possession to be adverse to appellees as remaindermen, than Ben S. Dupoyster himself could have denied such title or alleged that his possession was adverse as against them.

The possession should be held according to the title by which it was acquired.

Kirk v. Nichols, 2 J. J. Marsh. 470.

No cause of action accrued to the appellees until the death of the life tenant, and of course their cause of action for the land is not barred by any statute of limitation.

Butler v. McMillan, 88 Ky. 420, 11 S. W. 362; Board v. Board, L. R. 9 Q. B. 48.

The champerty statute is not available to the appellants. Neither the life tenant nor his alienee can dispute the title of the reversioner.

Kirk v. Nichols, 2 J. J. Marsh. 470; 2 Herman, Estoppel & Res Adjudicata, § 892, p. 1014; Board v. Board, L. R. 9 Q. B. 48; Bigelow, Estoppel, 5th ed. 555; Newell, Ejectment, p. 602, § 15.

Though the deed would be void as to the person holding adversely at the time it was made, and those claiming under him between the parties and as to the rest of the world it would be effectual and valid.

Martindale, Conv. 2d ed. § 24; Lucy v. Wilson, 85 Ky. 503, 3 S. W. 911.

Mr. W. G. Bullitt also for appellees.

Hazellrigg, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is the contention of appellees that, claiming under paper title from one Langdon and others, Thomas Dupoyster and his son Joe C. settled in 1848 upon the tract of land in controversy, containing some 3,600 acres, in Ballard and Carlisle counties; that they occupied a small portion of the land that was cleared, made some little improvements, cut timber, and cleared a few more acres of land, and asserted their ownership to the entire tract. Appellees further contend that on March 16, 1859, Thomas Dupoyster, who had three children living at that time (Joe C., Ben S., and Thomas Dupoyster), by deed duly signed, acknowledged, and recorded in the proper office, conveyed this land to his son Ben S. for life, and then to the children of Joe C. Dupoyster, under conditions to be considered presently. In September, 1890, Joe C. Dupoyster, his wife, and the brother Ben S. Dupoyster, claiming to own this land, 48 L. R. A.

conveyed the same to appellant, the Ft. Jefferson Improvement Company, for the consideration of $50,000, part to be paid in stock, $10,000 to be paid in cash when deed was made, and $25,000 six months thereafter. The company had paid something over $8,000 on the trade, when Joe C. Dupoyster, in his own right and as the administrator of his brother Ben S., who had died in March, 1891, filed in the Ballard circuit court, December, 1891, the present action to recover of the appellant company the balance of the purchase money. To this action, Harkless, Trimble, and others, claiming liens on the land, were made parties; but there is no appeal from any judgment on their behalf, and it is not necessary to discuss their interests. To this action the Ft. Jefferson Improvement Company set up several defenses, but we will discuss the only material one, in which they charged fraud upon the part of their vendors in making the sale. It is charged that liens of Harkless and others were on the lands when sold, and that since the purchase the company had discovered that Joe C. had theretofore sold a large portion of the land to one McCombs, all of which Joe C. Dupoyster had fraudulently concealed from the company, representing that the latter was getting a clear title. The company therefore asked for a rescission of the contract of sale, and for a lien on the land to secure to it the money already paid. An amended answer of the company charged that in November, 1883, Ben S. Dupoyster had conveyed the entire tract to Joe B., son of Joe C. Dupoyster, and assigned this as additional ground for rescission. It appears that this deed of 1883 conveys about 1,000 acres of the 3,600 acres in controversy, and that, though it was of record, it was not indexed.

In 1893 Joe B. Dupoyster, infant, and Dalva D. Edwards, the only living children of Joe C. Dupoyster, came into this suit by cross action, and set up the deed of March 16, 1859, from old man Thomas Dupoyster to his son Ben S., alleging that by the terms of the deed a life estate in the land in controversy was given to Ben S. Dupoyster, and at his death the remainder vested in the then living children of Joe C. Dupoyster; that they were the only living children of Joe C. Dupoyster at the time of the death of Ben Dupoyster; and they prayed for judgment awarding them the complete title and possession of the whole tract of land in controversy. The company made defense to this cross action, denying that Thomas Dupoyster executed the deed of 1859 to Ben Dupoyster, and alleging that the latter never accepted it; denied that the deed was ever acknowledged or recorded until 1893, while this suit was pending. Indeed, they attacked the deed and certificate as a forgery, and assailed it as not genuine in many other respects. After a great volume of proof was taken on the issues joined, the court made an order rescinding the contract of sale, and awarding judgment to the company against Joe C. Dupoyster in his own right, and against him as administrator of Ben S. Dupoyster, for the sum of about $10,000, purchase money the company had paid, but declined to adjudge the company a lien on the land in controversy to secure payment of judgment. The court further adjudged the whole tract of land to Joe B. Dupoyster and Dalva D. Edwards, as prayed for in their cross action, and from this judgment the Ft. Jefferson Improvement Company has appealed.

The first and most important question that presents itself to us for decision is as to the genuineness of the deed of March 16, 1859. The old gentleman Thomas Dupoyster, at the time of the alleged execution of this deed had three sons; and we cannot discern what reasonable motive he could have had in deeding all this land to one child for life, with remainder to the unborn children of one of his other sons, making no provision for two of his children. This alleged original deed is before us for examination. The writing in the body of the deed is singularly similar to the certificate written on the back of the deed. Joe C. Dupoyster admits that he wrote the body of the deed, but it is claimed that the clerk, J. Corbett, wrote the certificate. Comparing the body of the deed of March 16, 1859, with the Lauderdale deeds, we are not entirely satisfied that the same person wrote them. At least, it hardly seems possible that they could have been written by the same man at the time they are dated, and they are dated only a little over a year apart. Joe C. Dupoyster says that he wrote them all. If this is true, the evidence of Chowning and Asthorpe would lead us to believe that the deed dated 1859 was written many years after the deeds to Lauderdale. These witnesses say this 1859 deed is written in a more mature hand. Indeed, the testimony of Asthorpe, Ort, L. W. Corbett, Keith, Chowning, and an examination of the several original admittedly genuine handwritings of Corbett, and the fact that the alleged deed was recorded, if at all, out of its regular place, conduce strongly to support the contention that the deed of 1859 is not genuine. Yet to dispel this conclusion there is the testimony of Hogancamp, Powell, Overly, Stovall, Shelton, Thomas, Sprouse, and others, tending strongly to establish its genuineness. Judge White testifies that he saw of record a deed from Thomas Dupoyster to his son Ben S., but does not remember the contents. Mr. Bugg does not remember that the deed filed here is the original deed, but a long time prior to this suit Joe C. Dupoyster stated to him that Thomas Dupoyster had deeded the land to his son Ben, and offered it to Bugg for examination; but the latter failed to examine same, and cannot testify that the deed filed here is the original deed. The deed of Ben S. to his nephew Joe B., of 1883, refers to the fact that Thomas Dupoyster had deeded these lands to his son Ben. 48 L. R. A.

The county records, having been destroyed by fire, cannot give us any light on the subject. Taking the evidence as a whole, and lending some weight to the finding of the chancellor below, we conclude that the deed filed here is the original and genuine deed of Thomas Dupoyster to his son Ben.

It is insisted by counsel for appellant that, even if this deed of 1859 is genuine, it must be declared void under the champerty statute. This question is thoroughly and ably discussed by counsel, and we have given it much consideration. It may well be conceded, as contended by counsel, that there was a superior title to that of the Langdons and others, and that at the time Thomas Dupoyster settled upon a portion of the land in controversy there were several parties in actual possession of the greater portion of this land, claiming it under the superior title. We think the evidence clearly establishes the fact that these parties were holding a great portion of this land under the superior title adversely to Thomas Dupoyster at the time he made the deed of March 16, 1859, to his son Ben. Taking this view of the case, counsel contends that the deed is therefore absolutely void, as being within the champerty statute, and respectable authority is cited sustaining counsel's position; but, construing the statute as a whole, and in view of the decision of this court in the case of Lucas v. Wilson, 85 Ky. 503, 3 S. W. 911, we are of opinion that the deed is not void, but only voidable at the instance of the parties in adverse possession. The evidence clearly shows that Ben S. Dupoyster and his brother Joe, claiming under this deed of 1859, purchased all these adverse claims for Ben, and took the actual possession of the whole tract, and were so holding it under this deed at the time it was sold to the appellants. If A should sell to B lands at the time in the adverse possession of others, and B claiming under his deed, should purchase in the adverse titles, and would thereafter sell it to C, we do not understand upon what grounds C could complain of his title, so as to have the deed from A to B declared void. A different rule would apply if the parties in adverse possession were complaining. And so, in this case, as Ben Dupoyster had acquired the fee to this land under the deed of 1859, we do not think that appellants can be heard to complain, the outstanding titles having been theretofore bought in by Ben.

Having held this deed of 1859 to be genuine, and not void as within the champerty statutes, we now find it necessary to construe this writing, in order to determine who are the owners of the land in controversy. The deed reads as follows:

"This indenture, made and entered into by and between Thos. Dupoyster, party of the first part, and Ben S. Dupoyster, party of the second part, all of Ballard county, Kentucky, this, the 16th day of March, 1859, to wit, said party of the first part, for the following consideration, to wit, that said second party has certain lands in Mississippi county, Mo., which the second party is to convey to the first party, or such parties as the first party may direct to be conveyed to, and also one dollar in hand paid by second party to first party, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, said first party does bargain, sell, and convey unto second party the following described lands, to wit: All of section three, township five, range four west, not in Mississippi river; also, all of section ten in same township and range, not in said river; also, all of section two and section one in same township and range; also, all of sections eleven and twelve in same township and range, not covered by the Wm. Clark and Walter Scott surveys; also, all of section seven and the south half of section six in township five, range three west; also, the south half of section thirty-four and the southwest quarter of section thirty-five, township six, range four west. All of said lands are on the waters of Mayfield creek, on the Mississippi river, in Ballard county, of Kentucky. It is expressly agreed and understood that said second party is to deed or will said lands to the bodily heirs of J. C. Dupoyster,—in other words, the title and possession of said lands is only invested in said second party during his natural lifetime, then to said heirs of J. C. Dupoyster; and second party has the discretion of allotting said lands between said heirs as he may see proper; said second party to have and to hold said lands during his natural lifetime, and said heirs, and their heirs and assigns, together with all the appurtenances thereunto belonging, forever, with covenant of general warranty."

The lower court construed this deed to mean that Ben S. Dupoyster took a life estate, with a contingent remainder to the bodily heirs of J. C. Dupoyster, with power of appointment in the life tenant. We think it quite plain that the grantor intended that Ben Dupoyster should take only a life estate in the land conveyed. We are also of opinion that the word "heirs" and "bodily heirs," as used in this deed, mean, "children," and the lower court properly so held; but we are of opinion that the court erred in deciding that the intention of the grantor was to invest the children of J. C. Dupoyster with a mere contingent remainder. The intention, we think, was to vest a life estate in Ben, with remainder to the children of Joe C.; his first-born taking the entire remainder, which, however, opened up to let in the afterborn children. No power of appointment proper is created by this deed in the life tenant. At any rate, the power was an expressly limited one, and was directed to be exercised for the benefit of the bodily heirs of Joe C.; and, to make the meaning plainer, the grantor adds: "In other words, the title and possession of said lands is only vested in said second party during his natural lifetime, then to the heirs of J. C. Dupoyster." Then follows a provision merely giving to Ben the "discretion" of allotting, of dividing out or partitioning, "as he may see proper," these lands among the children of Joe C. The language used does not suggest an unequal allotment or partition, nor create the power of cutting off or lessening the right or interest of any one of these heirs or children. We must suppose the allotment or division was intended to be an equal one, but that the discretion was vested in Ben to designate the location of each child's interest or share. And this designation or allotment he might make by will or deed. It follows that the children of J. C., as they were born, took vested remainders. It appears from the record that during the married life of J. C. Dupoyster there have been born to him four children, two of whom are dead. Hence, under our construction of this deed, the interest of the dead children passed by the law of descent to their lawful heir or heirs. If it should appear that the child of Joe B. Dupoyster has received by the deed of 1883 more than his proportion of the land in controversy, as fixed under our construction of the deed of 1859, then that deed should be held void to that extent.

18 L. R. A.

At the time of the conveyance of the land in controversy by J. C. Dupoyster and Ben S. Dupoyster to the appellant company, it is quite certain that the Dupoysters knew of the existence of this deed of 1859, and knew that they could not convey to the company the fee-simple title,—all of which, from the evidence, was unknown to the company. This fact, in connection with other evidence here tending to show fraud and misrepresentation upon the part of the Dupoysters, justified the lower court in ordering a rescission of the contract. On whatever of the land J. C. may be the owner of by inheritance from his dead children there will be a lien in favor of appellant for the purchase money wrongfully received by him.

A brief has been filed on behalf of the Langdon heirs, but there are no pleadings filed or issues made in this action from which we can intelligently discuss their interests, if any.

The judgment is reversed, and cause remanded for proceedings consistent herewith.

Motions for various modifications of the decree having been filed, Hazelrigg, Ch. J., on March 17, 1900, handed down the following response:

We think the writ of possession rightfully issued, and the motion to quash the same was properly overruled. The motion for receiver here and the petition for rehearing and modification are overruled. The question of what estate was inherited by J. C. Dupoyster, and all questions pertaining thereto, and of rent and other matters not specially passed on, are not decided.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

William A. MOKEE

v.

Marcus L. TOURTELLOTTÉ.

(167 Mass. 69.)

1. The mere fact that in an employee's judgment an act required by the employer is unsafe does not, as matter of law, render him guilty of negligence in performing it, if the employer assures him that there is no danger.
2. A party fearing that an instruction will be taken by the jury in a broader sense than he deems consistent with the law must call the court's attention to the language, to render it subject to review.
3. That an employee is told by a third person that the work is not safe will not prevent his recovery for an injury, if he believes his employer's assurance that it is safe.

(October 23, 1896.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Superior Court for Hampden County made during the trial of an action brought NOTE.—Effect of an assurance of safety given by the master or a coservant.

- I. General rule.
- II. Illustrative cases.
- III. Rationale of rule.
- IV. When an assurance of safety is not conclusive in the servant's favor.
- V. Whose assurances bind the master.

I. General rule.

A subject which is closely connected with that of the effect of a positive order to do a dangerous act, as to which see note to Dallemand v. Saalfeldt (III.) post,—is the effect produced upon the servant's right of recovery by evidence that he received from his master or some superior coservant an express assurance that the work undertaken by him involved no danger, or that proper precautions would be taken to protect him while he was doing the work.

In many of the cases a specific order and an assurance of safety are both factors to be reckoned with; but as this circumstance is not invariable, and each factor obviously has its own characteristic significance, it has been deemed better to treat the latter separately, even though, by so doing, we shall find ourselves brought once more into contact with conceptions similar to those already dealt with in connection with the former.

The doctrine of the cases on the assurance of safety may be enumerated in its most general form as follows:

If the servant is shown to have entered upon the performance of certain work, relying upon an assurance of his master or his master's representative that such work would not unduly imperil his safety, the mere fact that, before he received the assurance, his apprehensions as to the possibility of injury had been excited by circumstances which had come to his knowledge will not, as matter of law, render him chargeable either with an assumption of the risk involved in the work or with contributory negligence. It should be remarked that, although the effect of such evidence in respect to recover damages for alleged negligence resulting in injury to plaintiff, which resulted in a verdict in plaintiff's favor. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. C. L. Long for defendant.

Mr. W. H. McClintock for plaintiff.

Holmes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for injuries suffered in consequence of the caving in of a ditch bank while the plaintiff was at work connecting water pipes in the ditch. The defendant does not deny that he knew of the danger, but, on the contrary, says that it was obvious, and that he and others warned the plaintiff of it, and that he told him not to work there. The plaintiff's evidence is that he was working there by the implied command of the defendant, and that the defendant declared the ditch to be all right. Seemingly, the plaintiff knew that the bank overhanging a couple of feet.

The defendant asked for a ruling that it was no part of the plaintiff's duty to follow instructions of the defendant to work in a to both defenses named is recognized by the courts (Nelson v. St. Paul Plow Works (1894) 57 Minn. 43, 58 N. W. 868), the large majority of the cases in which an assurance of safety is an element deal with the servant's rights from the standpoint of contributory negligence.

The assurances of safety with which we are now concerned are the more or less explicit statements which are made by masters or superior servants to allay the apprehension of their subordinates; but it should be remembered that, as a master is under the duty of keeping the place of work reasonably safe or giving notice of its insecurity, the invitation which is inferentially extended to servants to make use of any part of the premises, which is required for the due performance of their duties may be regarded as being accompanied by an implied assurance that they will not be exposed to any danger from which ordinary care can protect them. See Salem Stone & Lime Co. v. Griffin (1894) 139 Ind. 141, 38 N. E. 411.

II. Illustrative cases.

The most frequent examples of the application of the above doctrine are the decisions in which the contributory negligence of the servant is held to be for the jury, on the ground that he relied upon an expression of opinion as to the condition of the appliances, taking that term in its broadest sense.

An employer who ties two ladders together to make one sufficiently long to reach to the roof of his barn, and directs his employee to ascend, assuring him that it is safe, and that he is an old sailor and skilful tier of knots, is liable where the employee relies on his assurances without examining the fastening, and is injured by its giving way because it is improperly tied. Denning v. Gould (1893) 157 Mass. 563, 32 N. E. 862.

An employee who does not know a safe rate of speed for a grindstone turned by machinery has the right to rely on a statement by the superintendent of the employer that the speed at which it is revolving is safe. Heifenstein v. Medart (1896) 136 Mo. 595, 38 S. W. 294.

dangerous place, and if the plaintiff knew, or had reasonable cause to know, that it was dangerous to work in the ditch, he could not recover, although the defendant may have said to him that the ditch was all right. This was not given in the words of the request, but, as we interpret the instructions, was meant to be given in substance, pretty nearly, so far as correct. The court said: "If you should find that he was not bound to anticipate the danger of the earth caving in, that he was warranted in assuming that that part was left safe for him, and if you should find, upon the evidence, that the master, standing by, observed him doing the work, and made a declaration that it was safe, still that would not protect him against the obvious perils and dangers that existed, and which you have a right to take into consideration." But, later in the charge, the court added: "The mere fact that a man knows the unsafe condition of a thing does not necessarily, as matter of law, constitute him negligent in case he does that thing." This contradicted the ruling asked, and rightly, although possibly the illustrations were not the most apposite that could have been chosen. When we say that a man appreciates a danger, we mean that he forms a judgment as to the future, and that his judgment is right. But if against this judgment is set the judgment of a superior,—one, too, who from the nature of the callings of the two men, and of the superior's duty, seems likely to make the more accurate forecast,—and if to this is added a command to go on with his work and to run the risk, it becomes a complex question of the particular circumstances whether the inferior is not justified, as a prudent man, in surrendering his own opinion and obeying the command. The nature and the degree of the danger, the extent of the plaintiff's appreciation of it, and the exigency of the work, all enter into consideration, and no universal rule can be laid down. See Hennessy v. Boston, 161 Mass. 502, 37 N. E. 668; Coan v. Marlborough, 164 Mass. 206, 41 N. E. 238; Burgess v. Davis Sulphur Ore Co. 165 Mass. 71, 42 N. E. 501.

The instructions of the court on this point were excepted to, but no attention was called to any matter of objection other than their inconsistency with the request which has been stated. In the course of this part of his charge, the judge mentioned the plaintiff's evidence that the other men were at work in the same place, and said to the jury: "If any

Affirming on Rehearing 136 Mo. 619, 36 S. W. 863, 37 S. W. 829.

A carpenter employed by an electric company has a right to rely on a statement by the foreman that uninsulated wires near which he is required to work are not dangerous, where there is nothing to indicate that any electrical current is passing through them. Chicago Edison Co. v. Hudson (1896) 66 Ill. App. 639.

In Haas v. Raich (1893) 12 U. S. App. 534, 6 C. C. A. 201, 56 Fed. Rep. 984, the plaintiff, when called to engage in shoveling gravel into cars under an overhanging bank, noticed its appearance, and inquired of the foreman as to its safety. The foreman, who had previously been upon the bank, endeavoring to throw it down, went up again, when thus appealed to, for the purpose of examining it, and he then repeated the assurance of safety, accompanied with the order which he had given when he first instructed the plaintiff to assist in the loading of the cars. The court said: "It certainly cannot be said, as a matter of law, that the plaintiff was not justified in giving some weight to and placing some reliance upon assurances thus given and repeated. There were other facts to be weighed in connection with the assurances given by the foreman, upon the question of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff,—such as the composition of the bank, the character of the overhanging crust, the fact that it had remained in its then condition since the previous day, and that it had resisted the efforts of the foreman to throw it down. Under these circumstances, we think that the questions of the assumption of the risk and of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff were for the jury, and not for the court, and that it was error to withdraw them from the jury."

See also Bradbury v. Goodwin (1886) 108 Ind. 286, 9 N. E. 302 (master assured servant that the appliances for lowering a heavy safe were adequate for the purpose); Lake Superior Iron Co. v. Erickson (1878) 39 Mich. 402, 33 Am. Rep. 423 (miner injured); Daley v. Schaaf (1882) 28 Hun, 314 (servant assured that there was no danger of the fall of bricks of which he was apprehensive); Chadwick v. Brewster (1891) 39 N. Y. S. R. 718, 15 N. Y. Supp. 598 (servant a house-painter injured by the fall of a scaffold, the planks of which were not tied by him in consequence of his reliance on the assurance of the master that they would hold without being tied); Warner v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1896) 62 Mo. App. 192 (servant was assured that ladder with worn rounds was safe); Jones v. St. Louis, N. & P. Packet Co. (1891) 43 Mo. App. 398 (plaintiff called the attention of the second mate to a defect in a plank, and was assured that it could be safely used); American Wire Nail Co. v. Connelly (1893) 8 Ind. App. 398, 35 N. E. 721 (foreman assured workman that a new and more dangerous kind of work was safe); Monahan v. Kansas City Clay & C. Co. (1894) 58 Mo. App. 68 (miner injured by falling of unlined shaft had been assured it was safe); Davies v. Griffith (1892) 27 Ohio L. J. 180 (carpenter employed by a builder objected that a scaffold was made of insufficient material, and mounted it after the builder had assured him that it was all right).

Other groups of cases governed by the same principle are those in which there has been an explicit assertion by the master, or some agent for whose statements he is responsible, that certain dangerous conditions of which the servant has acquired knowledge have been remedied.

Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. McKee (1887) 27 Kan. 592, 15 Pac. 484 (superintendent told plaintiff that machine complained of had been repaired); Nelson v. St. Paul Plow Works (1894) 57 Minn. 43, 58 N. W. 868; Lawrence v. Hagemeyer & Co. (1892) 93 Ky. 591, 20 S. W. 704 (servant had refused to use a saw unless it was repaired, and only resumed work when informed by the machinist that it was "all right"); Goggin v. D. M. Osborne & Co. (1896) 115 Cal. 437, 47 Pac. 248 (same facts); Sophersstein v. Bertels (1896) 178 Pa. 401, 35 Atl. 1000 (employee, after discovering that a machine was out of order and informing the superintendent thereof, continued to operate it after the superintendent had done some work upon it and pronounced it all right).

inference is to be drawn from that fact, you are entitled to draw it as to what the judgment of the other men was as to the safety or the unsafety of it, the claim being that he [the plaintiff] was not in the exercise of due care because he knew of the unsafe condition." It is not quite clear whether the judge meant that the actual conduct of interested persons on the spot might be considered by the jury to be some evidence as to what conduct was prudent, or only that they might regard its possible influence on the plaintiff when they were deciding whether he knew of the unsafe condition, as would seem from the connection in which the remark was made. The judge had stated the defendant's testimony that he and some of the men had told the plaintiff that the ditch was unsafe, and that the plaintiff denied that anyone had told him so, but said that the master stood by until ready to go, and left the men at work there, and that the other men were at work in the same place. On the latter interpretation, especially, there is no question of introducing evidence upon collateral issues as to the experience of other men at other times, as in Schoonmaker v. Wilbraham, 110 Mass. 134, but a reference to the plaintiff's contradictory version of the actual circumstances in which he found himself, and under which he had to make up his mind, all of which were before the jury for such conclusion as they might draw. If the defendant feared that the instruction would be taken in a broader sense than he deemed consistent with the law, he should have called attention to the language.

The defendant also asked a ruling that if the plaintiff was told by any party that the bank would cave he could not recover. Very plainly this was wrong. The plaintiff may have been told so by a workman, but may have believed a statement by the defendant that the ditch was safe.

Exceptions to the exclusion of evidence of the depth at which the pipe then lay, and that there had been no change in the level of the street, are not argued. It does not appear that the defendant expected to contradict or to qualify the plaintiff's evidence already in.

Exceptions overruled.

Or that certain precautions to secure his safety will be taken.

A servant whose business it is to examine revolvers after they have been tested has a right to rely to some extent on the tester's assurance that he will leave no unexploded cartridges in the revolvers. Anderson v. Duckworth (1894) 162 Mass. 251, 88 N. E. 510. Compare Bradley v. New York C. R. Co. (1874) 3 Thomp. & C. 288 (laborer entitled to rely on assurance of trackmaster that warning of the approach of trains would be given). As to the master's duty to warn the servant; see note to James v. Rapides Lumber Co. (La.) 44 L. R. A. 38.

Or that a certain future event which is expected to happen will not happen before a certain time.

That the boss or foreman of a railroad told a trackman that no train or engine would come over a certain bridge until a certain hour may properly be taken into consideration by the jury in determining whether he was negligent in not seeing the engine which injured him while he was crossing the bridge before that hour in the dark, although the engine was coming in the direction opposite to that in which he himself was walking. [Brewer and Brown, JJ. dissented on the ground that the plaintiff was negligent as a matter of law.] Northern P. R. Co. v. Amato (1892) 144 U. S. 465, 36 L. ed. 506, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 740, Affirming 1 U. S. App. 113, 49 Fed. Rep. 881, 1 C. C. A. 468; Floetti v. Third Ave. R. Co. (1896) 10 App. Div. 308, 41 N. Y. Supp. 792 (workman went under track in reliance on statement of foreman that no car would pass until a time much later than the time of the accident).

Or that an occurrence which will endanger his safety can only happen as a consequence of some particular thing being done. Blanton v. Dold (1891) 109 Mo. 75, 18 S. W. 1149 (plaintiff not negligent, as matter of law, in putting his hand inside a machine which, he was assured by the foreman, would not start without the pulling of a rope).

If the servant is otherwise entitled to rely upon the master's assurance that there is no danger, the mere fact that he is told by a fellow servant that there is danger is not enough to render him chargeable, as matter of law, with contributory negligence. 48 L. R. A.

III. Rationale of rule.

In Missouri it has been declared that an assurance from one representing the master, that the machinery or apparatus being used is all right, and an order from him to his servant to use it, notwithstanding a complaint of the servant as to its sufficiency, amount to a guarantee of safety. Rowland v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1886) 20 Mo. App. 463; McGowan v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. (1876) 61 Mo. 532.

But this conception, which would obviously place the master in the position of having taken upon himself the whole risk of what might happen, irrespective of the prudence or imprudence of the servant in exposing himself to the danger, seems scarcely consistent with the doctrine prevailing in the same state as to the inability of the servant to recover where his confidence in the master's statements was unwarrantable.

A more satisfactory theory, recognised in Missouri itself as well as in other states, is that, as the knowledge and means of knowledge possessed by the servant are, under normal circumstances, inferior to those possessed by the master, the former is, as a general rule, justified in relying upon any express statement made by the former in respect to the extent of the danger of the employment. This doctrine is stated in the main case as follows: "When we say that a man appreciates a danger, we mean that he forms a judgment as to the future, and that his judgment is right. But if against this judgment is set the judgment of a superior one, too, who, from the nature of the callings of the two men and of the superior's duty, seems likely to make the more accurate forecast, and if to this is added a command to go on with his work and to run the risk, it becomes a complex question of the particular circumstances whether the inferior is not justified as a prudent man in surrendering his own opinion and obeying the command. The nature and the degree of the danger, the extent of the plaintiff's appreciation of it, and the exigency of the work, all enter into consideration, and no universal rule can be laid down."

To the same effect is the language used in Heifenstein v. Medart (1896) 136 Mo. 593, 33 S. W. 294; Warner v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1895) 62 Mo. App. 191. The fact that there was nothing to put the servant on inquiry as to the existence of danger was emphasized in Chicago Edison Co. v. Hudson (1896) 66 Ill. App. 639 (uninsulated wires near place where a carpenter was put to work). In Chadwick v. Brewshar (1891) 39 N. Y. S. R. 718, 15 N. Y. Supp. 598, the court speaks of the "interposition of the master's superior knowledge" leading the servant to take the risk.

In view of this disparity of information, an assurance of safety, like a specific order, (see Haas v. Balch, supra, II.) may be regarded as having the effect of lulling the servant into a feeling of security and giving him good reason to believe that there is no need for the vigilance which he would otherwise have exercised. Hoffman v. Dickinson (1888) 31 W. Va. 142, 4 N. E. 53 (arguendo).

In Graham v. Newburg Orrel Coal & C. Co. (1893) 38 W. Va. 273, 18 S. E. 584, where the plaintiff was injured by an explosion of gas in a mine, the evidence was that the boss asked and urged him to work on the night in question, saying he would have a nice night's work, and that the boss made this statement when he had not been in the mine for hours, and therefore could not know anything about the gas. The court said: "Now, whether we consider this statement an order or a request, Graham was lulled into a feeling of security by it, and unless we could find, as we cannot, that the danger was known to Graham, and was patent and manifest, so as to deter any reasonably prudent man, it frees Graham from contributory negligence. . . . I regard it tantamount to an order to work. Had he refused, would he have been retained? But if not a command, it was an assurance by a superior having every means and with capacity to know, and bound to know, given to one not having equal means or capacity, not knowing the danger or having no definite knowledge of any ground of danger, inspiring confidence and a feeling of security."

The general principle here involved is that a person who, by the breach of some duty, has caused another person to relax his vigilance under circumstances of peril, is not at liberty to impute the consequences of his act to the latter person's want of vigilance. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Ogier (1860) 35 Pa. 60, 78 Am. Dec. 322.

In one case it was argued that the rule as to the effect of an assurance of safety should be different where the appliance was of an extremely simple character, such as a ladder, but this contention did not prevail. Warner v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1895) 62 Mo. App. 192 (servant used a ladder with worn rounds).

The servant's position is, of course, proportionally strengthened where he is not only assured that the conditions complained of do not imperil his safety, but also that they will be altered for the better.

Where a miner complains that he is exposed to danger from the possible fall of a large stone in the roof of a tunnel, and is not only assured by the underground manager of the mine that there is no risk, but receives a promise from the same official that the stone will be very shortly removed, it is for the jury to say whether an injury which he suffers through going back to work before the manager's promise is fulfilled shall be considered due to his own rashness, or to his having implicitly relied on the assurances so given him. Patterson v. Wallace (1854) 1 Macq. H. L. Cas. 748. See also Chicago Drop Forge & Foundry Co. v. Van Dam (1894) 140 Ill. 337, 36 N. E. 1024, Affirming (1893) 50 Ill. App. 470 (inexperienced servant went on using a defective machine after the foreman had assured him that it was all right and that he would shortly be supplied with a contrivance which would diminish the peril); Warner v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1895) 62 Mo. App. 191 (ladder with worn rounds).

IV. When an assurance of safety is not conclusive in the servant's favor.

That the servant is not, under all circumstances, protected by the fact that he received an assurance of safety before he went to work, is not disputed. But the cases dealing with the import of evidence that the danger was understood by him disclose the same divergence of views as that which we have had occasion to notice in discussing the effect of a specific order.

On the one hand, contributory negligence is said to be predicable, as a matter of law, of the undertaking or continuance of work involving exposure to an abnormal danger, whenever the condition to which the assurance related was apparent to a person in the exercise of ordinary care. Lawrence v. Hagemeyer & Co. (1892) 93 Ky. 591, 20 S. W. 704; Graham v. Newburg Orrel Coal & C. Co. (1893) 38 W. Va. 273, 18 S. E. 584.

Where the servant knew that the place of work was unsafe, it is erroneous to give an unqualified instruction to the effect that he is entitled to recover if he had been assured by the master's representative that it was safe. Breckinridge & P. Syndicate v. Murphy (1897) 18 Ky. L. Rep. 015, 38 S. W. 700 (not to be reported).

That the assurance of the person in charge of the work that he would see that the plaintiff was guarded against danger was not sufficient to justify the latter's continued exposure to the known risk of the environment,—at all events where the circumstances were such that it was impossible for that person to give the plaintiff such warning as would enable him to escape the peril,—see Reese v. Clark (1892) 146 Pa. 465, 23 Atl. 246 (injury caused by the fall of some heavy iron plates, propped up by bricks which the plaintiff was removing).

Or where the inadequacy of the appliances is palpable, see Bradbury v. Goodwin (1886) 108 Ind. 286, 9 N. E. 302.

Or where the servant has equal means of knowledge, see Perschke v. Hencken (1897) 44 N. Y. Supp. 265.

Where the evidence shows that the man employed to do the work on the shaft employed the deceased, who was a man of experience as a miner, and it was for that reason he employed him, and that the matter of gas was talked over between them, that they both knew that the shaft was making a little gas, and that they both thought there would not be any danger by using care, an instruction to the effect that if the jury believe that deceased went upon the platform by request of and under employment of defendant, and that before he went thereon defendant or his agents informed him that it was safe from explosive gases, and that he had reason to believe it was safe as defendant had informed him, then he did not go thereon voluntarily,—is not borne out by the testimony. Coal Run Coal Co. v. Jones (1889) 127 Ill. 379, 8 N. E. 865, 20 N. E. 89.

In other cases the doctrine laid down is that, although a defect is apparent, yet if the servant proceeds to work on an assurance given by the master that it is safe to do so, the master is liable for a resulting injury, unless the extra hazard is so palpable that no man of ordinary intelligence and prudence would incur it. Aldridge v. Midland Blast Furnace Co. (1883) 78 Mo. 559; Monahan v. Kansas City Clay & C. R. Co. (1894) 58 Mo. App. 68; Jones

v. St. Louis, N. & P. Packet Co. (1891) 43 Mo. App. 898.

It will be noticed that the decisions embodying this latter doctrine were all rendered in Missouri, where the courts have gone much further than in most of the other states in refusing to draw peremptory inferences of law from proof of the servant's knowledge. But the authorities for a similar doctrine in cases which involve the additional element of a specific order are not thus localized. As to such cases it is explicitly held that the mere fact that a servant knows the unsafe condition of a thing does not necessarily, as a matter of law, render him guilty of contributory negligence in continuing to work in its vicinity, where the master assures him that it is safe and commands him to go on with the work. McKee v. Tourtelotte; Keegan v. Kavanaugh (1876) 62 Mo. 230 (question for jury whether a hod carrier, engaged in helping to build a wall at the foot of an embankment of earth 20 or 80 feet deep and not shored or propped up, was negligent in obeying orders to go down, although reluctant to do so, when he was told that there was no danger); Jackson v. Georgia R. Co. (1886) 77 Ga. 82 (section-hand ordered with a curse, after inquiry as to danger, to obey or leave, and told there was no danger); Chicago Anderson Pressed Brick Co. v. Sobkowiak (1892) 45 Ill. App. 317, Affirmed in (1894) 148 Ill. 573, 36 N. E. 572 (servant after protest had gone to dig under a bank of earth in response to an express order and an assurance of safety).

The effect of the servant's knowledge where his assumption of the risks is relied upon is open to no doubt. If that knowledge is imperfect, and excusably so, the action is, upon general principles, not barred. Nelson v. St. Paul Plow Works (1894) 57 Minn. 43, 58 N. W. 868 (superintendent told servant that a machine the defects of which he had previously discovered had been repaired, case for jury). Compare Colorado Fuel & I. Co. v. Cummings (1896) 8 Colo. App. 541, 48 Pac. 875 (where the absence of any such statement was emphasized).

But an assurance that appliances are in good condition manifestly cannot prevent the operation of a defense which is complete, once it is shown that the risk was known. Colorado Fuel & I. Co. v. Cummings (1896) 8 Colo. App. 541, 48 Pac. 875; Howerly v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1895) 13 Misc. 641, 34 N. Y. Supp. 1089.

A servant "assumes the risk when he voluntarily enters into danger apparent to him, notwithstanding an agent of his employer tells him there is no danger." Toomey v. Eureka Iron & S. Works (1891) 89 Mich. 249, 50 N. W. 850.

An employee operating a planing machine with which he is familiar assumes the risk of the belt by which it is run breaking apart, when he observes that the fastenings have partially given way, and continues to operate it, although he calls the foreman's attention to it, and is told that the belt is all right and to go on. Anderson v. H. C. Akeley Lumber Co. (1891) 47 Minn. 128, 49 N. W. 664.

A statement by a foreman to a boy fifteen years old employed on a pasting machine, that it was foolish to use a split stock to put the paper between the belt of felting and a heated cylinder, and that he could use his hands without danger, was not an assurance that his hand would not be drawn into the machine if it came in contact with the surface of the belting and cylinder so as to render the employer liable for an injury. Lowcock v. Franklin Paper Co. (1897) 169 Mass. 313, 47 N. E. 1000 (verdict for plaintiff set aside).

Commenting upon the circumstances in Wellgreffe v. Daw (1891) 40 Ill. App. 56, the court said: "This case is not analogous to that upon 48 L. R. A.

which so many authorities have been cited, of defective machinery, and notwithstanding such condition the employee is urged by the employer that he can safely proceed with it, but it is a case as to the mode of proceeding with machinery that was not defective, where, as to the mode or way of safely operating it, there was an honest difference of opinion between the employer and employee. It cannot be, after such difference of opinion has manifested itself, that the employer thereafter becomes an insurer of the employee against an accident, even if it should occur through a mistaken judgment of the employer, where the employee voluntarily continues at such work. In such case it would seem that the hazard, if any, thereafter would be incident to the employee's service, which he voluntarily assumes."

In Haas v. Balch (1893) 12 U. S. App. 534, 56 Fed. Rep. 984, 6 C. C. A. 201, the cases which declare the general rule to be that where the servant is of mature age, and of ordinary intelligence, he assumes the risk of a known situation, even though assured by an agent or representative of the master that there is no danger, have been thus commented upon: "In all, or nearly all, these cases the employee had equal knowledge of the risk to be apprehended with the master or his representative, and hence was not relieved from the duty of exercising his own judgment upon the question whether he would or would not subject himself to the known dangers of the situation. There are other cases which hold the rule to be that, when a servant is directed by the master or his representative to place himself in a situation of danger, the law will not charge him with the risks of the situation, or hold him guilty of contributory negligence, unless the danger is so glaring that no prudent man would subject himself thereto even in obedience to the commands of a master. The difference observable in these cases, in the weight given to an assurance of safety on the part of the master or his representative, is mainly due to the different state of facts proved in the several cases upon the point of equal knowledge or means of knowledge, between the master and servant, of the risk to be incurred in the given instance. The fact that the assurance of safety has been given is one to be weighed in each case. The weight to be given thereto is dependent upon the circumstances of the particular case. If in a given instance, the servant, being of mature age and of ordinary intelligence, has equal knowledge with the master of the dangers to be apprehended, and he voluntarily subjects himself thereto, knowing of their existence, the mere fact that he had received an assurance that there was no risk to be dreaded or avoided might be of little avail in relieving him from a charge of contributory negligence. On the other hand, if the master or his representative has superior knowledge or means of knowledge of a given situation and of its safety, or the contrary, and he assures the servant that he can safely undertake a given work, such an assurance may justify the servant in undertaking the work in reliance upon the superior knowledge of the master, and without being liable to the charge of negligence in so doing, unless the danger, in the language of the Supreme Court in District of Columbia v. McElligott (1886), 117 U. S. 633, 29 L. ed. 940, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 584, is 'so imminent or manifest as to prevent a reasonably prudent man from risking it.'"

V. Whose assurances bind the master.

The cases dealing with the question, By whose assurances is the master bound?—are not less wanting in explicitness than those which involve the representative character of the agents who give orders.

There is authority for the view that only a vice principal can bind the master. "If the conductor who quieted the plaintiff's apprehensions of danger, and reassured him of his safety and the sufficiency of the rope, was a vice principal, acting for and in lieu of the master in the control of the hands and the superintendence of the work and machinery, we think the defendant would have been liable notwithstanding the plaintiff may have believed the rope to be unsafe. . . . If the conductor did not occupy the position of master to the plaintiff at the time of his injury, then what he said and did with reference to the rope could no more bind the master than the words or conduct of any one of the eleven laborers who were working at the log in conjunction with the plaintiff." McGowan v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. (1876) 61 Mo. 528.

In some cases the assurances were, as a matter of fact, given by a vice principal, but no restrictive emphasis is laid upon this circumstance. Goggin v. D. M. Osborne & Co. (1896) 115 Cal. 437, 47 Pac. 248 (local manager); Monahan v. Kansas City Clay & C. Co. (1894) 58 Mo. App. 68 (foreman of mine); Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. McKee (1887) 37 Kan. 592, 15 Pac. 484 (superintendent); Jones v. St. Louis, N. & P. Packet Co. (1891) 43 Mo. App. 398 (second mate of ship).

On the other hand, there are cases in which the servant for whose statements the master was compelled to answer was not a vice principal under the decisions of the state where the action was brought.

A workman is entitled to rely on the representation of a fellow servant whose province it is to inform the workmen whether they may safely work or not in a given place. Paterson v. Wallace (1854) 1 Macq. H. L. Cas. 743 (underground manager of mine).

A trackmaster, as incident to his right to employ laborers for a railroad company, is authorized to give them an assurance that he will warn them of the approach of trains. Bradley v. New York C. R. Co. (1874) 3 Thomp. & C. 288; Pool v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1882) 56 Wis. 227 (servant in charge of hand car assured a detective in the company's employ that he might safely sit with his feet hanging down). But in this last case the injured servant was in a different department.

C. B. L.

President, etc., of HARVARD COLLEGE v. ASSESSORS OF CAMBRIDGE.

(..... Mass.)

1. Dormitories and dining halls furnished by a college for the use of students are devoted to college purposes, and therefore exempt from taxation under Pub. Stat. chap. 11, § 5, cl. 3, as amended by Stat. 1889, chap. 465.

NOTE.—As to exemption of property of institutions of learning from taxation, see Catlin v. Trinity College (N. Y.) 3 L. R. A. 206; Detroit Home & Day School v. Detroit (Mich.) 6 L. R. A. 97; Auditor General v. University of Michigan (Mich.) 10 L. R. A. 876, and note; Philadelphia v. Overseers of Public Schools (Pa.) 29 L. R. A. 600; Brown University v. Granger (R. I.) 86 L. R. A. 847; Kentucky Fe- 48 L. R. A.

2. A dwelling house occupied by the president of a college and his family, built with funds given expressly for the purpose of erecting a dwelling house for the president and his successors in office, and situated on the college grounds, and kept in order and repair at college expense; while the whole lower floor, except possibly the kitchen, is used for class-day, commencement, and other receptions, and for many hospitalities incident to the president's functions, and the hall and drawing-room are also used for the convenience of the college and the president, for meetings of the faculty and committees, for conferences with university officers and students, for calls on university business, and for the annual meetings of the corporation at which degrees are voted,—is exempt from taxation as property occupied by the institution or an officer thereof for the purposes for which it was incorporated.

3. Houses occupied by college professors, with the permission of the college and without their having any estate therein or paying any rent therefor, but for the use of which an allowance is made as part of the compensation for their services, while the principal or dominant consideration in regard to the occupation has reference to the performance of their duties in the offices which they hold as professors and otherwise, rather than to the private benefit which they would receive in the way of homes for themselves and their families,—are exempt from taxation under Stat. chap. 11, § 5, cl. 3, as amended by Stat. 1889, chap. 465.

(January 4, 1900.)

R EPORT by the Superior Court for Middlesex County for the opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court after judgment in favor of petitioner, of an action to recover back taxes alleged to have been wrongfully assessed against property of petitioner and to quash the assessment. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Samuel Hoar and William Sullivan, for petitioner:

The English colleges were primarily boarding houses.

1 V. A. Huber, English Universities, p. 178; Yale University v. New Haven, 71 Conn. 316, 43 L. R. A. 490, 42 Atl. 87; G. C. Broderick, History of Oxford University, chap. 2, pp. 18–20, 61, 62; Atkinson & Clark, History of Cambridge University, p. 243.

In the buildings of which an English college usually consisted are the president's chamber, the fellows' rooms, scholars' rooms, warden's lodgings, the treasury, the library, the chapel, the hall or commons, buttery, kitchen, brewery, storehouse, offices, and stables.

C. G. Robertson, University of Oxford, All Souls, chap. 1; Stokes, University of Cambridge, Corpus Christi, chap. 2; Gray, male Orphan School v. Louisville (Ky.) 40 L. R. A. 110; Yale University v. New Haven (Conn.) 43 L. R. A. 490; White v. Smith (Pa.) 43 L. R. A. 498; and Phillips Academy v. Andover (Mass.) post, 550.

As to exemption of property used by such institutions for revenue, see also note to Book Agents of M. E. Church South v. Hinton (Tenn.) 19 L. R. A. 289.

Queen's College, chaps. 2, 7; Broderick, History of the University of Oxford, chap. 2.

In like manner Harvard College, from its foundation, was a community of teachers and students living in the college, housed and fed by the college.

1 Quincy, History of Harvard University, 452; A. McF. Davis, Early College Buildings, p. 3.

The second college building was the president's house.

1 Quincy, History of Harvard University, appx. No. VII. p. 473.

From the beginning the corporation and the overseers of Harvard College have considered the college to be essentially a community of teachers and students, housed and fed in the college, living in college buildings.

They considered it absolutely necessary for the accomplishment of the purposes for which the college was incorporated, that it should have buildings suitable for housing and feeding its president and teachers and students.

It would be a very strange and illogical policy for the colony, the province, or the commonwealth to put a tax upon buildings which they considered so essential to the college that they strained their own resources to help build and maintain them.

The exemption granted by the colony in the charter has ever since been respected by the province and the commonwealth.

Hardy v. Waltham, 7 Pick. 108; Harvard College v. Boston, 104 Mass. 470.

The word "occupied," in the statute, is not used in the general sense in which a corporation or individual may be said to occupy their real estate when it is not occupied by anyone else, but in the sense in which an incorporated college, academy, hospital, or like institution occupies its college, academy, or hospital, and the land and buildings connected therewith.

Lynn Workmen's Aid Asso. v. Lynn, 136 Mass. 285.

The occupancy by "officers," required by the Revised Statutes of 1835 and the subsequent enactments, is the same kind of occupancy,—actual occupancy by the party designated, without qualification as to the degree or completeness of the occupant's control, unqualified as to the right or title under which the occupancy is maintained, and qualified in the statute of 1835 and its subsequent revisions only in the purpose for which it is maintained.

The premises are not in the exclusive control of the president; they are occupied in part by the college and its officers. The president occupies so much of them as he occupies, not as a lessee, but as licensee. There is no relation of landlord and tenant, but mere permission to occupy, on one side, and on the other, no obligation either to occupy or to pay rent.

Pierce v. Cambridge, 2 Cush. 613.

The students are not lessees. Their relation is more that of lodgers.

White v. Maynard, 111 Mass. 250, 15 Am. Rep. 28.

It is the dealings of the college with its 48 L. R. A.

property, the use it makes of it, that is to decide the question of its exemption.

Mount Hermon Boys' School v. Gill, 145 Mass. 148, 13 N. E. 354; Chapel of Good Shepherd v. Boston, 120 Mass. 212; Massachusetts General Hospital v. Somerville, 101 Mass. 319; Wesleyan Academy v. Wübraham, 99 Mass. 599; Salem Lyceum v. Salem, 154 Mass. 15, 27 N. E. 672; New England Hospital for Women & Children v. Boston, 113 Mass. 518; Trinity Church v. Boston, 118 Mass. 164.

Dormitories and dining-halls are exempt.

Yale University v. New Haven, 71 Conn. 316, 43 L. R. A. 490, 42 Atl. 87.

Mr. Gilbert A. A. Pevey, for defendants:

Exemptions, being an exception to the general rule, are regarded as in derogation of equal rights, and the tendency of the courts is to construe them strictly.

Boston Soc. of Redemptorist Fathers v. Boston, 129 Mass. 178; Mount Hermon Boys' School v. Gill, 145 Mass. 144, 13 N. E. 354; Cincinnati College v. State, 19 Ohio, 115; Third Cong. Soc. v. Springfield, 147 Mass. 396, 18 N. E. 68.

Prior to the Revised Statutes of 1836, certain exemptions had been provided by law for Harvard College, with certain exceptions in favor of local taxation in Cambridge.

Harvard College v. Boston, 104 Mass. 489; Harvard College v. Kettell, 16 Mass. 204; Stat. 1821, chap. 107, § 6; Stat. 1830, chap. 151, § 6.

The intent of the legislature by the provisions of the Revised Statutes, and the subsequent later provisions as now found in chapter 465 of the Acts of 1889, was to restrict the terms of the then (1835) existing law.

Williams College v. Williamstown Assessors, 167 Mass. 507, 46 N. E. 394.

If the exemption is not applicable to the houses, neither does it apply to the several pieces of land appurtenant to the houses.

Trinity Church v. Boston, 118 Mass. 167.

To relieve from taxation, the property must be shown to have been necessarily occupied by the institution or its officers for the purpose for which the institution was incorporated.

Massachusetts General Hospital v. Somerville, 101 Mass. 321; Proprietors of South Cong. Meetinghouse v. Lowell, 1 Met. 541; Amherst College v. Amherst Assessors, 173 Mass. 233, 53 N. E. 815.

Rooms occupied by tenants for hire of a corporation established for charitable uses are not exempt.

Chapel of Good Shepherd v. Boston, 120 Mass. 212.

The principal use was not that for college purposes.

Salem Lyceum v. Salem, 154 Mass. 16, 27 N. E. 672.

The question of rent or lease, or the manner of payment of the rent, is important only as bearing upon the nature of the occupation, and whether the occupation is in fact for the purposes for which the plaintiff was incorporated.

Pierce v. Cambridge, 2 Cush. 611; Mass- achusetts General Hospital v. Somerville, 101 Mass. 326; Mount Hermon Boys' School v. Gill, 145 Mass. 145, 13 N. E. 354; Williams College v. Williamstown Assessors, 167 Mass. 509, 46 N. E. 394; Wesleyan Academy v. Wilbraham, 99 Mass. 603.

Exemption from taxation of church property depends upon the use for which the building in question is intended, and is limited by such use.

Old South Soc. v. Boston, 127 Mass. 379.

This exemption is extended only to the part of the property which was used as a place of worship and for the purposes connected with it, such as the vestry, the furnace, and the like.

Proprietors of South Cong. Meeting-house v. Lovell, 1 Met. 538; Old South Soc. v. Boston, 127 Mass. 379; Trinity Church v. Boston, 118 Mass. 164.

Morton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action to recover back taxes that were assessed by the defendants on certain parcels of real estate belonging to the plaintiff corporation, situated in Cambridge, which the plaintiff contends were exempt from taxation under Pub. Stat. chap. 11, § 5, cl. 3, as amended by Stat. 1889, chap. 465. The case was heard by a justice of the superior court without a jury, on what are called agreed facts, but which we interpret as authorizing the court to draw such inferences from them as he thought they justified; and he found that the property was exempt, and found for the plaintiff for the entire amount, and reported the case to this court in such a manner as to present the question of the assessability of each of the parcels.

We think that the ruling of the superior court was right, and that all of the property was exempt from taxation. Many of the principles and considerations and authorities applicable to this case have been stated and referred to somewhat at length in Phillips Academy v. Andover, post, 550, 55 N. E. 841, and we do not deem it necessary to repeat them here.

The history of Harvard College, and of like institutions, shows, we think, that from the beginning dormitories and dining halls have been furnished by the college for the use of the students, and have been regarded as devoted to college purposes. In addition to this, the effect of the decisions in Wesleyan Academy v. Wilbraham, 99 Mass. 599, and Mount Hermon Boys' School v. Gill, 145 Mass. 139, 13 N. E. 354, is plainly to exempt property applied to such uses. See also Yale University v. New Haven, 71 Conn. 316, 43 L. R. A. 490, 42 Atl. 87, and State v. Ross, 24 N. J. L. 497. We do not think that it makes any difference in principle that the college, instead of itself furnishing board, provides a place, without rent or compensation in any form, or a lease or any agreement for a fixed term, for the use of students who club together for the purpose of obtaining for themselves, with the assistance of the college, food at cost. Property so used is occupied for the purposes for which the college was incorporated. Many particulars are stated in the agreed facts in regard to No. 17 Kirkland street, which is the parcel that we are now considering, that we do not think it necessary to refer to, as it seems to us plain that the property is exempt from taxation.

The history of the college, and of the legislation relating to it, also shows, we think, that the president's house, during the earlier years of the college at any rate, was regarded as almost, if not quite, as necessary for the purposes of the institution as dormitories and dining halls. Public money was appropriated by the general court to build it, as it had been to build the college buildings; and the occupancy of it evidently was considered as altogether official. The present house was built with funds given expressly for the purpose of erecting a dwelling house for the president and his successors in office, and since it was built has been occupied by them and their families. The president pays no rent or compensation for the use and occupation of the house, and has no lease, but occupies it, if he chooses, so long as he performs the duties of president. It, with several of the other houses that were taxed, namely, Nos. 11, 25, and 37 Quincy street,—this being 17 Quincy street, are now, and were at the time of the assessment, within the college grounds, and the premises are kept in order and repair, including grading, graveling walks, fertilizing, and repairing and cleaning furnace, removal of ashes, etc., under the direction of the college superintendent of buildings and the superintendent of grounds, and at the college expense. The whole lower floor, "except, possibly, the kitchen, is used for class-day, commencement, and other receptions, and for many hospitalities incident to the president's functions." The hall and drawing-room are also used for the convenience of the college and the president, for meetings of the faculty and committees, for conferences with university officers and students, for calls on university business, and for the annual meetings of the corporation at which degrees are voted. The rest of the house consists of the usual living and housekeeping rooms and chambers, and is used by the president and his family as a dwelling house. It seems to us that, on these facts, the dominant or principal purpose of the occupancy by the president cannot fairly be regarded as other than that for which the college was incorporated, and that the justice who heard the case in the superior court was justified in so finding. His occupation is official, as the head of the university, just as, for instance, the president occupies the White House; and it cannot be said, in any just sense, we think, that it is a private occupation, for his own benefit.

The remaining six houses are occupied by professors, three of whom are deans, each charged with a portion of the administrative duties formerly devolving exclusively on the president. Three of the houses, as already observed, are within the college grounds. All of them are kept in order and repair at the expense of the college, in the same manner and to the same extent as the house occupied by the president. The halls and drawing-rooms in all of them, except No. 37 Quincy street, occupied by Prof. Langdell, are used partly for the convenience of the college, and partly for that of the professor,—for different college uses and purposes incident to his duties as professor, chairman of committees, dean, and the like. In the case of No. 11 Quincy street, the drawing-room and hall are used by the professor for regular college exercises during the college year. In the case of No. 16 Quincy street, the professor is chairman of the "Freshman Advisors Committee of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences," consisting of about twenty persons, and he has a great number of interviews in his drawing-room with students and parents. In the case of No. 25 Quincy street, the college, in 1892, made additions and improvements at its own expense, so as to make it more convenient for the transaction of college business, and the entertaining of guests on college account. The additions, as well as the drawing-room and hall, are used for different college purposes incident to the several duties of the occupying professor. The parts of the houses to which no reference has been made are used by the professors and their families, and consist of the usual living and housekeeping rooms and chambers. In the fall of the year, when the salaries of the professors are voted, they are fixed at certain sums, "and the use of the house $750," or whatever the sum may be. Otherwise, the professor pays no rent, and has no other agreement for his use and occupation of the house, but uses it as such professor.

We think that it was competent for the justice who heard the case to find, on these facts, that the principal or dominant consideration in regard to the occupation of the houses by the several professors had reference to the performance of their duties in the offices which they held as professors and otherwise, rather than to the private benefit which they would receive in the way of homes for themselves and their families, and that he was justified in finding that the occupancy was for the purpose for which the college was incorporated. This case is distinguishable, we think, from Williams College v. Williamstown Assessors, 167 Mass. 505, 46 N. E. 394. In the first place, there was no question in that case as to the taxation of a building used for a dormitory and dining hall for the students. In the next place, the occupation by the professors in this case clearly lacks the exclusive character which it was held to have in that case. In the third place, no such use for college purposes is shown to have been made of the houses occupied by the professors in that case as appears in this case. In the fourth place, the sums fixed as compensation for the use of the houses in that case were paid and received as rent, and the court so treated it in the opinion. In this case the sums fixed for the use of the houses were allowed as part of the compensation for services as professor, thus tending to show, as said in Massachusetts General Hospital v. Somerville, 101 Mass. 326, that "the occupation was one merely by reason of service," and that the value put upon the use of the house was merely "a convenient mode of adjusting the compensation, . . . and not as the income or fruit of an estate granted." Lastly, this case seems to be one where the buildings are occupied "with the permission of the college, and without" the professors "having any estate therein or paying any rent therefor;" in which case it was said in Pierce v. Cambridge, 2 Cush. 611, the buildings would be exempt from taxation. The defendant relies on Third Cong. Soc. v. Springfield, 147 Mass. 396, 18 N. E. 68, which was a case where a parsonage was declared to be unexempt. The court held that religious societies did not come within the clause that we have been considering, but within the seventh clause, and that the exemption was limited to houses of religious worship only. That case is not applicable to this. We think that the judgment of the Superior Court should be affirmed.

So ordered.

Trustees of PHILLIPS ACADEMY

v.
Inhabitants of the Town of ANDOVER et al.

(..... Mass.)

1. The occupancy of real estate by an educational institution or its officers for the purposes for which it was incorporated, in order to exempt the property from taxation under Pub. Stat. chap. 11, § 5, cl. 3, as amended by Stat. 1889, chap. 465, must have, or be supposed to have, a direct connection with such purposes.
2. Premises occupied by the professors of an academy and their families may be exempt from taxation, under Pub. Stat. chap. 11, § 5, cl. 3, as amended by Stat. 1889, chap. 465, exempting real estate of such institutions when occupied by them or their officers for the purposes for which they are incorporated.
3. Abutting property may be constitutionally assessed for benefits from the watering of streets.
4. A vote appropriating money for street sprinkling, expressly stating that it is appropriated under Stat. 1895, chap. 186, means that the provisions of that act are to be applied in regard to the expenditure, and, in the absence of anything limiting the amount of the assessment the fair inference is that the whole cost is to be assessed on the abutting property.

(January 4, 1900.)

CASE submitted upon agreed statement of facts for the opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court as to the right to recover back taxes assessed upon property belonging to NOTE.—As to exemption of property of educational institutions from taxation, see preceding case and footnotes thereto.

plaintiffs and paid under protest. New trial ordered.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Thomas H. Russell, for plaintiffs:

Plaintiffs are entitled to have abated the part of said tax assessed upon nine houses which at the time of said assessment were occupied by the professors; also they are entitled to have abated $192.27, assessed upon them and included in said tax, for a part of the expense of sprinkling the streets of Andover.

Mr. William Odlin, for defendants:

Each professor is the sole occupant of his premises, has complete and undisturbed possession thereof, and uses the property strictly for his private purposes.

This occupation of widely separated individual houses by separate individuals as their place of residence, and residence only, is not such a use by the corporation as to be within the purpose for which the corporation was formed.

Williams College v. Williamstown Assessors, 167 Mass. 505, 46 N. E. 394.

The legislature had the authority to pass chapter 186 of the Acts of 1895, and the selectmen had the right to water the streets as they did, and assess the costs on the estates benefited.

Boston Seamen's Friend Soc. v. Boston, 116 Mass. 181.

The assessment for street watering is a tax for a local improvement, and is not a tax imposed for the general purpose of government, from which exemption under the statutes can be properly claimed.

Morton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case was heard on agreed facts, and the principal question is whether the property for which the plaintiffs were assessed was exempt from taxation by virtue of Pub. Stat. chap. 11, § 5, cl. 3, as amended by Stat. 1889, chap. 465, which provides that "the personal property of literary, benevolent, charitable and scientific institutions and temperance societies incorporated within this commonwealth, and the real estate belonging to such institutions occupied by them or their officers for the purposes for which they are incorporated," shall be exempt from taxation. There can be no doubt that Phillips Academy is an institution within the meaning of the exempting clause, and that, with perhaps a possible doubt in the case of Prof. Park, the persons occupying the various houses were officers of the institution. Williams College v. Williamstown Assessors, 167 Mass. 505, 46 N. E. 394. The more difficult question is whether the property was occupied by them for the purposes for which the institution was incorporated. It is not easy, and perhaps not possible, to define what will constitute such an occupancy under all circumstances, and we shall not attempt it; but there are some general rules and considerations which we deem it proper to state, notwithstanding the disposition which is made of this case.

The occupancy referred to usually will result from the official connection of the officer with the institution, and commonly will continue only so long as such connection lasts. The legislature could have provided, as it did formerly in the case of Harvard College (in tax act of 1818, and prior and subsequent tax acts), that such occupancy of itself should exempt the estate from taxation, or even that all of the real estate belonging to any of the favored institutions should be exempt. Previous to the adoption of the Revised Statutes this seems to have been the case, with a qualification after a time in regard to Harvard College and Phillips Academy. The exemptions were incorporated each year in the annual tax acts, and the institutions exempted were described by name, except that, beginning with 1801, there was in each act a general provision exempting academies established by the law of this commonwealth. Phillips Academy came under this general provision, but by a proviso in the act of 1821 (chap. 107, § 6) and in succeeding acts it was provided (and this is the qualification referred to above) that nothing contained in the act should "prevent the town of Andover from taxing such real estate belonging to the corporation of Phillips Academy situate in said town as shall not be under the immediate occupation and improvement of said corporation, or of any person or persons connected with said corporation exempted from taxation by this act." The persons who were exempted from taxation that were connected or likely to be connected with Phillips Academy were ministers of the gospel, preceptors of academies, and Latin grammar school masters. These and other personal exemptions relating to "the president, professors, tutors, librarians, and students of Harvard, Williams, and Amherst Colleges and of all other theological, medical, and literary institutions," were repealed by Stat. 1828, chap. 143. The effect of this repeal, so far as Phillips Academy was concerned, seems to have been to cause the omission in subsequent tax acts from the proviso of the concluding clause, which had provided by implication that real estate belonging to the corporation and occupied by any person connected with it should be exempt from taxation. By the Revised Statutes a general rule was established, which described in a single phrase the institutions to be exempted, and limited the exemption to the real estate belonging to them, and "actually occupied by them or by the officers of said institutions for the purposes for which they were incorporated." Rev. Stat. chap. 7, § 5, cl. 2. This statute, with certain additions and amendments not now material, has been continued by successive re-enactments to the present time. It is manifest that under the Revised Statutes and succeeding statutes the mere fact that real estate belonging to an exempted institution was occupied by it or by one of its officers could not be regarded as sufficient, without anything more, to exempt the property from taxation, and it has not been so regarded. Pierce v. Cambridge, 2 Cush. 611; Williams College v. Williamstown Assessors, 167

Mass. 505, 46 N. E. 394; Amherst College v. Amherst Assessors, 173 Mass. 233, 53 N. E. 815. In any other view the words "for the purposes for which they are incorporated" would be unnecessary and meaningless. The omission from subsequent statutes of the word "actually," which was in the Revised Statutes, does not affect the construction. Lynn Workmen's Aid Asso. v. Lynn, 138 Mass. 283, 285. Whatever else, therefore, may be said of the occupancy, it must be for the purposes for which the institution was incorporated, and this renders it necessary to inquire into the nature and character of the occupancy. If they are such that, taking all of the circumstances and all the legitimate considerations into account, it can be fairly said that the purpose of the occupancy is that for which the institution was incorporated, then the property is exempt; otherwise, not.

The occupancy contemplated by the statute means, we think, something more than that which results from ownership and possession on the part of the institution, or the use of the property for investment purposes. It must have, or be supposed to have, direct reference to the purposes for which the institution was incorporated, and must tend, or be supposed to tend, directly to promote them. In a sense, any occupancy on the part of the institution or its officers may be said to have reference to those purposes, and to promote them. But the language of the statute implies, we think, a direct, or what is supposed to be a direct, connection between the occupation and the purposes for which the institution was incorporated, and not an indirect one. It is not enough, for instance, that an income is derived from the occupancy, which is applied to carrying on the institution. Chapel of Good Shepherd v. Boston, 120 Mass. 212. At the same time the occupancy may be of the sort contemplated by the statute, notwithstanding that, as incident to it, rent is received, or the pecuniary value to the officer occupying it is taken into account in some other manner. Massachusetts General Hospital v. Somerville, 101 Mass. 319. The distinction lies, it seems to us, between an occupancy which is for the private benefit and convenience of the officer, and which is so regarded by the parties,—as in the ordinary case of landlord and tenant,—and an occupancy where, although necessarily to some extent the relation of landlord and tenant enters into it, the dominant or principal matter of consideration is the effect of the occupancy in promoting the objects of the institution, and upon the efficiency and influence of the officer as such, and upon those whom the institution is designed to benefit. In the former case the property would not be exempt, and in the latter it would; and the fact that the institution incidentally derived some pecuniary advantage from the occupancy would not deprive the property of the exemption to which it otherwise would be entitled. In considering whether property is occupied so as to be exempt, regard may be had, among other things, to the situation of the institution. If, for instance, it is so situated that desirable residences are not or may not be easily obtainable, and those in charge of it are of opinion that such officers as the best interests of the institution and of those resorting to it require can be more readily obtained if the institution provides places for them to live in, and it does so, this may be taken into account in determining whether the occupancy is for the purposes for which the institution was incorporated. Or, again, if, with the best interests of the institution as an educational institution in view, and for the purpose of enhancing its advantages to students, and of promoting discipline and good conduct, and greater freedom of intercourse between students and professors and instructors, those in charge deem it advisable that the president and professors and others connected with the institution should occupy residences in the college yard or in proximity to the college buildings, this also may be taken into account. The dominant purpose of the occupancy under such or similar circumstances may be as truly that for which the institution was incorporated, as the occupancy of buildings for recitation purposes or for offices or for other like purposes would be. And the occupancy does not lose what may be termed its institutional character and purpose because, as incidental to it, the president and professors and other officers and their families are provided with homes, for the possession and enjoyment of which by them compensation is allowed or taken into account in some manner. In many, if not most, New England colleges and academies, the presence of the families of the president and professors and other officers has been and is regarded as advantageous to the students and as beneficial to the institution. The occupation, therefore, by them, as homes, of property belonging to such institutions, would not necessarily be inconsistent with the spirit and intent of the exempting clause. In considering the purpose of the occupancy, due weight is also to be given to the intentions of those in charge of the institution. The institution can only act through agents. In Massachusetts General Hospital v. Somerville, 101 Mass. 319, 322, it is said: "What lands are reasonably required, and what uses of land will promote the purposes for which the institution was incorporated, must be determined by its officers. . . . In the absence of anything to show abuse, or otherwise to impeach their determination, it is sufficient that the lands are intended for, and in fact appropriated to, those purposes." And again, later: "The presumption is in favor of their judgment, and it requires something more than mere difference of opinion upon a matter of opinion especially confided to them to overcome that presumption." Their conclusions are not final. But, if consistent with other facts tending to show that the purpose of the occupancy is that for which the institution was incorporated, they well may be allowed to have a controlling effect. The question whether, in any given case, the property is or is not exempt, is to be determined by considering all of the facts and circumstances, and the intentions and purposes of those in charge of the institution respecting the use and occupation of the property will or may have a material bearing upon the proper determination of the question.

In applying the principles thus laid down, it is clear that not only may premises used by officers as homes for themselves and their families be so occupied by such officers as to be exempt, but also dormitories and dining halls and boarding houses, gymnasiums, and other buildings intended primarily for, and actually devoted to, the use and benefit of students and those attending the institution for the purpose for which it was incorporated. The statute is not to be construed narrowly, but in a fair and liberal sense, and so as to promote that spirit of learning, charity, and benevolence which it has always been one of the fundamental objects of the people of this state to encourage.

We think that there is nothing in Pierce v. Cambridge, 2 Cush. 611; Williams College v. Williamstown Assessors, 167 Mass. 505, 46 N. E. 394, and Amherst College v. Amherst Assessors, 173 Mass. 233, 53 N. E. 815, necessarily inconsistent with the views expressed above. In Pierce v. Cambridge, the question, as stated in Williams College v. Williamstown Assessors, 167 Mass. 505, 46 N. E. 394, "was whether the real estate was taxable to Pierce as tenant;" and the decision was put on the ground that the facts were such as to create in Prof. Pierce an estate as tenant, for which he was taxable. Perhaps the case might have stood equally well on the ground that the occupation appeared to be rather for the private benefit and convenience of Prof. Pierce than for the purpose for which the college was incorporated. So, in Williams College v. Williamstown Assessors, the occupation was held by a majority of the court to be for private purposes. The case stands on its own facts, and was not supposed by a majority of the court to overrule any prior cases, or to change the law as it had been previously practised and understood. Amherst College v. Amherst Assessors followed the Williamstown Case, and went on the ground that it could not be held, as matter of law,—which was the ruling of the superior court,—that the house was exempt, though it was intimated in the opinion that it could have been found "that the dominant purposes of the president's occupation were not private, but those for which the college was incorporated." On the other hand, we think that the conclusions which we have reached are abundantly supported by Wesleyan Academy v. Wilbraham, 99 Mass. 599; Massachusetts General Hospital v. Somerville, 101 Mass. 319, 322, and Mount Hermon Boys' School v. Gill, 145 Mass. 139, 13 N. E. 354, in this state; and State v. Ross, 24 N. J. L. 497, and Yale University v. New Haven, 71 Conn. 316, 43 L. R. A. 490, 42 Atl. 87. In addition to these cases, the case of Salem Lyceum v. Salem, 154 Mass. 15, 27 N. E. 672, should be referred to. The property in that case was held to be in exempt, but it was said that, "if the principal occupation is by the plaintiff for those purposes [i. e., the purposes for which the plaintiff was incorporated], occasional and incidental use for other purposes might not render it liable to taxation;" thus recognizing that it is or may be the dominant purpose which gives character to the occupation. As illustrating still further the effect of intention, not only upon the character of the occupation, but as establishing the fact of occupancy for a purpose entitling the property to exemption, see New England Hospital for Women & Children v. Boston, 113 Mass. 518, and Trinity Church v. Boston, 118 Mass. 164. See also Proprietors of Rural Cemetery v. Worcester County Comrs. 152 Mass. 408, 10 L. R. A. 365, 25 N. E. 618. In this last case the petitioner, which was a cemetery corporation, was authorized to purchase additional lands, to be "applied exclusively" to the objects of the corporation. It purchased lands on which there was a dwelling house and barns, and it was assessed for these lands. At the time of the assessment complained of, no burial lots had been laid out on them. But it was held that it could not be said that the land was not devoted exclusively to the objects of the corporation, and that the exemption from taxation of the dwelling house and barns was justified by the fact that the buildings and their occupation, as described, were necessary for the business of the corporation and the management of the cemetery; and the property was accordingly declared to be exempt. This case would seem to show that, even if the occupation was required to be exclusively for the purposes for which the institution was incorporated (which we do not think it is), an occupation by an officer and his family might be regarded under some circumstances as exclusively for such purposes, notwithstanding the element of private benefit. Whether the occupancy of Prof. Taylor should be referred to his life estate or to his connection with the academy as professor, or whether the academy is taxable for its reversionary interest, we do not deem it necessary to consider now.

Down to this point, we are all substantially agreed. But some of my brethren think that the facts are not stated with sufficient fullness to enable us to pass satisfactorily upon the question thus far considered, and that the agreed facts should be discharged and the case sent back, so that the facts can be presented more fully. Others of my brethren and myself are inclined to construe the agreed facts somewhat liberally, and to think that we can decide the case now. But with this expression I yield to the views of those of my brethren who think otherwise, and am content that the agreed facts should be discharged and the case sent back for another trial.

There remains the question as to the street-watering assessments. It is hardly to be expected that any new facts which may be developed will affect that question. It will save time and further trouble, therefore, if we express our opinion on it now, and we see no objection to doing so. The assessments were made under Stat. 1895, chap. 186, the constitutionality of which is attacked by the plaintiffs. A similar question under a similar statute was considered in Sears v. Boston, 173 Mass. 71, 43 L. R. A. 834, 53 N. E. 138, and the constitutionality of the statute was there upheld. We deem it enough on this point to refer to that case. It is settled that local or special assessments like these do not come within the exemptions from general taxation. Boston Seamen's Friend Soc. v. Boston, 116 Mass. 181. But it is contended that the provisions of the act were not complied with, because the vote appropriating the money for street watering did not provide that the assessors should assess the cost of watering on estates abutting on the streets that were watered. The vote did, however, contain an express reference to Stat. 1895, chap. 186, and stated that the money was appropriated under that act. We think that the plain meaning of the vote was that the provisions of that act were to be applied in regard to the expenditure that was authorized, and that, in the absence of anything limiting the amount of the assessment, the fair inference was that the whole cost was to be assessed on the estates that abutted on the streets that were watered. All of the other provisions of the act were duly complied with, and we see no ground on which it can be held that the assessments were invalid. The result is that the agreed facts are to be discharged, and the case is to stand for another trial.

So ordered.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

CHICAGO, WILMINGTON, & VERMILION COAL COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

PEOPLE of the State of Illinois.

(181 Ill. 270.)

1. No restriction on the police power of the legislature to provide for the safety of miners by means of the inspection of mines, or otherwise, is made by Const. art. 4, § 29, which expressly requires the legislature to pass laws for the protection of operative miners by providing for ventilation and for the construction of escapement shafts, or such other appliances as may secure safety in all coal mines.
2. Imposing upon mine owners the burden of paying the cost of inspection of the mines, as provided by act July 1, 1895, as amended in July, 1897, is a valid exercise of the police power which does not depend upon any constitutional grant of power to legislate concerning mines.
3. The failure to limit the number of inspections of mines does not make act July 1, 1895, as amended July, 1897, providing for an inspection of mines at the cost of the mine owners, void on the ground that it is oppressive and may impose a burden by imposition of fees which would destroy the business of the mine owners, where the statute, after providing that the inspection shall be made at least four times a year and as often as the inspectors deem necessary, provides that they may be removed for neglect or malfeasance, and prohibits them from doing any act to the injury of the operators of mines.

(October 16, 1899.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Sangamon County in favor of the People in a proceeding to compel payment of fees for the inspection of defendant's mines. Affirmed.

NOTE.—As to statutory provisions for protection of miners, see Consolidated Coal & Min. Co. v. Floyd (Ohio) 25 L. R. A. 848, and note; also Re Morgan (Colo.) 47 L. R. A. 52.

As to limitation of hours of labor in mines, see Holden v. Hardy (Utah) 37 L. R. A. 103; and State v. Holden (Utah) 37 L. R. A. 108. Affirmed by Supreme Court of the United States in 169 U. S. 306, 42 L. ed. 780. 48 L. R. A.

Statement by Phillips, J.:

The plaintiff, the people of the state of Illinois, brought suit against the defendant coal company to recover on account of inspection fees of the state mine inspector for certain mines theretofore inspected. The suit is brought to recover for the fees provided for under an act entitled "An Act Providing for the Health and Safety of Persons Employed in Coal Mines," approved May 23, 1879, and amendments thereto. The case was tried under a stipulation as to the facts. It appears that the appellant owns six coal mines in this state, in each of which more than six men are employed. One of these mines is in the second mining district and five are in the first district. Between the 1st day of November, 1895, and the 1st day of July, 1897, in the first district, the mines were inspected twenty-two times, for which the aggregate sum of $216 was charged, and between the 1st day of July, 1897, and the 27th day of April, 1898, seven inspections were made, for which $70 was charged. The mine in the second district, between the 1st day of November, 1895, and the 27th day of April, 1898, was inspected four times, for which $40 was charged. The aggregate of the charges for the inspections thus made was $326. The defendant, by the stipulation, admitted the amount was due if the plaintiff was entitled to recover, and submitted two propositions of law to be held, to the effect there could be no recovery under either count of the declaration, which were refused, and exception taken. A motion in arrest of judgment was entered, which was denied, and a finding and judgment had in favor of the plaintiffs for $326, to which the defendant excepted. The question is presented whether the act of July 1, 1895, and the amendment thereto in force July, 1897, providing for the payment into the state treasury, by owners or operators of coal mines of this state, of the charges made by state mine inspectors for inspecting the mines, are valid enactments.

Messrs. Charles W. Thomas and George S. House for appellant.

Messrs. C. A. Hill and B. D. Monroe, with Mr. E. C. Ahin, Attorney General, for appellee:

The police power is inherent in all governments, and its exercise and application, except as limited by the Constitution of the state or of the United States, rests in the discretion of the legislature.

This police power of the state extends to the protection of the lives, limbs, health, comfort, and quiet of all persons, and the protection of all property within the state.

Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 706; Charleston v. Rogers, 2 McCord, L. 495; Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Louisiana Bd. of Health, 118 U. S. 455, 30 L. ed. 237, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1114; Daniels v. Hilgard, 77 Ill. 640; People v. Harper, 91 Ill. 357; Parker & W. Public Health & Safety, § 261; Com. ex rel. Williams v. Bonnell, 8 Phila. 534.

The word "appliances," as used in the Constitution, is not confined or limited to mere physical annexations, tools, machinery, or apparatus, but may, and does, include "anything through or by which something is effected or accomplished," or "that which is" adapted to the accomplishment of a purpose."

When a Constitution confers a power, or enjoins a duty, it also confers by implication any incidental power necessary to the exercise of the one or the performance of the other.

6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 928.

Courts ought not to declare an act of the legislature invalid unless it is in plain and obvious conflict with the Constitution.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. pp. 216-218; Wilson v. Sanitary Dist. 133 Ill. 443, 27 N. E. 203; 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 351.

Phillips, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Section 29 of article 4 of the Constitution is as follows: "It shall be the duty of the general assembly to pass such laws as may be necessary for the protection of operative miners, by providing for ventilation when the same may be required, and the construction of escapement shafts, or such other appliances as may secure safety in all coal mines, and to provide for the enforcement of said laws by such penalties and punishments as may be deemed proper." This provision requires the legislature to pass such laws as may be necessary, etc., and leaves to that body the determination of the policy of the state as to what legislation is necessary to conform to its requirements. The legislature has seen proper, in the act entitled "An Act Providing for the Health and Safety of Persons Employed in Coal Mines," approved May 28, 1879, and in force July 1, 1879, and by the amendments thereto, to require certain duties to be done and performed by the owner, operator, or manager of a coal mine. Some of these duties are as follows: Section 1 provides that the owner shall make, or cause to be made, an accurate map, to be furnished to the state inspector, of mines of the district. Section 2 provides the inspector or may make a map at the expense of the owner, should he neglect or refuse so to do. Section 3 is as to the manner of construction of escapement shafts, etc. Section 4 is as to the ventilation of mines. Section 5 requires that bore holes shall be kept 20 feet in advance of each working place under certain circumstances. Section 6 is as to hoistways, and who may be employed, etc. Section 7 is as to operating the hoistways. Section 8 is as to fencing the shaft. Section 11 provides for the division of the state into districts, for the appointment of inspectors, and prescribes their duties and fixes their salaries. This latter section was amended in 1895. Prior to that time the inspector was paid wholly by the state, but after the amendment of 1895, and by the amendment of 1897, it was provided that fees might be charged, which were required to be paid by the mine owner. It is these two amendatory statutes which the appellant contends are unconstitutional, as placing a burden that is unreasonable and unjust on the mine owner.

The object and purpose of the statute are the protection of miners working in coal mines. While the act is an effort on the part of the general assembly to strictly comply with § 29 of article 4 of the Constitution, by providing for the ventilation of mines, the construction of escapement shafts, and such other appliances as shall secure safety in all coal mines, the general assembly has seen proper to include a provision for the preparation of maps and the filing of the same with the chief mine inspector of the district, and that on neglect or default of the owner to make such map the inspector may make the same at his expense, and this is one of the requirements of the statute which has been held constitutional by this court. In Daniels v. Hilgard, 77 Ill. 640, it was held (page 643): "Our legislature, in an act having for its avowed object the providing for the health and safety of persons employed in coal mines, has thought it proper to incorporate this provision for the making of a map. The lawmaking powers elsewhere, as it is seen in their laws for the same object, have adopted this same provision. This would seem to indicate as the legislative understanding that the provision is one in aid of the accomplishment of the purpose of such acts,—the protection of persons engaged in such mines,—a proper part of the system adopted to that end. The question is properly one of legislative determination. A court should not lightly interfere in such case. The legislature must have manifestly transcended its province for it to do so. We are of opinion that it is not for a court to say that the provision here which is called in question is anything more than a fair and reasonable police regulation with reference to the subject-matter of the act, which the legislature, in its discretion, has seen proper to adopt, and that it should not be set aside as unconstitutional."

To a much greater extent the provisions of § 11, which prescribe the duties of the inspector, and require his reports and statements to be posted in a conspicuous place, showing the condition of the mine, and what, in his judgment, is necessary for the protection of the lives and health of persons employed in such mine, etc., are an exercise of the police power of the state. The examination of the condition of the mine would also necessarily require the inspector to examine and report as to whether the manner of construction of escapement shafts, air shafts, and the ventilation of the mine is in conformity with the requirements of the statute. Inspections are necessary in determining health and quarantine laws, and also with reference to the examination of articles to be used as food, and it never has been held that a provision looking to the inspection of certain articles that may be offered for sale for the purposes of human food, or a law providing for inspection with reference to health, is an improper exercise of the police power. Nor could it be held that the provision of the statute with reference to the appointment of inspectors for coal mines, who are to discharge the duties imposed upon them by § 11, is not a proper exercise of the police power of the state. The very purpose and object of the statute are in regard to the health and safety of miners; and requiring that mine owners should permit an inspection of their mines for this purpose is but an exercise of such police power.

We do not understand the contention of the appellant to be, however, that these provisions of the statute are an improper exercise of the police power, but understand the contention is that the provisions of the statute which require a fee to be paid for such inspection by the mine owner are an improper exercise of the police power. It was held in Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Louisiana Bd. of Health, 118 U. S. 455, 30 L. ed. 237, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1114, that an inspection fee imposed by the state of Louisiana on a vessel passing a quarantine station, for examination as to her sanitary condition and the ports from which she came, is a compensation for services rendered the vessel, and not a tax imposed, within the meaning of the provision of the Constitution concerning a tonnage tax imposed by the states, and that the act imposing such fee is a valid enactment. Inspection fees are not taxes, but are imposed under the principle that they are compensation for services rendered in and about making such inspection, which is presumably beneficial to the person upon whom the fees are imposed, under and by virtue of the general police powers of the state. Charleston v. Rogers, 2 McCord, L. 495; Cooley, Taxn. 413. It was held in People v. Harper, 91 Ill. 357, that the legislature had full power to pass a law committing the inspection of grain to a board created for that purpose; that the expenses occasioned by such inspection may be required to be borne by those presumably benefited by it; that the fixing of fees for such services, and prescribing the manner of their collection and upon whom they shall be imposed, do not fall within the constitutional limitations concerning the imposition of a local burden by way of taxation. In that case the board of warehouse commissioners fixed the fees for the inspection of grain. The court held (page 369): "There is no provision of the Constitution which, either expressly or by necessary implication, inhibits the general assembly from committing the inspection of grain to a board created for that purpose, and we are not authorized to say that the board of commissioners of railroads and warehouses is not quite as legitimate as any other board that could have been selected or created for that purpose. It evidently was not designed that the inspection should be made a source of revenue, either to the state or to municipalities; for it is not enjoined as a means of raising revenue, but solely for the 'protection of producers, shippers, and receivers of grain and produce;' and there is natural justice in requiring that the expenses occasioned by the inspection should be borne by those presumably benefited by it. Certainly no clause of the Constitution is violated by this requirement."

The mining of coal is recognized as a dangerous and hazardous business, and is a productive industry of the greatest importance. For many years in this state many thousands of men have been engaged in that character of work, and a proper safeguard of their lives and health is a matter of so great interest and necessity that no subject can be mentioned where there is a more positive necessity for the exercise of the police power than in seeking to subserve their safety. With a recognition of the fact that under the police power the legislature has the right to provide for the inspection of mines, it may also provide for the payment of fees for such inspection, and may place the burden of the payment of such fees on the business that requires the employment of men in such dangerous and hazardous work, to an equal extent as it may place the burden on commerce in the shipment of grain, and appeals much more strongly for a proper enforcement of this character of law by proper inspection than the mere protection of trade. If an inspection is to be had, it is attended with expense. The expense thus incurred is imposed because of the peculiar dangers of the surrounding situation, and subserves, not only the interest of the miners, but alike protects the mine owner; and hence the burden of the payment of the fee can be properly imposed upon the mine owner without violating any provision of the Constitution.

Appellant contends that legislation, under the provisions of § 29 of article 4, can only be had with reference to ventilation and escapement shafts. Such contention cannot be sustained, because that section requires legislation for a particular purpose, having in view the safety of miners, and submits to the legislature the policy to be pursued for the accomplishment of that end, and which cannot lightly be interfered with by a court. Appellant, from the position taken, seems to disregard the fact that the legislature may legislate, under the police power which it possesses, outside of the mere mandates of that provision of the Constitution. The contention is entirely too narrow.

Appellant further contends that, inasmuch as the specific time or occasion when inspections are to be made is not limited, power exists in the inspectors to inspect daily and unnecessarily, and impose a burden by the imposition of fees, which would in effect destroy the business of the mine owner. While the act requires that there must be at least four inspections a year, and imposes the duty on the inspectors to make the inspection as often as may be deemed necessary and proper, yet they are made subject to removal for neglect of duty or malfeasance in the discharge of duty, and it is expressly provided that they "shall not be guilty of any act tending to the injury of miners or operators of mines during their term of office." An attempt to impose unreasonable inspections, such as it is insisted by counsel for appellant they may do, would be an act tending to the injury of the operators of mines, for which the very provisions of the act provide a means of prevention, and the law is not so powerless that it could not prevent extortions of this character. From the stipulation of facts under which this case was tried, it appears that appellant's mines were inspected thirty-three times between November 1, 1895, and March 30, 1898,—a period of two years and five months,—during which time the appellant owned and operated six mines. Hence there was only an average of one inspection every five and one third months. It is true that mine No. 2, as appears from the facts, was inspected March 5, 1897, and was again inspected March 10, 1897. The facts and circumstances which induced the second inspection so soon after the other are not in any manner explained; but it may well be that because of the explosion of gas, or the obstruction to ventilation in the mine, or from some other cause resulting in inability to reach the escapement shaft, loss of life resulted, which necessarily induced prompt examination thereafter. We hold that it was within the power of the legislature to provide for the inspection of mines by inspectors so appointed, and to provide for fees to be paid by the mine owner to be used towards the payment of the expenses of such inspection. Such fee is in no sense a tax, but a mere compensation for services rendered, and the act is therefore not unconstitutional. It was not error to refuse to hold the propositions asked by the appellant, and the judgment of the Circuit Court of Sangamon County is affirmed.

48 L. R. A.

Joseph HUDNALL et al., Appts.,

v.

O. M. B. HAM et al.

Mary E. TAYLOR, Appt.,

v.

Joseph HUDNALL et al.

(183 Ill. 486.)

1. A woman's mere ignorance of the rule of law that marriage will revoke her intended husband's will is not sufficient to overturn an antenuptial settlement by which she agrees to permit his property to go as provided in the will.
2. An antenuptial agreement in support of a will will not prevent the revocation of the will by the subsequent marriage where the statute says that "a marriage shall be deemed a revocation of a prior will.
3. A widow's release by an antenuptial contract, of all her claims on the estate of her husband, in consideration of a specified sum, does not preclude her from being deemed his widow, or entitle the descendants of his deceased mother to take his estate, under Rev. Stat. chap. 39, § 2, providing that, when there is no widow or children of the decedent, the estate shall go to his mother and her children and their descendants.
4. An antenuptial contract by which a wife agrees, in consideration of a certain sum of money, to release all her interest in her husband's estate in order that it may pass by certain provisions of his will, with a covenant not to interfere in any way with the disposition of the property made by the will, will preclude her from contesting the right of the beneficiaries under the will on the ground that the will was revoked by the marriage—especially when she has ratified the contract after her husband's death by accepting the consideration agreed upon.

(Curtwright, Ch. J., and Phillips and Magruder, JJ., dissent.)

(December 18, 1899.)

A PPEALS by complainants and cross complainant from a decree of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County dismissing the bills in a proceeding to determine the right to property left by Jeremiah Taylor, deceased. Affirmed.

Statement by Carter, J.:

This is an appeal from a decree entered in the circuit court upon the final hearing of the issues made upon the bill filed by "the Hudnalls," as they are spoken of in the record, and upon the cross bill of Mary E. T. Taylor, the widow of Jeremiah Taylor, deceased. The bill, in brief, alleged that Taylor was the son of Sallie Taylor and her then husband, Thomas Taylor, and that five years after his birth Sallie Taylor lawfully married one Hudnall, and that the complainants are the children and descendants of deceased children born of such marriage with Hudnall, and are the only heirs at law of said Jeremiah Taylor, who died without issue; that in 1890 Taylor made a will, giving, except a few small legacies, all of his property to C. D. and O. M. D. Ham, sons of his first wife, and afterward, in 1892, married Mary E. T. Farmer, and died in 1895; that, a few days before such marriage, Taylor and Mrs. Farmer entered into an antenuptial contract by which it was agreed between them that in lieu of dower, award, rights of inheritance, and distribution she should, if she survived him, be paid, within sixty days after his death, $2,000; that after Taylor's death and the probate of his will she was paid by the executor, and accepted and receipted for, said $2,000, the amount due her under the contract, and in full of all claims against the estate, either under the will, or the agreement, or otherwise; that by her agreement and the full execution of its terms she renounced and relinquished all of her rights and interests in and to said estate, as heir or otherwise; that by the marriage between her and Taylor the will which had been previously made was revoked, and Taylor's property descended as intestate estate to the complainants, who were his half-brothers and sisters and descendants of deceased half-brothers and sisters; his said mother, Sallie Taylor, having previously died. The bill prayed that the probate of the will be set aside, that the will be declared void, and that a distribution of the estate among the complainants be made, and for general relief. The Hams and the widow demurred to the bill. The demurrers were sustained, and the bill dismissed, but on a writ of error sued out by the complainants the decree was reversed by this court, and the cause remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrers, and for further proceedings in conformity with the opinion rendered by this court. Hudnall v. Ham, 172 Ill. 76, 49 N. E. 985. When the case was redocketed in the circuit court, "the Hams," as they are spoken of in the record, and other legatees, and the executor, answered the bill, setting up the antenuptial agreement, and alleged that it was made in good faith, and with full knowledge, and for the purpose of confirming and approving the will; that it referred to and approved the will, and that by reason thereof the will was not revoked by the subsequent marriage; and alleged that the Hudnalls were not within the contemplation of either of the parties to the agreement, and that it could not operate in their favor. The answer denied that Taylor was of legitimate birth, but alleged that he was the illegitimate son of Sallie Taylor, a feme sole, and denied that the Hudnalls were his heirs. The answer also alleged that in 1848

NOTE.—As to revocation of will by marriage, see cases in note to Riggs v. Palmer (N. Y.) 5 L. R. A. on page 346; and in note to Davis v. Fogle (Ind.) 7 L. R. A. 485; also Roane v. Hollingshead (Md.) 17 L. R. A. 592; Re Hewlett (Minn.) 34 L. R. A. 384; and Ingersoll v. Hopkins (Mass.) 40 L. R. A. 191

Taylor, then without means, married Frances Ham, a widow, and the mother of said C. D. and O. M. D. Ham, who were then of tender years; that said Frances had considerable property, and that said Taylor took possession of the same and of the property derived by said O. M. D. and C. D. Ham from their father, and that with this as a start he began to trade, and was successful in business, so that he finally accumulated the property which he had at the time of making said will; that there were no children of said marriage, but said Taylor adopted the stepsons as his own, and that it was always understood by said Frances and said Jeremiah that the said O. M. D. and C. D. Ham were to be treated and regarded, in all respects, as the sons of said Jeremiah; that they treated and regarded him as their father, and labored for and assisted him, and obeyed him as though they were his sons; that these facts were well known to Mrs. Farmer when she entered into the antenuptial agreement, which was made for the purpose of carrying out Taylor's design; and the answer alleged that the antenuptial agreement and will constituted an equitable assignment to the Hams, and that in equity and good conscience they were entitled to the property. Mary E. T. Taylor, the widow, in her answer alleged that when she signed the antenuptial agreement she was not informed as to the extent of the property of said Taylor, or as to his illegitimacy, which she had since learned; that she understood he wished his property to go to the children of his first wife, and was willing that such purpose should be accomplished, but alleged that she would not have been so willing if she had known how much property he had, or that he was illegitimate, though she admitted in her answer that when the antenuptial agreement was signed she had learned from him that he had no living relatives; alleged, also, that when she executed the agreement she was willing to release her future rights in the estate to the descendants of his first wife, and believed that the will would have that effect, and that she regarded the accomplishment of that purpose as an important part of the consideration to induce her to execute the antenuptial agreement; that at the time she signed the agreement, and also when she received the money, she was in ignorance of her rights, and of the extent and value of Taylor's property, which value was concealed from her, and that the $2,000 was grossly inadequate, and was disproportionate to the value of the estate; alleged, also, that the will was revoked by the marriage, and that one of the principal objects of the antenuptial agreement, and of her receiving and receipting for the $2,000, has failed, and cannot be accomplished, and that, as the consideration has failed, said agreement is not binding upon her; and offers to bring into court said $2,000, and abide the order of the court. The widow filed her amended cross bill also, in which she set up substantially the same facts, and prayed that the will and probate be declared void, and set aside, and the executor removed, and that the antenuptial agreement be also set aside, and her receipt for said $2,000 be declared to have no other effect than a receipt for so much money, and not a ratification of the agreement, and that an accounting be had.

Messrs. Blood & Blood, Sims & Covington, and James A. Watts, for appellants Hudnall et al.:

The widow is bound by the antenuptial agreement, and has no claim to the property.

Jacobs v. Jacobs, 42 Iowa, 606; Taylor v. Taylor, 144 Ill. 436, 33 N. E. 532; Beebe v. Swartwout, 3 Gilm. 162; Hudnall v. Ham, 172 Ill. 76, 49 N. E. 985; Brenner v. Gauch, 85 Ill. 368; Weaver v. Weaver, 109 Ill. 225; McMahill v. McMahon, 113 Ill. 461; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 189; Wms. Exrs. 7th Eng. ed. 314; Schouler, Exrs. & Admsrs. § 193; Giles v. Churchill, 5 N. H. 341.

The widow, having elected to accept the money, is bound by her election.

Wilbanks v. Wilbanks, 18 Ill. 19; Waters v. Howard, 1 Md. Ch. 112; Beall v. Schley, 2 Gill, 181, 41 Am. Dec. 415; Rodermund v. Clark, 46 N. Y. 354; Morris v. Reafor, 18 N. Y. 552; Lilley v. Adams, 108 Mass. 50; Pickett v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 32 Ark. 346.

Ratification is the adoption of a previously formed contract, notwithstanding a vice which renders it relatively void.

Pearsoll v. Chapin, 44 Pa. 9.

One who has an option whether he will affirm a particular act or contract must elect to affirm or disaffirm it altogether.

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chamberlain, 84 Ill. 333; Louks v. Keniston, 50 Vt. 116; Broser v. Callender, 105 Ill. 88; Chicago Pkq. & Provision Co. v. Tilton, 87 Ill. 547; Kic v. Yellowhead, 80 Ill. 208; Kimball v. Lincoln, 7 Ill. App. 470; Frick v. Trustees of Schools, 99 Ill. 167; Webster v. Nichols, 104 Ill. 160.

Having treated the contract as subsisting, Mrs Taylor cannot now avoid it.

Jennings v. Gage, 13 Ill. 610, 56 Am. Dec. 476; Kellogg v. Turpie, 93 Ill. 265, 34 Am. Rep. 163; Kimball v. Lincoln, 7 Ill. App. 470; People v. Stephens, 71 N. Y. 527.

If a voidable contract is voluntarily acted on, it cannot afterwards be avoided when discovered to be advantageous to be avoided.

Edwards v. Roberts, 7 Smedes & M. 544; Jollier v. Thompson, 4 T. Mon. 81.

Where a party to a contract which might be set aside on the ground of fraud nevertheless elects to treat the transaction as binding, he thereby loses his right to rescind it; for fraud only gives the right to avoid or rescind a contract.

Tisdale v. Buckmore, 33 Me. 461; Bishbee v. Ham, 47 Me. 543; Evans v. Gale, 17 N. H. 573, 43 Am. Dec. 614; Nichols v. Michael, 23 N. Y. 264, 80 Am. Dec. 259; Cobb v. Hatfield, 46 N. Y. 533; Bishop v. Fletcher, 48 Mich. 555, 12 N. W. 37; Chaffee v. Rutland R. Co. 55 Vt. 110; Orusselle v. Reinhardt, 68 Ga. 619.

The effect of the antenuptial agreement was a positive exclusion of the marital 48 L. R. A.

rights of Mrs. Taylor; and upon the death of Taylor intestate, without issue, his next of kin are entitled to the estate.

Gumble v. Nenn, 5 Sneed, 466; Loftus v. Penn, 1 Swan, 445; Crum v. Sawyer, 132 Ill. 463, 24 N. E. 956.

The subsequent marriage revoked the will.

Starr & C. Stat. chap. 39, § 10; Crum v. Sawyer, 132 Ill. 443, 24 N. E. 956; Hudnall v. Ham, 172 Ill. 76, 49 N. E. 985; McAnnulty v. McAnnulty, 120 Ill. 26, 60 Am. Rep. 552, 11 N. E. 359.

Ignorance of the law in this respect will not change the rule.

Crum v. Sawyer, 132 Ill. 443, 24 N. E. 956.

The Hams must claim as legatees and devisees, or not at all. The antenuptial contract and will do not transfer any rights to the Hams.

Sloniger v. Sloniger, 161 Ill. 278, 43 N. E. 1111; Woodward v. Woodward, 5 Sneed, 51.

Expression of intention to make a gift will not amount to a contract, or sustain a decree for specific performance.

Galloway v. Garland, 104 Ill. 277; Clark v. Clark, 122 Ill. 388, 13 N. E. 553; Bailoy v. Edmunds, 64 Ill. 125.

The instrument was not intended to take effect until the death of Taylor, and is purely testamentary in character and effect, and is ambulatory and revocable.

Badgley v. Votrain, 68 Ill. 25, 18 Am. Rep. 541; Cravy v. Rawlins, 8 Ga. 450; Kinnebrew v. Kinnebrew, 35 Ala. 628; Roth v. Michalis, 125 Ill. 325, 17 N. E. 809.

An existing property right to some distinct subject-matter is essential to the existence of every trust, and any instrument, however perfect otherwise, which fails to disclose this, cannot properly be established as a declaration of trust.

Roth v. Michalis, 125 Ill. 325, 17 N. E. 809.

Where anything remains to be done to divest the title of the person declaring the trust, the transaction will remain incomplete and executory.

Young v. Young, 80 N. Y. 422, 36 Am. Rep. 634; Bridge v. Bridge, 16 Beav. 315; Beech v. Kcep, 18 Beav. 285.

An imperfect conveyance or assignment without consideration, which does not pass the legal title, will not be aided or enforced in equity.

Roth v. Michalis, 125 Ill. 325, 17 N. E. 809.

A claim based upon a resulting trust is subject to the statute of limitations.

Quayle v. Guild, 91 Ill. 384; Aldretok v. Wolf, 58 Ill. 190; McLafin v. Jones, 155 Ill. 539, 40 N. E. 330; McNamara v. Garrity, 106 Ill. 388; Reynolds v. Sumner, 126 Ill. 58, 1 L. R. A. 327, 18 N. E. 334; Ellis v. Ward, 137 Ill. 509, 25 N. E. 530.

Proof that a guardian had money of his ward, or of another person, at the time he purchased certain property, does not prove that the property was purchased with the ward's or other person's money.

McGinnis v. Jacobs, 147 Ill. 24, 35 N. E.

214; Francis v. Roades, 146 Ill. 635, 35 N. E. 232.

Mention made, in the antenuptial contract, of a will, does not constitute an assignment to the beneficiaries.

Crum v. Sawyer, 132 Ill. 452, 24 N. E. 956; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 987.

Messrs. William H. Green and O. S. Conger, for appellant Mary E. Taylor:

The antenuptial contract is not binding upon the complainant in the cross bill, because at the time of its execution she was ignorant of the facts concerning M^r. Taylor's property, and of the fact of his illegitimacy, and also because its terms are so unjust and manifestly inequitable.

Schouler, Hubb. & W. § 360; Kline's Estate, 64 Pa. 124; Bierer's Appeal, 92 Pa. 266; Pierce v. Pierce, 71 N. Y. 154, 27 Am. Rep. 22; Taylor v. Taylor, 144 Ill. 445, 33 N. E. 532; Achilles v. Achilles, 161 Ill. 136, 37 N. E. 693; Cleere v. Cleere, 82 Ala. 588, 60 Am. Rep. 750, 3 So. 107.

Mrs. Taylor did not ratify or confirm the antenuptial contract by receiving the $2,000, and executing her receipt therefor.

To have that effect she must have elected to receive the money in lieu of asserting her rights as widow and heir, with full knowledge of the facts, and not in ignorance of any fact material to her interest, and not under a misapprehension of her legal rights.

Gilman, C. & S. R. Co. v. Kelly, 77 Ill. 426; Wurster v. Reitzinger, 5 Ill. App. 112; Cauffman v. Cauffman, 17 Serg. & R. 25; Redf. Wills, §§ 748-754; Adair v. Brimmer, 74 N. Y. 539; Cumberland Coal & I. Co. v. Sherman, 20 Md. 117, 30 Barb. 575; Lamont v. Bowly, 6 Harr. & J. 516; Spurlock v. Brown, 91 Tenn. 243, 18 S. W. 868; Reaves v. Garrett, 34 Ala. 558; Watson v. Watson, 128 Mass. 152; United States v. Duncan, 4 McLean, 99, Fed. Cas. No. 15,002; Dabney v. Bailey, 42 Ga. 521; 2 Jarman, Wills, §§ 40-42; Bradford v. Kent, 43 Pa. 484; Anderson's Appeal, 36 Pa. 476; Carder v. Fayette County Comrs. 16 Ohio St. 356; Nass v. Vanswearingen, 7 Serg. & R. 192; Wilson v. Keller, 9 Ill. App. 347; Mulholland v. Bartlett, 74 Ill. 63; Hayes v. Massachusetts Mut. L. Ins. Co. 125 Ill. 639, 1 L. R. A. 303, 18 N. E. 322; Bailey v. Day, 26 Me. 88; Kane v. Morehouse, 46 Conn. 305; Northrop v. Graves, 19 Conn. 548, 1 Am. Dec. 264; Pearson v. Chapin, 44 Pa. 17; Larrabee v. Van Alstine, 1 Johns. 307, 3 Am. Dec. 333; Bierer's Appeal, 92 Pa. 266; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1097; Cowdrey v. Hitchcock, 103 Ill. 271; Streetfield v. Streetfield, Cas. t. Talb. 176; White & T. Lead. Cas. in Eq. 570.

The widow did not ratify the antenuptial agreement by receiving the $2,000: (1) Because she had no knowledge of the amount, kind, or character of the property of Jeremiah Taylor, deceased, at the time she signed the agreement; (2) because she did not have such knowledge at the time she received the money, and was not advised as to her rights as widow.

Peaslee v. Peaslee, 147 Mass. 183, 17 N. E. 506; Watson v. Watson, 128 Mass. 152; Pierce v. Pierce, 71 N. Y. 154, 27 Am. Rep. 48 L. R. A.

22; Cowee v. Cornell, 75 N. Y. 99, 31 Am. Rep. 428; Graham v. Graham, 143 N. Y. 580, 38 N. E. 722; Rau v. Von Zedlitz, 132 Mass. 164; Kline v. Kline, 57 Pa. 120; Barnard v. Gantz, 140 N. Y. 258, 35 N. E. 430; Re Smith, 95 N. Y. 523.

The acceptance of the money by Mrs. Taylor cannot be regarded as an estoppel, or an acquiescence by her in the terms of the antenuptial contract, unless she was fully aware of all her legal rights at the time, and intended to waive them. She could not acquiesce in that of which she was ignorant.

Herman, Estoppel & Res Judicata, § 1062, p. 1193; Krumbick v. White, 107 Cal. 37, 39 Pac. 1066; Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Woods, 54 Kan. 663, 39 Pac. 189; Blair v. Wait, 60 N. Y. 113; Barnard v. Gantz, 140 N. Y. 251, 35 N. E. 430; Garnsey v. Mundy, 24 N. J. Eq. 243; Pratt v. Philbrook, 41 Me. 132.

The will was revoked by the subsequent marriage of Jeremiah Taylor, and his widow at his death became his sole heir.

Hudwall v. Ham, 172 Ill. 76, 49 N. E. 985; Crum v. Sawyer, 132 Ill. 443, 24 N. E. 956; McAnnully v. McAnnulty, 120 Ill. 26, 60 Am. Rep. 552, 11 N. E. 397; Sloniger v. Sloniger, 161 Ill. 278, 43 N. E. 1111; Duryea v. Duryea, 85 Ill. 41; Tyler v. Tyler, 19 Ill. 151; Rev. Stat. chap. 39, § 2, ¶ 3.

The antenuptial agreement was not an assignment of the prospective rights of Mrs. Farmer in the property of Jeremiah Taylor, and the receipt of the money did not create an equitable assignment of her rights as widow and sole heir of her deceased husband.

Sloniger v. Sloniger, 161 Ill. 278, 43 N. E. 1111; Barrett v. Geisinger, 179 Ill. 240, 53 N. E. 576; Lennig's Appeal, 182 Pa. 496, 33 Atl. 466; Whiton v. Whiton, 179 Ill. 32, 53 N. E. 722.

Messrs. George W. Wall and C. H. Patton, for appellees:

Section 2, chap. 39, entitled Descents, provides that the estate, real and personal, of vest in the widow or surviving husband and an illegitimate person shall descend to and children, and if there are no children, then in the widow or surviving husband.

Here there was a widow; hence the complainants, who are the children and descendants of children of the mother, cannot inherit.

The statute is in derogation of the rule at common law, and must be strictly construed.

Belanger v. Hersey, 90 Ill. 70; Stoltz v. Doering, 112 Ill. 234; Bales v. Elder, 118 Ill. 436, 11 N. E. 421; Jenkins v. Drane, 121 Ill. 217, 12 N. E. 684; Orthwein v. Thomas, 127 Ill. 554, 4 L. R. A. 434, 21 N. E. 430; Cruse v. Aden, 127 Ill. 232, 3 L. R. A. 327, 20 N. E. 73; Williams v. Vanderbilt, 145 Ill. 233, 21 L. R. A. 489, 34 N. E. 476; Douglass v. Lewis, 131 U. S. 75, 33 L. ed. 53, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 797.

The statute declares that marriage will revoke a prior will.

Where a statutory provision is but declaratory of the common law, the statute is to be construed precisely as the rule was at common law, and subject to all the exceptions which prevailed at common law.

Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, No. 127, pp. 172, 173; Black, Interpretation of Laws, Nos. 95, 96, p. 234; Baker v. Baker, 13 Cal. 87; Miles v. Williams, 1 P. Wms. 252; Smith v. Laatsch, 114 Ill. 279, 2 N. E. 59; Sedgw. Stat. & Const. L. 29.

Revocation was inferred because of marriage, and to protect those who came in by virtue of marriage. Hence, whenever it appeared that the testator had made provision for those who came within the scope of his new duty thus assumed by antenuptial agreement or otherwise, the reason of the rule having failed, the rule itself would fail.

4 Kent, Com. 523; Warner v. Beach, 4 Gray, 163; Kenebel v. Scrafton, 2 East, 530; Brush v. Wilkins, 4 Johns. Ch. 506; Wheeler v. Wheeler, 1 R. I. 373; Gackendach v. Brouse, 4 Watts & S. 546.

The will and the antenuptial agreement are one instrument.

Bradish v. Gibbs, 3 Johns. Ch. 523; Brydges v. Chandos, 2 Ves. Jr. 417; Marlborough v. Godolphin, 2 Ves. Sr. 78; 1 Jarman, Wills, 228.

They constitute a contract which the parties had power to make, and which may be enforced at the instance of the beneficiaries intended therein, the legatees and devisees in the will.

Sedgw. Stat. & Const. L. 87, 88; Tombs v. Rochester & S. R. Co. 18 Barb. 583; Morrison v. Underwood, 5 Cush. 52; Phyfe v. Eimer, 45 N. Y. 102; Rumsey v. North-Eastern R. Co. 14 C. B. N. S. 649; Shutte v. Thompson, 15 Wall. 151, 21 L. ed. 123.

It is competent for one to make an agreement for a certain disposition of his property by will or otherwise, and this may be enforced in equity, if upon valuable consideration. Marriage is such a consideration.

2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1040b, note 4; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 354; 2 Bl. Com. 297; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 830; Green v. Broyles, 3 Humph. 167, 39 Am. Dec. 156; Maddox v. Rowe, 23 Ga. 431, 68 Am. Dec. 535; Frisby v. Parkhurst, 29 Md. 58, 96 Am. Dec. 503; Gupton v. Gupton, 47 Mo. 37; Carmichael v. Carmichael, 72 Mich. 76, 1 L. R. A. 596; Bolman v. Overall, 80 Ala. 451, 2 So. 624; Taylor v. Mitchell, 87 Pa. 518; Sharkey v. McDermott, 91 Mo. 647, 60 Am. Rep. 270, 4 S. W. 107; Manning v. Pippen, 86 Ala. 357, 5 So. 572; Ridgeway v. Underwood, 67 Ill. 419; Shephard v. Clark, 38 Ill. App. 66.

When such agreement is to dispose of property by will, it may be enforced against the heirs or devisees of the party making the agreement, and will operate upon the property descending to them.

Whiton v. Whiton, 179 Ill. 32, 53 N. E. 722; Barrett v. Geisinger, 179 Ill. 246, 53 N. E. 576; Neves v. Scott, 9 How. 196, 13 L. ed. 102, 13 How. 268, 14 L. ed. 140; Walker v. Walker, 9 Wall. 753, sub nom. Walker v. Beal, 19 L. ed. 814; Adams v. Adams, 21 Wall. 190, 22 L. ed. 504.

Even if by the letter of the statute, strictly construed, it should be held that marriage revokes a prior will under all circumstances and without exceptions, yet the will may take effect as a part of the antenuptial settlement, and will estop the widow from interposing an objection to its full enforcement.

Lant's Appeal, 95 Pa. 279, 40 Am. Rep. 646.

Carter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Upon the final hearing, where the greater part of the testimony of the witnesses was heard in open court, the chancellor rendered the decree appealed from, finding the issues in favor of the Hams, and dismissing both the amended bill and the cross bill. From this decree the Hudnalls and the widow have taken separate appeals, but these appeals have been considered together, and will be disposed of here as one case. The cross bill was not before us when the case was here on error, 172 Ill. 76, 49 N. E. 985, and it was there said that the rights of the widow under her cross bill were not affected by that decision, except that, as the bill alleged, the antenuptial contract having been fully performed by her acceptance of and receipt for the money under it, the burden rested upon her to show, if she could, any sufficient grounds upon which it could be set aside. We have carefully considered all of the evidence, and cannot avoid the conclusion, reached also by the court below, that she has not sustained this burden, but has failed to establish the allegations of her cross bill that she was deceived by Jeremiah Taylor as to the extent and value of his property, and as to the facts upon which her right to inherit his property would depend, or that the same were concealed from her. We cannot find, from the evidence, that the contract was not fairly entered into, or not fairly carried out. It is clearly shown that she approved and joined in Taylor's desire that the bulk of his property should go to his said two stepsons, whom, as she knew, he had brought up from boyhood in his family, with the same affectionate care as if they had been his own children, and who had aided him in the acquisition of his property. While it is doubtless true that she accepted and receipted for the $2,000 in ignorance of the law that her marriage with Taylor revoked the will which he had made in favor of the Hams, still, no deception was practised upon her, and the Hams seemed to know no more of that subject than she, and evidently Taylor died in the belief that his property would pass in accordance with his will and the antenuptial contract. Such was the intention of both parties to this contract, shown both by the contract itself and the circumstances under which it was entered into. Her mere ignorance of the law cannot be availed of by her to overturn the settlement.

Counsel for appellees make the contention, and cite authorities to support it, that the marriage was only a presumptive revocation of the will, and that that presumption was in this case rebutted by the antenuptial agreement. But in effect the decision of this court when the case was here before on demurrer to the bill was that the will was revoked by the subsequent marriage, notwithstanding the antenuptial agreement. The question has been settled, at all events, by this court, in McAnnulty v. McAnnulty, 120 Ill. 26, 11 N. E. 397, where it was held that under the provision of the statute that "a marriage shall be deemed a revocation of a prior will" a marriage operates per se as such revocation. It follows, therefore, that Taylor's will was revoked by his subsequent marriage, and that the devisees and legatees therein named cannot take the property under that instrument as a will. Nor can they take it at all unless the antenuptial agreement and the instrument executed as a will, when taken and construed together, constitute an equitable assignment of the property to them which a court of equity will enforce to carry the contract into effect in accordance with the intention of the parties to it. It follows, also, that the widow is barred by the antenuptial contract and its full performance, unless the inheritance is cast upon her as the sole heir, for the reason that, as a matter of law, it can go nowhere else. Section 2 of chapter 39 of the Revised Statutes, in regard to descent, after providing that an illegitimate child shall inherit from its maternal ancestor, etc., provides: "Second, the estate, real and personal, of an illegitimate person, shall descend to and vest in the widow or surviving husband and children, as the estate of other persons in like cases; third, in case of the death of an illegitimate intestate leaving no child or descendant of a child, the whole estate, personal and real, shall descend to and absolutely vest in the widow or surviving husband; fourth, when there is no widow or surviving husband, and no child or descendants of a child, the estate of such person shall descend to and vest in the mother and her children, and their descendants,—one half to the mother, and the other half to be equally divided between her children and their descendants, the descendants of a child taking the share of their deceased parent or ancestor; fifth, in case there is no heir as above provided, the estate of such person shall descend to and vest in the next of kin to the mother of such intestate, according to the rule of the civil law; sixth, when there are no heirs or kindred, the estate of such person shall escheat to the state, and not otherwise." It is clear from the evidence that Taylor was the illegitimate son of Sallie Taylor, who, by her subsequent marriage, became the maternal ancestor of the appellants, the Hudnalls, and that, if Taylor had left no widow they would have been his heirs at law; his mother, Sallie Taylor, having previously died, and he never having had any child. The grounds, then, upon which the respective parties claim the property in controversy are reduced to these: The Hudnalls claim as Taylor's heirs at law under the statute; the Hams claim as equitable assignees under the antenuptial agreement, coupled with the instrument which, as 48 L. R. A.

a will, was revoked by Taylor's marriage; the widow claims that Taylor left no heir at law but herself, and that, being the sole heir, under the statute she is entitled to the property notwithstanding her agreement. The Hudnalls, by their bill, are the moving parties in the controversy, and their contention will be considered first.

At common law an illegitimate had no inheritable blood; could neither inherit nor transmit by inheritance, save to those of his own body. The right of an illegitimate to inherit property, and the right of others, though legitimate, to inherit from him through the maternal line, are conferred by the statute, and can have no existence in any case which does not come within the statute. The second paragraph—that "the estate, real and personal, of an illegitimate person, shall descend to and vest in the widow or surviving husband and children, as the estate of other persons in like cases"—has nothing to do with the case at bar, as mistakenly supposed by appellants, the Hudnalls. It confers no rights whatever upon collaterals. It simply gives to the surviving husband or wife and children of an illegitimate the same rights of inheritance from the deceased parent that they would have had if he or she had been legitimate. And by the third paragraph the widow, Mary E. T. Taylor, is made the sole heir of her deceased husband. Counsel for Hudnalls claim under the fourth paragraph of the statute. Had Mary E. T. Taylor died first, or had there been no widow, it is plain that they could inherit under this clause, as they were children and descendants of deceased children of Sallie Taylor, the mother of Jeremiah Taylor. But the difficulty with their position is that the statute would make them heirs only in case Taylor left no widow, and he did leave a widow. It is immaterial whether the widow has assigned, or has barred or estopped herself from taking or not, as their right to inherit does not, under the statute, depend on any act or contract of hers, but, so to speak, on her nonexistence at Taylor's death. They cannot take under the statute and against the statute at the same time. They are not his heirs at law at all, because he left surviving him a widow. If we were at liberty to interpolate words in the statute, and make it read, "When there is no widow who has not released, or who is not barred or estopped by contract, the estate shall descend," etc., the Hudnalls could be declared the heirs; but we have no authority to add to or qualify the statute, or to pervert its plain meaning. Mary E. T. Taylor is no less the widow of Jeremiah Taylor because she executed the antenuptial agreement. She was his lawful wife, and upon his death became his lawful widow, and her antenuptial contract cannot be used to confer heirship upon these appellants, where none is conferred by law. Heirship is not created by contract, but by law only. Persons who inherit are heirs at law, not heirs by contract.

It is insisted by counsel for the Hudnalls that their contention is supported by Crum

v. Sawyer, 132 Ill. 443, 24 N. E. 956; that is, that the antenuptial agreement had the same effect to make them the heirs as would the death of the widow before the death of her husband. But in this they are in error. What was there said was in reference to the effect of the antenuptial contract on the rights of the surviving husband and other heirs, where there were other heirs at law of the wife, he being only one of such heirs. It was not held or intimated that the effect of the contract was to make persons heirs at law who were not so by law, but only to enlarge the portions which the other heirs would take. And such, of course, would be the necessary effect, for the release of one heir to the estate would operate to increase the shares of the rest without at all changing the legal status of heirship.

Again, it is difficult to see upon what principle of equity a court of equity could proceed to grant the relief prayed for. To give the antenuptial agreement the effect contended for would violate equities of the strongest character, and would be to enforce only a part of the contract,—just enough of it to dispose of the widow out of the way of the other appellants,—and then, ignoring the rest of it, to violate the clearly expressed intention of the contracting parties by disposing of the property in utter disregard of the sole purpose for which the contract was made. It is to be noted that the Hudnalls rely upon this contract, for without it they concede that the widow would be the sole heir, and they would have no rights, as heirs or otherwise. The contract, however, shows on its face that it was not made for their benefit, but for the benefit of others; that is, to dispose of the property at Taylor's death to the persons as named in his will. The Hudnalls assume the same position toward the contract as toward the statute; that is, while claiming by virtue of it, they at the same time claim against its provisions. This they cannot be permitted to do. They cannot avail themselves of so much of the contract as is favorable to them, and disregard or override that which is against them. The contract should be enforced altogether, if at all, and not partially (2 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 986, 1077, and notes), and so as to carry into effect the intention of the contracting parties, and not to thwart that intention.

It clearly appearing, then, that the Hudnalls are not entitled to the property, the question remains whether the widow, as sole heir of her deceased husband, is entitled to it, or whether there was an equitable assignment of it to the Hams. It is plain that it did not escheat, for the sixth paragraph of the statute provides that, "when there are no heirs or kindred, the estate of such person shall escheat to the state, and not otherwise." Clearly then unless the antenuptial contract, in connection with the instrument revoked as a will by operation of law, constitutes an equitable assignment to the Hams,—the persons named as beneficiaries in the so-called will,—the widow is entitled to the property as the sole heir, for, if the contract does not have this effect, it cannot, under the facts in this case, have any effect whatever. As a mere release or relinquishment for the benefit of the heirs of the deceased, there being no heir but herself, the instrument could have no more effect than one made for her own benefit. But we are of the opinion that the contract has all the effect of an equitable assignment of all her interest in the property to the intended beneficiaries, as expressed in the instrument executed by Taylor for his last will. It is too well settled to require discussion that contingent interests and expectancies, and things having no present existence, but which rest only in possibility, may, by contract bona fide made, and for a sufficient consideration, be assigned so as to be binding in equity. Such a contract will be enforced in equity after the subject-matter of it has come into existence. Crum v. Sawyer, 132 Ill. 443, 24 N. E. 956; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1029, and notes. Thus, it was said by this court in Crum v. Sawyer: "This court has repeatedly held that estates in expectancy, though contingent, are proper subjects of contract, and therefore that assignments by expectant heirs of their future contingent estates, when made fairly and upon valuable considerations, though inoperative at law, will be enforced in equity as executory agreements to convey." 132 Ill. 461, 24 N. E. 960; Ridgeway v. Underwood, 67 Ill. 419. It is also well settled that it is competent for persons owning property or interests therein to make a contract to dispose of it, by will or otherwise, in a certain way, and that such a contract, based upon a sufficient consideration, will be enforced in equity. Whiton v. Whiton, 179 Ill. 32, 53 N. E. 722; Barrett v. Geisinger, 179 Ill. 240, 53 N. E. 756. It is also true that several instruments may be taken and construed together as constituting one entire contract. Freer v. Lake, 115 Ill. 662, 4 N. E. 512; Wilson v. Roots, 119 Ill. 379, 10 N. E. 204. Taylor had been appointed the legal guardian of his stepsons when they were infants, and had received certain moneys belonging to them, and there was no record or other evidence whether or not he had ever accounted for or paid the same; but the evidence is undisputed that he stood in loco parentis to them from his marriage to their mother, and, after they grew to manhood, still regarded them as his sons, and until his death cherished the lifelong purpose of making them the beneficiaries of all of his property. To accomplish this purpose, he made the will in question, and the contract with his second wife before his marriage. The record shows that she was fully informed of substantially all of these facts, and was willing to assist him in carrying out his long-cherished purpose. Under these circumstances the antenuptial agreement was made, which, in addition to the usual provisions of release and relinquishment in such instruments, contained this provision: "Said party of the second part hereby declares that she has been informed of the execution of a will by the party of the first part, by the terms of which his entire estate, whether in possession or expectancy, has been devised and bequeathed to persons other than herself; and she further declares that such disposition of the property of the first party meets with her approval, and will not be interfered with by her in any way, either during the lifetime of the party of the first part or thereafter." It appears, also, that the will in question was the will referred to, and that after Taylor's death and the probate of the will she received from O. M. D. Hams, the executor, the $2,000, and gave her receipt for the same, which receipt stated, among other things, that it was given for "the amount due me by the terms of the antenuptial agreement between the undersigned and said Jeremiah Taylor, deceased, and in full of all claims against said estate, either under said last will and testament, or said antenuptial agreement, or otherwise." The receipt also recited that she had received certain other articles of personal property which had been given to her by Taylor in his lifetime.

It seems too clear for argument, upon the facts and circumstances under which the will and antenuptial agreement were made, and from the reference to the will in the agreement, and her covenant not to interfere with its provisions, that the written instrument intended as a will became a part of the whole agreement between the parties, notwithstanding the operation of the statute revoking the instrument as a will. It was still an intelligible written declaration of Taylor's wishes and intentions that the property should go to the Hams at his death, and, though inoperative as a will, the written contract, signed by him and by the widow, who was his sole heir, made it operative as a part of their contract. Her contract of approval was a contract of confirmation, and her covenant not to interfere in any way with the disposition of the property thus made is binding upon her, especially in view of her ratification and full performance of the contract after Taylor's death. Construing the instrument intended as a will and the antenuptial agreement as one entire contract, its effect was a binding agreement between the only two parties having any interest in the property, either in possession or expectancy, that upon Taylor's death the whole title of the property should vest in the Hams, as provided in the instrument called a will.

While no case precisely in point has been cited by counsel on either side, we are referred to many cases which announced and applied equitable principles to carry out the intention of the parties, which are equally applicable here. Thus, in Lant's Appeal, 95 Pa. 279, 40 Am. Rep. 646, on the eve of marriage, the man and woman agreed verbally that she should dispose of her property, which was of large value, as she pleased, whereupon she made a will, giving a liberal portion to her intended husband and the rest to relatives and charities, and thereupon they were married. Two years thereafter she died. The husband contested the will, and claimed the entire estate, but it was held that, while the will was revoked, under the 48 L. R. A.

statute, by the marriage, it would, in connection with the verbal agreement, be enforced in equity as an antenuptial contract, and that the husband was estopped from interfering with its full enforcement. See also Bradish v. Gibbs, 3 Johns. Ch. 532; [Jones v. Morley] 1 Ld. Raym. 290; [Rutland v. Rutland] 2 P. Wms. 209. Also Neves v. Scott, 9 How. 196, 13 L. ed. 102; Id., 13 How. 268, 14 L. ed. 140,—where an antenuptial agreement was enforced which provided that the property of each of the contracting parties should be held in common after their marriage during their joint lives, and by the survivor during his or her life, and then should be equally divided among the heirs of the man on the one hand and of the woman on the other. There were no direct heirs, and evidently none were contemplated by the contracting parties, and it was held that their collateral heirs could enforce the contract; that they were not volunteers, but came fairly within the influence of the considerations upon which the agreement of the parties was founded, and were the special objects of their bounty. It was said by the court in that case that "courts will endeavor, as much as possible, to give effect to marriage agreements according to the understanding of the parties." There would seem to be no serious difficulty in the case at bar in carrying into effect the marriage settlement under consideration.

Nor do we regard the suggestion of counsel, even if it be correct, that Taylor was not deprived, by the antenuptial agreement, of the power to change his will, but that it remained ambulatory till his death, and might have been changed altogether, as fatal to the contentions of the Hams. As a matter of fact, he did not modify or change it. The antenuptial agreement would not have been invalid if it had in express terms reserved to Taylor the power to make a different disposition of his property freed from all claims of the widow.

It is further suggested that the contract was not sufficient to bar or release the widow's dower. She was the sole heir, and there was no separate dower interest, and no question of homestead is involved in the case.

It is next said that, as the Hams filed no cross bill, they can have no relief. It is sufficient to say that the decree appealed from granted them no affirmative relief, but simply found the issues in their favor, and dismissed the bill of the Hudnalls and the cross bill of the widow, which attacked their right to and possession of the property. The Hudnalls had no right to it whatever, and the widow had disposed of her right to it by contract, and had estopped herself from interfering in any way with the Hams in the assertion of their claims.

The decree is right from every standpoint, and it will be affirmed.

Cartwright, Ch. J. and Phillips and Magruder, JJ., dissent.

Rehearing denied February 17, 1900.

Walter F. WYMAN, Appt.,
v.

FORT DEARBORN NATIONAL BANK OF CHICAGO et al.

(181 Ill. 279.)

The holder of a check drawn by a bank which becomes insolvent before its presentation, whereupon the drawee bank, without knowledge of the check, applies the deposit upon its own claims against the insolvent bank, is entitled to be subrogated to any collateral which the drawee bank has after its own claims are satisfied.

(October 16, 1899.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Appellate Court, First District, reversing a judgment of the Superior Court for Cook County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to compel payment of a check drawn upon the defendant bank by the insolvent First National Bank of Helena, Montana. Reversed.

Statement by Phillips, J.:

On September 1, 1896, the First National Bank of Helena, Montana, drew its check upon the Fort Dearborn National Bank of Chicago for $10,000, in favor of appellant. At the time this check was given, the Fort Dearborn National Bank had in its possession, on deposit to the credit of the First National Bank of Helena, $20,523.67. The Fort Dearborn National Bank at the same time held a certificate of deposit of date May 15, 1895, from the First National Bank of Helena, in the sum of $25,000, which latter was secured by collateral for the face amount of $30,000 of notes taken by the First National Bank of Helena and indorsed to the Fort Dearborn National Bank. The Helena bank was indebted to the Fort Dearborn National Bank, on account, $649.89. On the 4th day of September, 1896, the Helena bank was placed in the hands of a receiver, and on the same day the Fort Dearborn National Bank transferred the account on deposit with it to the amount of $20,523.67 to itself, and credited its certificate of deposit with that amount, debiting the Helena bank with the same sum, and leaving a balance due the Fort Dearborn National Bank of $2,321.39, with interest thereon. On the 5th day of September the check drawn in favor of appellant was presented for payment to the Fort Dearborn National Bank, which was refused. On the 21st day of January, 1897, the appellant filed in the superior court of Cook county his bill, making the Fort Dearborn National Bank and the receiver of the Helena bank defendants, and sought to marshal assets. To this bill of complaint a demurrer was interposed and overruled. Subsequently the defendants to the bill filed an answer, and the cause was submitted upon bill and answer, and a decree was entered in accordance with the prayer of the bill, to reverse which the defendants sued out a writ of error to the appellate court for the first district, where the decree was reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to dismiss the bill, whereupon the appellee in the appellate court prosecuted this appeal.

Messrs. Peckham, Brown, & Packard, for appellant:

By the execution and delivery of its check for $10,000 on a deposit account of bankable funds in the Fort Dearborn Bank sufficient in amount to meet it, the First National Bank of Helena, on September 1, 1896, assigned and transferred pro tanto to Wyman that deposit account.

National Bank v. Indiana Bkg. Co. 114 Ill. 483, 2 N. E. 401; Abt v. American Trust & Sav. Bank, 159 Ill. 467, 42 N. E. 856; Gage Hotel Co. v. Union Nat. Bank, 171 Ill. 531, 39 L. R. A. 479, 49 N. E. 420.

Under these circumstances equity would compel the Fort Dearborn bank, having recourse on two funds, to exhaust the one on which it alone had a claim, in order that the other, in which alone Wyman had an interest, should go as far as possible to the satisfaction of his claim upon it.

Upon this theory the bill in this cause was framed, and upon this theory the decree was entered, and it presents a plainly proper case of the "marshaling of assets."

2 Beach, Modern Eq. Jur. § 784; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 635, 636; Aldrich v. Cooper, 8 Ves. Jr. 381, 2 White & T. Lead. Cas. in Eq. 82; 27 Am. L. Reg. N. S. p. 739; 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, Marshaling Assets; Milmine v. Bass, 29 Fed. Rep. 632; James v. Hubbard, 1 Paige, 228; Clowes v. Dickenson, 5 Johns. Ch. 235, 9 Cow. 402; Ingalls v. Morgan, 10 N. Y. 178; Campbell v. Carter, 14 Ill. 286; Young v. Morgan, 89 Ill. 200.

It is sufficient if the funds were both in existence when the "claims or interests" accrued, and if, when the aid of equity is invoked, the doctrine of marshaling assets can then be applied without injury, delay, or embarrassment to the paramount creditor. 27 Am. L. Reg. N. S. p. 739; James v. Hubbard, 1 Paige, 228; Clowes v. Dickenson, 5 Johns. Ch. 235, 9 Cow. 402.

In equity, at least (no other change taking place in the state of accounts between the banks, no money or security passing between them, and no other check being given or presented before the presentation of ours or before the filing of our bill), the mere bookkeeping entries by which the Fort Dearborn Bank "appropriated" the "fund" on deposit made no difference in the actual existence of the two funds.

1 Beach, Modern Eq. Jur. § 7; Young v. Morgan, 89 Ill. 199.

Even if there were an "appropriation" actually made of the fund on deposit, before notice was given to the Fort Dearborn Bank of the assignment to Wyman of $10,000 thereof, and in consequence that fund had ceased to exist, yet, nevertheless, to accomplish the purpose of protecting Wyman's undoubted rights so far as it could be done without injury to itself (no third parties' rights having intervened), it became the NOTE.—As to subrogation to collateral, see also some cases in note to Boone v. Clark (Ill.) 5 L. R. A. on pages 288-290.

48 L. R. A.

duty of the Fort Dearborn Bank on receiving notice of such assignment to Wyman to revoke its "appropriation," and bring the deposit fund again into ostensible and technical, as well as actual, existence.

1 Beach, Modern Eq. Jur. § 8; Story, Eq. Jur. § 640; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 364-368.

The receiver has no rights beyond those which the bank itself would have had.

Gibson v. Seagrim, 20 Beav. 614.

Messrs. Gilbert & Fell for appellees.

Phillips, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is insisted by the appellant that by the execution and delivery of its check for $10,000 against the deposit account of the Fort Dearborn National Bank the First National Bank of Helena assigned and transferred to the appellant, from that deposit account, an amount sufficient to pay the check on September 1, 1896, the time at which it was drawn; and as sustaining this contention appellant cites National Bank v. Indiana Bkg. Co. 114 Ill. 483, 2 N. E. 401; Abt v. American Trust & Sav. Bank, 159 Ill. 467, 42 N. E. 856; and Gage Hotel Co. v. Union Nat. Bank, 171 Ill. 531, 39 L. R. A. 479, 49 N. E. 420. The principle is clearly established by the foregoing and other authorities in this state, that the check of a depositor upon his banker, delivered to another for value, transfers to that other the title to so much of the deposit as the check calls for, and the banker becomes the holder of the money for the use of the holder of the check, and is bound to account to him for the amount thereof, provided the party drawing the check has funds to that amount on deposit, subject to his check, at the time the same is presented. Munn v. Burch, 25 Ill. 35. The check operates as an absolute assignment of the fund on which it is drawn from the time it is delivered, as between the drawer and the payee, and the bank is bound as soon as the check is presented, and whatever sum stands upon the books to the credit of the depositor at the time of such presentation is absolutely assigned to the holder of the check. Bickford v. First Nat. Bank, 42 Ill. 238, 89 Am. Dec. 436; Brown v. Leckie, 43 Ill. 497; Fourth Nat. Bank v. City Nat. Bank, 68 Ill. 398; Union Nat. Bank v. Oceana County Bank, 80 Ill. 212, 22 Am. Rep. 185; Metropolitan Nat. Bank v. Jones, 137 Ill. 634, 12 L. R. A. 492, 27 N. E. 533; Niblack v. Park Nat. Bank, 169 Ill. 517, 39 L. R. A. 159, 48 N. E. 438. And the relation existing between the drawer, the check holder, and the banker becomes such, when there are sufficient funds on deposit to meet the check at the time of presentation, that, because such funds were appropriated at the time of the drawing of the check, the contract to be implied between the depositor, the banker, and the check holder is that the check holder, whoever he may be, may have his action, and recover against the bank the amount, pro tanto, of the check. Gage Hotel Co. v. Union Nat. Bank, 171 Ill. 531, 39 L. R. A. 479, 49 N. E. 420. In the latter case it was said (page 536, 171 Ill., page 48 L. R. A.

481, 39 L. R. A., and page 422, 49 N. E.): "If the funds are in the bank when the check is drawn, the drawing is an appropriation, as between the drawer and the payee, of the sum of money named in the check, which is to lie in the bank until called for by a presentation of the check. It is true that in such a case there is no privity between the bank and the check holder until presentment, and that priority in drawing a check does not give priority of right to the fund as against the banker, but that such priority of right is determined by the order of presentation." It was held in Niblack v. Park Nat. Bank (page 521, 169 Ill., page 161, 39 L. R. A., and page 439, 48 N. E.): "It is also the law, where a bank holds a demand note, or a note past due, it has the right to charge such obligation up against the maker's deposit account; and, if it does so before a check drawn by the depositor is presented for payment, it will be entitled to hold the deposit against any check afterwards presented." In this case, on the 4th of September—at least one day before the presentment of the check for payment—the Chicago bank transferred the account; and by proper entries on its books credited the Helena bank with all the money held by it to the credit of the latter bank, which credit was made on a certificate of deposit, which was, in effect, a demand note. Hunt v. Divine, 37 Ill. 137; Tripp v. Curtienius, 36 Mich. 494, 24 Am. Rep. 610. Appropriating the deposit fund in good faith, in pursuance of strict legal rights, for the purpose of protecting its own interests, and without notice of the appropriation of the money by drawing the check in favor of appellant, was not a wrongful act, but one authorized by law, and absolutely transferred the legal and equitable right to the fund so deposited to the Fort Dearborn National Bank, the check not having been presented to it, nor it having any notice of the same, until the day after the transfer of the account. Under the recognized rule in this state there was between the Helena bank and the payee of the check an absolute assignment of $10,000, then on deposit with the Fort Dearborn National Bank, and no right existed in the Helena bank to change that deposit in any way, or to so draw against it as to prevent the assignment pro tanto from being carried out. It is clear that the holder of the check had an interest in the fund so assigned, while it is equally clear that until the bank had notice it could pay subsequently drawn checks, or credit the amount of the deposit on any overdue paper of its own. The equitable interest of the check holder, however, remained the same.

It is a principle controlling the marshaling of securities that where one creditor can resort to two funds, and another to one of them only, the former must seek satisfaction out of that fund which the latter cannot touch. In 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1414, it is said: "If, therefore, the prior creditor resorts to the doubly charged fund, the subsequent creditor will be substituted, as far as possible, to his rights. These rules must be taken with the modifications and exceptions that in their application the paramount encumbrancer shall not be delayed or inconvenienced in the collection of his debt, . . . that the rights of third parties shall not be prejudiced, and that the parties themselves are creditors of the same debtor." Numerous authorities are there cited as sustaining these propositions. The principle of marshaling securities has been frequently applied to cases where there is an equitable interest or lien on collateral securities. In Colebrooke on Collateral Securities it is said (§ 98): "By this rule, a creditor having a lien upon two funds for payment of his debt, and a subsequent creditor a lien upon one only of such funds, the former is required to exhaust his remedy against the fund which is especially given for his security before resorting to that in which the subsequent creditor is interested. The rule, however, is never enforced in cases where it would cause an injury or damage to a creditor holding such liens upon separate funds, or would work injustice to other parties. The rule was applied where a merchant had forwarded his note to a broker for sale, and the proceeds, less commissions, remitted. The broker fraudulently pledged the note, with other collaterals, to a bank, to secure a loan to himself, of which the merchant received nothing. The merchant, learning of the misappropriation, gave notice to the bank, and claimed to be subrogated to any surplus arising from other securities held by it after payment of the loan. Subsequently, and before the maturity of the loan, the note fell due, and was paid without suit. Upon realizing the other securities, the bank held a surplus in its hands. The merchant was entitled to be paid from such surplus, his voluntary payment not affecting his right of recovery." This principle is sustained by Farwell v. Importers' & T. Nat. Bank, 90 N. Y. 493. In that case the merchant had an equitable interest in collaterals, which, with his note, were put up to secure the loan to the broker by reason of the broker's misappropriation of the note, and it is not, equitably, a stronger case for the marshaling of assets than where, as in this case, the bank had as security for its certificate of deposit and for its account due notes aggregating about $30,000, and a deposit of over $20,000. Here, $10,000 of the amount deposited having been equitably assigned to the complainant, by reason of its appropriation by the bank before receiving notice of the drawing of the check the complainant was deprived of all interest in the deposit, and the Helena bank, or its receiver (who could have no greater interest than the bank itself), received the benefit of the application of the deposit by the Fort Dearborn National Bank on its certificate of deposit, and the complainant, as holder of the check, had such an interest in the sum deposited that he should be subrogated, as against the Helena bank or its receiver, to the notes held by the Fort Dearborn National Bank after the payment of the residue due the latter bank; and this principle of subrogation is 48 L. R. A.

applicable because, by reason of the appropriation of the fund by the bank with which the deposit was made to the payment of a debt for which it held two distinct characters of securities, one of those securities is, to an extent sufficient to pay the complainant, released from liability so far as the Fort Dearborn National Bank was concerned, and the latter bank had lawfully used $10,000 of a deposit theretofore assigned to the complainant by the Helena bank. 2 Beach, Modern Eq. Jur. § 784; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 635, 636.

It is a maxim of equity that "equity regards and treats that as done which in good conscience ought to be done," and in writing of this maxim Mr. Pomeroy, in his work on Equity Jurisprudence (vol. 1, § 365), says: "The principle involves the notion of an equitable obligation existing from some cause; of a present relation of equitable right and duty subsisting between two parties,—a right held by one party, from whatever cause arising, that the other should do some act, and the corresponding duty—the ought—resting upon the latter to do such act. Equity does not regard and treat as done what might be done or what could be done, but only what ought to be done. Nor does the principle operate in favor of every person, no matter what may be his situation and relations, but only in favor of him who holds the equitable right to have the act performed, as against the one upon whom the duty of such performance has devolved." A court of equity, acting upon this fundamental principle, may go beneath the appearance of things, and deal with the real facts, where the interest is a purely equitable one, recognized by courts of equity alone. When, therefore, a prior encumbrancer of two funds, by his election of remedies, deprives a junior encumbrancer who has a lien upon one of the funds only, from reaching the particular fund on which he has a lien, the junior encumbrancer, to the extent of his lien, should be substituted to the lien of the paramount encumbrancer upon the other fund bound, as against the debtor and all claiming under him by lien or title subsequent in time. Gibson v. Seagrims, 20 Beav. 614; James v. Hubbard, 1 Paige, 228; Clowes v. Dickenson, 5 Johns. Ch. 235. Under a bill for marshaling securities relief may be had in that character of case. The Fort Dearborn National Bank had a right to apply the deposit in payment of the indebtedness pro tanto to the extent of the deposit, and deprive the check holder of any part of that deposit as a fund assigned to him; but he had such an equitable interest in that fund, by reason of its assignment by the check, that he is entitled to be subrogated to the extent of his check, with interest thereon from the time it was presented, to the fund to be derived from the collection or sale of the collateral securities held by the Fort Dearborn National Bank as security on its certificate of deposit and bank account, after the residue is paid to it. The superior court erred in decreeing that the Fort Dearborn National Bank should deliver to the receiver of the First National Bank of Helena the collateral notes, but did not err in decreeing that from the proceeds of the same there should first be paid to the Fort Dearborn National Bank the amount, including interest, due it, and to pay to Wyman the amount due on said check and interest, and to retain the balance as part of the assets of the First National Bank of Helena. Nor was there error in the decree of the superior court in directing, if there was not enough to pay Wyman in full, the amount unpaid should be allowed as a claim against said First National Bank of Helena, to be paid in due course of administration of its assets, and that the receiver pay the costs. It was error in the appellate court for the first district to reverse the entire decree of the superior court, and remand the cause with directions to dismiss the bill. So far as the superior court decreed that the Fort Dearborn National Bank deliver to the receiver of the First National Bank of Helena the collateral notes, its decree is reversed, but in all other respects the decree of said court is affirmed.

For the error of the appellate court for the first district in reversing the entire case, and remanding with directions to dismiss the bill, its decree is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

INTER-OCEAN PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Appt.,
v.

ASSOCIATED PRESS.

(184 Ill. 438.)

1. A corporation engaged in collecting and vending news, with charter power to own and operate telegraph lines and exercise the right of eminent domain, cannot discriminate between newspaper publishers in the sale of its news, since its business is affected with a public interest.
2. A by-law of a press association, which provides that its members shall not furnish its special news to, or receive news from, any person or corporation which shall have been declared antagonistic to such association, is void as creating a monopoly.

(February 19, 1900.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Appellate Court, First District, affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for Cook County in favor of defendant in an action brought to enjoin defendant from interfering with plaintiff's procurement of news for its paper. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Knight & Brown, for appellant:

The appellee did not have the right to can-

NOTE—For unlawful discrimination between newspapers in furnishing news by telegraph, see also Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Call Pub. Co. (Neb.) 27 L. R. A. 622.

For telegraph companies as common carriers which cannot discriminate between patrons, see also Kirby v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (S. D.) 30 L. R. A. 612.
48 L. R. A.

cel the contract between the appellant and appellee, and thereby deprive appellant of the news service therein provided for, on the ground that appellant was receiving news from parties declared by the appellee antagonistic to it.

People ex rel. Paris & D. R. Co. v. Holden, 82 Ill. 93; Sanger v. Chicago, 65 Ill. 506; Risinger v. Cheney, 7 Ill. 84; Walker v. Tucker, 70 Ill. 527.

If any part of the contract is illegal and void, then such illegal and void parts are separable from the provisions thereof which provide for furnishing to the appellant the news service therein specified.

Brown v. Rounsavell, 78 Ill. 591; Welty v. Jacobs, 171 Ill. 632, 40 L. R. A. 98, 49 N. E. 723; Baldwin v. Fletcher, 48 Mich. 604, 12 N. W. 873; Oregon Steam Nav. Co. v. Winsor, 20 Wall. 64, 22 L. ed. 315.

Covenants may be treated as independent. Pollak v. Brush Electric Asso. 128 U. S. 455, 32 L. ed. 478, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 119; Commercial Union Teleg. Co. v. New England Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 61 Vt. 241, 5 L. R. A. 161.

Illegal by-laws are not binding on a member, though he assents thereto.

Vierling v. Mechanics' & T. Soc., Loan & Bldg. Asso. 179 Ill. 527, 53 N. E. 979; People ex rel. Elliott v. New York Cotton Exchange, 8 Hun, 216; People ex rel. Schmitt, v. Saint Francis Hospital Soc. 24 How. Pr. 221; Leech v. Harris, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 571.

The by-laws and contract, in so far as they restrain the sale of the stock, are void as being against public policy.

McNulta v. Corn Belt Bank, 164 Ill. 427, 45 N. E. 954; Morgan v. Struthers, 131 U. S. 246, 33 L. ed. 132, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 726; People v. Milk Exchange, 145 N. Y. 267, 27 L. R. A. 437, 39 N. E. 1062; Humphreys v. McKissock, 140 U. S. 304, 35 L. ed. 473, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 779.

Appellee, by reason of the provisions of its charter giving to it the power of eminent domain, and the nature of its business, and the fact that it has a monopoly of that business, is bound to serve appellant without discrimination, if the contract shall be held by the court to be null and void.

New York & C. Grain & Stock Exchange v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 127 Ill. 153, 2 L. R. A. 411, 19 N. E. 855; Danville v. Danville Water Co. 180 Ill. 235, 54 N. E. 224, 178 Ill. 299, 53 N. E. 118; Rogers Park Water Co. v. Fergus, 178 Ill. 671, 53 N. E. 363; Wagner v. Rock Island, 146 Ill. 139, 21 L. R. A. 519, 34 N. E. 545; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77; Budd v. New York, 143 U. S. 517, 36 L. ed. 247, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 468; People ex rel. Cairo Teleph. Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 166 Ill. 15, 36 L. R. A. 637, 46 N. E. 731; People ex rel. Jackson v. Suburban R. Co. 178 Ill. 594, 53 N. E. 349; American Waterworks Co. v. State ex rel. Walker, 46 Neb. 194, 30 L. R. A. 447, 64 N. W. 711; People v. Budd, 117 N. Y. 1, 5 L. R. A. 559, 22 N. E. 670, 682; Friedman v. Gold & Stock Teleg. Co. 32 Hun, 4; Smith v. Gold & Stock Teleg. Co. 42 Hun, 454; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Call Pub. Co. 44 Neb. 326, 27

L. R. A. 622, 62 N. W. 506; Nash v. Page, 80 Ky. 539, 44 Am. Rep. 490; Commercial Union Tele. Co. v. New England Tele. & Teleg. Co. 61 Vt. 241, 5 L. R. A. 161, 17 Atl. 1071; State ex rel. Webster v. Nebraska Tele. Co. 17 Neb. 136, 52 Am. Rep. 404, 22 N. W. 237; Ruggles v. People, 91 Ill. 256; Chicago Dock & Canal Co. v. Garrity, 115 Ill. 155, 3 N. E. 448; Munn v. People, 69 Ill. 80; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Columbus Gaslight & Coke Co. 34 Ohio St. 572; Zanesville v. Zanesville Gaslight Co. 47 Ohio St. 10, 23 N. E. 55.

Appellee in the conduct of its business, and as shown by its by-laws and contracts, is and has created to itself a monopoly, and is violating the laws of the state of Illinois, thereby subjecting its charter to forfeiture, against which any stockholder has the right to an injunction.

Holden v. Alton, 179 Ill. 318, 53 N. E. 556; Adams v. Brennan, 177 Ill. 194, 42 L. R. A. 718, 52 N. E. 314; Fishburn v. Chicago, 171 Ill. 338, 39 L. R. A. 482, 49 N. E. 532; People ex rel. McIlhany v. Chicago Live Stock Exchange, 170 Ill. 556, 39 L. R. A. 373, 48 N. E. 1062; Minnesota Tribune Co. v. Associated Press, 55 U. S. App. 136, 83 Fed. Rep. 350, 27 C. C. A. 542; Craft v. McConoughy, 79 Ill. 348, 22 Am. Rep. 171; United States v. Addyston Pipe & S. Co. 54 U. S. App. 723, 85 Fed. Rep. 271, 29 C. C. A. 141, 46 L. R. A. 122; Bishop v. American Preservers' Co. 157 Ill. 284, 41 N. E. 859; Ford v. Chicago Milk Shippers' Asso. 155 Ill. 166, 27 L. R. A. 298, 39 N. E. 651; People v. Milk Exchange, 145 N. Y. 267, 27 L. R. A. 437, 39 N. E. 1062; People ex rel. Peabody v. Chicago Gas Trust Co. 130 Ill. 268, 8 L. R. A. 497, 22 N. E. 798; More v. Bennett, 140 Ill. 69, 15 L. R. A. 361, 29 N. E. 888; Distilling & Cattle Feeding Co. v. People ex rel. Moloney, 156 Ill. 448, 41 N. E. 188; Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 746, 28 L. ed. 585, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 652; Marseilles Land & Water Power Co. v. Aldrich, 86 Ill. 504; Davis v. Old Colony R. Co. 131 Mass. 259, 41 Am. Rep. 221; Stewart v. Erie Transp. Co. 17 Minn. 398.

Appellee is violating the anti-trust laws of the state of Illinois and of the United States.

United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. 166 U. S. 290, 41 L. ed. 1007, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 540; Hurd's Stat. 1899, p. 596.

Appellant is entitled to injunction to enjoin appellee from prohibiting any of its members from dealing or having business relations with the appellant; or, in other words, it is entitled to enjoin a boycott.

Jackson v. Stanfield, 137 Ind. 592, 23 L. R. A. 588, 36 N. E. 345, 37 N. E. 14; State v. Glidden, 55 Conn. 46, 8 Atl. 890; Beek v. Railway Teamsters' Protective Union, 118 Mich. 497, 42 L. R. A. 407, 77 N. W. 13; Vegelahn v. Guntner, 167 Mass. 82, 35 L. R. A. 722, 44 N. E. 1077; Minke v. Hopeman, 87 Ill. 450, 29 Am. Rep. 63; Barrett v. Mount Greenwood Cemetery Asso. 159 Ill. 385, 31 L. R. A. 109, 42 N. E. 891; Hopkins v. Owley State Co. 49 U. S. App. 709, 83 Fed. Rep. 912, 28 C. C. A. 99; People v. Milk Exchange, 48 L. R. A.

145 N. Y. 267, 27 L. R. A. 437, 39 N. E. 1062.

Appellee should have been enjoined from depriving appellant of the news service.

New York & C. Grain & Stock Exchange v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 127 Ill. 153, 2 L. R. A. 411, 19 N. E. 855; Friedman v. Gold & Stock Tele. Co. 32 Hun, 4; Smith v. Gold & Stock Tele. Co. 42 Hun, 454; Huston v. Reutlinger, 91 Ky. 333, 15 S. W. 867; Walker v. Converse, 148 Ill. 622, 36 N. E. 202; McMillan v. James, 105 Ill. 194; Oushman v. Bonfield, 139 Ill. 219, 28 N. E. 937; Holden v. Holden, 24 Ill. App. 106.

Appellee's contract with appellant, so far as relates to the sale of stock, and the by-laws of appellee in reference thereto, are void.

McNulta v. Corn Belt Bank, 164 Ill. 427, 45 N. E. 954.

The business of a telegraph company is a public business.

People ex rel. Cairo Tele. Co. v. Western U. Tele. Co. 166 Ill. 15, 36 L. R. A. 637, 46 N. E. 731; Danville v. Danville Water Co. 180 Ill. 235, 54 N. E. 224, 178 Ill. 299, 53 N. E. 118; Rogers Park Water Co. v. Fergus, 178 Ill. 571, 53 N. E. 363; People ex rel. McIlhany v. Chicago Live Stock Exchange, 170 Ill. 556, 39 L. R. A. 373, 48 N. E. 1062; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. 166 U. S. 290, 41 L. ed. 1007, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 540.

The appellee has by its by-laws created a monopoly.

Minnesota Tribune Co. v. Associated Press, 55 U. S. App. 136, 83 Fed. Rep. 350, 27 C. C. A. 542; Ford v. Chicago Milk Shippers' Asso. 155 Ill. 166, 27 L. R. A. 298, 39 N. E. 651; Bishop v. American Preservers' Co. 157 Ill. 284, 41 N. E. 765; Craft v. McConoughy, 79 Ill. 348, 22 Am. Rep. 171; More v. Bennett, 140 Ill. 69, 15 L. R. A. 361, 29 N. E. 888; Jackson v. Stanfield, 137 Ind. 592, 23 L. R. A. 588, 36 N. E. 345, 37 N. E. 14.

Appellee should be enjoined from enforcing the by-laws so far as they tend to create a boycott against the appellant. We only need to refer to the case of—

Beck v. Railway Teamsters' Protective Union, 118 Mich. 497, 42 L. R. A. 407, 77 N. W. 13.

A corporation organized under the laws of this state can only adopt such by-laws as are necessary to carry out the object and purpose of its creation, and it cannot adopt by-laws that are illegal or contrary to public policy. Neither can it make any contract in furtherance of its business that is illegal or contrary to the public policy of this state.

In so far as by-laws are contrary to the laws of this state or in contravention of its public policy, any stockholder may enjoin the enforcement of the same.

McNulta v. Corn Belt Bank, 164 Ill. 427, 45 N. E. 954; Morgan v. Struthers, 131 U. S. 246, 33 L. ed. 132, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 726; Feckheimer v. National Exchange Bank, 79 Va. 80; Re Klaus, 67 Wis. 401, 29 N. W. 582; Humphreys v. McKissock, 140 U. S. 304, 35 L. ed. 473, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 779.

Appellee has instituted and proposes to carry out, as against the appellant, what is known as a boycott.

Such an act is criminal, and will injure and destroy to a great extent the right of appellant to deal with the members of this Associated Press corporation.

Such proceedings on the part of a corporation, or even an individual, have been declared by the courts to be abhorrent to the spirit of our institutions, and cannot be too strongly condemned by the courts.

Jackson v. Stanfield, 137 Ind. 592, 23 L. R. A. 588, 36 N. E. 345, 37 N. E. 14.

The business of a telegraph and telephone company is a business public in its nature, upon which the public interest is impressed.

People ex rel. Cairo Teleph. Co. v. Western U. Teleph. Co. 166 Ill. 15, 36 L. R. A. 637, 46 N. E. 731.

Appellee should be bound to treat all persons and corporations alike and without discrimination in its business of collecting, transmitting, and selling news despatches.

Danville v. Danville Water Co. 180 Ill. 235, 54 N. E. 224, 178 Ill. 299, 53 N. E. 118; Rogers Park Water Co. v. Fergus, 178 Ill. 571, 53 N. E. 363.

A business may be public in its nature, or it may be of that nature that it is impressed with the public interest; in either case no discrimination should be made.

Wagner v. Rock Island, 146 Ill. 139, 21 L. R. A. 519, 34 N. E. 545; Munn v. People, 69 Ill. 80; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77; Budd v. New York, 143 U. S. 517, 36 L. ed. 247, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 468; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Jones, 149 Ill. 361, 24 L. R. A. 141, 37 N. E. 247; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Columbus Gaslight & Coke Co. 34 Ohio St. 572, 32 Am. Rep. 390; Zanesville v. Zanesville Gaslight Co. 47 Ohio St. 1, 23 N. E. 55; Rogers Park Water Co. v. Fergus, 178 Ill. 571, 53 N. E. 363.

As to water companies, gas companies, telegraph, and telephone companies, they are all impressed with a public interest, and cannot select their patrons arbitrarily, but must serve all who apply, on equal terms, at reasonable rates.

Western U. Teleph. Co. v. Call Pub. Co. 44 Neb. 326, 27 L. R. A. 622, 62 N. W. 506; American Waterworks Co. v. State ex rel. Walker, 46 Neb. 194, 30 L. R. A. 447, 64 N. W. 711; Williams v. Mutual Gas Co. 52 Mich. 499, 18 N. W. 236, 50 Am. Rep. 266; Shepard v. Milwaukee Gaslight Co. 6 Wis. 539, 70 Am. Dec. 479; People ex rel. Jackson v. Suburban R. Co. 178 Ill. 594, 53 N. E. 349; Price v. Riverside Land & Irrig. Co. 56 Cal. 431; Haugen v. Albina Light & Water Co. 21 Or. 411, 14 L. R. A. 424, 28 Pac. 244; Chicago Gaslight & Coke Co. v. People's Gaslight & Coke Co. 121 Ill. 530, 13 N. E. 169; People ex rel. Hunt v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 130 Ill. 175, 22 N. E. 857; St. Louis v. Bell Teleph. Co. 96 Mo. 623, 2 L. R. A. 278, 10 S. W. 197; State ex rel. National Subway Co. v. St. Louis, 145 Mo. 551, 42 L. R. A. 113; 46 S. W. 981; New York & O. 48 L. R. A.

Grain & Stock Exchange v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 127 Ill. 163, 2 L. R. A. 411, 19 N. E. 855; Friedman v. Gold & Stock Teleg. Co. 32 Hun, 4; Smith v. Gold & Stock Teleg. Co. 42 Hun. 454; People ex rel. Cantrell v. St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. 176 Ill. 512, 35 L. R. A. 656, 45 N. E. 824, 52 N. E. 292; Olmstead v. Camp, 33 Conn. 532, 89 Am. Dec. 221; Nash v. Page, 80 Ky. 539, 44 Am. Rep. 490; State v. Edwards, 86 Me. 102, 25 L. R. A. 504, 29 Atl. 947; Blair v. Cuming County, 111 U. S. 363, 28 L. ed. 457, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 449; Head v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. 113 U. S. 9, 28 L. ed. 889, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 441; Stone v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 116 U. S. 307, 29 L. ed. 636, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 334, 388, 1191; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 418, 33 L. ed. 970, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 462, 702; Stewart v. Great Northern R. Co. 65 Minn. 515, 33 L. R. A. 427, 68 N. W. 208; Commercial Union Teleph. Co. v. New England Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 61 Vt. 241, 5 L. R. A. 161, 17 Atl. 1071; Bank of Kentucky v. Adams Eap. Co. 93 U. S. 181, 23 L. ed. 875; Chicago Dock & Canal Co. v. Garrity, 115 Ill. 156, 3 N. E. 448; Ruggles v. People, 91 Ill. 256; People v. King, 110 N. Y. 418, 1 L. R. A. 293, 18 N. E. 245; Adams v. Brennan, 177 Ill. 194, 42 L. R. A. 718, 52 N. E. 314; Fiehlburn v. Chicago, 171 Ill. 338, 39 L. R. A. 482, 49 N. E. 532; People ex rel. Mollhany v. Chicago Live Stock Exchange, 170 Ill. 556, 39 L. R. A. 373, 48 N. E. 1062; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. 16 U. S. 290; 41 L. ed. 1007, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 540; Huston v. Reutlinger, 91 Ky. 332, 15 S. W. 867; Minnesota Tribune Co. v. Associated Press, 55 U. S. App. 136, 83 Fed. Rep. 350, 27 C. C. A. 542.

It is not necessary that appellee should have a complete monopoly, to bring it within the law applying to monopolies.

United States v. E. O. Knight Co. 156 U. S. 1, 39 L. ed. 325, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249; Craft v. McConoughy, 79 Ill. 348, 22 Am. Rep. 171; United States v. Hopkins, 82 Fed. Rep. 529; United States v. Addyston Pipe & S. Co. 54 U. S. App. 123, 85 Fed. Rep. 271, 46 L. R. A. 122, 29 C. C. A. 121; Bishop v. American Preservers' Co. 157 Ill. 284, 41 N. E. 765; People ex rel. Peabody v. Chicago Gas Trust Co. 130 Ill. 268, 8 L. R. A. 497, 22 N. E. 798; More v. Bennett, 140 Ill. 69, 15 L. R. A. 361, 29 N. E. 888; Ford v. Chicago Milk Shippers' Asso. 155 Ill. 166, 27 L. R. A. 298, 39 N. E. 651; People v. Milk Exchange, 145 N. Y. 267, 27 L. R. A. 437, 39 N. E. 1062; Judd v. Harrington, 139 N. Y. 105, 39 N. E. 790; People v. Sheldon, 139 N. Y. 251, 23 L. R. A. 221, 34 N. E. 785; Arnot v. Pittston & E. Coal Co. 68 N. Y. 558, 23 Am. Rep. 190.

There is a right to injunction against boycott.

Jackson v. Stanfield, 137 Ind. 592, 23 L. R. A. 588, 36 N. E. 345, 37 N. E. 14; State v. Glidden, 55 Conn. 46, 8 Atl. 890; Beck v. Railway Teamsters' Protective Union, 118 Mich. 497, 42 L. R. A. 407, 77 N. W. 13; Vegelein v. Guntner, 167 Mass. 92, 35 L. R.

A. 722, 44 N. E. 1077; Hopkins v. Ooley State Co. 49 U. S. App. 709, 83 Fed. Rep. 912, 28 C. C. A. 99; Barrett v. Mount Greenwood Cemetery Asso. 159 Ill. 385, 31 L. R. A. 109, 42 N. E. 891; Minke v. Hopeman, 87 Ill. 450, 29 Am. Rep. 63.

The courts will restrain a party, upon proper cause, from doing certain acts in violation of his agreement, not requiring performance of skill, personal labor, or judgment.

Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Union P. R. Co. 1 McCrary, 558, 3 Fed. Rep. 429; Singer Sewing-Mach. Co. v. Union Button-hole & Embroidery Co. Holmes, 253, Fed. Cas. No. 12,904; Fry, Spec. Perf. § 863; New York & C. Grain & Stock Exchange v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 127 Ill. 153, 2 L. R. A. 411, 19 N. E. 855; Friedman v. Gold & Stock Teleg. Co. 32 Hun, 4; Smith v. Gold & Stock Teleg. Co. 42 Hun, 454; Nash v. Page, 80 Ky. 539, 44 Am. Rep. 490; Huston v. Reutlinger, 91 Ky. 333, 15 S. W. 867; Vincent v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 49 Ill. 33; Hagan v. Fayette Gas-Fuel Co. 21 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 503; Southern Exp. Co. v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 3 McCrary, 147, 10 Fed. Rep. 210, 869; Re Lennon, 166 U. S. 548, 41 L. ed. 1110, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 658; Robinson v. Byron, 1 Bro. Ch. 688; Hervey v. Smith, 1 Kay & J. 389; Beadle v. Perry, L. R. 3 Eq. 465; Whitecar v. Michenor, 37 N. J. Eq. 6; Broome v. New York & N. J. Teleph. Co. 42 N. J. Eq. 141, 7 Atl. 851; Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co. 54 Fed. Rep. 730, 19 L. R. A. 395; Lough v. Outerbridge, 143 N. Y. 271, 25 L. R. A. 674, 38 N. E. 292; Gregsten v. Chicago, 145 Ill. 451, 34 N. E. 426; Brass v. North Dakota ex rel. Stoerer, 153 U. S. 391, 38 L. ed. 757, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 857; Keeler v. Clifford, 165 Ill. 547, 46 N. E. 248; Pollak v. Brush Electric Asso. 128 U. S. 446, 32 L. ed. 474, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 119; Poige v. Hieronymus, 180 Ill. 637, 54 N. E. 583; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Central Transp. Co. 171 U. S. 138, 43 L. ed. 108, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 808; Hewitt v. Dement, 57 Ill. 500; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 942; Coa v. Donnelly, 34 Ark. 762; Thomas v. Richmond, 12 Wall. 355, 20 L. ed. 456.

A court of equity will enjoin the breach of a negative covenant when it is expressed or can be fairly implied from the stipulations of the parties, and injury will result to the complainant by its breach.

Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 155 Ill. 335, 40 N. E. 587; Consolidated Coal Co. v. Schmisser, 135 Ill. 371, 25 N. E. 795.

When a corporation takes to itself the power of eminent domain it needs no further evidence to show that it is created for public purposes. Its public character is then and at once established. The fact that it does not see fit to exercise all of the powers conferred upon it does not change the character of its business which it does perform.

Gibbs v. Consolidated Gas Co. 130 U. S. 397, 32 L. ed. 979, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 553; Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co. 101 U. S. 71, 25 L. ed. 950; 4 Thomp. Corp. § 5367; San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego, 118 Cal. 556, 38 L. R. A.

R. A. 460, 50 Pac. 633; Vincent v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 49 Ill. 33.

Messrs. John P. Wilson and T. A. Moran for appellee.

Phillips, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Inter-Ocean Publishing Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Illinois, is engaged in publishing two newspapers in the city of Chicago, known as the Daily Inter-Ocean and the Weekly Inter-Ocean, which have a wide circulation in the states and territories of the United States. The Associated Press is a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Illinois in 1892. The object of its creation was "to buy, gather, and accumulate information and news; to vend, supply, distribute, and publish the same; to purchase, erect, lease, operate, and sell telegraph and telephone lines and other means of transmitting news; to publish periodicals; to make and deal in periodicals and other goods, wares, and merchandise." It has about eighteen by-laws with about seventy-five subdivisions thereof. The stockholders of the Associated Press are the proprietors of newspapers, and the only business of the corporation is that enunciated in its charter, and is mainly buying, gathering, and accumulating news, and furnishing the same to persons and corporations who have entered into contract therefor. It may furnish news to persons and corporations other than those who are its stockholders, and the term "members," used in its by-laws, applies to proprietors of newspapers, other than its stockholders, who have entered into contracts with it for procuring news. It does not appear that it has availed itself of any of the powers conferred by its charter other than that of gathering news and distributing the same to its members. Under the by-laws of appellee the Inter-Ocean Publishing Company became a stockholder. Among the by-laws having reference to stockholders are the following:

"Art. 11, § 8. Sale or Purchase of Specials. No member shall furnish, or permit anyone to furnish, its special or other news to, or shall receive news from, any person, firm, or corporation which shall have been declared by the board of directors or the stockholders to be antagonistic to the association; and no member shall furnish news to any other person, firm, or corporation engaged in the business of collecting or transmitting news, except with the written consent of the board of directors."

"Art. 14, § 1. Board May Suspend. The board of directors shall have the power, by a two-thirds vote of the whole board, to suspend a member, or impose upon him a fine of not exceeding $1,000, for furnishing news to any person or association antagonistic or in opposition to the Associated Press, or for purchasing news from any person or organization formally declared by the board of directors or by the stockholders of the association, at any annual or special meeting, to be in such antagonism or opposition, or for any other violation of the by-laws or his contract: provided always, that ten days' notice, in writing, of a complaint be first served upon the offending member; and said member shall have an opportunity to be heard in his own defense, and, if said member shows that the offense was unintentional, and shall have discontinued the same, he shall not be suspended."

On March 2, 1893, the Associated Press entered into an agreement with the Inter-Ocean Publishing Company, by which it sold to the latter its night news report for publication in the two newspapers for the term of ninety-two years, which the Inter-Ocean Company agreed to receive and pay for at the rate of $102 per week, which sum was liable to be increased 50 per cent. The Associated Press agreed to furnish to the Inter-Ocean Company local and telegraphic news within a radius of 60 miles of Chicago, in accordance with its by-laws. The contract between the Inter-Ocean Company and the Associated Press, among other provisions contained the following: "Sixth. Said party of the second part covenants and agrees that it will not furnish, before publication, any news to any person or corporation engaged in the business of collecting or transmitting news, except upon the written consent of the board of directors of the party of the first part first had and obtained; and that it will not furnish to any person any of the news received by it under this contract before publication by it; and that it will not furnish its special or other news to or receive news from any person or corporation which shall have been declared by the board of directors of said party of the first part antagonistic to said party of the first part, after having received notice of such declaration. Seventh. It is further mutually agreed between the parties hereto that the rights, duties, and obligations of the respective parties hereto, except as hereinbefore specifically provided for, shall be controlled and governed by the by-laws of said party of the first part now or hereafter in force, during the life of this contract; and that the right to receive news under this contract may be suspended or terminated in the manner and for the causes specified in said by-laws." "Ninth. Said party of the first part promises and agrees not to furnish any news report to any newspaper published in the said territory described in this contract not now entitled to receive the same under the by-laws of said party of the first part without the written consent of the said party of the second part or its assigns. Tenth. Said party of the second part has assigned and transferred its stock in the said party of the first part to the said party of the first part, which stock is to be held by said party of the first part as security for the performance by said party of the second part of this contract on its part. Said party of the second part, in consideration of the making of this contract by said party of the first part, hereby covenants and agrees that it will not sell or part with any interest in said stock to any party who shall not be the proprietor of a newspaper which shall at the time be on the membership roll of said party of the first part, and that it will keep and observe and perform all the requirements of the by-laws of said party of the first part now or hereafter in force during the life of this contract."

Contracts of substantially the same character have been entered into from time to time between the Associated Press and most of the leading newspapers throughout the United States, to whom, under its charter and by-laws and under its contracts, it sells and vends its news. Similar associations for gathering and selling and vending news, to a limited extent, exist in other cities than Chicago, but none of them so widely extended. Among these are the Sun Printing & Publishing Association of New York City, the New York Sun of New York City, and the Laffan News Bureau of New York City. These three latter associations have been declared to be antagonistic to the Associated Press by the board of directors of the latter. News of an important character not gathered by the Associated Press was gathered by a certain alleged antagonistic association, and the Inter-Ocean Publishing Company, for the purpose of furnishing its readers with information and news gathered from various points and sources, in addition to the news purchased by it from the Associated Press, also purchased and published news obtained by it from the Sun Printing & Publishing Association of New York City, but did not furnish news to the latter association, or to any of the associations antagonistic to the Associated Press. The Chicago Herald Company and the Chicago Daily News Company made complaint to the Associated Press that the Inter-Ocean Publishing Company was publishing news procured by it from the Sun Printing & Publishing Association of New York, the New York Sun of New York City, and the Laffan News Bureau of New York City, and asked that the Inter-Ocean Publishing Company's contract and § 8 of article 11 of the by-laws should be enforced. The Associated Press gave notice to the Inter-Ocean Publishing Company that a meeting of its board of directors would be held at a time and place mentioned, to take action on the complaints of the Chicago Herald Company and the Chicago Daily News Company. Before the time set for hearing, the Inter-Ocean Publishing Company filed its bill for an injunction against the Associated Press from suspending or expelling it from its membership, and from refusing to furnish it news according to the terms of its contract, and from doing any act or thing tending to deprive it of the news gathered by appellee, and for such other relief, general and special, as might be just and equitable. The bill set up the facts hereinbefore stated, and set out the by-laws of the appellee in full, and alleged that the appellee had been attempting to control the business of buying and accumulating news in Chicago and selling the same, and has thus created in itself an exclusive monopoly in that business, and to preserve such monopoly, had declared the Sun Printing & Publishing Association a val or competitor in business, and antagonistic to it, and sought to prohibit its members from buying news therefrom, under pain of suspension or expulsion; alleged that appellee had at various times, by threats of suspension and expulsion, compelled divers of its members to cease buying the special news of the Sun Printing & Publishing Association under its contracts with its members. The bill set out the contracts and names of such members, and alleged that the notice served on appellant for a hearing on the complaints against it is similar to the action of appellee against other members who were forced to cease buying special news from the Sun Printing & Publishing Association; that appellant is in duty bound, both to its patrons and to the public, to publish all the news it can gather, and, if not able to obtain such news from one source, it must, in justice to its patrons and the public, resort to other sources; that the news which it obtained from appellee it was unable to obtain from any other source, and appellee would not furnish the same to appellant unless it executed the contract heretofore mentioned, because of which appellant was forced to and did execute such contract; that appellee does not furnish all the news obtainable and desired by appellant under that contract, and to obtain such other news appellant was forced to resort to the Sun Printing & Publishing Association of New York; that the right to receive the news gathered by appellee, and publish the same in its newspaper is a valuable property and property right, and appellant is forced to obtain the news not obtainable from appellee, and which is absolutely needed in publishing its newspaper, from the Sun Printing & Publishing Association; that the appellee is attempting to force appellant to cease taking news from the latter association, but to do so would work irreparable damage and injury to appellant, and would prevent it from furnishing needed, important, and necessary news to the public, and would tend to create in favor of appellee a monopoly. The appellee filed an answer to the bill. A hearing was had upon the bill and answer, both of which were sworn to, and certain affidavits which were read and used as depositions, and a decree was rendered dismissing the bill for want of equity. On appeal to the appellate court for the first district the decree was affirmed, and this appeal is prosecuted.

It has been uniformly held that a telegraph or telephone company is bound to treat all persons and corporations alike, and without discrimination, in its business of receiving and transmitting messages. The business of such a company is public in its nature, and a public interest is impressed thereon to such an extent that no discrimination can be made against persons or corporations. People ex rel. Cairo Teleph. Co. v. Western U. Teleph. Co. 166 Ill. 15, 36 L. R. A. 637, 46 N. E. 731. Where one is the owner of property which is devoted to a use in which the public has an interest, he, in effect, grants to the public an interest in such use, and must, to the extent of that interest, submit to be controlled by the public for the common good, as long as such use is maintained. The manner in which it is devoted to a use in which the public has an interest may be very diverse, and the public interest in such use may be of a widely variant character; but where the use is one in which the public is interested, or has an interest, public control is necessary for the common good. Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77. The appellee corporation voluntarily sought corporate existence to engage in an enterprise which invested it with, among others, the power of eminent domain. It was organized, among other things, to purchase, erect, lease, operate, and sell telegraph and telephone lines,—a business which is essentially public in its nature, and renders a corporation so engaged amenable to public control. While under the averments of the bill and answer and affidavits, the appellee corporation has only engaged in business to the extent of its power “to buy, gather, and accumulate information and news; to vend, supply, distribute, and publish the same;” and has not attempted to purchase, erect, lease, or sell telegraph and telephone lines,—it is important to determine the character of the corporation under its charter and under the business in which it is actually engaged. The organization of such a method of gathering information and news from so wide an extent of territory as is done by the appellee corporation, and the dissemination of that news, require the expenditure of vast sums of money. It reaches out to the various parts of the United States, where its agents gather news which is wired to it, and through it such news is received by the various important newspapers of the country. Scarcely any newspaper could organize and conduct the means of gathering the information that is centered in an association of the character of the appellee, because of the enormous expense, and no paper could be regarded as a newspaper of the day unless it had access to and published the reports from such an association as appellee. For news gathered from all parts of the country the various newspapers are almost solely dependent on such an association, and, if they are prohibited from publishing it, or its use is refused to them, their character as newspapers is destroyed, and they would soon become practically worthless publications. The Associated Press, from the time of its organization and establishment in business, sold its news reports to various newspapers who became members, and the publication of that news became of vast importance to the public, so that public interest is attached to the dissemination of that news. The manner in which that corporation has used its franchise has charged its business with a public interest. It has devoted its property to a public use, and has, in effect, granted to the public such an interest in its use that it must submit to be controlled by the public for the common good, to the extent of the interest it has thus created in the public in its private property. The sole purpose for which news was gathered was that the same should be sold, and all newspaper publishers desiring to purchase such news for publication are entitled to purchase the same without discrimination against them. It was held in New York & C. Grain & Stock Exchange v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 127 Ill. 153, 2 L. R. A. 411, 19 N. E. 855 (on page 163, 127 Ill., page 414, 2 L. R. A., and page 859, 19 N. E.): "Assuming these market quotations and reports are property, and the private property of the board of trade, yet if they have been so used by the board, and by the telegraph companies with the knowledge and consent of the board, as to become affected with a public interest, then they are subject to such public regulation by the legislature and the courts as is necessary to prevent injury to such public interest. The doctrine in question has application both to the property of individuals and of corporations, and it is, therefore, immaterial that any such corporation may be a mere private corporation. If the interest is public, then it is, necessarily, to all alike, common to all, and upon equal terms. The doctrine, as applied to the matter of these market quotations, would forbid that a monopoly should be made of them by furnishing them to some and refusing them to others who are equally willing to pay for them and be governed by all reasonable rules and regulations, and would prevent the board of trade or the telegraph companies from unjustly discriminating in respect to the parties who will be allowed to receive them." This principle is sustained in Friedman v. Gold & Stock Teleg. Co. 32 Hun, 4, and, Smith v. Gold & Stock Teleg. Co. 42 Hun, 454. The appellee corporation being engaged in a business upon which a public interest is ingrafted, upon principles of justice it can make no distinction with respect to persons who wish to purchase information and news for purposes of publication, which it was created to furnish.

It is urged, however, that by the terms of the contract appellant cannot retain its membership and stock in the Associated Press, and have the right to purchase news accumulated by it at contract price, without complying with that part of the contract which requires appellant to refrain from receiving news from any person or corporation which has been declared by the board of directors of appellee to be antagonistic to the latter, and without appellant being controlled or governed by the by-law of appellee to the same effect. The character of appellee's business is not to be determined by the contract which it made respecting the liabilities which would attend it, but by the nature of the business, its fixed legal character, growing out of the manner in which that business is conducted, and the purpose of its creation. The legal character of the corporation and its duties cannot be disregarded because of any stipulation incorporated in a contract that it should not be liable to discharge a public duty. Its obligation to serve the public is not one resting on contract, but grows out of the fact that it is 48 L. R. A.

in the discharge of a public duty, or a private duty which has been so conducted that a public interest has attached thereto. In Smith v. Gold & Stock Teleg. Co. 42 Hun, 454, an action was brought to restrain the defendant from removing from complainant's office a ticker, or from doing any act which would in any way interfere with the receipts of quotations from the stock exchange. By one of the clauses of the contract the plaintiff agreed that the company might forthwith discontinue its service without notice, whenever, in its judgment, any breach of the terms of the contract should be made by him. It was held: "But so long as collecting and supplying quotations is carried on by them, as it is conceded to be at present, they should render equal and impartial service to those who comply with reasonable regulations. What regulations are reasonable may not, in all cases, be easy to determine. But there need be no hesitation in saying that the clause in their contract permitting them to discontinue the service when, in their judgment, a breach of conditions has been had, is not a reasonable regulation, and affords no defense to this action. No man can be judge in his own case, and, to justify defendants in refusing to perform service, there must be a reason that the court can pronounce sufficient." In Commercial Union Teleg. Co. v. New England Teleg. & Teleg. Co. 61 Vt. 241, 5 L. R. A. 161, 17 Atl. 1071, a question arose as to compelling a telephone company to furnish telephone service. In defense it was sought to set up a contract between the Bell Telephone Company and the respondent restricting the right to the use of their instruments, but the court held there was no right to discriminate, and that the restricting clause was invalid, and it was said: "On grounds of public policy, which controls all public carriers, that clause in the contract in question is held void, so that the license stands precisely as if the restricting clause was not contained in it." The clause of the contract in this case, which sought to restrict appellant from obtaining news from other sources than from appellee, is an attempt at restriction upon the trade and business among the citizens of a common country. Competition can never be held hostile to public interests, and efforts to prevent competition by contract or otherwise can never be looked upon with favor by the courts. In People ex rel. McIlhany v. Chicago Live Stock Exchange, 170 Ill. 556, 39 L. R. A. 373, 48 N. E. 1062, it was said (page 566, 170 Ill., page 376, 39 L. R. A., and page 1065, 48 N. E.): "Efforts to prevent competition, and to restrict individual efforts and freedom of action in trade and commerce, are restrictions hostile to the public welfare, not consonant with the spirit of our institutions, and in violation of law." Section 8 of article 11 of the by-laws of the appellee sought to prevent any member of the appellee association from furnishing its special or other news to, or receiving such news from, any person declared by it hostile. In People ex rel. McIlhany v. Chicago Live Stock Exchange, 170 Ill. 556, 39 L. R. A. 373, 48 N. E. 1062, in speaking of the power to enact by-laws, and their effect, we said (page 570, 170 Ill., page 377, 39 L. R. A., and page 1063, 48 N. E.): "When a corporation is created, there goes with it the power to enact by-laws for its government and guidance, as well as for the guidance and government of its members. This power is necessary to enable a corporation to accomplish the purpose of its creation. But by-laws must be reasonable, and for a corporate purpose, and always within charter limits. They must always be strictly subordinate to the Constitution and the general law of the land. They must not infringe the policy of the state, nor be hostile to public welfare. . . . Attempts to place restrictions on trade and commerce, and to fetter individual liberty of action by preventing competition, are hostile to public welfare, and affect the interests of the people. Such attempts by a corporation are an abuse of its corporate franchise. Public policy requires that corporations, in the exercise of powers, must be confined strictly within their charter limits, and not be permitted to exercise powers beyond those expressly conferred. The state provides for the creation of corporations. The corporation is its creature, and must always conform to its policy. This duty on the part of corporations, to do no acts hostile to the policy of the state, grows out of the fact that the legislature is presumed to have had in view the public interest when a charter was granted to the corporation, and no departure from its charter purposes will be allowed which would be hurtful to the public." The by-law of the appellee corporation, above referred to, is not required for corporate purposes, nor included within the purposes of the creation of that corporation. To enforce the provisions of the contract and this by-law would enable the appellee to designate the character of the news that should be published, and, whether true or false, there could be no check on it by publishing news from other sources. Appellee would be powerful in the creation of a monopoly in its favor, and could dictate the character of news it would furnish, and could prejudice the interests of the public. Such a power was never contemplated in its creation, and is hostile to public interests. That by-law tends to restrict competition, because it prevents its members from purchasing news from any other source than from itself. It seeks to exclude from publication by any of its members news procured from any other corporation or source than itself, which it declares antagonistic to it. Its tendency, therefore, is to create a monopoly in its own favor, and to prevent its members from procuring news from others engaged in the same character of work, and such provision is illegal and void. Adams v. Brennan, 177 Ill. 194, 42 L. R. A. 718, 52 N. E. 314. In Holden v. Alton, 179 Ill. 318, 53 N. E. 556, it was held that equity would enjoin the city from carrying out a contract for city printing at the suit of a taxpayer who was the lowest bidder on a contract, and whose bid was rejected because he did not employ members of a certain labor organization, and could not show the label declared by the ordinance making such qualification to be essential, and it was held that such a combination or agreement was in violation of common right, and tended to create a monopoly, and that could not be tolerated. To the same effect is Fishburn v. Chicago, 171 Ill. 338, 39 L. R. A. 482, 49 N. E. 532. The clear effect of this by-law is to create a monopoly, which renders it void.

The provisions of the contract that the appellant should purchase news from no other source, and the restrictive clause of the by-law, are both null and void, and the contract is the same as if these provisions had not been incorporated therein. Rejecting entirely these illegal provisions, on which the right to suspend the appellant as a member and to refuse to furnish it news and information gathered by the Associated Press for publication rests, no reason is presented, under the pleadings and affidavits in this case, why the appellant is not entitled to an injunction, as prayed for in its bill. The bill alleges that the deprivation of such reports by the Associated Press would cause an irreparable injury and damage to the appellant, which is sought to be prevented by the injunction prayed for in the bill. We hold that the circuit court of Cook county erred in entering a decree dismissing the bill for want of equity, and the appellate court for the first district erred in affirming the same.

The judgment of the Appellate Court for the First District and the decree of the Circuit Court of Cook County are each reversed, and the cause is remanded to the Circuit Court of Cook county, with directions to enter a decree as prayed for in the bill.

Rehearing denied, April 6, 1900.

Robert C. BOEHM, Plff. in Err.,
v.

Henry L. HERTZ, Treasurer of Illinois,
et al.

(182 Ill. 154.)

1. Provisions of a statute which relate to a particular subject indicated in its title, and which are a part of or incident to it, or in some reasonable sense connected with or auxiliary to the object in view, must be deemed to be within the title of the act.
2. Appropriations of the money of the state for the general and other expenses of a private normal university, in consideration of the gratuitous instruction of teachers for the common schools, are not an assumption of the debts or liabilities of such corporation, or a loan or extension of credit in aid of it, in violation of Const. art. 4, § 20, but are within the legislative discretion as to the means of carrying out the provisions of Const. art. 8, § 1, requiring the legislature to provide for a system of free schools.

(October 16, 1899.)

(Craig, J., dissents.)

NOTE.—As to appropriation of public money to aid educational institution, see State ex rel. Garth v. Switzler (Mo.) 40 L. R. A. 280.

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Sangamon County to review a decree in favor of defendants in a proceeding brought to enjoin the payment of an appropriation to the Illinois State Normal University. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Lewis F. Mason, with Messrs. Grant Foreman and John C. Wilson, for plaintiff in error:

The act of June 14, 1897, violates § 13, art. 4, of the Constitution.

People ex rel. Graff v. Institution of Protestant Deaconesses, 71 Ill. 229; Binz v. Weber, 81 Ill. 288; Potwin v. Johnson, 108 Ill. 70; People ex rel. Meyer v. Hazelwood, 116 Ill. 327, 6 N. E. 480; Dolese v. Pierce, 124 Ill. 149, 16 N. E. 218; Hyde Park v. Chicago, 124 Ill. 156, 16 N. E. 222; Donnersberger v. Prendergast, 128 Ill. 229, 21 N. E. 1; People ex rel. Longenecker v. Nelson, 133 Ill. 575, 27 N. E. 217; Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 120, 29 L. R. A. 79, 40 N. E. 454; Bobel v. People, 173 Ill. 25, 50 N. E. 322; People ex rel. Chittenden v. Mellen, 32 Ill. 181; Burritt v. State Contract Comrs. 120 Ill. 322, 11 N. E. 180.

The act of June 14, 1897, violates §§ 16, 20, and 22 of art. 4.

The legislature can make no appropriations out of the state treasury to private agencies, because of public benefits flowing therefrom.

St. Mary's Industrial School for Boys v. Brown, 45 Md. 310; Citizens' Sav. & L. Asso. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 455; Lowell v. Boston, 111 Mass. 454, 15 Am. Rep. 39; Curtis v. Whipple, 24 Wis. 353, 1 Am. Rep. 187.

That is a public purpose from the attainment of which will flow some benefit or convenience to the public, whether the whole commonwealth or a circumscribed community. In the latter case, however, the benefit or convenience must be direct and immediate from the purpose, and not collateral, remote, or consequential.

Weisner v. Douglas, 64 N. Y. 91, 21 Am. Rep. 586; Cushing v. Neuburyport, 10 Met. 511; People ex rel. Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum Soc. v. Brooklyn Bd. of Edu. 13 Barb. 400; Allen v. Jay, 60 Me. 124, 11 Am. Rep. 185; Gove v. Epping, 41 N. H. 539; Crowell v. Hopkinton, 45 N. H. 9; Tyson v. Halifax Twp. School Directors, 51 Pa. 9.

The board of education of the state of Illinois is a private corporation.

State Bd. of Edu. v. Greenebaum, 39 Ill. 618; State Bd. of Edu. v. Bakewell, 122 Ill. 339, 10 N. E. 378; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. ed. 629; Society for Propagation of Gospel v. New Haven, 8 Wheat. 464, 5 L. ed. 662; Vincennes University v. Indiana, 14 How. 277, 14 L. ed. 419; Regents of the University v. Williams, 9 Gill & J. 365, 31 Am. Dec. 72.

Section 1 of article 8 is violated by the act of June 14, 1897.

Powell v. Board of Education, 97 Ill. 375, 37 Am. Rep. 123; People ex rel. Mooney v. Hutchinson, 172 Ill. 486, 40 L. R. A. 770, 50 N. E. 599.

Messrs. Capen & Williams, C. A. Hill, 48 L. R. A.

and B. D. Monroe, with Mr. E. C. Akia, Attorney General, for defendants in error:

The Constitution is a limitation upon the powers of the legislature, and not a grant of power, and the legislature possesses every power not delegated to some other department or to the Federal government, or not denied to it by the Constitution of the state or United States.

Mason v. Wait, 5 Ill. 127; People v. Wall, 88 Ill. 75; Harris v. Whiteside County Supers. 105 Ill. 445; Winch v. Tobin, 107 Ill. 212; Burritt v. State Contract Comrs. 120 Ill. 322, 11 N. E. 180; People ex rel. Longenecker v. Nelson, 133 Ill. 565, 27 N. E. 217; Hauothorn v. People, 109 Ill. 302, 50 Am. Rep. 610; Gaines v. Williams, 146 Ill. 450, 34 N. E. 934; People ex rel. Bussey v. Gaultier, 149 Ill. 47, 36 N. E. 576; People ex rel. Woodyatt v. Thompson, 155 Ill. 451, 40 N. E. 307.

The legislature of the state has authority to use the powers and funds of the state to secure the construction and maintenance of public highways, railroads, canals, bridges, telegraph lines, water and gas works, schools, colleges, and institutions of learning.

Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 1114; Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 168, 59 Am. Dec. 759; Prettynan v. Tazewell County Supers. 19 Ill. 410, 71 Am. Dec. 230; Burr v. Carbondale, 76 Ill. 468; McLean County v. Humphreys, 104 Ill. 383; Briggs v. Johnson County, 4 Dill. 153, Fed. Cas. No. 1,872; Duffy v. New Orleans, 49 La. Ann. 114, 21 So. 179; Sedgew. Stat. & Const. L. p. 409; Hensley Twp. Super. v. People ex rel. Bailey, 84 Ill. 544; Stein v. Mobile, 24 Ala. 591.

Contemporaneous construction by the legislature, acquiesced in by the other departments and by the people for over a quarter of a century, is entitled to great weight in sustaining the validity of such construction.

Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 67, 5th ed. pp. 81-85; State v. Mayhew, 2 Gill, 487; Bunn v. People ex rel. Laflin, 45 Ill. 398; People ex rel. Lynch v. La Salle County Supers. 100 Ill. 495; People ex rel. Woodyatt v. Thompson, 155 Ill. 485, 40 N. E. 307.

What is for the public good, and what are public purposes, are questions the legislature must decide upon its own judgment, which as to them cannot be controlled by the courts, except, perhaps, where its action is clearly evasive, or where, under pretense of a public authority it has assumed to exercise. it is unlawful.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 129, 486; Leavenworth County Comrs. v. Miller, 7 Kan. 479, 12 Am. Rep. 425; M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 4 L. ed. 579; Proprietors of Charles River Bridge v. Proprietors of Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 496, 9 L. ed. 803; People ex rel. Blanding v. Burr, 13 Cal. 343.

The proper education of all its citizens vitally concerns the permanent prosperity and public welfare of the state, and the legislature is the sole arbiter as to what instrumentalities other than free schools will best carry out this purpose, except as clearly prohibited by the Constitution.

Curryer v. Merrill, 25 Minn. 1, 33 Am. Rep. 450; 2 Kent, Com. 305; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 73.

Phillips, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff in error filed a bill in which it is alleged he is a taxpayer, etc., and that the general assembly of the state of Illinois, on June 14, 1897, passed a certain act, in which it was attempted to appropriate moneys for the ordinary and other expenses of the Illinois State Normal University, alleged to be a private corporation organized under an act of the general assembly of the state of Illinois passed February 18, 1857. It is alleged that the appropriation is unlawful and in contravention of the Constitution of the state, because it would be a misappropriation of the public funds, and a perversion thereof, to the injury of the complainant. The bill made defendants Henry L. Hertz, as state treasurer, James S. McCullough, as state auditor, and the board of education of the state of Illinois, and prayed for an injunction restraining the payment of any money by the board of education attempted to be appropriated under the act of June 14, 1897. The service on the board of education was quashed, and thereupon the complainant, by his solicitors, dismissed the bill as to that defendant. The other two defendants appeared and filed their demurrer to said bill for want of equity, which was sustained, and the bill dismissed. The complainant sued out this writ of error.

The constitutionality of an act entitled "An Act to Make an Appropriation for the Ordinary and Other Expenses of the Illinois State Normal University at Normal, Illinois, and for the Completion and Equipment of Its Gymnasium Building," approved June 14, 1897, is presented on this record. Plaintiff in error claims that the act above mentioned violates that part of § 13 of article 4 of the Constitution which provides: "No act hereafter passed shall embrace more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title. But if any subject shall be embraced in an act which shall not be expressed in the title, such act shall be void only as to so much thereof as shall not be so expressed." We do not concur in this view. The act of June 14, 1897, is entitled "An Act to Make an Appropriation for the Ordinary and Other Expenses of the Illinois State Normal University at Normal, Illinois, and for the Completion and Equipment of Its Gymnasium Building." The act appropriates, in addition to one half of the interest of the college fund, the sum of $28,506.44 per annum for the expenses of the board of education, payment of salaries, etc., and makes further appropriations for the completion of the gymnasium building and for the proper heating and equipment of the same. It is the province of the legislature to determine the comprehensiveness of a statute, subject to the limitations prescribed by the Constitution. Without the restriction of the constitutional limitation above provided, the legislature might include in a single act any subject which it saw proper to prescribe as to duties and provide as to punishments. The limitation of the above provisions of the Constitution goes no further than to declare that no matters are properly included in the act which are not germane to its title. Where all the provisions of the act relate to a particular subject indicated in its title, and are a part of or incident to it, or in some reasonable sense connected with or auxiliary to the object in view, it cannot be held such provisions are not within the title of the act. It was held in Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79, 40 N. E. 454 (on page 120, 155 Ill., and page 461, 40 N. E.): "All matters are properly included in the act which are germane to the title. The Constitution is obeyed if all the provisions relate to the one subject indicated in the title, and are parts of it, or incident to it, or reasonably connected with it, or in some reasonable sense auxiliary to the object in view. It is not required that the subject of the bill shall be specifically and exactly expressed in the title, or that the title should be an index of the details of the act. Where there is doubt as to whether the subject is clearly expressed in the title, the doubt should be resolved in favor of the validity of the act." We fail to see wherein the subject-matter of the act is not sufficiently expressed in the title; nor does plaintiff in error point out any special defect therein.

Plaintiff in error contends that by this enactment § 20 of article 4 of the Constitution is violated, which is as follows: "The state shall never pay, assume, or become responsible for the debts or liabilities of, or in any manner give, loan, or extend its credit to or in aid of, any public or other corporation, association, or individual." This contention results from the claim made by the plaintiff in error that the appropriation of money made by the act of June 14, 1897, to the Illinois State Normal University, is violative of the foregoing provision of the Constitution, inasmuch as that institution, it is insisted, is a private corporation. This position of plaintiff in error results from what has been said by this court in State Bd. of Edu. v. Groenebaum, 39 Ill. 610, where it was held that this board of education was an eleemosynary institution, founded for the purpose of the gratuitous distribution of knowledge in regard to teaching and conducting common schools, and erected, not at the expense of the state, but of individuals; and at the time of the opinion in that case the salaries of the instructors and other employees were fixed by the board, and no appropriation had then ever been made from the state treasury for its maintenance. By an act approved February 18, 1857, entitled "An Act for the Establishment and Maintenance of a Normal University," found in the Public Laws of Illinois for 1857, on page 298, it is provided that certain persons named shall constitute "the board of education of the state of Illinois," having perpetual succession, etc. By § 2 the superintendent of public instruction, by virtue of his office, is made a member and the secretary of the board, and required to report to the legislature, at its regular sessions, the condition and the expenditures of the university. Section 3 relates to the meetings of the board of education. Section 4 provides that the object of the university shall be to qualify teachers for the common schools of this state, by imparting instruction in the art of teaching in all branches which pertain to a common-school education, etc. Section 5 provides as to the first meeting of the board of education, and further provides that they "shall visit the cities, villages, and other places in the state which may be deemed eligible, for the purpose to receive donations and proposals for the establishment and maintenance of a normal university," and provides, that the board shall fix the permanent location at the place where the most favorable inducements are offered for that purpose, provided that such location shall not be difficult of access or detrimental to the welfare or prosperity of the university. Section 6 provides as to the power of the board in the appointment of a principal, lecturers, and instructors, and prescribes their duties, with power of removal, and power to fix text-books and make regulations for management, etc. Section 7 provides for gratuitous instruction for certain pupils. Section 8 provides the interest of the university and seminary fund, or such part thereof as may be found necessary, shall be appropriated for the maintenance of the university. Section 10 provides the term of the board of corporators, and for the filling of vacancies by the governor by and with the consent of the senate. These are the several provisions declaratory of the purposes of the university, its manner of organization, the filling of vacancies in the board of corporators, and their powers, etc. Subsequently an act of the legislature was passed, February 14, 1861, entitled "An Act to Refund the Interest on the College or University Fund and Appropriate the Same, for the Use of the State Normal University," the preamble of which recites the act of admission of the state of Illinois into the Union, by which a certain percentage of the proceeds of public lands lying within this state was set apart to the state, to be appropriated by the latter for the encouragement of learning, of which one-sixth part was to be exclusively bestowed upon a college or university. The act of the legislature of 1861 then recites that one sixth of the per cent of those proceeds on the 1st of January, 1851, amounted to $122,607.54, and interest thereon to January, 1857, amounted to the sum of $98,956.82; and for the purpose of carrying out the intention of Congress the legislature passed the act establishing a normal university, and made an appropriation of a part of said sum so held under the act of admission, or rather the interest thereon, payable to this board of education for the use of the normal university, etc. Section 3 of the act of 1861 provides that this corporation shall have no power to sell or convey any part of the property acquired since the passage of the act incorporating it, nor to create any liability against the state, without the express sanction of the legislature. Section 4 provides that each county shall be entitled to gratuitous instruction in the university of two pupils, instead of one, as provided in the original act. Shortly prior to the passage of the act of 1861, above mentioned, a contract for the construction of certain buildings was entered into in writing by the board of education above mentioned, through its building committee, and, by reason of default in payment of the amount to be paid the contractors, a petition for a mechanic's lien was filed, and under the legislation had prior to the entering into of such contracts, to wit, prior to the 3d day of March, 1860, it was held that this university was an eleemosynary institution, founded for the purpose of the gratuitous distribution of knowledge in the art of teaching and conducting common schools, and erected, not at the expense of the state, but of individuals, and it was held that this corporation was liable to be sued and was a private corporation. State Bd. of Edu. v. Greenebaum, 39 Ill. 610.

On February 25, 1858, Edwin W. Bakewell and Julia A. Bakewell, his wife, who joined in the deed for the purpose of relinquishing her inchoate right of dower, conveyed to the board of education of the state of Illinois 40 acres of land immediately adjoining the university grounds. The only condition named in the deed was the following: "Provided, the Normal University, under the control of the said board of education of the state of Illinois, shall forever remain where now located." On February 9, 1860, the said Edwin W. Bakewell and his wife united in another deed to the said board of education of the state of Illinois, which, after reciting the execution of the former deed and the condition therein, contained the following: "And whereas, the said Edwin W. Bakewell and Julia A. Bakewell, his wife, are willing and anxious to vacate and annul said condition to said deed, and to make the title of the said board of education of the state of Illinois to the said land conveyed by said deed become and be absolute in fee simple: Now, therefore, this indenture, made and entered into this 9th day of February, 1860, by and between the said Edwin W. Bakewell and Julia A. Bakewell, his wife, and the said board of education of the state of Illinois, witnesseth that they convey a full and complete and unconditional title in fee simple in and to the said 40 acres." After the above enactments, and after the execution of these two deeds, on February 28, 1867, the general assembly passed an act entitled "An Act Concerning the Board of Education and the Illinois Natural History Society," §§ 1 and 2 of which are as follows: "Sec. 1. The State Normal University, established by an act approved February 13, 1857, is hereby declared a state institution, and the property, real, personal, and mixed, in the hands and standing in the name of the board of education of the state of Illinois, is the property of the state of Illinois, and is by said board held in trust for the state.

"Sec. 2. Said board of education is hereby authorized to sell and dispose of the outlands and lots standing in the name of said board, lying in the counties of Jackson, Woodford, and McLean, except the site of the normal university, and the farm of 100 acres, more or less, in its immediate vicinity, and to appropriate the proceeds thereof towards the payment of the appropriations hereinafter named."

While this had been the precedent legislation with reference to this university, the general assembly, by a joint resolution passed in 1883, directed the state board of education to convey the above-mentioned 40 acres of land to Julia A. Bakewell. The board of education refusing to comply with that direction, the general assembly in 1885, by a joint resolution, declared the title to the 40 acres of land mentioned in the deed of Julia A. Bakewell and her husband to be and was vested in Julia A. Bakewell. Her demand for the possession of that land was refused by the board; whereupon she filed a petition in the circuit court of McLean county for a writ of mandamus commanding the board of education of the state of Illinois to execute to her a deed to the 40 acres of land, which, on hearing before the court without a jury, resulted in the awarding of the writ, and the board of education appealed to this court. On that appeal two questions were presented, viz.: Whether the legislature had the constitutional power to order the conveyance of this 40 acres of land to be made to Julia A. Bakewell; and, if so whether it could exercise such power by joint resolution. This court, in the discussion of the first branch of the case held in accordance with what had been previously held in State Bd. of Edu. v. Greenebaum, 39 Ill. 610, that this corporation was a private eleemosynary corporation, which was not to be deprived of its property by the above-mentioned joint resolutions of the legislature, and declined to pass upon the question whether the legislature could exercise the power of making the grant by a joint resolution. This is the effect of the opinion in State Bd. of Edu. v. Bakewell, 122 Ill. 339, 10 N. E. 378.

Under this legislation with reference to this university the members of the board of education are appointed by the governor, with the exception of the superintendent of public instruction, who is made one of its members, with special duties, and who is required to make biennial reports to the legislature. The object of the institution is to qualify teachers for the common schools of this state. Each county is entitled to gratuitous instruction of a certain number of pupils, and it is contemplated that each student shall agree to teach in the public schools of the state a certain period of time. The board of education is compelled to present to the governor a full statement of expenditures, with vouchers, which must be approved by him before the next quarter's appropriation can be drawn from the state treasury or an order therefor given by the state auditor.

Normal schools are public institutions, 48 L. R. A.

which the state has the right to establish and maintain. The purpose of their establishment is to advance the public-school system, and create a body of teachers better qualified for the purpose of carrying out the policy of the state with reference to free schools, and provide for a more thorough and efficient system of the schools, whereby all the children of this state may receive a good common-school education. They are the legitimate offspring of the school law entering into our plan of education, whereby teachers may be taught how best and most effectively to discharge their duties. Burr v. Carbondale, 76 Ill. 455. By § 1 of article 8 of the Constitution it is provided: "The general assembly shall provide a thorough and efficient system of free schools, whereby all children of this state may receive a good common-school education." In complying with this mandatory provision, the state has the right to select its own agencies or instrumentalities for the accomplishment of the purpose. To carry out this provision of the Constitution, there must be necessary expenditures of public moneys, resting upon considerations of the policy of the state with reference to the manner of compliance with this constitutional provision. Where a mandatory duty is imposed by the Constitution on the legislature of the state, without restriction as to methods, the policy of the state may be determined by the legislature only, and its action must be regarded as conclusive as to the state policy. Normal schools being a recognized method of advancing the interests of the public-school system, which is mandatorily required of the general assembly to be provided for, the legislature, having the power to prescribe the policy of the state with reference to such normal schools, had the power, before the present Constitution as well as since, to provide by legislation that donations might be offered and taken into consideration in determining the place where certain institutions that are in their nature of a public character should be located. This was done under the act establishing the State Normal University, under the Constitution of 1848, and has in more recent times been acted on by the legislature in the location of the Southern, Northern, and Eastern Normal Schools and the Soldiers' Home. Because such donations have been made with reference to the last four named institutions, they are not deprived of their public character. The normal university was authorized to receive donations by its act of incorporation, its powers and duties, to a certain extent, being prescribed in that act; and the extension of state aid by the appropriation of interest on the college or university fund, and by the requirement that the school shall give gratuitous education to certain scholars of different counties of the state, was the adoption of a means to advance education in the common schools.

The Constitution is merely a limitation upon the power of the legislature, which may do anything not forbidden by the express terms of the Constitution or by necessary implication. The power of the legislature to adopt such agencies as it may deem proper to carry out the state policy would authorize it to provide for the education of teachers for the common schools, and this private corporation, created before the adoption of the present Constitution, benefited and aided by the legislation of the state by reason of its receipt of the interest on the college and university fund provided for by the act of admission of the state of Illinois into the Union, was an agency of the state, in the interest of the common schools, when the present Constitution was adopted, which included the provision of § 20 of article 4, that the state shall never pay, assume, or become responsible for, or loan or extend its credit to, any public or other corporation. That provision of the Constitution does not, by express terms or by necessary implication, prevent the state from using such agencies for the advancement of public-school education that may be deemed proper under the policy of the state, which is exclusively left to be determined by the legislature, under the provisions of § 1 of article 8, which necessarily require the expenditures of public moneys. It is a principle of construction of a Constitution that it is proper to take into consideration the uniform, continued, and contemporaneous construction given by the legislature, and generally recognized, as to its meaning or intention, and such contemporaneous construction affords a strong presumption that it rightly interprets the meaning and intention. Bunn v. People ex rel. Laflin, 45 Ill. 397; People ex rel. Lynch v. La Salle County Supers. 100 Ill. 495; People ex rel. Woodyatt v. Thompson, 155 Ill. 451, 40 N. E. 307; State v. Mayhew, 2 Gill, 487; Cooley, Const. Lim. 82.

After the act of 1867, appropriations were made from the state treasury for the erection of buildings and the purchase of apparatus and appliances for this institution. At the first session of the legislature after the adoption of the present Constitution of this state, and at almost every session since that time, the legislature has passed appropriation bills, which have received the approval of the governor. Both the legislative and executive branches of the government have adopted a contemporaneous construction of the instrument, to the effect that this private corporation, authorized to receive donations from individuals for the purpose of advancing education, was a state agency for the instruction of teachers to be employed in public schools, which necessarily required expenditures of public money under an appropriation by the legislature, to be paid on warrants of the auditor drawn on the state treasury. Such expenditures, in consideration of benefits received by the state in the gratuitous instruction of teachers, could as properly be paid by the state to this private corporation as the appropriations made for the support of the Southern or the Northern or the Eastern Illinois Normal schools, as the expenditures in each case are for one and the same end, and such appropriations are not an assumption of the debts or liabilities of the institution, nor a loan or extension of credit in aid of this corporation.

Counsel for defendants in error present the question that this bill was obnoxious to a demurrer, for the reason that the bill did not make proper parties defendant those who were directly affected by the decree to be rendered. Under the view we take of this case, it is unnecessary to extend this opinion by discussing this question, as what has been said disposes of the case.

The decree of the Circuit Court of Sangamon County is affirmed.

Craig, J., dissenting:

In my judgment, this opinion overrules State Bd. of Edu. v. Bakewell, 122 Ill. 339, 10 N. E. 378, and for that reason I cannot indorse the doctrine of the opinion.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Re Estate of Mary C. JONES, Deceased.

Almon L. MARKHAM

v.

Silas L. HUFFORD et al., Plffs. in Err.

(.....Mich.....)

1. The interest of a legatee in a legacy to which he is entitled only on condition that he be declared by the executor to be a reformed man at the expiration of a certain period is not vested until such decision is made.

NOTE.—For condition of legacy, the breach of which will prevent its vesting, see Phillips v. Fergerson (Va.) 1 L. R. A. 837; Conger v. Lowe (Ind.) 9 L. R. A. 185, and note; Bullard v. Shirley (Mass.) 12 L. R. A. 110; and Congregational Church Bldg. Soc. v. Everitt (Md.) 35 L. R. A. 693.
48 L. R. A.

2. A condition in a legacy, that the legatee's right thereto shall depend upon the decision of the executors at the end of a certain time that he is a reformed man, is not void for uncertainty, and such decision is a condition precedent to his right to the legacy.

(March 27, 1900.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Kent County to review a judgment in favor of claimant in a proceeding to compel defendants as executors of the will of Mary C. Jones, deceased, to pay an alleged legacy to claimant. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Walker & Fitzgerald, for plaintiffs in error:

The intention of the testatrix is clear and should be given effect, unless some positive rule of law prevents.

The condition is not indefinite nor inoperative.

Rushmore v. Rushmore, 35 N. Y. S. R. 845, 12 N. Y. Supp. 776; Cassem v. Kennedy, 147 Ill. 660, 35 N. E. 738; West v. Moore, 37 Miss. 114; Don ex dem. Blean v. Messinger, 33 N. J. L. 499; Stark v. Conde, 100 Wis. 633, 76 N. W. 600; Wynne v. Wynne, 2 Mann. & G. 8.

Almon L. Markham's legacy is contingent, and not vested.

2 Jarman, Wills, p. 456; 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 456, note 2; Theobald, Wills, 2d ed. 411; 2 Wms. Exrs. p. 520; Hawkins, Wills, pp. 222, 224; 2 Redf. Wills, p. 661; Scott v. West, 63 Wis. 529, 24 N. W. 161, 25 N. W. 8; Webster v. Morris, 66 Wis. 366, 57 Am. Rep. 278, 28 N. W. 353; Willett v. Rutter, 84 Ky. 317, 1 S. W. 640; Stark v. Conde, 100 Wis. 633, 76 N. W. 600.

The happening of the event—showing himself to be reformed—was “the motive” and “of the essence of the bequest.”

29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 457; 2 Jarman, Wills, p. 456.

The postponement of the payment of the legacy is upon the happening of an event of such a nature that it is to be presumed that testatrix meant to make no gift unless the event happened, and it is therefore contingent.

Loder v. Hatfield, 71 N. Y. 98.

The legacy is contingent and in legal effect conditional.

Theobald, Wills, pp. 400, 263; 2 Jarman, Wills, p. 509, note 3, 511; Tilley v. King, 109 N. C. 461, 13 S. E. 936; Johnson v. Warren, 74 Mich. 491, 42 N. W. 74; Carper v. Crowl, 149 Ill. 465, 36 N. E. 1040.

If the condition is absolutely void because of ambiguity and uncertainty, it is still a condition precedent; and if the condition precedent is impossible of performance, the bequest is void also.

Stark v. Conde, 100 Wis. 633, 76 N. W. 600; 2 Jarman, Wills, pp. 524, 525.

Messrs. Lombard & McAllister, for defendant in error:

The language in the first paragraph of the will constitutes an absolute and vested legacy.

Where there is a clear gift, distinct from a direction to pay when the legatee attains a given age, the direction to pay will not postpone the vesting of the gift, it being considered debitum in presenti, solvendum in futuro.

29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 454; Theobald, Wills, 2d ed. 410; 1 Jarman, Wills, 5th ed. 837; Jones v. Habersham, 107 U. S. 177, 27 L. ed. 402, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336; Higgins v. Waller, 57 Ala. 400; Young v. McKinnie, 5 Fla. 542; Wardell v. Hale, 161 Mass. 396, 37 N. E. 196; Hathaway v. Leary, 55 N. C. (2 Jones Eq.) 264; Snow v. Snow, 49 Me. 164; Re Mahan, 98 N. Y. 372; Verrill v. Weymouth, 68 Me. 318; Bushnell v. Carpenter, 92 N. Y. 273; Loder v. Hatfield, 71 N. Y. 92; Rathbone v. Dyckman, 3 Paige, 10; Wood v. Oone, 7 Paige, 471; Bowman's Appeal, 34 Pa. 19; McClure's Appeal, 72 Pa. 414; Bayard v. Atkins, 10 Pa. 18; Schwartz's 48 L. R. A.

Appeal, 119 Pa. 337, 13 Atl. 212; Lightner v. Lightner, 127 Pa. 468, 17 Atl. 986; Maggoffin v. Patton, 4 Rawle, 113; Brown v. Brown, 44 N. H. 281; Nelson v. Pomeroy, 64 Conn. 257, 29 Atl. 534; Farnam v. Farnam, 53 Conn. 281, 2 Atl. 325, 5 Atl. 682; Colt v. Hubbard, 33 Conn. 285; Blackburn v. Hawkins, 6 Ark. 58; Shattuck v. Stedman, 2 Pick. 468; Furness v. Fox, 1 Cush. 134, 48 Am. Dec. 593; Warren v. Hembree, 8 Or. 123; Green v. Green, 86 N. C. 546; Perry v. Rhodes, 6 N. C. (2 Murph.) 140; Caldwell v. Kinkead, 1 B. Mon. 231; Scofield v. Olcott, 120 Ill. 363, 11 N. E. 351; Hancock v. Titus, 39 Miss. 224; Love v. Barnett, 38 Miss. 329; Tucker v. Ball, 1 Barb. 94; Kearney v. Kearney, 17 N. J. Eq. 59; Dyson v. Repp, 29 Ind. 482.

The only difficulty in such cases is to determine whether it is a substantive gift and a direction to pay, or whether the only gift is in the direction to pay.

29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 455, 456; Theobald, Wills, 2d ed. 410; Atmore v. Walker, 46 Fed. Rep. 429; Van Camp v. Fowler, 59 Hun, 311, 13 N. Y. Supp. 1; Bushnell v. Carpenter, 92 N. Y. 270; Goebel v. Wolf, 113 N. Y. 405, 21 N. E. 388; McClure's Appeal, 72 Pa. 414; Schwartz's Appeal, 119 Pa. 337, 13 Atl. 212; Poster v. Holland, 56 Ala. 474; Furness v. Fox, 1 Cush. 134, 48 Am. Dec. 593; Scofield v. Olcott, 120 Ill. 363, 11 N. E. 351.

If futurity is annexed to the substance of the gift, the vesting is suspended; but if it appears to relate to the time of payment only, the legacy vests instant.

Bushnell v. Carpenter, 92 N. Y. 270; Furness v. Fox, 1 Cush. 134, 48 Am. Dec. 593; 3 Wooddeson, 512; Godolphin, part 3, chap. 17, § 11; 1 Roper, Legacies, chap. 10, § 2; Toms v. Williams, 41 Mich. 552, 2 N. W. 814; Calkins v. Smith, 41 Mich. 409, 1 N. W. 1048.

The estates in wills, in the absence of any expressed provision to the contrary, are to take effect or become vested at the testator's death.

McCarty v. Fish, 87 Mich. 48, 49 N. W. 513; Rivenett v. Bourquin, 53 Mich. 10, 18 N. W. 537; Letchworth's Appeal, 30 Pa. 175; Johnson v. Ballou, 28 Mich. 392.

The provision contained in the will is a mere discretionary power given to the executors, to be exercised by them at the end of two years, and for them to determine whether they shall pay the legacy or not.

The clause in this will relating to the time of payment is not a condition, but a power. Perrin v. Lepper, 72 Mich. 454, 40 N. W. 859.

Even if the provision in the will constitutes a condition subsequent, it is absolutely of no force or effect for the reason that there is no gift over for breach of the condition.

Beach, Wills, p. 426; Crawford v. Thompson, 91 Ind. 266, 46 Am. Rep. 598; Hough's Estate, 13 Phila. 279; Bostick v. Blades, 59 Md. 231, 43 Am. Rep. 548; Binnerman v. Weaver, 8 Md. 517; M'Iloaine v. Gethen, 3 Whart. 575; Hoopes v. Dundas, 10 Pa. 75; Shackelford v. Hall, 19 Ill. 212; Parsons v.

Winslow, 6 Mass. 169, 4 Am. Dec. 107; 2 Jarman, Wills, 59; 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 483; Rock River Paper Mill Co. v. Fisk, 47 Mich. 220, 10 N. W. 344.

Even granting that the provision is a condition of any character, it is so vague, indefinite, and uncertain that it is of no force or effect whatever.

Hooker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The testatrix, Mary C. Jones, left a will containing the following provisions: "(1) To Almon L. Markham, the son of my daughter, Julia J. Markham, deceased, I give and bequeath the sum of five hundred dollars ($500), to be paid to him at the expiration of two years from the date of my demise; provided, that he shall be deemed a reformed man, in the judgment of the executors of this will. (2) To my granddaughter, Mary Maud Markham, I give and bequeath the sum of five hundred dollars ($500), not to be paid to her until she has attained the age of twenty (20) years, unless it be necessary, in the opinion of the executors, and then not to exceed the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars ($150); the balance to be paid at the time specified above, if any disbursement is made. (3) In the event of the demise of either or both of the aforementioned persons before the time for the payment of the several amounts due them, then I direct that their shares shall revert to the Society of Women's Christian Temperance Union, to be paid to the Union of Unions of the City of Grand Rapids, and to be by them used for the advancement of the temperance work, without reservation." Several other bequests followed, and then the following: "(8) And all the balance of my estate, both personal and real, or which may accrue or of which I may be possessed of at the time of my decease, I do give and bequeath unto my son, William Hoyle Jones. It is my request that the estate be settled up within three (3) years after my demise. I also give the executors the privilege of disposing of any or all of the estate at public or private sale, as they may deem best for the interests of the estate. I hereby appoint Silas L. Huford, of Walker, and William Hoyle Jones, both of the state of Michigan, executors of this, my will." The will was duly probated, and the persons named as executors accepted the trust and qualified. The inventory of the estate bears date May 20, 1892. In October, 1898, Almon L. Markham filed a petition in the probate court, praying an order that the executors pay him his legacy. This was followed by an amended petition. Upon a hearing the probate court denied the relief, and the cause was tried in the circuit court upon appeal. The findings of fact and law disclose, among other things, that on January 18, 1896, Almon L. Markham filed in probate court a petition alleging the will and its admission to probate, and that more than two years had expired, and that he was a reformed man, and was entitled to his legacy. It prayed that the executors be cited to show cause why they had not paid the legacy, and, in case of their failure to do so, that they be discharged from their office, and petitioner be authorized to bring an action upon their bond in the circuit court. A hearing was had, and it was held that the petitioner was not entitled to the relief prayed. No appeal was taken, and such order stands unreversed. In the present proceeding the circuit court failed to pass upon the question of petitioner's reformation, and in the finding of law held that petitioner took a vested legacy, and that the conditions attached were indefinite, uncertain, and void. It was also found that petitioner was entitled to his legacy, with interest at 6 per cent from May 11, 1896, and costs, all to be paid out of the estate by the executors. The defendants have appealed. They claim (1) that the legacy was not a vested one; (2) that, regardless of that question, the condition was a valid condition precedent; (3) that the claim is barred by the former adjudication in the probate court.

The intention of the testatrix, if it can be ascertained, must settle the construction to be placed upon this bequest. The section, considered by itself, would, in our opinion, impress the average mind as not ambiguous, and would be interpreted to mean that if, at the expiration of two years from the demise of the testatrix, the executors should deem the petitioner a reformed man, they should pay him $500 from the estate; otherwise, not. Very few would understand from this language that, if not deemed to be reformed, he should still receive the bequest at a later date, and that distant but a year. "A conditional legacy is defined to be a bequest whose existence depends upon the happening or not happening of some uncertain event, by which it is either to take place or to be defeated. No precise form of words is necessary in order to create a condition in wills, but, whenever it clearly appears that it was the testator's intent to make a condition, that intent shall be carried into effect." 2 Wms. Exrs. p. 558, and cases cited. We are satisfied that the intention of the testatrix was that her grandson should not have this money unless within two years after her death he should change his course of conduct, and she selected persons in whom she had confidence to determine the question at the proper time. It was left to their judgment, and the inference is that they knew the petitioner's faults. Unless at that time the executors should determine that he was a reformed man, the provision would be inoperative. It was unnecessary for her to make a record of petitioner's faults. It was a valid condition to require the reform of bad habits. Dustan v. Dustan, 1 Paige, 509; Webster v. Morris, 86 Wis. 366, 57 Am. Rep. 278, 28 N. W. 353. A condition which involves anything in the nature of consideration is, in general, a condition precedent. Theobald, Wills, 283. In Finlay v. King, 3 Pet. 346, 7 L. ed. 701, Chief Justice Marshall said: "It is certainly well settled that there are no technical appropriate words which always determine whether a devise be on a condition precedent or subsequent. The same words have been determined differently, and the question is always a question of intention. If the language of the particular clause or of the whole will shows that the act upon which the estate depends must be performed before the estate can vest, the condition, of course, is precedent; and unless it is performed the devisee can take nothing. If, on the contrary, the act does not necessarily precede the vesting of the estate, but may accompany or follow it, if this is to be collected from the whole will, the condition is subsequent." It is in all cases a question of intention, and not of phrase or form. In support of this, see 4 Kent, Com. 124; Flood, Wills, 283; 2 Redf. Wills, 283; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 8; Nicoll v. New York & E. K. Co. 12 N. Y. 121; Barruso v. Madan, 2 Johns. 145; Robbins v. Gleason, 47 Me. 239; Burnett v. Strong, 26 Miss. 116; Ward v. New England Screw Co. 1 Cliff. 565, Fed. Cas. No. 17,157; Creswell v. Lawson, 7 Gill. & J. 240; Hayden v. Stoughton, 5 Pick. 23; Jackson v. Kip, 8 N. J. L. 241; Bowman v. Long, 23 Ga. 247. The following have been held precedent conditions: If he lives three years, with limitation over if he dies within that time. Buck v. Paine, 75 Me. 582. If he attains the age of twenty-one years (Jones v. Leeman, 69 Me. 489; Kelso v. Cuming, 1 Redf. 392; Bowman v. Long, 23 Ga. 247), it being sufficient if he does so before testator's death (Eisner v. Koehler, 1 Dem. 277); or although twenty-one, and has in the meantime learned a trade, and is of good moral character, to be determined by executor (Webster v. Morris, 66 Wis. 366, 57 Am. Rep. 278, 28 N. W. 353); or "shall be desirous and capable of entering into business for himself" (Re Davidson's Estate, 17 Phila. 424); or if he withdraws from the Roman Catholic priesthood, (Barnum v. Baltimore, 62 Md. 275, 50 Am. Rep. 219; Kenyon v. See, 94 N. Y. 563, 29 Hun. 212); or releases testator's note held by him (Howard v. Wheatley, 15 Lea, 607); or survives testator (Gibson v. Seymour, 102 Ind. 485, 2 N. E. 305); or if he aid in the defense of a certain suit, to the satisfaction of the executor (Cannon v. Apperson, 14 Lea, 553); or to A for her support, "if she shall lose any part of her own property, and need more" for her support (Fly v. Ely, 20 N. J. Eq. 43); or "when she should be sick and unable to support herself" (Reynolds v. Denman, 20 N. J. Eq. 218). So, a power to sell "if income be not sufficient for support." Minot v. Prescott, 14 Mass. 496. In Roper, Legacies, 562, 563, it is said by an old and learned author that "a fifth instance of exception must be made out of the positive rule applicable to the vesting of legacies, where the gift of the legacy and the time of payment are in terms distinct, when the period for payment is contingent, as upon the marriage or the taking of holy orders of the legatee; for in neither of those instances will the legacy vest before the happening of the contingency, as we have seen it would have done had the time of payment been certain. The distinction is founded upon the following reasoning: It must be inferred that where the time is certain, as when the legatee attains the age of twenty-one, the testator merely postponed the payment of the legacy in consideration of the legatee's unfitness to manage his affairs prior to that period; but when the event annexed to the payment may or may not happen, it is to be presumed that the expectation of its taking place was the sole motive, and therefore of the essence of the bequest." The provision under discussion was, in our opinion, intended as a condition precedent; and it should not be defeated by the failure to specifically provide for the disposition of the fund, or by an inaccurate use of the word "revert" in the 3d section of the will. We think that the bequest did not constitute a vested interest, and that the condition is not any more uncertain than it would have been had the will required payment of the legacy provided the executors should at a given date deem petitioner unworthy of it. The provision cannot be distinguished in principle from any other bequest depending upon the happening of an uncertain event.

It becomes unnecessary to decide the third question raised, though there is much force in the claim that this proceeding is barred by the former adjudication.

The order of the Circuit Court is reversed, and no new trial ordered.

The other Justices concur.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK of Chicago

v.

CITIZENS' SAVINGS BANK of Detroit,
Plff. in Err.

(.....Mich.....)

1. Sending a certificate of deposit directly to the drawer for collection, without instructions to do so, constitutes negligence on the part of a collecting bank, for which it will be liable in case of a resulting loss.
2. A collecting bank is impliedly instructed to send a certificate of deposit for collection directly to the bank which made it, when this is the only bank in the place and is rated and supposed to be responsible, and the instructions received by the collecting bank, after calling attention to the fact that it had a correspondent at that place, said, "Please collect for us at your best rate of exchange."

(March 13, 1900.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wayne County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to hold defendant liable for negligence in making the collection of a certificate of deposit sent to it by plaintiff. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—On the question of sending check directly to drawee bank, see Anderson v. Rodgers (Kan.) 27 L. R. A. 248, and note; also Kershaw v. Ladd (Or.) 44 L. R. A. 236; and Minneapolis Sash & Door Co. v. Metropolitan Bank (Minn.) 44 L. R. A. 504.

Messrs. Barbour & Rexford, for plaintiff in error:

The liability of a forwarder arises from his contract with his principal, and depends upon what that contract is.

Simpson v. Waldby, 63 Mich. 439, 30 N. W. 199.

If the contract be that he is to undertake the collection and be responsible for all means used therefor, he is liable for all acts of his subagents or correspondents.

If the contract be that he is merely to transmit the claim to another for collection, he is required to use only proper care in selection of a correspondent.

If the contract be that he is to transmit the claim to a certain person, or the debtor himself, for collection, he is not liable if he does so.

If the contract be that he is to transmit the claim to the debtor for collection, if he has and is "warranted in having considerable confidence in him, he is not liable if, having such confidence and acting in good faith, he sends it to him for collection; and such confidence and good faith will be presumed until some fact to the contrary is shown.

Plaintiff's instructions to defendant were to send the certificate of deposit directly to Parsons for collection.

Mechem, Agency, § 295.

Where the language is ambiguous or susceptible of more than one construction, or is vague or general, or inappropriate to express the true intent, extraneous evidence is admissible to explain.

Bradner, Ev. 2d ed. p. 274.

Messrs. Bowen, Douglas, & Whiting, for defendant in error:

The defendant admits that the transmission by it of the certificate of deposit to Parsons, the maker, was negligence. It is negligence which made the defendant responsible for any loss resulting.

Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Goodman, 109 Pa. 428, 58 Am. Rep. 728, 2 Atl. 687; Drovers' Nat. Bank v. Anglo-American Pkg. & Provision Co. 117 Ill. 100, 57 Am. Rep. 855, 7 N. E. 601; German Nat. Bank v. Burns, 12 Colo. 539, 21 Pac. 714; First Nat. Bank v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 16 U. S. App. 1, 56 Fed. Rep. 965, 6 C. C. A. 183.

A certificate of deposit is in legal effect a promissory note payable on demand, and subject to all the incidents of negotiable paper.

Cate v. Patterson, 25 Mich. 191; Tripp v. Ourtenius, 36 Mich. 494, 24 Am. Rep. 610; Birch v. Fisher, 51 Mich. 36, 16 N. W. 220.

And neglect to protest and give notice to the indorser is conclusively presumed to do injury, and the contrary cannot be shown.

Whitten v. Wright, 34 Mich. 92; Smith v. Long, 40 Mich. 555, 29 Am. Rep. 558.

A bank which holds itself out to collect paper for compensation, or its advantage, ought to be governed by the same rules of law that apply to other persons; and if it wishes to avoid such responsibility, it is very easy for it to accept such business only upon 48 L. R. A.

a special agreement as to its duties and liabilities.

Simpson v. Waldby, 63 Mich. 439, 30 N. W. 199.

Long, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On September 6, 1898, the plaintiff bank received for collection from the National bank of California, at Los Angeles, a certificate of deposit for $1,650, and interest thereon, issued to the order of J. R. Wallace by D. F. Parsons, a private banker at Burr Oak, Mich., under date of February 2, 1898. The certificate was indorsed and made payable by Wallace to the order of the Bank of Whittier, Cal., by it to the National Bank of California, and by it to the First National Bank of Chicago. On September 6th, the day of its receipt, the First National Bank of Chicago indorsed and made it payable to the order of the defendant bank, and forwarded it by mail to that bank at Detroit, with the following instructions:

The First National Bank of Chicago.

Chicago, Ill. Sept. 6, 1898.

Citizens' Savings Bank, Detroit, Mich.

Dear Sir:

I inclose items as per statement below for collection and returns.

Yours, respectfully,

R. J. Street, Cashier.

Protest all paper unless otherwise instructed.

Burr Oak, 1650

and Int. 38.50

1688.50

Telegraph if not honored (rubber-stamped).

Do not hold any of our collections after due, for any reason whatever, except upon special instructions from us. Return at once if not paid.

Accompanying the above letter, and pinned to the certificate of deposit, there was a red slip, as follows:

Citizens' Savings Bank,

Detroit, Mich.:

We send this C—D for $165,000 and Int. to you for collection, as we note that you have a correspondent at Burr Oak, Mich. Please collect for us at your best rate of exchange, and oblige.

First National Bank,

A. Chicago.

9-6-'98.

Kindly take this ticket off before forwarding to Burr Oak.

Also, accompanying the certificate, and pinned to it, were two slips, of which the following are copies:

608.

Telegraph if not honored. If telegraphing, communicate only with the First National Bank of Chicago, Ill. (giving date of their indorsement stamp), who will give instructions direct.

First National Bank, Chicago.

Collection. No. 8.
Ac't Nat'l Bank of Cal.,
Los Angeles, Cal.

Date, Sept. 6, 1898.
Burr Oak, $1650.

Int.,
T. N. P.
8-3.

Do not write or mark or stamp on this ticket.

Protest.

Return promptly if not paid.

The agent of the First National Bank of Chicago, who forwarded the certificate to defendant, testified on cross-examination that "the certificate was sent to the defendant bank (a bank, as a rule, we never send anything to). We sent it to them for the simple reason that we presumed that they knew all about this D. F. Parsons, having had his account for several years, and we didn't know anything about him. He was a private banker in Burr Oak, Mich. I had sent items to Parsons for a number of years previous to this,—small items; but had never sent him as much money as that. I had no sufficient knowledge of him to send him more. Q. This red ticket states: 'We note you have a correspondent at Burr Oak.' Do you know who that correspondent was that you noted at that time? A. There being only one bank at Burr Oak, there could not be any question about it. He was D. F. Parsons."

It appears that the defendant bank, on receipt of the certificate of deposit from plaintiff, which was September 7, 1898, sent it forward to D. F. Parsons, Burr Oak, Mich., stating that it was inclosed for collection, and asking him to report promptly. Parsons received this certificate, and on the 12th of September handed it to his clerk, and told him to give the Citizens' Savings Bank of Detroit credit for it. The clerk testified that, according to the books of D. F. Parsons, there was a balance in the Citizens' Savings Bank due Mr. Parsons of about $28,000. The clerk testified, further, that it was the custom of business that when the Citizens' Savings Bank sent collections to Mr. Parsons, if it was a certificate, they merely gave the bank credit on the books. If it was a check or draft for collection, they would collect it before they gave credit; that business had been conducted in this way for over five years. The witness further testified: "We would remit to the Citizens' Savings Bank every day, or twice a day, or once in two or three days. If our books showed a balance to the Citizens' Savings Bank in our favor, we would remit just the same. We would remit to the Citizens' Savings Bank for a draft or check drawn on our bank. The Citizens' Savings Bank had never sent anything on our bank for collection before that was drawn on us, and I didn't notice this until afterwards. My father made an assignment for the benefit of creditors on the night of the 13th of September, 1898. Mr. Himebaugh, the assignee, has the statement the Citizens' Savings Bank rendered. On September 15, 1898, I did not know anything about my father's indebtedness to the Citizens' Savings Bank. What I have learned about it since is what has been told me. Within ten days or two weeks after his assignment, my father left Burr Oak, and does not live there now." The cashier of defendant bank testified that he received this certificate of deposit on September 7th, and on the same day he forwarded it on regular collection letter head to Parsons, with instructions to remit. The witness was then asked: "Q. What construction did you place upon Exhibit 3?" (Exhibit 3 is the letter to the defendant bank in which it was said: "We sent this C-D for $1650.00 and Int. to you for collection, as we note that you have a correspondent at Burr Oak, Mich.") This was objected to, and objection sustained. "Q. How did you regard Mr. Parsons at that time financially?" This was objected to; and the court said: "It seems to me that this is not the point. If they thought that he was responsible, didn't they assume the risk? Here is a note one of us has made for a large amount. We all know the usual practice of sending a note for collection is not to send it to the maker of the note. While in a good many instances it would be safe to send a note to the maker of it, does not the bank always take the chances as a matter of law?" Counsel for defendant: "It does, unless its instructions are to the contrary. I do not claim here without instructions we were justified in sending this to Parsons; but what I claim is the instructions were positive to send it to him, and I wish to show that Mr. Tillotson (the cashier of defendant bank) so construed it, and that was his honest interpretation of the memorandum. Further, we have a letter from the First National Bank of Chicago in which they acknowledge that to be the construction." The Court: "I have ruled, in effect, that that memorandum is not susceptible to that construction. You have an exception to that." Counsel: "Your honor holds that that is not an instruction to the Citizens' Savings Bank to send it direct to Parsons." The Court: "Yes." The defendant bank, not having heard from Parsons, on the 12th of September wrote him to send funds sufficient to meet the certificate. Nothing further was heard from Parsons on the subject. He failed and left the state, and his estate as reported by his son was not worth eight cents on the dollar. The cashier of defendant bank was interrogated further in reference to his good faith in sending the certificate direct to Parsons, and the testimony ruled out. He further testified: "There was no arrangement between our bank and him by which he was authorized, instead of sending currency direct to our bank, to give the bank credit. That would not be allowed any more than we would pay his check if he did not have the money to his credit in our bank. I first learned that he was insolvent, or that his credit was not good, on September 15th. On September 7th when this collection was received from Chicago, Parsons was owing our bank $4,000." Some considerable correspondence was had between the plaintiff and defendant banks in reference to the matter. On September 21st the plaintiff wrote the defendant as follows:

48 L. R. A.

Chicago, Sept. 21, 1898.

Citizens' Savings Bank, Detroit, Michigan.
Gentlemen:

We have your favor of the 19th inst. In sending the item to you as we did, we suppose that it was intended to have the advantage of your knowledge of Parsons. We were aware that his was the only bank at Burr Oak, but we thought you would know enough about him not to send to him an item on himself for $1,650, unless you had and were warranted in having considerable confidence in him. You said nothing on this point. Kindly let us know how you regarded Parsons. Our correspondent in Los Angeles is inquiring sharply of us to see if there is not some responsibility "somewhere" for this loss.

Yours, truly,
R. J. Street, Cas. O. P.

The defendant replied to this letter as follows:

Detroit, Sept. 23d, '98.

R. J. Street, Cashier, Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sir:

In answer to yours of the 21st inst., regarding the certificate sent to D. F. Parsons, of Burr Oak, who recently failed. I would say that we have had entire confidence in Mr. Parson's integrity and ability to pay. We had heard nothing detrimental to his financial standing. His rating is from $30,000 to $35,000 in Dun's, and we were at the time carrying $4,000 of loans to him, which was less than the original amount loaned him, and he has always been business-like in his dealings with us. If he had wanted to borrow money, we should have loaned it to him, and we had no intimation whatever that there was anything wrong there. I have requested the assignee to return the certificate, unless he would remit for same.

Yours, respectfully,
Frank F. Tillotson, Cashier.

The certificate was not protested, and the plaintiff bank was not notified of its nonpayment until September 15th. The declaration by which the suit was commenced counts upon the negligence of the defendant bank in sending the certificate to Parsons for collection, and also upon the negligence of defendant in not notifying plaintiff of its noncollection until September 15th also, for not protesting the certificate for nonpayment. The common counts in assumpsit are added. The court directed the jury to return a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the amount of the certificate and interest. Counsel asked the court to direct the verdict in favor of defendant. This was refused, and the refusal constitutes the principal assignment of error.

The main question in the case, and in fact about the only question, is whether the defendant was justified in sending the certificate directly to Parsons for collection. It is conceded by counsel for defendant that, in the absence of instructions to do so, it is negligence to send the collection directly to the drawer; and such negligence makes the sender liable for any loss resulting. We think this rule is sustained by the authorities: Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Goodman, 109 Pa. 428, 58 Am. Rep. 728, 2 Atl. 687; Drovers' Nat. Bank v. Anglo-American Pkg. & Provision Co. 117 Ill. 100, 57 Am. Rep. 855, 7 N. E. 601; German Nat. Bank v. Burns, 12 Colo. 539, 21 Pac. 714; First Nat. Bank v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 16 U. S. App. 1, 56 Fed. Rep. 965, 6 C. C. A. 183. But it is contended that the instructions from plaintiff to defendant were to send the certificate of deposit directly to Parsons for collection; that this is to be gathered from the terms of the letter; that the direction "collect at your best rate of exchange" implies this from the fact that there was no other bank at Burr Oak. We think in this defendant's counsel is correct. Any other mode of collection would not have been in compliance with instructions. The defendant could not send the certificate through the express company, as it could not be collected at the best rate of exchange in that way. The further direction, "Kindly take this ticket off before forwarding to Burr Oak," is consistent only with the idea that the collection was to be sent directly to the Parsons bank. The plaintiff, in its letter forwarding the certificate, calls attention to the fact that the defendant has a correspondent at Burr Oak, and then says: "Please collect at best rate of exchange." Under these circumstances we think the defendant was justified in so sending the collection, especially as Parsons had a rating with R. G. Dun & Co. of from $30,000 to $35,000, and the defendant's officers had entire confidence in him. But aside from this, it is quite evident from the correspondence following that the plaintiff construed its own letter to mean that defendant was instructed to send the collection direct to Parsons. In the letter of plaintiff of September 16th the inquiry is made: "State whether the item was sent direct to Parsons or through some other agency at Burr Oak." On the 19th the defendant wrote plaintiff that it had been sent direct to Parsons, and on the 21st the letter is written by plaintiff heretofore quoted. In that letter it was said: "In sending the item to you as we did, we suppose that it was intended to have the advantage of your knowledge of Parsons. We were aware that this was the only bank at Burr Oak, but we thought that you would know enough about him not to send to him an item on himself unless you had and were warranted in having considerable confidence in him." In other words, it is apparent that the very purpose of the item's being sent to defendant was because it had knowledge of Parson's responsibility, and that it could be collected by defendant at better rates than plaintiff could collect it for from Chicago. As Parsons had the only bank at Burr Oak, it must have been anticipated by plaintiff that defendant would, if it believed Parsons responsible, send the collection directly to him, and thus obtain the best rates of exchange. No question is made but that the defendant acted in the utmost good faith in believing that Parsons was perfectly responsible. The collection was sent Parsons on the 9th. The 10th, being Saturday, was a half holiday. On Monday, the 12th, the defendant, not having heard from Parsons, made inquiry about the collection, and learned that he had failed. The plaintiff was notified immediately. We think the defendant was not negligent in any particular; and the court below should have directed the verdict in favor of defendant.

The judgment must be reversed, and a new trial ordered.

The other Justices concur.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

Re Estate of John Joseph CLARK.

APPEAL OF William J. McAULIFFE.

(193 Pa. 520.)

1. A constitutional provision against granting to any corporation any special or exclusive privilege is not infringed by an act allowing trustees, etc., to charge the estate a reasonable sum which they may have paid "to a company" authorized by law to do so, for becoming surety on their bonds.
2. A statute permitting trustees to charge against the estates in their hands such sums as they have paid to any company for becoming surety on their bonds gives no lien in favor of the company, in the absence of express provision to that effect.

(April 30, 1900.)

APPEAL by the guardian of a minor from a judgment of the Superior Court affirming a decree of the Orphans' Court for Philadelphia County refusing to allow an item in his account for the amount which he had paid to a guaranty company for becoming surety on his bond. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Joseph Edward Murray, Lincoln L. Eyre, and John G. Johnson, for appellant:

A statute must be presumed to be valid and constitutional.

Craig v. First Presby. Church, 88 Pa. 42, 32 Am. Rep. 417.

If there is room in any given case for the exercise of a wise discretion by the legislative assembly, good faith, good reasons, and good motives should be imputed to that body.

State ex rel. Henderson v. Boone County Ct. 50 Mo. 317.

It has never been pretended that the legislature has not the right to classify in proper cases, and when such classification is within the legislative power it matters not how arbitrary the legislative enactment may appear to those who may feel dissatisfied with or injured by it.

Wheeler v. Philadelphia, 77 Pa. 338; Kilgore v. Magee, 85 Pa. 401.

While in contracts like this, the more natural attitude of a "surety" is assumed by the form, it is, in effect, one of insurance; and whatever indefiniteness of language or ambiguity of expression there may be, shall be resolved most favorably to the assured.

Guarantee Co. of N. A. v. Mechanics' Sav.

NOTE.—Legal powers and privileges of surety and trust companies.

- I. In general.
- II. Special act creating.
- III. Granting special or exclusive privileges to.
- IV. Power to act as guardian, etc., without bond.
- V. Power to act as surety.
 - a. In general.
 - b. On appeal bond.
- VI. Right to counter security.
- VII. Right to relief from suretyship.
- VIII. Right to tax amount paid to, as costs.
- IX. Right of personal representative, etc., to credit for amount paid to.
- X. Foreign companies.
 - a. Power to act as surety.
 - b. Power to act as trustee, etc.

This note does not include matters relating particularly to banking or insurance, or to the taxation of such companies.

I. In general.

A trust company is presumed to have corporate capacity to act as committee of a lunatic, in the absence of specific restrictions in its charter, by virtue of its general powers, under 48 L. R. A.

Pa. act May 9, 1889, P. L. 159, to "execute trusts of every description." Equitable Trust Co. v. Garis, 190 Pa. 544, 42 Atl. 1022.

And when authorized by its charter to execute all such trusts of every description as may be committed to it by any person or persons, or as may be transferred to it by a surrogate or any court of record, it may be appointed as a committee of the estate of an habitual drunkard. Glaser v. Priest, 29 Mo. App. 1.

And it may act as trustee under a mortgage, in a case germane to the purpose of its incorporation, under Ohio Rev. Stat. §§ 2831a, 2831b, empowering such companies to receive and hold money and property in trust on such terms or conditions as may be agreed upon, and providing that any such company may be appointed trustee under an instrument creating a trust for the care and management of property, under the same circumstances, in the same manner, and subject to the same control by the court as in the case of a legally qualified person. Cincinnati Hotel Co. v. Central Trust & S. D. Co. 25 Ohio L. J. 375.

But it will not be granted letters of administration with the will annexed, although guardian of the sole residuary legatee and only next of kin of the decedent, as against a general legatee, under N. Y. Laws 1873, chap. 781, providing for the appointment of such a company

Bank & T. Co. 47 U. S. App. 91, 80 Fed. Rep. 766, 26 C. C. A. 146.

As the surety company and the individual bondsmen were in no sense members of the same class, within the constitutional purview, the undoubted legislative power existed to confer an additional right upon the one without necessarily having to confer it upon the other.

Com. v. Vrooman, 164 Pa. 306, 25 L. R. A. 250, 30 Atl. 217; Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 814, 25 L. ed. 1079.

The words of the Constitution furnish the only test to determine the validity of a statute, and all arguments based on general principles outside of the Constitution must be addressed to the people, and not to the court.

Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 147, 59 Am. Dec. 759.

on its application where it appears that there are no next of kin willing or properly qualified, as, by N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2643, a general legatee is entitled to such administration in preference to such a company. Re Milhan, 28 Misc. 366, 59 N. Y. Supp. 910.

II. Special act creating.

The provision of Cal. act March 12, 1885, authorizing acceptance of any corporation incorporated for the purpose of guarantying bonds and undertakings, as sole and sufficient security on any bond or undertaking with one or more sureties required by law, does not violate the provision of Cal. Const. art. 4, § 25, subd. 3, against the passage of local or special laws regulating the practice of courts of justice, as it is general in its operation. Cramer v. Tittle, 72 Cal. 12, 12 Pac. 869.

An act incorporating a surety company and authorizing it to become sole surety in all cases where, by law, two or more sureties are required for the faithful performance of any trust or office, does not conflict with Md. Const. art. 3, § 33, forbidding the passage of local or special laws for any case for which provision has been made by an existing general law, where there is no general law providing for corporate security on a trustee's bond for the faithful performance of his duties. Gans v. Carter, 77 Md. 1, 25 Atl. 663; Hersberg v. Warfield, 76 Md. 446, 25 Atl. 664.

A special act incorporating a corporation empowered to accept and execute trusts of every description intrusted to it by any person or corporation or by the order of any court of record, and to act as executor, administrator, guardian, assignee, or receiver, collect the incomes of estates, and take custody of wills and legal documents, and providing that when appointed to act in any fiduciary capacity its capital stock and property as paid in shall be considered as the security required by law for the faithful performance of its duties, and that no bond or other security shall be required of it,—does not violate the provision of Md. Const. art. 3, § 48, that corporations shall not be created by special act except in cases where no general laws exist providing for the creation of corporations of the same general character, as no general law conferring such rights existed at the time of its passage. Reed v. Baltimore Trust & Guarantee Co. 72 Md. 531, 20 Atl. 194.

III. Granting special or exclusive privileges to.

The cases seem to be practically unanimous to the effect that an act authorizing a surety

The American legislatures possess the absolute legislative powers of the British Parliament.

Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 86-92.

The remedy for an unfair act of assembly, if the majority so think, is in an appeal to the legislature or at the ballot box for its repeal.

Ervine's Appeal, 16 Pa. 256, 55 Am. Dec. 499.

The constitutional provision prohibiting the deprivation of property is not infringed by a proper law regulating a business, which may render property used to carry on the business less valuable.

Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77.

The courts cannot impute to the legislature any other but public motives for their acts.

company to become sole surety on a bond or undertaking, or to act in a fiduciary capacity without other security than that afforded by its capital stock, is not invalid as granting a special or exclusive privilege.

A statute authorizing such companies to act as assignee for creditors without bond such as is required of natural persons, but requiring them to give security by depositing securities with the state treasurer, is not invalid as an unjust discrimination in favor of a class. Roane Iron Co. v. Wisconsin Trust Co. 99 Wis. 273, 74 N. W. 818.

The provision of Minn. Gen. Laws 1883, chap. 107, § 9, subd. 4, authorizing them to act as guardians of the estates of lunatics, is not unconstitutional as in derogation of the common law, or impolitic, nor because it does not require the corporation to take an oath or give a bond as in the case of natural persons, nor on the ground that it grants special or exclusive privileges, immunities, or franchises to any particular corporation. Minnesota Loan & T. Co. v. Beebe, 40 Minn. 7, 2 L. R. A. 418, 41 N. W. 232.

A provision in the charter of a corporation authorized to act as administrator, that its capital stock shall be considered as the security required by law for the faithful performance of its duties, and that no other security shall be required on its appointment as administrator except when required by the court or the parties in interest, is not unconstitutional as conferring an exclusive privilege on the corporation, or discriminating in its favor. Coleman v. Parrott, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 947, 13 S. W. 525.

The principal case of RE CLARK, Reversing 10 Pa. Super. Ct. 423, holds that Pa. act June 24, 1895, P. L. 248, authorizing a receiver, assignee, guardian, committee, trustee, executor, or administrator to include as part of his lawful expenses in executing the trust such reasonable sum paid to a surety company for becoming his surety as may be allowed by the court, is not invalid as granting a special or exclusive privilege or immunity, on the ground that no provision is made for allowing amounts so paid to individual sureties, as there is a sufficient distinction between the two kinds of sureties to authorize the discrimination.

The provision of La. act 41 of 1894, that any corporation duly incorporated under the laws of Louisiana or any other state for transacting the business of guarantying the fidelity of persons, and the performance of contracts, bonds, or undertakings, may become surety on bonds, etc., is not unconstitutional as granting Sunbury & H. R. Co. v. Cooper, 33 Pa. 278. The act of 1895 is not in violation of the Federal Constitution.

Missouri P. R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 29 L. ed. 463, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 28 L. ed. 1145, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beekwith, 129 U. S. 26, 32 L. ed. 585, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; Re Lookwood, 154 U. S. 116, 38 L. ed. 929, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1082; Giozza v. Tiernan, 148 U. S. 657, 37 L. ed. 599, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 721; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 154 U. S. 421, 38 L. ed. 1031, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1114; Pacific Exp. Co. v. Seibert, 142 U. S. 339, 35 L. ed. 1035, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 250.

A discrimination in the imposing of certain conditions upon foreign corporations of other states, as predicated upon their admission into the state, is not unconstitutional.

Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 136 U. S. 114, 34 L. ed. 394, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 958.

The police laws have been declared by the courts constitutional.

Specht v. Com. 8 Pa. 312, 49 Am. Dec. 518; Waldo v. Com. 9 W. N. C. 200; Board of Health v. Loyd, 1 Phila. 20; Respublica v. Duquet, 2 Yeates, 493; Byers v. Com. 42 Pa. 89; Wright v. Com. 77 Pa. 470; Com. v. Schoenhutt, 3 Phila. 20; Com. v. Wilson, 9 W. N. C. 291; Dabbs v. State, 39 Ark. 353, 43 Am. Rep. 275.

In Hamacker v. Commercial Bank, 95 Wis. 359, 70 N. W. 295, the court said: "We think the court was right in allowing the charge for obtaining the signature of the American Surety Company as surety on the bond."

the privilege of becoming surety to certain kinds of corporations to the exclusion of all others. Standard Cotton Seed Oil Co. v. Matheson, 48 La. Ann. 1821, 20 So. 713.

Such act does not grant an exclusive privilege, as it applies to all of a certain class without any exception. Holmes v. Tennessee Coal, I. & R. Co. 49 La. Ann. 1465, 22 So. 403.

An act authorizing a surety company incorporated thereby to become sole surety in all cases where by law two or more sureties are required for the faithful performance of any office or trust is not unconstitutional as conferring upon it a privilege or right not enjoyed by natural persons, as the legislature has power to confer privileges and franchises upon a corporation not enjoyed by individual persons. Gans v. Carter, 77 Md. 1, 25 Atl. 663; Herzberg v. Warfield, 76 Md. 446, 25 Atl. 664.

IV. Power to act as guardian, etc., without bond.

For special act giving such power, see supra, II.

For act giving such power, as a special or exclusive privilege, see supra, III.

For foreign companies, see infra, X. b.

The legislature has power to provide that a trust company created by it shall be authorized to qualify and act as statutory guardian of infants, upon the security of its capital stock for the faithful discharge of its duties. Johnson v. Johnson, 88 Ky. 275, 11 S. W. 5.

A provision in the charter of such a company, that its capital shall be considered as the only security required by law for the faithful performance of its duties, and that no other security shall be required on its appointment to any office or duty except when required by the courts or by the parties in interest, is not necessarily in conflict with Ky. Gen. Stat. chap. 109, § 1, providing that it shall not be lawful for an assignee for creditors to proceed to execute the trust until he shall appear in court and take an oath to execute the duties confided to him, and shall likewise execute a covenant with sufficient security, to be approved by the court, to the effect that he will faithfully discharge all the duties of assignee imposed upon him, as the court may in its discretion require the company at the time the bond is executed to give personal security, or may dispense with it. Bank of Commerce v. Payne, 86 Ky. 446, 8 S. W. 856.

And such a provision is valid, as the legislature has power to determine that the capital stock of such a company is safer than individual security. Phelan v. Louisville Safety Vault & T. Co. 88 Ky. 24, 10 S. W. 10.

V. Power to act as surety.

a. In general.

For special act giving such power, see supra, II.

For act granting such power, as a special or exclusive privilege, see supra, III.

For foreign companies, see infra, X. a.

A surety company may become a surety on a recognizance, as well as on other bonds, under Conn. Pub. Acts 1885, p. 468, providing that any company authorized to transact business as surety on obligations may be accepted as surety upon the "bond" of any person or corporation required by law to execute a bond. Lovejoy v. Isbell, 70 Conn. 557, 40 Atl. 531.

An undertaking executed by a surety company is equivalent to one executed by two sureties, under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 811, as amended in 1895. Tobey v. McDermott (Surrogate's Court 1896) 1 N. Y. Law Rec. 51.

A surety company whose charter empowers it to become "sole surety" in all cases where two or more sureties are required, and making it lawful for any court, clerk, or other officer to approve such company as sole surety in all such cases, may be approved as sole surety on the bond of a trustee for the benefit of creditors, although Md. Code, art. 16, § 205, requires in such case a bond with "sureties" to be approved by the clerk. Miller v. Matthews, 87 Md. 464, 40 Atl. 176.

A surety company may become sole surety on the bond of a railroad company as security for land which it proposes to take under the power of eminent domain, under Pa. act May 9, 1889, § 12, authorizing such a company to "become security" for land damages. Re Philadelphia & R. Terminal R. Co. 28 W. N. C. 117.

The receipt of a bond by a saloon keeper with a surety company as sole surety is not compulsory, under Mich. Pub. Acts 1895, act No. 266, providing that a bond or undertaking executed by a surety company qualified to act as surety shall be in all respects a full and complete compliance with every requirement of every law requiring such a bond to be executed by one or more sureties, and § 2, providing that where more than one surety is required it shall be lawful for the court or person authorized or required to accept such bond to accept a bond with one surety only, if it is a surety company, although § 4 provides that the insurance commissioner shall, on proof that such a

Holmes v. Tennessee Coal, I. & R. Co. 49 La. Ann. 1465, 22 So. 403.

Meers. Thomas James Meagher and George Henderson, for appellee:

Before this statute a surety, whether individual or company, of any of the fiduciaries mentioned therein, could not obtain compensation from the fiducial estate; the remuneration must be from the fiduciary personally.

Eby's Estate, 164 Pa. 249, 30 Atl. 124; Wilson's Estate, 18 W. N. C. 483.

This act is a forbidden special act under the Constitution of this commonwealth.

An arbitrary classification renders an act special, while a reasonable one—that is, one based on characteristic peculiarities necessitating the legislation in question—is essential to a general act.

Wheeler v. Philadelphia, 77 Pa. 338;

Clark v. Janesville, 10 Wis. 136; Kilgore v. Magee, 85 Pa. 401; Re New York Elec. R. Co. 70 N. Y. 327; State ex rel. Lionberger v. Tolle, 71 Mo. 845; Topeka v. Gillett, 32 Kan. 431, 4 Pac. 800; Consumers' Gas Trust Co. v. Harless, 131 Ind. 446, 15 L. R. A. 505, 29 N. E. 1062; Com. ex rel. McKirdy v. Macferon, 152 Pa. 244, 19 L. R. A. 588, 25 Atl. 556; Lehigh Valley Coal Co.'s Appeal, 164 Pa. 44, 30 Atl. 210.

Classification which is grounded on no necessity, and has for its sole object an evasion of the Constitution, will not be encouraged.

Scowden's Appeal, 96 Pa. 422; Davis v. Olark, 106 Pa. 377; Ayars' Appeal, 122 Pa. 266, 2 L. R. A. 577, 16 Atl. 356; Re Wyoming Street, 137 Pa. 494, 21 Atl. 74; Seabolt v. Northumberland County Comrs. 187 Pa. 318, 41 Atl. 22; Com. ex rel. Fertig v. Pat-

company possesses the necessary qualifications, issue to it a certificate that it is authorized to become and be accepted as sole surety on all bonds and undertakings required by law, which certificate is made conclusive proof of its solvency and credit for all purposes, and of its right to be accepted as such sole surety. Schmitt v. Clinton, 111 Mich. 99, 69 N. W. 153.

b. On appeal bond.

For foreign companies, see infra, X. a.

A guaranty of an appeal undertaking by a surety company is sufficient and legal, and is of binding force. White v. Rintoul, 19 Jones & S. 512.

A surety company may be accepted as sole surety on an appeal undertaking, under N. Y. Laws 1881, chap. 486, authorizing any judge or other officer having authority or required to approve the sufficiency of any bond or undertaking to approve of a bond or undertaking whenever its conditions are guaranteed by a company duly organized or authorized to guarantee the fidelity of persons holding positions of trust, and vesting such corporations with full power to guarantee such bonds and undertakings, although two sureties had previously been required on such an undertaking. Hurd v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 23 Hun, 109.

But Nichols v. MacLean, 98 N. Y. 458, holds an undertaking so signed insufficient, as an undertaking on appeal is not one requiring the approval of any judge or officer.

And Travis v. Travis, 48 Hun, 843, 1 N. Y. Supp. 357, without reference to either of the preceding cases, holds that such an undertaking is insufficient unless approved by the judge, under N. Y. Laws 1886, chap. 416, authorizing such companies to undertake for the two sureties when two are required, "provided the same is approved" by the judge of the court in which the undertaking is given.

The provision of Minn. Gen. Laws 1883, chap. 107, as amended by Gen. Laws 1885, chap. 3, § 7, making it lawful for any annuity, safe-deposit, and trust company to become the sole surety on any bond in any action or special proceeding where a bond is necessary, without any other bondsman or surety and without justification or qualification, does not make it compulsory on the court to approve and accept an appeal bond with such a company as surety, or deprive the court of the power to require the company to justify its sufficiency as surety is excepted to. State ex rel. Mutual Invest. Co. v. Hennepin County Dist. Ct. 58 Minn. 351, 59 N. W. 1055.
48 L. R. A.

The court is not required to accept a surety company as sole and sufficient security on an undertaking to stay pending appeal a money judgment for more than $1,000,000, which, under Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 942, must for such purpose be twice the amount of the judgment appealed from, under §§ 1056, 1057, which provide that any corporation with a paid-up capital of not less than $100,000, incorporated for the purpose of becoming a surety on bonds or undertakings required or authorized by law, "may become and shall be accepted as surety, or as sole and sufficient surety," upon such undertaking or bond; and that in all cases except that of such a corporation the officer taking the undertaking or bond must require the sureties to accompany it with an affidavit that they are residents or householders and are each worth the amount specified in the undertaking or bond, and, where there are several sureties, that they are severally worth amounts which shall be equivalent to that of two sufficient sureties; that any such corporation may become one of such sureties; and that no such corporation shall be accepted as a surety whenever its liabilities shall exceed its assets. The provision of § 948, authorizing an exception to the sufficiency of the surety, in which case the surety must justify on notice, and, if required, show surplus assets equal to the amount of its undertaking, is as applicable to surety companies as to individual sureties. Fox v. Hale & N. Silver Min. Co. 97 Cal. 353, 32 Pac. 440.

A corporation is not prohibited from becoming surety on an appeal bond by the provision of the Louisiana Code that a judicial surety must be a "person able to contract," as La. Rev. Civ. Code, art. 433, declares that corporations legally established are substituted for persons, and can make valid contracts, and obligate others and themselves toward others. Standard Cotton Seed Oil Co. v. Matheson, 44 La. Ann. 1321, 20 So. 713.

A surety company need not possess the qualifications required of sureties, to act as surety on an appeal undertaking, under N. Y. Laws 1871, chap. 486, although the manner of justification is the same, and it is the duty of the judge in each case to exercise his discretion in determining whether the actual state of the company's business justifies an approval of the undertaking. Earle v. Earle, 17 Jones & S. 57.

A surety company will not be accepted as security on a writ of error to the United States Supreme Court, where there is fair ground for questioning whether power to bind itself by such a contract is conferred by the acts under ton, 88 Pa. 258; McCarthy v. Com. ex rel. Griffiths, 110 Pa. 234, 2 Atl. 423; Morrison v. Backert, 112 Pa. 322, 5 Atl. 739; Soranton v. Silkman, 113 Pa. 191, 6 Atl. 146; Philadelphia v. Haddington M. E. Church, 115 Pa. 291, 8 Atl. 241; Weinman v. Wilkinsburg & E. L. Pass. R. Co. 118 Pa. 192, 12 Atl. 288; Safe Deposit & T. Co. v. Fricke, 152 Pa. 231, 25 Atl. 530; Perkins v. Philadelphia, 156 Pa. 539, 27 Atl. 356; State ex rel. Van Riper v. Parsons, 40 N. J. L. 1; State, Anderson, Prosecutor, v. Trenton, 42 N. J. L. 486; State ex rel. Rutgers v. New Brunswick, 42 N. J. L. 51; State ex rel. Richards v. Hammer, 42 N. J. L. 435; Hammer v. State ex rel. Richards, 44 N. J. L. 667; Bronson v. Oberlin, 41 Ohio St. 476, 52 Am. Rep. 90; State ex rel. Randolph v. Wood, 49 N. J. L. 85, 7 Atl. 286; State ex rel. Oblinger v. Spaude, 37 Minn. 322, 34 N.

W. 164; State ex rel. Patterson v. Donovan, 20 Nev. 75, 15 Pac. 783; Atlantic City Waterworks Co. v. Consumers' Water Co. 44 N. J. Eq. 427, 15 Atl. 581; State, Dobbins, Prosecutor, v. Northampton Twp. Committee, 50 N. J. L. 496, 4 Atl. 584; Lodi v. State, 51 N. J. L. 402, 6 L. R. A. 56, 18 Atl. 749; Edmonds v. Herbrandson, 2 N. D. 270, 14 L. R. A. 725, 50 N. W. 970; Vermont Loan & T. Co. v. Whithed, 2 N. D. 82, 49 N. W. 318; State v. Julow, 129 Mo. 163, 29 L. R. A. 257, 31 S. W. 781; State v. Walsh, 136 Mo. 400, 35 L. R. A. 231, 37 S. W. 1112.

The determination of the character of an act as general or restricted—i. e., local or special—is for the judiciary.

Ayars' Appeal, 122 Pa. 266, 2 L. R. A. 577, 16 Atl. 356; State ex rel. Peck v. Riordan, 24 Wis. 484; State ex rel. Henderson v. Boone County Ct. 50 Mo. 317; State ex rel.

which it is incorporated. Black v. Black, 53 Fed. Rep. 985.

The court may in its discretion refuse to accept an appeal bond on which a corporation authorised to guarantee the fulfilment of the conditions of appeal undertakings is sole surety, where it does not possess sufficient information as to the actual state of the company's business to determine as to its sufficiency, under N. Y. Laws 1881, chap. 486, providing for the justification of such companies as is required of other sureties, and that a company shall not be accepted whenever its liabilities exceed its assets. McGean v. MacKeller, 67 How. Pr. 273.

In Rosenwald v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 9 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 444, it was held that a surety company was sufficient surety on a bond to stay execution pending appeal, although its capital stock was only $550,000, and its liability on bonds and undertakings given in actions amounted to $5,000,000, and its liability on bonds for the fidelity of employees amounted to $12,000,000, where its losses on fidelity bonds did not exceed one eighth of the premiums received, and it had full collateral security for all the former.

But in Gregory v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 9 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 444, note, the same surety company was held insufficient on substantially the same showing, the court writing no opinion.

VI. Right to counter security.

A provision in the charter of a surety company, that it shall be lawful for it to stipulate and provide for indemnity from the parties for whom it becomes responsible, and to enforce any bond, contract, agreement, pledge, or other security made or given for that purpose, does not deprive it, when it becomes the surety on an administrator's bond, of the benefit of Md. Code, art. 90, § 1, authorizing "any security" of an administrator, who shall conceive himself in danger of suffering from the suretyship, to apply to the orphans' court granting the administration, which may require the administrator to give counter security. March v. Fidelity & D. Co. 79 Md. 309, 29 Atl. 521.

VII. Right to relief from suretyship.

A surety company which for a valuable consideration has become a surety on the committee of the estate of an incompetent person will not be relieved as such surety, in the absence of any malfeasance or breach of contract on the part of the committee, as the provision 48 L. R. A.

of N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 812, that the "surety or sureties" on such a bond may be discharged on complying with its provisions, refers only to sureties who have become such without consideration. Re Thurber, 43 App. Div. 528, 60 N. Y. Supp. 198.

A surety company which agrees for compensation to become surety on a government contract for a term of years is liable to the contractor for the damage resulting from its refusal to carry out such contract, as a result of which the contractor is required to obtain other sureties at an increased expense. Samuels v. Fidelity & C. Co. 49 Hun, 122, 1 N. Y. Supp. 850.

VIII. Right to tax amount paid to, as costs.

An amount paid by plaintiff in replevin to a surety company for furnishing the requisite statutory undertaking cannot be taxed as a disbursement, as no such provision is made in the case of amounts paid to ordinary sureties, and nothing in the New York statutes indicates an intention to prefer surety companies over private persons who act as sureties. Bick v. Reese, 52 Hun, 125, 5 N. Y. Supp. 121.

IX. Right of personal representative, etc., to credit for amount paid to.

Willson's Estate, 18 W. N. C. 483, holds that no credit can be allowed an administrator for an amount paid by him to a surety company for its becoming surety on his administration bond.

Re Miller, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 410, holds that a nonresident executor cannot recover from the estate as part of his expenses an amount paid by him to a surety company as a condition of having letters granted to him. The court in this case stated that it was optional with him to give security or renounce the trust, and the credit was therefore properly refused, but states that it sometimes happens that an executor or administrator, after having entered upon the performance of his duties, has other duties thrust upon him which he could not anticipate and for the performance of which security is required, and that in such case it would be proper that the cost of the security should be borne by the estate.

But Eby's Estate, 164 Pa. 240, 30 Atl. 124, holds that an administrator cannot recover from the estate for an amount paid to a surety company for becoming surety on his bond as administrator, nor for an amount paid to such company for becoming his surety as trustee to Pell v. Newark, 40 N. J. L. 72; Re Ruan Street, 132 Pa. 257, 7 L. R. A. 193, 19 Atl. 219; Perkins v. Philadelphia, 156 Pa. 539, 27 Atl. 356.

The act is forbidden.

The fiduciaries specified in the act are entitled to a lien on their fiducial estates for disbursements properly made by them in the administration thereof. There is palpably no difference in this respect among those mentioned in the statute.

Beckwith v. Carroll, 56 Ala. 12; Heise v. Starr, 44 Ill. App. 406; Pennsylvania Co. for Ins. on Lives & G. A. v. Walter, 30 U. S. App. 188, 66 Fed. Rep. 421, 13 C. C. A. 550; Ex parte James, 1 Deacon & C. Bankr. 270; Woodward's Appeal, 38 Pa. 322; Johnston v. Fletcher, 32 Ill. App. 589; Cecil v. Korbman, cited in 1 Binn. 134; Murray v. De Rottenham, 6 Johns. Ch. 52; Deitzler v. Mishler, 37 Pa. 82; King v. Oushman, 41 Ill. 31, 89 Am. Dec. 366; Hill, Trustees, 567; Lewin, Tr. 639; Perry, Tr. § 970; Cobaugh's Appeal, 24 Pa. 143; Demmy's Appeal, 43 Pa. 155.

As the cost of the specified fiduciary's procuring a company surety is made a lawful expense by the statute, it ipso facto becomes a lien on the fiducial estate. A lien is, therefore, created where a company is his surety, which does not exist if the specified fiduciary has an individual as such.

The act violates that clause of the 1st section of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution which provides that no state shall "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

Santa Clara County v. Southern P. R. Co. 9 Sawy. 165, 18 Fed. Rep. 385; Barbier v. Connelly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S.

sell real estate in proceedings in partition, as his commissions as administrator were intended as compensation for the responsibility involved in the acceptance of the trust, as well as for services rendered in the administration of it, and that he might have declined to execute the order of sale, thus vesting in the court the duty of appointing someone else to make it.

And Re Pickering, 4 Pa. Dist. R. 263, holds that executors were not entitled to credit for an amount paid to a surety company for the necessary security in order to receive the proceeds of real estate sold, the court stating that it was bound by the decision in Re Eby's Estate, and that the rule laid down therein was intended to apply to all trustees, whether executors, testamentary trustees, administrators, or guardians, whenever it became necessary to enter security for the application of the proceeds of sale of real estate.

The Pennsylvania act of June 24, 1895, P. L. 248, providing that any receiver, assignee, guardian, committee, trustee, executor, or administrator required to give bond may include as a part of the lawful expense of executing his trust such reasonable sum paid a company authorized to do so, for becoming his surety on such bond, as may be allowed by the court, not exceeding a specified amount, was evidently passed to avoid the effect of such decisions.

And the principal case of RE CLARK, in which a guardian claimed a credit for an amount paid to a surety company as premium on his surety bond, holds, reversing the decision in the court below, 10 Pa. Super. Ct. 423, that such act does not violate the provision of Pa. Const. art. 8, § 7, prohibiting the legislature from passing any local or special law granting to any corporation any special or exclusive privilege or immunity. In the opinion the court points out the distinction between an individual surety and a surety company, and holds that the difference between the two authorizes the discrimination in the act in allowing credit for amounts paid to such companies, without providing for a corresponding allowance for amounts paid to individual sureties.

• X. Foreign companies.

a. Power to act as surety.

The justification of a foreign surety company as surety on proposed bonds to obtain the discharge of a lien will be deemed sufficient, as against an objection which presents no facts sufficient to overcome the presumption of its solvency, where it appears that such company has 48 L. R. A.

been duly authorized to transact the business of fidelity and guaranty insurance within the state, and has been found solvent on an examination pursuant to N. Y. Laws 1893, chap. 720, as amended by N. Y. Laws 1895, chap. 178, and has subsequently filed a sworn statement showing its continued solvency. Re Keogh, 22 Misc. 747, 50 N. Y. Supp. 998.

A foreign trust company which has complied with the law in relation to doing business in the state may become the surety on a bond in an attachment suit, under Mo. Rev. Stat. 1859, § 2839, authorizing the creation of corporations which shall have power to execute as principal or surety any bond or bonds required to be given in any proceeding in law or equity in any court, and § 2848a, providing that any company doing business in the state may become sole guarantor or surety on any bond required by the laws of the state, any other statute to the contrary notwithstanding, although § 527, relating specially to attachment bonds, provides that there shall be one or more sureties, "resident householders" of the county in which suit is to be brought. Steppacher v. McClure, 75 Mo. App. 135.

A foreign surety company duly authorized to transact business in the state as surety on the obligations of persons may be accepted as surety on the bond of a nonresident plaintiff in a civil action, under Conn. Pub Acts 1885, p. 469, authorizing corporations of other states, organized for the purpose of transacting business as surety on obligations of persons or corporations, to transact such business in Connecticut under specified conditions, and Conn. Pub Acts 1885, p. 469, providing that any company authorized to transact business as surety on obligations of persons or corporations may be accepted as surety on the bond of any person or corporation required by law to execute a bond, "in lieu of any surety or sureties as now required by law," it being the intent and meaning of such act to enable corporations created for the purpose to become the surety on bonds required by law, although Conn. Gen. Stat. § 596, requires that, before a magistrate can issue process in a civil action in which the plaintiff is a nonresident, the latter shall enter into a recognizance, with "some substantial inhabitant of this state" as surety. Lovejoy v. Isbell, 70 Conn. 557, 40 Atl. 531.

Less v. Ghio, 92 Tex. 651, 51 S. W. 502, which reverses the decision of the court of civil appeals, 49 S. W. 635, holds that a foreign corporation may become a surety on a guardian's bond, under Tex. Gen. Laws, 25th Legis. p. 244, chap. 165, authorizing specified corporations to 68, 30 L. ed. 578, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 26, 32 L. ed. 585, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 22, sub nom. Bozman v. Lewis, 25 L. ed. 989; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 28 L. ed. 1145, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730; Tinsley v. Anderson, 171 U. S. 101, 43 L. ed. 91, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 305; Ho Ah-Kow v. Numan, 5 Sawy. 560, Fed. Cas. No. 6546; Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; Duncan v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 377, 38 L. ed. 485, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 570; Fraser v. McConway & T. Co. 6 Pa. Dist. R. 555.

This act is not a police law.

Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Jacksonville, 67 Ill. 37, 16 Am. Rep. 611; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep.

273; State v. Goodwill, 33 W. Va. 179, 6 L. R. A. 621, 10 S. E. 285; Sayre v. Phillips, 148 Pa. 482, 16 L. R. A. 49, 24 Atl. 76; Fraser v. People use of School Fund, 141 Ill. 171, 16 L. R. A. 492, 31 N. E. 395; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499; Com. v. Zacharias, 181 Pa. 126, 37 Atl. 185; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Com. v. Snyder, 182 Pa. 633, 38 Atl. 356; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. ed. 819, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418; Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 49, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 757; Collins v. New Hampshire, 171 U. S. 30, 43 L. ed. 60, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 768; Hawker v. New York, 170 U. S. 189, 42 L. ed. 1002, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 573.

Mitchell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The single question in this case is the con-become sureties on various classes of bonds, including that of guardians' bonds, and making no distinction between domestic and foreign corporations, as such provision is not in conflict with Tex. Gen. Laws, 25th Legis. p. 52, authorizing any bond required to be given by a guardian to be subscribed by at least two good and sufficient sureties, with the proviso that such bond may be made by corporations organized or created under the laws of Texas for the purpose of issuing surety, guaranty, or indemnity bonds.

The provision of the act of Congress of August 13, 1894, § 1, that any bond or undertaking required to be given with one or more sureties shall be sufficient when executed solely by a corporation incorporated under the laws of the United States or of any state, having power to guarantee the fidelity of persons holding positions of public or private trust, and to execute and guarantee bonds and undertakings in judicial proceedings, applies to all parts of the United States, including Indian territory, and to all its courts, so far as their judicial proceedings are concerned, and to that extent modifies Manf. (Ark.) Dig. § 5301, adopted in the Indian territory, providing that the surety in every bond must be a resident of the state, worth double the amount to be secured, and have property liable to execution in the state equal to the sum to be secured. Ranney-Alton Mercantile Co. v. Mineral Belt Constr. Co. (Ind. Terr.) 48 S. W. 1028.

The provision of Pa. act. June 26, 1895, P. L. 343, that a company incorporated under the laws of any state or foreign country, authorized by its laws to guarantee the fidelity of persons holding places of trust and to execute bonds and undertakings, which has deposited in such state or county, with the proper officer, a fund of $100,000 of a specified character, shall, after satisfying the insurance commissioner of Pennsylvania that this has been done, and procuring his certificate, be authorized to become and be accepted as sole surety on all bonds, undertakings, and obligations required or permitted by law, without any reference to the amount of the undertaking or the extent to which such company has already entered into other obligations,—is invalid. Re American Banking & T. Co. 4 Pa. Dist. R. 757.

Such act is held in Re Surety Bonds, 4 Pa. Dist. R. 669, to apply only to foreign corporations, and not to domestic corporations, for which provision is made by Pa. act May 9, 1890, Pub. Laws, 159, and Pa. act June 27, 1895, P. L. 399.

48 L. R. A.

A foreign surety company which has filed with the insurance commissioner a designation of some person residing in the state on whom service of summons may be made may become a surety on an undertaking on appeal, although it has not filed such designation with the secretary of state, as required by Cal. Stat. 1871-72, p. 826, which relates to foreign corporations, as Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1056, provides that the insurance commissioner shall have the same powers to examine the affairs of corporations organized for the purpose of becoming surety on bonds or undertakings as he has in other cases, and shall require them to file similar statements, and issue to them a similar certificate that they are authorized to transact business in the state. Gutzell v. Pennie, 95 Cal. 598, 30 Pac. 836.

b. Power to act as trustee, etc.

A trust company organized under the laws of a state, which complies with the provisions of the act of Congress of October 1, 1890, providing for the incorporation of trust companies within the District of Columbia, is included within the provision of § 31, that no bond or other collateral security, except as hereinafter stated, shall be required from any trust company "incorporated under this act," as such company thereafter does business only by virtue of its incorporation under such act, and not under any previous incorporation under a state law. Re Turley, 9 Mackey, 815.

A foreign trust corporation cannot act in Illinois as a trustee under a trust deed, with active duties to perform, without complying with the provision of the Illinois trust companies act of 1887, as amended in 1889, relating to Illinois corporations incorporated for the purpose of accepting or executing trusts, and requiring such companies before accepting any appointment to deposit $200,000 with the auditor of public accounts for the benefit of its creditors, as the Illinois general incorporation law, § 26, providing that foreign corporations doing business in the state shall be subject to all the liabilities, restrictions, and duties imposed on domestic corporations, makes the act regulating trusts applicable to foreign as well as domestic corporations. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Lake Street Elev. R. Co. 173 Ill. 439, 51 N. E. 55.

The Illinois appellate court took substantially the same view in 68 Ill. App. 666, and also the Cook county superior court as reported in 12 Nat. Corp. Rep. 428. J. H. H.

stitutionality of the act of June 24, 1895 (P. L. 248), authorizing a receiver, assignee, guardian, committee, trustee, executor, or administrator, required by law or by order of court to give bond as such, to include as part of his lawful expenses in executing the trust such reasonable sum as he may have paid to a company authorized by the law of this state to do so, for becoming his surety, as may be allowed by the court in which he is required to account. It is objected principally that this act contravenes the clause of § 7, art. 3, of the Constitution, which prohibits the legislature from passing any local or special law "granting to any corporation . . . any special or exclusive privilege or immunity." But the objection wholly fails to observe the fundamental distinction between corporations and natural persons. All corporate franchises are special and exclusive privileges or immunities, discriminative against individuals. The act of incorporation itself is a discrimination as to privileges, powers, and liabilities against the natural person. Under the general corporation act of April 29, 1874 (P. L. 73), constructed with great care for the express purpose of carrying out the provisions of the Constitution, any five persons, only three of whom need be citizens of this commonwealth, may procure themselves to be a corporation for any one of thirty-seven different classes of purposes of business, charity, or entertainment, and thereby acquire privileges and immunities which they did not have before as natural persons, and which no individuals, singly or collectively, can obtain except through the same process. And if the incorporators are as many as nine in number, they may, under the same or other acts, as canal, railroad, plank-road, turnpike, or other companies, assume for themselves still greater privileges, even to that of the state's power to take private property against the owner's will for a nominal public use, which, everybody knows, is in substance nothing but a purely commercial venture for the benefit of the private persons engaging in it. The Constitution does not prohibit these special privileges of corporations as compared with individuals. On the contrary, it intends throughout to provide that they shall be put freely within common reach by means of general laws. The evils of special legislation were so apparent that, whether with wise forethought or not, is perhaps not yet clear, the Constitution threw down the bars and opened the gates to the free entry of those gigantic combinations of capital with corporate privileges which are beginning to assume, not only supreme business, but important political aspects. The special legislation at which the constitutional prohibition was aimed was wholly different from this. In Price's Index to Local Legislation in Pennsylvania there are 1,032 pages containing references to more than 45,000 local acts (not including special acts not local in character), more than 10,000 of which are 48 L. R. A.

acts relating to special corporations by name. In Ayars' Appeal, 122 Pa. 266, 2 L. R. A. 577, 16 Atl. 356, it was said by Sterrett, J., that, "during the session of the legislature immediately preceding the adoption of the present Constitution, nearly 150 local or special laws were enacted for the city of Philadelphia, more than one third that number for the city of Pittsburgh, and for other municipal divisions of the state about the same proportion. This was by no means exceptional." An examination with some care, though by no means exhaustive, of the Pamphlet Laws of 1873, shows a list of over 400 acts granting, amending, extending, and enlarging charters, and conferring upon particular corporations, by name, certain special franchises and privileges, not enjoyed by others under the general law. Among the latter are seven acts, specially exempting corporations named from taxation (mostly, it may be said, upon parsonages and church lots),—one exempting a dramatic association from license tax; one releasing the collateral-inheritance tax upon a bequest to a learned society; one releasing building restrictions on land contained in a patent from the commonwealth; four authorizing the sale of burial grounds and other lands held upon trusts; one confirming purchases and sales of land by saving-fund and building associations in a single county; another legalizing an overissue of stock by two building associations named; one to enable a foreign corporation named to hold land in Pennsylvania; one to authorize an agricultural society to allow public and private sales of merchandise on its grounds; one to enable a bridge company to construct a turnpike road; another to permit an iron company to build a telegraph line for its own use; two making penal offenses of trespassing on railroad cars in certain counties, and of loitering about the depots, etc., of railroads in a particular borough; one authorizing a railroad named to occupy a particular street in the city of Philadelphia; and another permitting a particular street-railway company in the same city to salt its tracks to aid in keeping them clear of snow. These were the product of a single session, and are a fair sample of one class of the special laws at which the constitutional prohibition was directed. Many of these acts—perhaps a large majority of them—were just and proper, and the privileges conferred could now be obtained under the general laws. But the system was inherently liable to favoritism, and was open to the popular suspicion that it was practically governed by influences not beneficial to the public interests. Therefore the Constitution did away with it at one sweep. The methods and forms of favoritism, as of other fraud, are legion, and no enumeration of them in advance could be complete. Therefore the constitutional restrictions had, to a great extent, to be expressed in general terms, and the inadequacy of language to express the purpose with entire precision, as well as the determination of the framers of the instrument to make the prohibition effective at all hazards, led to its embodiment in terms that are liable to cover with the letter cases that are not within the spirit and the real intent. Constitutions are not to receive a narrow, or technical, or too literal construction. They get their authority from the adoption of the people, and they are to be read in a broad, and, as far as possible, untechnical, way, to carry out their real purpose. We have recently had occasion to consider with great care the analogous restriction upon local and special laws in relation to school districts in Com. v. Gilligan, 195 Pa. 504, 46 Atl. 124, and, without further enlarging on the subject here, may refer to the remarks and the conclusion there expressed, that in cases of this character, where no legislative effort to evade the restrictions appears, the courts will look beyond the mere form of the act, and examine its true intent and effect, in the light of the purpose of the constitutional restriction. Viewed in this light, the act of 1895 is not at all within the prohibition. The objection is chiefly based on the assumption that the suretyship of a corporation and that of an individual are identical, and that the act, therefore, makes a discrimination between equally qualified sureties for the same service. But this assumption is not sustained by the facts, and overlooks the material distinctions between the qualities of the security afforded. These distinctions are obvious. The individual surety as formerly known was usually a relative or friend who had confidence in the principal, and voluntarily assumed the obligation of answering for the latter's faithful performance of duty. I need not speak of the individual who became surety for pay, for the very name of "professional bail-goer" is a reproach to every branch of the administration of justice which he was allowed to contaminate with his presence. But the voluntary surety, however honest and well qualified at the time of his approval by the court, is liable to the contingencies of business, the changes of value in property, and the inexorable chance of death, which brings his estate into the administration of the law under wholly changed circumstances. Of the happening of any of these contingencies, the only person in position to keep close watch is the principal, and his interest is adverse to making known any doubt as to the sufficiency of his friend, or to assuming the burden of finding a new surety. These are some of the disadvantages even of an honest surety; and if we add to them the risk of a dishonest one, who may dispose of his property on his own scent of danger, or on a friendly hint from his principal, we may have a fair idea of the dangers of which our reports present many illustrations. On the other hand, the surety company included in the provisions of the act of 1895 must have a capital, the amount, nature of investment, and management of which are known and within constant sight of the court and the parties interested. It is obliged to make reports of its condition to the courts and to the commonwealth, and is at all times subject to the visitorial power of the latter; and, finally, it has the sharp incentive of prevention of loss by looking closely after the administration of his trust by its principal, for whom it has become responsible, not from friendly personal confidence, but as a strict business venture. It was said in this case by the learned president of the orphans' court, whose experience entitles his opinion to great weight, that "corporation suretyship is another product of modern thought and ingenuity, and may be said to possess many advantages over individual bail or security. . . . Our daily experience has proved that corporate security and the oversight and management by expert officers of the trust and security companies are highly advantageous, not only to the fiduciary, but to all the parties interested, whether creditors, legatees, or distributees," but, even if this be not so it is plain that while the duties and liabilities of the surety, whether corporation or individual, are the same, and in those respects they stand upon the same plane, yet the qualities and advantages of the security afforded are materially different. It is on this difference that the discrimination in the act of 1895 is founded, and it is a fair and constitutional basis for the legislative discretion. The case is far stronger than Com. v. Vrooman, 164 Pa. 306, 25 L. R. A. 250, 30 Atl. 217, for the act there sustained absolutely prohibited certain business previously lawful to individuals, while the act of 1895 debars no one, but merely gives an incidental advantage to what the legislature held to be a better security.

A second objection considered by the learned judge of the orphans' court, but evidently as a mere makeweight, was that the act creates a special lien in favor of the surety company. This cannot be maintained. Apart from the common-law liens of artisans and vendors dependent on possession, liens must rest on clear statutory authority. There is none here. The act does not give a lien, or even a claim of any kind, to the surety company against the estate. The trustee is allowed a credit, not for what he owes or has agreed to pay, but for what he has paid. Payment by the trustee is a necessary prerequisite to any claim against the estate, and even then it does not come in as a new lien, but on the footing of an ordinary item of expense in the administration of the trust.

The further objection that the act contravenes the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States is too far-fetched to require notice.

Judgment reversed, and record remitted, with directions to consider and determine the item excepted to on its merits, as a reasonable sum paid under the act of 1895.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Missouri ex rel. George R. KENAMORE

v.

Horatio D. WOOD et al.

(.....Mo.....)

1. A claim of the right to inspect beer under a statute cannot constitute a cloud upon title which equity may prevent, even if a cloud upon title can arise with reference to personal property, when the inspection law makes no charge against property, and provides for no remedy except by indictment or criminal information against individuals.
2. An allegation that inspection of beer as required by statute would cause irreparable damage is insufficient basis for equity jurisdiction, when it has no other foundation than a legal conclusion from the statute, and the statute properly construed is satisfied by inspection of the beer while in vats in a manner that would cause no damage.
3. Setting up unconstitutionality of a statute in defense of a criminal information or indictment gives an adequate remedy at law against the statute, which will preclude equitable relief, where it can be enforced only by such criminal proceedings.
4. An injunction against the enforcement of a statute requiring the inspection of beer cannot be granted on the ground that the statute is unconstitutional, where the statute is enforceable only by criminal proceedings, since equity has no jurisdiction to enjoin criminal prosecutions.

(Burgess, J., dissents.)

(March 5, 1900.)

APPPLICATION for a writ of prohibition to arrest further action in certain injunction proceedings to restrain the enforcement of the act providing for the inspection of beer and malt liquors. Writ awarded.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. Edward C. Crow, Attorney General, Samuel B. Jeffries, and W. M. Williams for relator.

Messrs. Boyle, Priest, & Lehmann, Kehr & Tittmann, G. A. Finkelnburg, and Koehler & Reiss, for defendants:

The court is not bound by the terms of the bill, but will inquire into its practical operation and necessary effect, in order to determine its character.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 164; Ho Ah Kow v. Nunan, 5 Sawy. 552, Fed. Cas. No. 6,546;

NOTE.—For injunction to restrain criminal proceedings, see Crighto v. Dahmer (Miss.) 21 L. R. A. 84, and note; also Paulk v. Sycamore (Ga.) 41 L. R. A. 772.

For injunction against enforcement of ordinance, see Rushville v. Rushville Natural Gas Co. (Ind.) 15 L. R. A. 321; Georgia Packing Co. v. Macon (C. C. S. D. Ga.) 22 L. R. A. 775; Augusta v. Burum (Ga.) 26 L. R. A. 340; Deems v. Baltimore (Md.) 26 L. R. A. 541; Farmer v. St. Paul (Minn.) 33 L. R. A. 199; and Cicero Lumber Co. v. Cicero (Ill.) 42 L. R. A. 696.

48 L. R. A.

Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. ed. 819, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465, 24 L. ed. 527; Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 313, 34 L. ed. 453, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 185, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 862; Brimmer v. Rebman, 138 U. S. 78, 34 L. ed. 862, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213; Littlefield v. State, 42 Neb. 223, 28 L. R. A. 533, 60 N. W. 724; Vansant v. Harlem Stage Co. 59 Md. 330; State, North Hudson County R. Co., Prosecutor, v. Hoboken, 41 N. J. L. 71; State v. Wheelock, 95 Iowa, 577, 30 L. R. A. 420, 64 N. W. 620; St. Louis v. Boatmen's Ins. & T. Co. 47 Mo. 150.

As in its practical operation and by its necessary effect the bill will produce revenue many times exceeding the expenses of inspection, it must be held to be a revenue measure, and judged accordingly.

Ho Ah Kow v. Nunan, 5 Sawy. 552, Fed. Cas. No. 6,546; United States v. Tithing Yard, 9 Utah, 273, 34 Pac. 59; Willis v. Standard Oil Co. 50 Minn. 290, 52 N. W. 652; Vannmeter v. Spurrier, 94 Ky. 22, 21 S. W. 337; American Fertilizer Co. v. North Carolina Bd. of Agri. 43 Fed. Rep. 609, 11 L. R. A. 179, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 532; Patapsco Guano Co. v. North Carolina Bd. of Agri. 171 U. S. 354, 43 L. ed. 194, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 862.

Being a revenue as well as an inspection measure, the bill is invalid because not confined to one subject which is clearly expressed in its title.

Mo. Const. art. 4, § 28; Ewing v. Hoblitzelle, 85 Mo. 64; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Miller, 100 Mo. 439, 13 S. W. 677; State v. Morgan, 112 Mo. 202, 20 S. W. 456; State ex rel. Wolfe v. Bronson, 115 Mo. 271, 21 S. W. 1125; Lynch v. Murphy, 119 Mo. 163, 24 S. W. 774; Witzmann v. Southern R. Co. 131 Mo. 612, 33 S. W. 181; State v. Permyer, 76 Mo. 346; State ex rel. Kansas City Park District v. Jackson County Ct. 102 Mo. 531, 15 S. W. 79; State ex rel. Steel v. Baker, 129 Mo. 482, 31 S. W. 924; State ex rel. Kirkwood v. Heege, 135 Mo. 112, 36 S. W. 614; State ex rel. Hixon v. Schofield, 41 Mo. 39; State ex rel. Garth v. Switzler, 143 Mo. 287, 40 L. R. A. 280, 45 S. W. 245.

As a revenue or taxing measure the bill is invalid because it imposes a tax on property for general state purposes in excess of the constitutional limitations.

Mo. Const. art. 10, § 8; St. Louis v. Boatmen's Ins. & T. Co. 47 Mo. 150; St. Louis v. Spiegel, 75 Mo. 145; State ex rel. St. Louis Public Schools v. Tracy, 94 Mo. 217, 6 S. W. 709; Brookfield v. Tooley, 141 Mo. 619, 43 S. W. 387; State ex rel. Garth v. Switzler, 143 Mo. 287, 40 L. R. A. 280, 45 S. W. 245; State ex rel. Armour Packing Co. v. Stephens, 146 Mo. 662, 48 S. W. 929.

The tax imposed by the bill violates the constitutional provision requiring equality and uniformity in taxation.

Mo. Const. art. 10, §§ 3, 4, 6, 7; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23; Deal v. Mississippi County, 107 Mo. 464, 14 L. R. A. 622, 18 S. W. 24; State ex rel. Garth v.

Switzler, 143 Mo. 287, 40 L. R. A. 280, 45 S. W. 245; Turner v. Maryland, 107 U. S. 38, 27 L. ed. 370, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 44; Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, 29 L. ed. 715, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 475; State v. Julow, 129 Mo. 163, 29 L. R. A. 257, 31 S. W. 781; State v. Granneman, 132 Mo. 326, 33 S. W. 784; State v. Walsh, 136 Mo. 400, 35 L. R. A. 231, 37 S. W. 1112.

The act in prohibiting the brewing of malt liquors out of any other cereals than barley and rice is a wanton and unwarranted interference with the freedom of industry and rights of property.

Mo. Const. art. 2, §§ 4, 30; U. S. Const. 14th Amend.; State v. Addington, 12 Mo. App. 214; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34, 2 N. E. 29.

The mode of inspection provided by the bill is destructive of the property inspected.

Mo. Const. art. 2, §§ 4, 30; U. S. Const. 14th Amend.; People v. Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, 107 U. S. 59, 27 L. ed. 383, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 87.

The bill is incapable of being enforced according to its terms.

State, Crow, v. West Side Street R. Co. 146 Mo. 155, 47 S. W. 959.

Gantt, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an original proceeding for a writ of prohibition out of this court to arrest further action by the circuit court of the city of St. Louis in a certain suit now pending therein to obtain a perpetual injunction against the relator herein, as state beer inspector, to restrain him and his deputies from taking any steps whatever to carry out and enforce an act of the general assembly of Missouri entitled "An Act to Create the Office of Inspector of Beer and Malt Liquors of the State, and Providing for the Inspection of Beer and Malt Liquors Manufactured and Sold in this State," approved May 4, 1899.

It appears from the petition of relator that eight corporations and one individual separately engaged in the manufacture of beer in the city of St. Louis joined as plaintiffs in a suit in the St. Louis circuit court for the injunction. Relator alleges his appointment to the office of beer inspector by the governor, and his qualifications as required by the act; that the said eight corporations and single individual were all engaged in the business of brewing beer and other malt products in this state, with the purpose of offering the same for sale; that Judges Horatio D. Wood and Franklin Ferris are two of the circuit judges of the said city of St. Louis, duly elected and qualified, and acting as such. It then avers that in September, 1899, said bill for injunction was filed in division No. 5 of the said circuit court, over which Judge Wood presides, and was, in substance, as follows:

Plaintiffs, in behalf of themselves and all others in the state similarly situated, stated they were, and for many years had been, engaged in the manufacture and sale of beer and other malt liquors; that defendant,

George R. Kenamore, had been recently appointed beer inspector under the act of May 4, 1899; and then set out the act itself in hæc verba as it is found in the Laws of Missouri of 1899, pp. 228 to 231, inclusive; that said Kenamore had qualified under the terms of said act, and claimed to be entitled to discharge the duties thereof, and enforce and carry out the provisions thereof, and has issued a circular letter notifying plaintiffs and all others similarly situated that he intends to enforce said act of May 4, 1899, and every provision thereof, and requiring plaintiffs and all other persons similarly situated to submit their products of beer and other malt liquors to his inspection, and threatens to exact the tax imposed by said act under the name of inspection fees. They then allege that besides themselves there are other brewers at other cities in the state, also engaged in the manufacture and sale of beer, giving a list of them. They then aver that the said brewers of this state annually manufacture not less than 2,250,000 barrels of beer of thirty-one gallons each, of which they sell in Missouri not less than 975,000 barrels of thirty-one gallons each; that of said brewers twelve sell their entire product in this state, and of the remainder the majority sell the largest portion of their product in this state, but that one of them sells more than two thirds of its product, and another four fifths of its product, and another one half of its product outside of this state; that, in addition to the persons named as manufacturing beer in this state, there are persons, firms, and corporations engaged in manufacturing beer in other states, particularly Illinois and Wisconsin, who annually ship into and sell in this state not less than 165,000 barrels of thirty-one gallons each, and about 1,500 barrels of beer and ale are imported from Germany and England; that certain named corporations, firms, and persons are engaged in the manufacture of weiss beer to the amount of 5,200 barrels, of which 4,000 are sold in this state and 1,200 exported; that weiss beer is a malted fermented liquor brewed from wheat, and cannot be made from any other cereal; that lager beer is made commonly of hops, malted barley, and of barley, rye, corn, and any other farinaceous cereal which it is convenient for the brewer to use, and may properly be made of any farinaceous cereal used in conjunction with hops and malt, and such materials so used are entirely wholesome; that beer, whether weiss beer or lager beer, and whatever its manufacture, must, for the purposes of sale, be inclosed in tight packages of glass or wood, and when so prepared for sale by inclosure cannot be opened without injury to the contents, and is never opened except for immediate consumption; that the average price of beer manufactured in this state, exclusive of United States revenue stamps, is $5 per barrel. Plaintiffs then alleged in said bill for injunction that said act of May 4, 1899, was unconstitutional and void, and then proceeded to specify that it violated § 28, art. 4, of the Constitution of Missouri, in that it contained more than one subject in its title, and because the title did not indicate the subject of taxation and revenue; that it also violated § 8, art. 10, of the Constitution of Missouri, in that it exceeded the maximum rate of taxation allowed by the Constitution; that it is violative of § 3, art. 10, of the Constitution, in that it violates the principle of uniformity ordained by the Constitution in said section; that it violates § 4, art. 2, of the Constitution of Missouri, which provides that all persons have a natural right to life, liberty, and the enjoyment of the gains of their own industry, etc., and of § 30, art. 2, which provides that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law;" that said act violates said two last-mentioned sections of the Constitution in this: that the 4th section of said act, which provides that no manufacturers of beer in this state shall use any substance, material, or chemical in the manufacture of beer or other malt liquors "other than pure hops, or pure extract of hops, or of pure barley, malt, or wholesome yeast or rice," is an unreasonable, oppressive, and unconstitutional restraint upon a lawful occupation, and excludes the use of water, which forms the major part of all beer; that the inspection required by the act is of sealed packages, and such an inspection, if carried out, will be destructive of plaintiffs' products, and render them unsalable, and prevent them from pursuing their occupation in this state; that said act is violative of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and § 2, art. 4, of the Constitution of the United States, among other things, in that it discriminates between the brewer who sells in this state and one who exports his products, taxing the first 30 cents a barrel, and the other nothing; that said act of May 4, 1899, is inoperative and void because incapable of execution for the reason that inspection will not determine of what cereals beer is manufactured, and because the inspector and his deputies cannot inspect all the beer manufactured from day to day without subjecting the brewers to ruinous delays; that said act is violative of the Constitution of the United States concerning interstate commerce, being § 8, art. 1, as well as § 2, art. 4, § 10, art. 1, and § 1 of the 14th Amendment; that said act violates the order prescribed by the Constitution of Missouri as to appropriations by the general assembly; that the enforcement of said act would work irreparable injury to plaintiffs and their business. "And the plaintiffs further state that, besides the irreparable damage which will be inflicted upon their property and business by the inspection of beer, as hereinbefore more fully set out, the act in question provides for heavy fines and penalties and the imprisonment of all brewers who fail to conform to its provisions, and who sell their product without submitting the same to such inspection, and who fail to pay the unconstitutional tax imposed by said act; and said act provides that a prosecution and conviction for failure to comply with the terms of said act and of the payment of said tax shall be followed by a forfeiture of the brewer's right to manufacture and sell beer or other malt liquors in this state for a period of two years thereafter, which would cause ruinous damage to plaintiffs' business, and that of others similarly situated, in which much capital is invested, and in which many thousands of persons are employed; that said pretended right to enforce said act and to inflict said penalties and forfeitures, and the said circular letter, constitute a cloud on plaintiffs' title to their property and their business, and a constant menace thereto." The said plaintiffs then conclude their petition as follows: "Wherefore, plaintiffs say that they are without an adequate remedy at law, and they now come into a court of equity, and pray for relief under the facts and circumstances herein stated; and plaintiffs say that, unless the relief hereinafter prayed for is granted, the damage to them and all others similarly situated will be irreparable; wherefore they now pray that an order of injunction may issue out of this court directed to the defendant, the said George R. Kenamore, claiming to be inspector of beer, enjoining and restraining him, his deputies, servants, and agents, and each of them, from enforcing or attempting to enforce said act of the general assembly of May 4, 1899, and from inspecting or attempting to inspect the beer or other malt liquors manufactured or offered for sale by plaintiffs, or others similarly situated, and from collecting or attempting to collect any tax or inspection fees under said act, and from attempting to enforce said act as against the said retail dealers, customers of plaintiffs, and others similarly situated; and that said act of the general assembly be declared null and void, and for such other and further relief as to this honorable court may seem meet and proper under all the circumstances of the case."

43 L. R. A.

It is then averred by relator herein that the Honorable Horatio Wood, judge of the circuit court of St. Louis, division No. 5, granted the following temporary injunction or restraining order:

In the Circuit Court, City of St. Louis, June Term, 1899.

Wednesday, September 27, 1899.

The American Brewing Company et al. v. George R. Kenamore, State Inspector of Beer and Malt Liquors. (No. 54, Dec. T., '99.)

Now come the plaintiffs, and present their petition and application for a temporary injunction herein, and upon consideration thereof it is ordered by the court that the defendant, George R. Kenamore, state inspector of beer and malt liquors, show cause on Wednesday, the 4th day of October, 1899, at 10 o'clock A. M., in courtroom No. 5, why a temporary injunction should not be granted in accordance with the terms of said petition; pending the final hearing of this cause, and that pending the hearing and determination of said application for a temporary injunction, and upon plaintiffs' giving bond in the sum of five thousand dollars, to be approved by the clerk, said defendant, George R. Kenamore, inspector of beer as aforesaid, his deputies, servants, and agents, be and hereby are restrained from enforcing or attempting to enforce the act of the general assembly of May 4, 1899, entitled "An Act Creating the Office of Inspector of Beer and Malt Liquors of This State, and Providing for the Inspection of Beer and Malt Liquors Manufactured and Sold in This State;" and the said George R. Kenamore, his deputies, servants, and agents, are hereby restrained from inspecting or attempting to inspect the beer or other malt liquors manufactured or offered for sale by plaintiffs or others similarly situated, and from collecting or attempting to collect any tax or inspection fees under said act of May 4, 1899, and from attempting to enforce said act as against the retail dealers, customers of plaintiffs, and others similarly situated, referred to in the petition in this cause.

Thereupon relator applied to one of the judges of this court in vacation, and procured a provisional writ of prohibition against further action in said injunction proceeding. Relator avers that by said injunction he and his deputies were restrained and forbidden to perform their duties under the act of May 4, 1899, that the said circuit court exceeded its jurisdiction, and prayed that it might be prohibited from taking or further entertaining jurisdiction of said injunction.

1. The question for decision is whether this court can properly and lawfully prohibit the circuit court from further taking cognizance of the application made to it by the plaintiffs in said injunction case. This depends upon whether that court was entirely wanting in jurisdiction to grant said injunction on the showing made in the petition, or whether, granting it had jurisdiction in that class of cases, it has not exceeded its jurisdiction. Whether the circuit court was without jurisdiction altogether, or, having jurisdiction of the class of cases in which the injunction was sought, exceeded its jurisdiction, is only ascertainable in this case by the averments in the bill filed in that court and the orders made thereon. The fact that said court was a court of general equity jurisdiction, and has the power to issue or direct writs of injunction to issue, will not of itself answer the contention made in this case. Courts of equity are not invested with power to enjoin in any and every case, but there must be some special circumstances bringing the case under some recognized head of equity jurisdiction before it will wield the powerful writ of an injunction. By means of the process of exclusion and inclusion we will be greatly aided in reaching the sufficiency of the petition to state a case belonging to a class in which courts of equity are authorized to grant injunctive relief. State ex rel. McCaffery v. Aloe, 152 Mo. 460, 47 L. R. A. 193, 54 S. W. 494. The bill obviously seeks relief upon the idea of the unconstitutionality of the law, irreparable damage, multiplicity of suits, and a cloud upon title. The act of May 4, 1899, is incorporated in the bill as the foundation of all the various grounds of relief.

The allegation as to "cloud upon title" is simply that the circular letter of the state beer inspector, notifying plaintiffs therein that they must submit their product for inspection, and his pretended right to enforce the said act, will constitute a cloud upon their title to their property and business, and a menace thereto. That this averment, taken in connection with the statement of the provisions of the law itself, fails to bring the plaintiffs within that class of cases in which equity will interpose to prevent a cloud upon title, seems too clear to doubt. That jurisdiction is limited to cloud upon title to real estate. It would seem to be elementary that, in legal parlance cloud upon title arises with reference to real estate only. 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 150, and cases cited. This is the settled law of this state. Lockwood v. St. Louis, 24 Mo. 20; Leslie v. St. Louis, 47 Mo. 474; Warrensburg ex rel. Colbern v. Miller, 77 Mo. 56; Sayre v. Tompkins, 23 Mo. 443; Mechanics' Bank v. Kansas, 73 Mo. 555. But in this case the bill negatives all idea of this inspection law affecting the property of plaintiffs therein, in that it is made a purely personal charge against individuals only, and can form no basis, either in law or equity, of a proceeding against their property or business. A failure to pay it can result neither in a judgment, levy, nor seizure of their property, generally or specially; and the bill wholly fails to charge that any suit, lien, levy, or seizure is threatened by the inspector in case of a failure or refusal to submit their product to his inspection. On the contrary, the sole and exclusive remedy is by an indictment or information in a court having jurisdiction over criminal cases. A court of equity, moreover, has no jurisdiction to enjoin the collection of a personal tax or fee when the bill shows no ground for apprehending that the officer will attempt to enforce its collection against the property of the complainant. We desist from further discussion of this point, because, in our opinion, no precedent for an injunction under such a state of facts can be found, and because such an allegation discloses no equity whatever.

In the natural connection, let us now examine the allegation of "irreparable injury." As to this ground, the jurisdiction rests upon well-settled principles. A mere allegation that irreparable injury will ensue is insufficient. Traversable facts must be stated in the bill, which show that plaintiffs cannot have an adequate remedy at law, or that the injury cannot be compensated by an action for damages as such. 1 High, Inj. 3d ed. § 34; Clarke v. Ganz, 21 Minn. 387. That a court of equity may enjoin upon some other ground is not the question now, but does this petition aver traversable facts sufficient to state a cause of "irreparable injury?" Dows v. Chicago, 11 Wall. 108, 20 L. ed. 65; Shelton v. Platt, 139 U. S. 596, 35

L. ed. 273, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 646; Verdin v. St. Louis, 131 Mo. loc. cit. 106, 107, 33 S. W. 480, 36 S. W. 52. The statement of such essential facts is jurisdictional. Dows v. Chicago, 11 Wall. 108, 20 L. ed. 65. When we recall that by no possibility can the property of plaintiffs therein be disturbed for the collection of the inspection fee, it is plain we must look elsewhere in the petition for the traversable facts which would work irreparable damage. If found at all, it must be in the allegation that the inspection would necessarily render the beer stale, flat, and unsalable by opening the vessels containing it, for that purpose. It is plain, however, that this averment has no other foundation than the act itself, and is a legal conclusion drawn by learned counsel from the law. Section 7 of the act is the basis of this contention, and is in these words: "It shall be the duty of such inspector to cause to be inspected all beer or other malt liquors brewed or manufactured or sold in this state, and if he shall find that such beer or other malt liquor has been made from pure hops or the pure extract of hops, or of pure barley, malt, or wholesome yeast, or rice, to place upon the package containing such beer or malt liquor his label certifying the same has been inspected and made from wholesome ingredients." The interpretation of this section is one of law. It should receive a reasonable construction,—one which would conform to common sense, and at the same time render the act operative, if possible. So construed, it does not require each barrel or bottle to be opened after it is closed. The learned counsel for the state beer inspector, the officer charged with this inspection, say: "There is but one practical and intelligent method by which the output of lager beer in this state can be inspected; that is, by going direct to the brewery, and taking a sample of their mash, and of the beer that they are fermenting. This method would not, in the slightest manner, interfere with or hinder them in their operations, and would at the same time enable the inspector to inspect hundreds and thousands of gallons of beer from the one sample; for, as the mash is, so must the beer be. The 'mash' is the material from which the beer is brewed. But, should they change the mash after the inspection, they could not possibly change the beer after it was brewed in the fermenting tubs. The fermenting vats are great cooperages, holding each from 500 to 5,000 gallons. Into these the beer is placed for the purpose of fermentation, which is the last act of the brew. After the fermentation, the beer is run off into hogsheads, barrels, and kegs for the market." We think the counsel have given a satisfactory and reasonable construction of the act. So that, if the brewers elect to stand upon their construction that the act is unconstitutional, they need not submit to an inspection, but may refuse to pay the fees therefor, and defend the indictments and informations, if any are found, on the ground of the unconstitutionality of the act. On the other hand, if they submit to the law, and their brew is inspected in the vats and large cooperages, no damage whatever can result to their beer from the inspection, and so this court can say there is no case of irreparable damage made out on the face of the petition in the circuit court.

There being, then, neither allegations of traversable facts showing irreparable damage, nor the absence of an adequate remedy at law, or cloud upon title, the case stands upon the allegations of the unconstitutionality of the act of May 4, 1899, and the complaint that they would be annoyed by a multiplicity of prosecutions for the violation of said act. Now, a court of equity has no jurisdiction to enjoin criminal prosecutions, and yet the petition for the injunction in the circuit court asked and the restraining order prohibited the inspector and his deputies from doing anything to carry out the provisions of the act. He can make no inspections, collect no fees, nor institute any prosecution for violation of the act. Injunctions to prevent criminal prosecutions have been held so completely beyond the jurisdiction of courts of chancery that their decrees in such cases have been disregarded as absolutely void in collateral proceedings, and parties arrested for contempt for violating their injunctions discharged on habeas corpus. Re Sawyer, 124 U. S. 200, 31 L. ed. 402, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 482. In this case the mere fact that the injunction is not asked against the prosecuting attorney of the state eo nomine can make little or no difference. This court must look at the effects of said restraining order and prayer for injunction, and determine whether or not it enjoins, or will enjoin, if granted, the institution of criminal proceedings to enforce the act. Thus, in Brighton v. Dahmer, 70 Miss. 602, 21 L. R. A. 84, 13 So. 237; Re Sawyer, 124 U. S. 200, 31 L. ed. 402, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 482; Yellowstone Kit v. Wood, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 683, 43 S. W. 1068; and New Home Sewing Mach. Co. v. Fletcher, 44 Ark. 139,—the prosecuting or circuit attorneys were not made parties to enjoin the prosecutions, but this did not deter the courts from holding that the purpose of the bills was to enjoin criminal prosecutions, and that courts of equity had no such jurisdiction. A case strikingly in point is Fitts v. McGhee, 172 U. S. 516, 43 L. ed. 535, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269. An act of the general assembly of Alabama, approved February 9, 1895, prescribed certain maximum rates of toll to be charged on the bridge across the Tennessee river between the counties of Colbert and Lauderdale, in that state, known as the "Florence Bridge." It also provided that if the owners, lessees, or operators of the bridge, by themselves or their agents, demanded or received from any person a higher rate of toll than was prescribed by the act, they should forfeit $20 for each offense, to be recovered before any justice of the peace in either of said counties. McGhee and Fink, receivers of the Charleston & Memphis Railroad, filed a bill in the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Alabama against the state of Alabama, William C.

Oates, governor thereof, and Fitts, the attorney general of said state, alleging, among other things, that the rates of toll fixed by said act were arbitrary, unreasonable, and amounted virtually to confiscation of plaintiff's property; that said act was unconstitutional, and deprived them of their property without due process of law, and denied them the equal protection of the law; that the provision imposing the penalty for demanding or receiving higher tolls than prescribed by the act was intended to deter from questioning the validity of said act; that they were remediless, except by a bill in equity, and prayed for an injunction. The circuit court granted the injunction, and on appeal the Supreme Court of the United States, through Mr. Justice Harlan, held: First, that the state of Alabama could not be sued in this manner without its assent, at the suit of private persons; and, secondly, that the circuit court of the United States, sitting in equity, was without jurisdiction to enjoin the institution or prosecution of criminal proceedings commenced in the state courts; that to do so would be to invade the domain of the courts of common law. Said the court: "The plaintiffs state that the toll gatherers in their service had been indicted in a state court for violating the provisions of the act of 1895 in respect of tolls. Let them appear to the indictment, and defend themselves upon the ground that the state statute is repugnant to the Constitution of the United States. The state court is competent to determine the question thus raised, and is under a duty to enforce the mandates of the supreme law of the land. Robb v. Connolly, 111 U. S. 624, 28 L. ed. 542, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 544. And if the question is determined adversely to the defendants in the highest court of the state in which the decision could be had, the judgment may be re-examined by this court upon writ of error. That the defendants may be frequently indicted constitutes no reason why a Federal court of equity should assume to interfere with the ordinary course of criminal procedure in a state court." To the same effect is the decision in Hemaley v. Myers, 45 Fed. Rep. 283, in which Judge Caldwell says: "A man who has a full and complete remedy at law to recover the damages he suffers cannot be heard to say that the damage is irreparable." But counsel for respondents insist that the act copied into and made part of their bill in the circuit court is not, and does not purport to be, a criminal statute. By the 12th section of said act it is provided that all prosecutions for fines and penalties under said act shall be either by indictment or information in any court of competent jurisdiction, and by the 10th section it is provided that "any person who shall sell any beer or malt liquors within this state which has not been inspected according to the provisions of this act," etc., "shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment in the county jail not less than six months," etc. If these words do not define a criminal offense, then it will be 48 L. R. A. difficult to find appropriate language for that purpose. Plaintiffs in the injunction cannot be proceeded against in any other manner than by indictment or information. This is not a mere quasi-criminal proceeding, as the prosecution for violation of a city ordinance; it is a criminal statute of the state; and the allegations of the bill as to "heavy fines and imprisonment" can have no reference to the staying of any other proceeding, and the object in view can only be to enjoin these criminal prosecutions. Such prosecutions will not affect defendants' property rights, and an injunction is not necessary to preserve their rights to any of their property. Yellowstone Kit v. Wood, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 683, 43 S. W. 1068; New Home Sewing Mach. Co. v. Fletcher, 44 Ark. 139; High, Inj. §§ 20, 68, 272, 1244; Beach, Inj. §§ 59, 60, 574. The result of our examination is that the petition in the circuit court did not, and in the very nature of the case could not, under the act of May 4, 1899, allege facts which brought the case under any recognized head of equity jurisprudence.

The case stands upon the naked averment that the law is unconstitutional, and the inspection fee illegal; the remaining averments wholly failing to make a case under any decision of this court for injunctive relief. In Dows v. Chicago, 11 Wall. 108, 20 L. ed. 65, Mr. Justice Field, voicing the unanimous judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States in a suit to restrain the collection of a tax levied by the city of Chicago on the ground of its unconstitutionality, said: "Assuming the tax to be illegal and void, we do not think any ground is presented by the bill justifying the interposition of a court of equity to enjoin its collection. The illegality of the tax, and the threatened sale of the shares for its payment, constitute of themselves alone no ground for such interposition. There must be some special circumstances attending a threatened injury of this kind distinguishing it from a common trespass, and bringing the case under some recognized head of equity jurisdiction before the preventive remedy of injunction can be invoked. It is upon taxation that the several states chiefly rely to obtain the means to carry on their respective governments, and it is of the utmost importance to all of them that the modes adopted to enforce the taxes levied should be interfered with as little as possible. Any delay in the proceedings of the officers upon whom the duty is devolved of collecting the taxes may derange the operations of government, and thereby cause serious detriment to the public. No court of equity will, therefore, allow its injunction to issue to restrain their action except where it may be necessary to protect the rights of the citizen whose property is taxed, and he has no adequate remedy by the ordinary processes of the law. It must appear that the enforcement of the tax would lead to a multiplicity of suits, or produce irreparable injury, or, where the property is real estate, throw a cloud upon the title of the complainant, before the aid of a court of equity can be invoked. In the cases where equity has interfered in the absence of these circumstances it will be found, upon examination, that the question of jurisdiction was not raised, or was waived." This explicit statement of the law is fully sustained by the great weight of authority in this country. Cruickshank v. Bidwell, 176 U. S. 73, 44 L. ed. 377, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 280; Shelton v. Platt, 139 U. S. 591, 35 L. ed. 273, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 646; Allen v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 139 U. S. 661, 35 L. ed. 303, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 682; Union P. R. Co. v. Cheyenne, 113 U. S. 516, 28 L. ed. 1098, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 601; Cooley, Taxn. p. 536; United Lines Teleg. Co. v. Grant, 137 N. Y. 7, 32 N. E. 1005; Franklin v. Appel, 10 S. D. 391, 73 N. W. 259; Thomas v. Rowe (Va.) 22 S. E. 157. Nowhere is the doctrine more forcibly and correctly stated than in Heywood v. Buffalo, 14 N. Y. 534.

Having examined the various allegations of the bill for injunction, in our opinion it did not state a case which fell within the class of which the circuit court had jurisdiction to grant an injunction, for the reason that the alleged unconstitutionality of the law alone furnishes no ground for injunction; and because the circuit court had no jurisdiction to prevent the institution of criminal proceedings by the inspector by information to punish violations of said act, and because, in our opinion, the bill otherwise charges no traversable facts showing a want of an adequate remedy at law, but, on the contrary, shows that the courts of law are open to the plaintiffs in said case to make their defense to any prosecution under said act, and that the act of May 4, 1899, does not require an inspector to open sealed packages of beer after they are closed to inspect the same, but may inspect said beer or malt liquors before put in the closed barrels or bottles. For these reasons we think the provisional rule of prohibition should be made absolute against Judge Wood and the circuit court over which he presides, but, as Judge Ferris took no part in the case, it is ordered dismissed as to him.

Brace, Marshall, and Valliant, JJ., concur.

Sherwood, J., not being present at the hearing, takes no part in the decision.

Burgess, J., dissenting:

I respectfully dissent from the opinion rendered in this case by a majority of the court, which holds that the St. Louis circuit court was without jurisdiction of the subject-matter of controversy in the injunction proceeding of the American Brewing Company against George R. Kenamore, state inspector of beer and malt liquors, and that prohibition would lie against the judge of the court before whom the proceeding was pending to prevent him from proceeding with the case, and to annul the restraining order which had theretofore been issued in the case. The petition in that case, omitting the formal parts, is as follows:

"Plaintiffs bring this suit on behalf of themselves and all others in the state of Missouri similarly situated, and state that the American Brewing Company, the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association, the Columbia Brewing Company, the Consumers' Brewing Company, the Home Brewing Company, the National Brewery Company, the St. Louis Brewing Association, and the Wm. J. Lemp's Brewing Company, the above-named plaintiffs, are business corporations duly organized under the laws of the state of Missouri, and are each and all of them authorized by their charters to engage in the manufacture and sale of beer and other malt liquors, and they are now, and have been for many years past, engaged in that occupation in the city of St. Louis, and state of Missouri; and also that Louis Obert is a citizen of this state, and is engaged in the manufacture and sale of beer and other malt liquors, and is now, and has been for many years past, engaged in that occupation in the city of St. Louis and state of Missouri. Plaintiffs further state that the defendant, George R. Kenamore, has recently been appointed by the governor of the state of Missouri as beer inspector, under and by virtue of an act of the general assembly entitled 'An Act Creating the Office of Inspector of Beer and Malt Liquors of the State, and Providing for the Inspection of Beer and Malt Liquors Manufactured and Sold in This State,' approved May 4, 1899. [The act is then set out in full, and is to be found in Mo. Laws 1899, pp. 228-231. inclusive.] Plaintiffs state that the said defendant, Kenamore, had qualified under the terms of said act of the general assembly, and claims to be entitled to act as such beer inspector, and entitled to discharge the duties thereof, and claims to be entitled to enforce and carry out the provisions of said act of the general assembly, and to that end has appointed his deputies as therein provided, and has also issued a circular letter notifying plaintiffs and all other persons in this state similarly situated that he intends to enforce said act of May 4, 1899, and each and every provision thereof, and requiring plaintiffs and all others similarly situated to submit their products of beer and other malt liquors to his inspection, and also threatens to exact the illegal tax imposed by said act under the name of inspection fees, as hereinafter more fully set forth. And plaintiffs state that defendant has also sent a circular letter to the retail dealers in beer and malt liquors in this state,—that is to say, to plaintiffs' customers,—pretending that said act of May 4, 1899, is applicable to them, and threatening them with the penalties of said act if they continue to sell beer or malt liquors not stamped in accordance with said act of May 4, 1899. Plaintiffs further state that, besides these plaintiffs, there are other persons, firms, and corporations engaged in the manufacture and sale of beer in the state of Missouri, as follows: At Kansas City, Missouri: The Ferdinand Heim Brewing Company, J. D. Her Brewing Company, G. Muehlbach Brewing Company. At St. Charles, Missouri: Jacob Moerschel, Charles Schibi. At Ste. Genevieve, Missouri: The Ste. Genevieve Brewing &

Lighting Association. At St. Joseph, Missouri: The M. K. Goetz Brewing Company, John Jester, the St. Joseph Brewing Company. At Sedalia, Missouri: The Moerschel Brewing Company. At Springfield, Missouri: The Springfield Brewing Company. At Washington, Missouri: John B. Busch. At Weston, Missouri: The Weston Brewing Company. At Cape Girardeau Missouri: The Cape Brewing & Ice Company. At Hannibal, Missouri: Herl-Rodlin Brewing Company, Elizabeth Reidel. At Hermann, Missouri: Hugo Kropp. At Jefferson City, Missouri: The Capital Brewing Company. At Appleton, Missouri: Casper Ludwig. That the plaintiffs and the persons, firms, and corporations last hereinbefore named manufacture annually not less than 2,500,000 barrels of beer of thirty-one gallons each; of which amount they sell in the state of Missouri not less than 1,275,000 barrels of thirty-one gallons each; and outside of the state of Missouri not less than 975,000 barrels of thirty-one gallons each. That of the parties plaintiff and the persons, firms, and corporations named, twelve sell their product in the state of Missouri, and that a majority of the remainder sell the largest portion of their product in this state, but that one of the parties above mentioned sells more than two thirds of its product, and another of the parties sells about four fifths of its product, outside of the state, and that another one of said parties sells more than one half of its product outside of this state; that, with the exception of the three companies last referred to, all the brewers manufacturing in the state of Missouri sell either all or the greater portion of their product in the state. That, in addition to the persons, firms, and corporations hereinbefore mentioned as manufacturing and selling beer in the state of Missouri, there are persons, firms, and corporations engaged in manufacturing beer in other states, and particularly in the states of Illinois and Wisconsin, who annually ship into and sell in the state of Missouri not less than 165,000 barrels of beer of thirty-one gallons each, all of which will more fully appear by affidavits herewith filed. That, in addition, there are large quantities of ale imported from other states in the Union. That, in addition to the foregoing, there are imported into the state by various persons, firms, and corporations engaged in the sale of beer, large quantities of beer from foreign countries, and especially beer from Germany and ale from England, and that the aggregate amount of beer and ale thus imported from Germany and from England, together with the ale imported from other states of the Union and sold in this state, amounts in the aggregate to an annual importation and sale of about 1,500 barrels. That there are engaged in the manufacture of beer known as 'weiss beer' the following persons, firms, and corporations: At St. Louis, Missouri: The St. Louis Weiss Beer Brewing Company, Schradler Berlina Valena Company, Stecher & Thomas, Wittman-Rost Brewing Company, American Weiss Beer Company, Berliner Imported Weiss Beer Company, Columbia Weiss Beer Company. At Kansas City, Missouri: W. L. Schnick, P. Seltzer & Sons, Bremer & Thoma. That about 5,200 barrels of weiss beer are manufactured in this state annually, of which about 4,000 barrels are sold in Missouri, and 1,200 barrels are exported. That weiss beer is a malted and fermented liquor, brewed from wheat, and has always been so brewed, and cannot be made from any other cereal. That lager beer is made commonly of hops, of malted barley, and of barley, rye, corn, and other farinaceous cereals which it may be convenient for the brewer to use, and it may be properly made of any farinaceous cereal used in conjunction with hops and malt in the production of lager beer; and such cereals when so used are entirely wholesome. That beer, whether weiss beer or lager beer, and whatever cereals may be used in its manufacture, must, for purposes of sale, be inclosed in tight packages of glass or wood, and when so prepared for sale by enclosure in such tight packages the packages cannot be opened without injury to the contents, and are never opened except for purposes of immediate consumption. That to open the same prior to the consumption thereof is to render the beer stale, flat, unpalatable, and sour. And plaintiffs say that the average price or value of beer manufactured and sold in this state, exclusive of United States revenue stamps, is $5 per barrel of thirty-one gallons. Plaintiffs further state that they are advised and believe, and so charge, that said act of the general assembly of May 4, 1899, hereinabove fully set out, is unconstitutional, inoperative, and void, and that it is against common right, and of no binding force, validity, or effect so far as these plaintiffs and all others similarly situated are concerned, for the following reasons, to wit:

48 L. R. A.

"(1) The said act of the general assembly of May 4, 1899, violates § 28, art. 4, of the Constitution of the state of Missouri, which provides that no bill (except certain bills therein specifically designated) shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title. Plaintiffs state that the said act of May 4, 1899, does not come within any of the exceptions in said constitutional provision enumerated, but that said act, nevertheless, does contain more than one subject, in that it provides specifically of what material beer and other malt liquors shall be manufactured in this state, and also provides for an inspection of all beer and malt liquors sold in this state; and said act further contains a revenue measure, in this: that the inspection fee authorized by the said act to be charged on account of the inspection of beer and malt liquors is in fact a tax. The entire expense of the inspection, as provided by the act itself, amounts to $12,000 a year, while the inspection fees upon the beer annually sold in this state, as hereinbefore set forth, amount to not less than $555,000, an excess of more than half a million dollars above the cost of inspection, which excess of half a million of dollars is, by the terms of the act, and by its necessary operation and effect, a specific tax upon beer sold in this state, and is levied for the purpose, and is required by the said act to be turned into the general revenues of the state for the uses of such general revenue. And plaintiffs state that said bill as introduced in the senate of the state of Missouri was recognized by its framer to be a revenue bill, and was entitled when the same was introduced, 'An Act Creating the Office of Inspector of Beer and Malt Liquors, and Providing for an Increase in the General Revenue of the State,' and that the said bill was treated throughout as a revenue measure, and was supported as such by those who advocated it and voted for it in the senate and in the house of representatives of the Missouri general assembly; but, nevertheless, the title of the said act, while the same was pending in the senate, was amended to read as it now stands, and to mention the inspection of beer only, and was left silent as to the other subjects in said act contained, and as thus amended the said act passed the senate, and was sent to the house, and there passed, and as the said bill passed the senate and house there was nothing in its title to express or indicate that it relates to the subject of taxation or revenue.

"(2) Because said act of the general assembly is violative of § 8, art. 10, of the Constitution of Missouri, which provides that 'the state tax on property, exclusive of the tax necessary to pay the bonded debt of the state, shall not exceed 20 cents on the $100 valuation; and whenever the taxable property of the state shall amount to $900,000,000, the rate shall not exceed 15 cents.' And plaintiffs show to the court that in the year 1892 the taxable property of this state reached the sum of $900,000,000 in value, of which fact the governor made due proclamation, and thereupon the rate of taxation for state purposes, exclusive of the special tax levied to pay interest on the bonded debt, was by the act of March 24, 1892, reduced to 15 cents on the $100, being the maximum rate allowed by the Constitution, and the general assembly cannot now constitutionally tax property for general state purposes in excess of that rate; that said maximum rate of taxation is now, and has ever since said year 1892 been, imposed upon all property in this state, including beer and all articles entering into the manufacture of beer and other malt liquors. And plaintiffs state that all taxes hitherto imposed by the general assembly up to said maximum limit upon beer and other malt liquors have been duly paid by plaintiffs as they have become due and payable; that under existing laws they are duly authorized and licensed by the state to manufacture and sell beer and malt liquors, for which authority they, and each of them, pay a license fee, and they will be obliged to pay said license fee and the said state tax of 15 cents on the $100 valuation for the current year, and as long as said maximum rate continues to be imposed; but that the act of the general assembly aforesaid, under the guise of an inspection law, proposes to levy an additional tax of 1 cent per gallon, which is equal to $6.20 on the $100 valuation on all beer or other malt liquors manufactured, owned, or offered for sale by plaintiffs and others similarly situated, besides a tax of 2 cents upon each package containing 8 gallons or less of such beer or other malt liquors, which latter is equal to $1.60 on the $100, making a total of $7.80 on the $100 valuation; that this additional tax is not needed for inspection purposes, but, if enforced, would yield a net revenue of more than half a million dollars per annum to the state, after deducting the expenses of inspection and collection, which are limited to $12,000 per annum in said act; that said act is in truth and in fact a revenue measure, and the proposed levy impost, or tax upon all beer or other malt liquors in this state, is a tax on property, to be paid into the state treasury, and to be credited to the general revenue fund, and, as shown by the above figures, is enormously in excess of the limit imposed by said § 8, art. 10, of the Constitution of this state, being in fact fifty-two times as large, and is therefore illegal, unconstitutional, and void.

"(3) Because said act of May 4, 1899, violates § 3, art. 10, of the Constitution of Missouri, which provides that taxes may be levied and collected for public purposes only, and that they shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax; and is also in violation of § 4 of said article 10, which provides that all property subject to taxation shall be taxed in proportion to its value; and plaintiffs state that said act of May 4, 1899, selects one species of property in this state, and imposes an onerous tax of more than 7 per cent on the same for state purposes, which tax is not imposed upon any other property within this state; and said proposed tax, if enforced, would impose double taxation upon one and the same species of property viz., the general property tax of 15 cents on the $100 levied upon all property alike, including beer and the materials entering into its manufacture, and a special property tax of 780 cents on $100 on the same beer, imposed by the act of May 4, 1899. And plaintiffs state that said act of May 4, 1899, selects the finished product of the manufacturers of beer and malt liquors in this state, and imposes upon them an onerous tax of 780 cents on the $100, which tax is not imposed upon the finished product of any other manufacturer in the state, nor upon the goods, wares, and merchandise of any merchant in the state, in violation of the above-recited provision of the Constitution and laws of the state; that no other or greater amount of tax is now levied by law upon merchants in this state, or upon manufacturers in this state, than was levied and assessed upon them by law prior to August 20, 1899, except upon the manufacturers of beer and malt liquors, as against whom said act of May 4, 1899, creates an arbitrary and unwarranted discrimination in taxation, contrary to the Constitution and laws of the state. And plaintiffs state that said act of May 4, 1899, is not uniform in its character as to brewers, but discriminates between the persons engaged in the manufacture and sale of beer in this state, in this: that under the provisions of said act the brewer in Missouri who manufactures for sale within the state is taxed 39 cents per barrel upon his product, while the brewer in Missouri who manufactures for exportation from the state is exempt from such tax, and thereby in fact receives a bounty, which is denied the manufacturer whose product is consumed in this state. And plaintiffs say that, besides being a discrimination in violation of the rule of uniformity imposed by the Constitution, the act is in violation of §§ 6, 7, art. 10, of the Constitution of Missouri, relating to exemptions from taxation, and which prohibit all exemptions of property from taxation except the classes therein specially enumerated, and to which the proposed exemptions in this act do not belong. And plaintiffs state that said act of May 4, 1899, also violates said § 4, art. 10, in this: that it imposes a specific tax on personal property according to quantity and without regard to value. And plaintiffs further state that the beer sold in this state is not all of the same value, nor is it sold upon the market at the same price, but such beer is of different values, and is sold at different prices; but, nevertheless, the tax imposed upon the same by said act of May 4, 1899, is 1 cent per gallon and 2 cents per package, regardless of value.

"(4) Because said act of May 4, 1899, is violative of § 4, art. 2, of the Constitution of Missouri, which provides 'that all persons have a natural right to life, liberty, and the enjoyment of the gains of their own industry; that to give security to these things is the principal office of government, and that when government does not confer this security it fails of its chief design;' and also § 30, art. 2, which provides that 'no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.' And plaintiffs say that said act of May 4, 1899, violates said provisions of the Constitution of Missouri in this: that said act provides that no person or persons engaged in the brewing or manufacture of beer other than malt liquors shall use any substance or material in the manufacture of brewing of beer or other malt liquors other than those mentioned in § 4 of said act, and thereby imposes an unreasonable, oppressive, and unconstitutional restraint upon a lawful occupation, and which plaintiffs have been expressly authorized to engage in by the charters and franchises granted to them by the state of Missouri, and an occupation which every citizen of the United States has a right to engage in; that wholesome and harmless ingredients other than those specified in said § 4 may be properly used in the manufacture of beer. And plaintiffs further state that said § 4 excludes corn, wheat, rye, and other farinaceous cereals, which are properly used in the manufacture of malt liquors, and that weiss beer cannot be made without the use of wheat. And plaintiffs further state that said § 4 excludes the use of at least one ingredient, to wit, water, which is absolutely required, and which forms the major part of all beers and malt liquors; and plaintiffs say that the limitations aforesaid are in violation of the rights secured to the people of this state by the provisions of the Constitution above referred to, and are also against common right, independent of any constitutional provisions. Also in this: that the inspection provided for in said act is an inspection of beer in the packages in which the same is to be put up for sale, and that, owing to the nature of beer and malt liquors, such an inspection, if carried out, will be destructive of plaintiffs' products, and render the same unsalable, and cause great and irreparable damage to their property and business, and prevent them, and each of them, from properly pursuing their occupation as brewers in this state.

"(5) Because said act of May 4, 1899, is violative of § 1 of the 14th article of Amendments to the Constitution of the United States, which provides that 'no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.' And also violates § 2, art. 4, of said Constitution, which provides that the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states. And plaintiffs say that said act of May 4, 1899, violates said provisions of the Constitution of the United States in that said act provides that no person or corporation engaged in the brewing or manufacture of beer or other malt liquors shall use any substance or material in the manufacture or brewing of beer or other malt liquors other than those mentioned in § 4 of said act, and thereby imposes the unreasonable, oppressive, and unconstitutional restraint upon a lawful occupation, and upon an occupation which plaintiffs have been expressly authorized to engage in, and which every citizen of the United States has a right to engage in; that wholesome or harmless ingredients other than those specified in said § 4 may be properly used in the manufacture of beer; that corn, wheat, rye, and other farinaceous cereals are wholesome and are properly used in the manufacture of malt liquors; and that weiss beer cannot be made at all without the use of wheat. And plaintiffs further state that said § 4 of the act of May 4, 1899, also excludes one ingredient, to wit, water, which is absolutely required, and which forms the major part of all beer and malt liquors. And plaintiffs say that said act of May 4, 1899, is an unwarranted, arbitrary, and oppressive exercise of government interference in the lawful occupation of a portion of the citizens of the United States, and that the limitations and restrictions contained in said act are in violation of the rights secured to the people of the United States by the provisions of the Federal Constitution above referred to, and are also against common right, independent of any constitutional provision. Also because the said act of May 4, 1899, violates the above provision of said 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in this: that said act arbitrarily selects the finished product of the manufacturer of beer and malt liquors, and imposes upon such product a tax other and greater than is imposed upon the finished product of any other manufacturer in the state, or upon the property of any other person or class of persons in the state; that by reason of such arbitrary, unjust, and unreasonable discrimination and class legislation said act denies the manufacturers of beer and malt liquors equality before the law, and deprives them of the protection of equal laws to which they are entitled. Said act, moreover, discriminates between the manufacturers of beer and malt liquors in this state, in that the brewer who manufactures for sale within this state is taxed 39 cents per barrel upon his product, while the brewer who exports his product from the state is exempt from such tax.

"(6) Because said act of May 4, 1899, is inoperative and void for uncertainty and for want of adequate and practical provision in the act to carry it into execution; that it is practically, as well as scientifically, impossible by any inspection or analysis of beer or malt liquors to determine whether cereals other than those enumerated in the said act have been used in its manufacture, as will more fully appear from affidavits herewith filed. And plaintiffs state that one inspector and four deputies cannot inspect all the beer manufactured from day to day in the state of Missouri, without subjecting the brewers to ruinous delays; also that beer cannot be made exclusively of the ingredients and substances specified in § 4 of said act, and may properly be made of cereals other than those named in said act; also that, in order to inspect beer in the packages in which it is put up for the market as required by said act, viz., barrels, kegs, and bottles, such barrels, kegs, and bottles must be opened, which would so damage the contents as to render the same unsalable, and unfit for consumption, as will more fully appear from affidavits herewith filed.

"(7) Because said act of May 4, 1899, is repugnant to the provisions of the Constitution of the United States concerning the regulations of interstate commerce, being § 8, art. 1, of said Constitution, as well as § 2, art. 4, of said Constitution, declaring that the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states; and to the 2d clause of § 10, art. 1, of said Constitution, which provides that no state shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws; and is also repugnant to § 1 of the 14th Amendment to said Constitution of the United States, which provides that 'no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.' And plaintiffs say that said act of May 4, 1899, violates the above provisions of the Constitution of the United States in this: that it requires all beer and malt liquors imported into the state of Missouri from other states and territories or foreign countries, while still in original package, and before being offered for sale, to be inspected and labeled, and said tax of 1 cent per gallon and 2 cents per package thereon to be paid; and also to be accompanied by an affidavit from the manufacturer or other reputable person having actual knowledge thereof that no material other than those specified in said act was used in the manufacture of said beer or malt liquor; and also that the person or corporation receiving beer or malt liquors for sale from other states and territories or foreign countries shall, before offering the same for sale, submit the same for inspection as aforesaid, and procure from said inspector a certificate that such beer or malt liquor has been made exclusively of the ingredients specified in said act,—all of which plaintiffs state is in violation of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States hereinbefore set forth. Plaintiffs state that they were on the 20th day of August, 1899, and now are, taxpayers of this state, and as such are interested in the revenue collected and received by the state; that § 43, art. 4, of the Constitution of Missouri, under the head Limitation of Legislative Power, prescribes the order in which the appropriations of the state's revenue shall be made, and provides that 'no general assembly shall have power to make any appropriation of money for any purpose whatever, until the respective sums necessary for the purposes in said section specified have been set apart and appropriated, or to give priority in its action to a succeeding over a preceding item' in the order of appropriation established by said section. And plaintiffs state that the appropriation made by § 14 of the act of May 4, 1899, is illegal and void, because made in disregard of the order of appropriation fixed by said section of the Constitution, and was passed before the respective sums necessary for the seven subjects of appropriation enumerated in said section had been made. Plaintiffs state that the enforcement of said act of the general assembly of May 4, 1899, would, for reasons hereinabove stated, cause irreparable damage to the business and property of these plaintiffs and all other persons similarly situated in this state; that the number of breweries and persons engaged in the brewing of beer and malt liquors in this state, and who are affected by the terms of said act, is large; and that this action is brought by these plaintiffs for themselves and on behalf of all persons similarly situated, in order to avoid a multiplicity of suits and to prevent irreparable damage to the property and business of each of them. And plaintiffs further state that, besides the irreparable damage which will be inflicted upon their property and business by the inspection of beer as hereinbefore more fully set out, the act in question provides for heavy fines and penalties and the imprisonment of all brewers who fail to conform to its provisions, and who sell their product without submitting the same to such inspection, and who fail to pay the unconstitutional tax imposed by said act; and said act provides that a prosecution and conviction for failure to comply with the terms of said act and of the payment of said tax shall be followed by a forfeiture of the brewer's right to manufacture and sell beer or other malt liquors in this state for a period of two years thereafter, which would cause ruinous damage to plaintiffs' business, and that of others similarly situated, in which much capital is invested, and in which many thousands of persons are employed. And plaintiffs say that the pretended right of defendant to enforce said act of May 4, 1899, and to inflict the penalties and forfeitures aforesaid, and the circular letter issued to plaintiffs' customers, constitute a cloud upon the title to their property and upon their right to carry on business, and upon their credit, and constitute a constant and continuous menace to and interference with their business, and a threatened invasion of plaintiffs' right to carry on their lawful avocation as manufacturers. Wherefore plaintiffs say that they are without an adequate remedy at law, and they now come into a court of equity, and pray for relief under the facts and circumstances herein stated; and plaintiffs say that, unless the relief hereinafter prayed for is granted, the damage to them and all others similarly situated will be irreparable. Wherefore they now pray that an order of injunction may issue out of this court directed to the defendant, the said George R. Kenamore, claiming to be inspector of beer, enjoining and restraining him, his deputies, servants, and agents, and each of them, from enforcing or attempting to enforce said act of the general assembly of May 4, 1899, and from inspecting or attempting to inspect the beer or other malt liquors manufactured or offered for sale by plaintiffs, or others similarly situated, and from collecting or attempting to collect any tax or inspection fees under said act, and from attempting to enforce said act as against the said retail dealers, customers of plaintiffs, and others similarly situated, and that said act of the general assembly be declared null and void, and for such other and further relief as to this honorable court may seem meet and proper under all the circumstances of the case."

The other material facts are substantially as stated in the opinion.

I make no serious criticism upon the first paragraph in the opinion when taken as a whole, yet there are statements in it, unnecessary to mention, to which I do not subscribe. While it is conceded that the court granting the injunction is one of general jurisdiction, possessing power to grant such writs, and that it had jurisdiction over the parties, it is held that the court had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, because there were no "traversable facts stated in the bill which show that the plaintiffs could not have an adequate remedy at law, or that the injury cannot be compensated by an action of damages as such, or facts which state a cause of 'irreparable injury.'" 1 High, Inj. 3d ed. § 34; Clarke v. Ganz, 21 Minn. 587; Dows v. Chicago, 11 Wall. 108, 20 L. ed. 85; Shelton v. Platt, 139 U. S. 596, 35 L. ed. 273, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 646, and Verdin v. St. Louis, 130 Mo. loc. cit. 106, 107, 33 S. W. 480, 36 S. W. 52,—are relied upon as sustaining this position. But these authorities merely go to the sufficiency of a petition to authorize the granting of an injunction, a matter with respect to which the court to whom application is, in the first place, made, is the sole judge, and that this court has no right to pass upon except as an appellate tribunal. My position is that the petition in the injunction case can only be looked to in this proceeding for the purpose of determining whether or not the circuit court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of controversy, and, if it had, then the question of its sufficiency is one for its determination, and, if found to be defective, the plaintiffs had the right to amend the same. Rev. Stat. 1899, § 663. And "proceedings which are amendable are not void. The very fact that the court can make the amendment shows ex vi termini that the proceedings are merely erroneous, or irregular, and that the court has jurisdiction." Hardin v. Lee, 51 Mo. 241; Hunt v. Loucks, 38 Cal. 372, 99 Am. Dec. 404; Parmelee v. Hitchcock, 12 Wend. 96; Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. 308, 19 L. ed. 931. The same rule is announced in Ellis v. Jones, 51 Mo. 180: "Whether the particular facts on which the court proceeds in that regard are or are not sufficient to justify its exercise of jurisdiction is a question of law, the solution of which either way cannot impair the court's right to apply its judicial power in the premises according to its view of the law and of the facts before it. For instance, where a court has jurisdiction to render judgments in ordinary civil causes, it would be manifestly improper to issue a writ of prohibition against it on an application alleging that it was about to pronounce such a judgment on a petition which did not state a cause of action, but which the trial court had held sufficient, or because the latter had ruled erroneously that the plaintiff had a legal capacity to maintain the action. A mistaken exercise of a jurisdiction with which the court is by law invested does not furnish a sufficient basis for a prohibition. Such mistake may be reviewed as other errors; for example, by appeal, but not in a proceeding like this." State ex rel. Union Depot R. Co. v. Southern R. Co. 100 Mo. 59, 13 S. W. 398. In Bishop v. Los Angeles County Super. Ct. 87 Cal. 226, 25 Pac. 435, it was held that a writ of prohibition would not lie to restrain the prosecution of an action by city authorities to condemn a right of way for a sewer on account of the absence of an averment or proof that the city authorities were unable to agree with the defendant, or that the local board of the municipal corporation had expressly directed the institution of the proceeding, although the statute under which the proceedings were had provided that "wherever it shall become necessary for the city or town to take or damage private property for the purpose of . . . rights of way for drains, sewers, and aqueducts, . . . and the board of trustees cannot agree with the owner thereof as to the price to be paid, the trustees may direct proceedings to be taken . . . to procure the same." The Missouri statute in regard to the condemnation of land for public use is substantially like that of California, and it has always been held in this state that, in case no agreement can be made with the owner of the land as to compensation, the proceedings are absolutely void if no attempt is made before beginning them to come to an agreement with the owner. Moses v. St. Louis Sectional Dock Co. 84 Mo. 242; Graf v. St. Louis, 8 Mo. App. 562; Wilkinson v. St. Louis Sectional Dock Co. 102 Mo. 130, 14 S. W. 177. And the proceedings must show the offer and failure to make such agreement. Graf v. St. Louis, 8 Mo. App. 562; Moses v. St. Louis Sectional Dock Co. 84 Mo. 242. But, notwithstanding the absence of this jurisdictional question in the condemnation proceedings in the superior court of California, the supreme court refused to prohibit it from proceeding with the case. In Croly v. Sacramento, 119 Cal. 229, 51 Pac. 323, the writ of prohibition was applied for because of alleged insufficiency of the grounds of the accusation. The court said: "But, if the board has jurisdiction to try appellant upon the matters alleged if properly stated, it has power to determine, in the first instance, at least, their formal sufficiency; and this objection should have been made to the board." So in State ex rel. Reid v. Fournet, 45 La. Ann. 943, 13 So. 185, it was said that "the nature of a cause of action is not to be confounded with its sufficiency. The nature of the action determines jurisdiction, and, when that sustains the jurisdiction, the latter cannot be defeated by mere insufficiency of the allegations or of the proofs."

But even if this court had the right to pass upon the sufficiency of the petition for injunction as an original proposition other than for the purpose before stated, it stated a good cause for injunctive relief. The words "irreparable injury," in passing upon this question, are not to be considered by themselves, but are to be considered along with all other allegations of which they form a part. The petition alleges "that the inspection provided for in said act is an inspection of beer in the packages in which the same is put up for sale, and that, owing to the nature of beer and malt liquors, such an inspection, if carried out, will be destructive of plaintiffs' products, and render the same unsalable, and cause great and irreparable damage to their property and business, and prevent them, and each of them, from properly pursuing their occupation as brewers in this state." These are issuable facts, and which it is alleged will cause the "irreparable injury." How could they be more specific? And, if true, it is perfectly clear to my mind that the damages resulting from such acts would be irreparable. But it is said that this averment has no other foundation than § 7 of the act itself, and is a legal conclusion drawn by counsel from the law. The court then construes that section, to the exclusion of all others, as meaning that "there is but one practical and intelligent method by which the output of lager beer in this state can be inspected; that is, by going direct to the brewery, and taking a sample of this mash, and of the beer that they are fermenting. This method would not in the slightest manner interfere with or hinder them in their operations, and would at the same time enable the inspector to inspect hundreds and thousands of gallons of beer from one sample; for, as the mash is, so must the beer be. The 'mash' is the material from which the beer is brewed. But, should they change the mash after the inspection, they could not possibly change the beer after it was brewed in the fermenting tubs. The fermenting vats are great cooperages, holding each from 500 to 5,000 gallons. In these the beer is placed for the purpose of fermentation, which is the last act of the brew. After the fermentation, the beer is run off into hogsheads, barrels, and kegs for the market." It may not be out of place to inquire how the court arrives at these conclusions, in the absence of evidence tending to prove them. They are not matters of which it will take judicial notice, but are susceptible of proof, which the court below had the exclusive right to hear. This section, however, provides that it shall be the duty of the inspector to cause to be inspected all beer, and to place upon the package containing such beer his label certifying that the same has been inspected, etc. There is not one word said in the act about taking a sample of the mash or of the beer that is fermenting, but the only method indicated by this section of the act is inspection by the package, as the words "it shall be the duty of such inspector to cause to be inspected all beer or other malt liquor, and to place upon the package containing such beer or malt liquor his label, certifying that the same has been inspected," etc., clearly mean. By § 8 it is provided that the "inspector shall be entitled to receive for inspecting and gauging 1 cent for each gallon contained in each package. . . . The word 'package,' as used in this act, shall be construed to mean any vessel of any kind other than pint and quart bottles in which any beer or malt liquor may be placed for sale, containing 8 gallons or less; when said beer or malt liquors are placed in pint or quart bottles, a package, as used in this act, shall be construed to mean not to exceed forty 8-pint bottles or twenty 4-quart bottles of beer or malt liquors, which when manufactured and so bottled must, before sale, be placed in suitable cases containing said number and size of bottles, for inspection and stamping by said state inspector." It is utterly inconceivable to me how there can be a difference of opinion as to the meaning of these sections when taken together, for, if the 7th be thought to be indefinite, the 8th says in so many words that the inspector shall be entitled to receive for inspecting and gauging 1 cent for each gallon contained in each package, and 2 cents for labeling each package, and then construes the word "package" to mean any vessel of any kind other than pint or quart bottles, which, when put up in bottles other than pint, must, before sale, be placed in suitable cases containing the requisite number and size of bottles, for inspecting and stamping by the inspector, and, when beer is placed in vessels containing more than 8 gallons, the word "package" shall be construed to mean each 8 gallons, or fractional part thereof, so contained in said vessel. Gauging means to measure, and it is illogical to say that beer could be measured in a package before it is put in it. And with respect to bottled beer, the act in so many words requires that it shall be put up in cases for inspection before sale, and, when placed in vessels containing more than 8 gallons, the word "package" shall be construed to mean each 8 gallons, or fractional part thereof, so contained in said vessel. The act thus in the plainest of terms provides for the inspection of beer when in some of the vessels indicated by it, and it cannot by any fair construction be said that taking a sample of the mash, and the beer which is fermenting, is or would be an inspection of beer within the meaning of the act. But this is not all. By the 5th section of the act (and all of them must be construed together) with respect to beer and other malt liquors other than those manufactured in this state, the inspector is required to inspect and label the packages containing it just as he is the packages of beer manufactured in this state, but no one will contend that he could sample the mash or the beer manufactured out of the state while fermenting. It seems to me that, when these sections are considered in parimateria, there is no escape from the conclusion that the legislature intended that the beer should be inspected after it is put in packages. But, if there were any doubt upon this question, the legislature placed its own construction upon the act by defining what a "package" is, and that construction is binding upon this court. Thus it is said: "Any provision in a statute which declares its meaning or purpose is authoritative. Whether it relates to the objects of a whole act, or of a single section, or of a word, it is a declaration having the force of law. It is binding on the courts, though otherwise they would have understood the language to mean something different. . . . It has been said that an interpretation clause should be used for the purpose of interpreting words which are ambiguous or equivocal, not so as to disturb the meaning of such as are plain. It is often inserted for this purpose, or for abundant caution, that there may be no misapprehension, though the interpretation so directed is not different from that which the language used would otherwise receive. In such cases this provision leads to no difficulties of construction." Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 402. But, even if the statute were of doubtful construction, the court below should have been permitted to pass upon it.

48 L. R. A.

-48 L. R. A.

It is also held that injunction to prevent criminal prosecutions will not lie, and numerous authorities are cited to sustain this position. That this is the law except where the criminal prosecution will affect property rights, and the writ is necessary to preserve such rights, and to prevent repeated prosecutions wrongfully instituted for the purpose of vexing and harassing the defendant therein, will not be controverted. But when property rights will be affected by such a prosecution, and the writ is necessary to protect such rights, injunction will lie. State ex rel. Wood v. Schweickardt, 109 Mo. 490, 19 S. W. 47, and authorities cited. "The subject-matter of the jurisdiction of equity being the protection of private property and of civil rights, courts of equity will not interfere for the punishment or prevention of merely criminal or immoral acts, unconnected with violations of private right. Equity has no jurisdiction to restrain the commission of crimes, or to enforce moral obligations and the performance of moral duties; nor will it interfere for the prevention of an illegal act merely because it is illegal. And in the absence of any injury to property rights it will not lend its aid by injunction to restrain the violation of public or penal statutes, or the commission of immoral and illegal acts." 1 High, Inj. 3d ed. § 20; Re Debs, 158 U. S. 593, 39 L. ed. 1092, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 900; Cranford v. Tyrrell, 128 N. Y. 341, 28 N. E. 514; Port of Mobile v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 84 Ala. 115-126, 4 So. 106. So, in Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co. v. Saxe, 131 Mo. 212, 32 S. W. 1106, this court held that, while a court of equity will not interfere by injunction simply for the purpose of preventing a crime, it may enjoin acts threatening irreparable injury to property rights, notwithstanding such acts may also be in violation of the criminal law. But interference in such cases is predicated solely upon the ground of injury to property and the protection of property rights. 1 High, Inj. 3d ed. § 68. In Atlanta v. Gate City Gaslight Co. 71 Ga. 106, it was held that a court of equity will not enjoin the prosecution of a criminal proceeding, unless it is evident that private property and civil rights will be invaded thereby; then equity will interfere to protect them. "A court of equity has no jurisdiction in matters merely criminal or merely immoral, which do not affect any right to property. If a charge be of a criminal nature, or an offense against the public peace, and does not touch the enjoyment of property, jurisdiction cannot be entertained. . . . But if an act which is criminal touches also the enjoyment of property, the court has jurisdiction, but its interference is founded solely on the ground of injury to property." Kerr, Inj. 3d ed. 5.

And in Hamilton v. Whitridge, 11 Md. 128, 69 Am. Dec. 184, the court said: "But it would be strange, indeed, if, when the court's powers are invoked for the protection and enjoyment of property, and may be rightfully exercised for that purpose, its arms should be paralyzed by the mere circumstance that, in the exercise of this jurisdiction, it might incidentally be performing the functions of a moral censor by suppressing a shocking vice denounced by the law, and amenable to its penalties from the earliest times." The same rule is announced in Littleton v. Fritz, 65 Iowa, 488, 54 Am. Rep. 19, 22 N. W. 641; Bank of Kentucky v. Stone, 88 Fed. Rep. 383; Central Trust Co. v. Citizens' Street R. Co. 80 Fed. Rep. 218. Courts have frequently enjoined strikers from interfering with the traffic upon railroads, the moving of trains, and the destruction of property; and, while such acts are criminal offenses under the laws of the states in which they were committed, punishable by indictment, fine, and imprisonment, courts have never declined to restrain them upon the ground of their criminal character. Property not only includes the right to use, but the right of disposition, at one's pleasure, and upon such terms and conditions as the owner may see proper, whether it be labor or merchandise; and the business of a person conducted in accordance with law is as much a property right as property itself, and any interference therewith is an injury to the property. Davis v. Zimmerman, 91 Hun, 489, 36 N. Y. Supp. 303. The act in question prohibits these respondents from selling beer and malt liquors manufactured by them without its first having been inspected by the beer inspector; makes them guilty of a criminal offense punishable by indictment or information, and imposes upon them severe penalties and forfeitures, if they do so, one of which is the forfeiture of the right to manufacture beer for two years. The allegations of the petition for the injunction show that, if the provisions of the act are carried out by the inspector, it will greatly interfere with and injure the beer manufactured by them, to their serious injury, for which, because of its frequent occurrence, the law would afford them no adequate remedy.

But the petition stated grounds for equitable relief, upon the further ground that a multiplicity of suits would be avoided thereby. Besides the eight plaintiffs in the injunction suit, there are at least fifteen other brewers in this state, all of whom are alike affected by the act in question, and under such circumstances injunction will lie to prevent multiplicity of suits. Thus, it was held in Damschroeder v. Thias, 51 Mo. 100, that one of the offices of an injunction is to prevent a multiplicity of suits, where the whole question can be decided in a single proceeding. In Michael v. St. Louis, 112 Mo. 610, 20 S. W. 666, it was held that lot owners seeking to be relieved from local assessments may, to prevent multiplicity of suits, unite in one equitable proceeding, where there is a community of interests in the questions to be decided. Slyvester Coal Co. v. St. Louis, 130 Mo. 323, 32 S. W. 649, is very much like the case at bar. In that case a weighing ordinance was claimed to be invalid and an unlawful interference with the business of the plaintiffs, and several of them having the same interest joined in a suit to enjoin its enforcement. The city contended that the plaintiffs had an adequate remedy at law, but it was held that the fact that in each of said suits the plaintiff might plead successfully the invalidity of the ordinance as defense thereto did not give them an adequate remedy, that they were entitled to be protected from the expense, vexations, and annoyance of such a multiplicity of suits in consequence of their continuance of legitimate business, except on compliance with the conditions of ordinances which, it is alleged, are utterly void. The court said: "But is the remedy at law adequate? It must be remembered that the injury complained of here is continuous. The ordinances are continuous, and plaintiffs' business is continuous, and, under the ordinances, for each wagon load of coal sold and delivered in violation of the restrictive provisions thereof the plaintiffs each become subject to an action in the municipal courts of the city for such violation. The fact that in each of such suits the plaintiffs might plead successfully the invalidity of the ordinances as a defense thereto does not give them an adequate remedy. They are entitled to be protected from the expense, vexation, and annoyance of such a multiplicity of suits in consequence of their continuance of a legitimate business except upon compliance with the condition of ordinances which it is alleged, are and may be utterly void. Baltimore v. Radecke, 49 Md. 217, 33 Am. Rep. 239; Davis v. Fastig, 128 Ind. 271, 27 N. E. 726; Rushville v. Rushville Natural Gas Co. 132 Ind. 575, 15 L. R. A. 321, 28 N. E. 853; Third Ave. R. Co. v. New York, 54 N. Y. 150. 'The prevention of vexatious litigation and of a multiplicity of suits constitutes a favorite ground for the exercise of the jurisdiction of equity by way of injunction.' High, Inj. 3d ed. p. 12. This has been frequently recognized as a ground for the exercise of such jurisdiction in this state (Schope v. Weller, 119 Mo. 556, 25 S. W. 204; Michael v. St. Louis, 112 Mo. 610, 20 S. W. 666; Carroll v. Campbell, 108 Mo. 553, 17 S. W. 884); and is an independent ground of equity jurisdiction upon which such courts may interfere to prevent municipal authorities from transcending their powers. 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. §§ 906, 908, and cases cited above. While, under the former system of jurisprudence, in which relief in equity was administered by a different tribunal and by a different procedure from those that gave relief at law, courts of equity have sometimes refused to interfere before the right was established at law (West v. New York, 10 Paige, 539), there seems no good reason, under the present system in code states, where both are blended, why such relief should not be granted in the first instance by injunction; and so it was ruled in the analogous cases of Baltimore v. Radecke, Davis v. Fasig, and Rushville v. Rushville Natural Gas Co., above cited, which are on all fours with the case in hand. And so it would seem it must be ruled here, where we have, in addition, a special and liberal statutory provision in regard to injunction. Rev. Stat. 1889, § 5510." While this case and the cases cited therein were predicated upon the noncompliance with city ordinances which were claimed to be invalid, they were quasi-criminal in their character, and the same rule applies as for the violation of a criminal statute. It was upon this ground that a bank which was required to pay for its stockholders the taxes assessed upon the shares of the stock held by them, respectively, might bring a suit to restrain the collection of taxes illegally assessed upon such shares. Whitney Nat. Bank v. Parker, 41 Fed. Rep. 402. To the same effect is 1 Beach, Modern Eq. Jur. § 22. "As a general rule, wherever the rights of a party aggrieved cannot be protected or enforced in the ordinary course of proceedings at law, except by numerous suits, equity may properly interpose and offer relief by injunction. Upon this ground equity often grants an injunction to restrain wrongful acts which are of a continuing nature, or which are frequently repeated. The separate remedy at law for each violation of the plaintiff's right would not be an adequate remedy, and the ends of justice require in such cases that the whole wrong shall be arrested and concluded by a single proceeding. Such relief equity affords, and thereby fulfils its appropriate mission of supplying the deficiencies of legal remedies. Thus, where a company engaged in the business of buying and crushing seed cotton was in the habit of sending out sacks to farmers to be filled and re-shipped to it, and another company engaged in the same line of business persistently procured the sacks so distributed, and used them for their purposes, and, though repeated actions of replevin had been prosecuted against them, persisted in so doing, an injunction was granted to prevent a further repetition of the wrong." 2 Beach, Modern Eq. Jur. § 644; 1 Beach, Modern Eq. Jur. § 22. See also Warren Mills v. New Orleans Seed Co. 65 Miss. 391, 4 So. 298. In Shaffer v. Stull, 32 Neb. 94, 48 N. W. 882, it was held that injunction would lie to restrain the leaving down of a fence, when it has been repeatedly done, and its continuance is threatened. In Carroll v. Campbell, 108 Mo. 558, 17 S. W. 884, in speaking of the remedy by injunction, it is said: "It is well settled that for an interruption of this right an injunction will lie, particularly when, as in this case, the injury is of a continuous nature, and committed under a claim which indicates a continuance, or frequent and constant repetition of it. Courts of equity take cognizance of these cases to prevent the vexation and harassment of continued disturbances, prevent a multiplicity of suits, and to preserve the right by restraining the commission and repetition of threatened injury." It is upon this principle that strikers have been enjoined from interfering with the business of railroads and persons, and destroying their property. While in all such cases the owner of the property has a remedy at law, it is inadequate. Besides, by proceeding by injunction, a multiplicity of suits may be avoided. The injunctive petition is full and specific upon these theories of the case, and stated all that was necessary to entitle the plaintiffs therein to the relief sought.

Dows v. Chicago, 11 Wall. 108, 20 L. ed. 65, which is the chief corner stone of the opinion in this case, was a suit by injunction begun in the circuit court of the United States to restrain the collection of a tax levied by the city of Chicago upon shares of stock in a national bank owned by the plaintiff, and upon appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States it was held that a suit in equity will not lie to restrain the collection of a tax upon the sole ground that the tax is illegal, but there must exist, in addition, some special circumstances bringing the case under some recognized head of equity jurisdiction, such as that the enforcement of the tax would lead to a multiplicity of suits, or produce irreparable injury. In that case the suit was by a single individual who had an adequate remedy at law, and there was no pretense that the injunction would prevent a multiplicity of suits; while in the case at bar numerous persons whose interests will be similarly affected joined in the suit, in order thereby to avoid a multiplicity of suits, and with respect to that question brings the case clearly within the rule announced in that case. Besides, that case was an equitable proceeding by injunction. The court below sustained a demurrer to the bill upon the ground that it failed to state a cause of action, and its ruling was affirmed by the appellate court. But no one will claim that the writ of prohibition would have been available in that case to prevent the trial court from passing upon the question as to the sufficiency of the petition. Such is not the purpose of the writ. And if the court had jurisdiction to decide that the petition did not state a cause of action, it had the same jurisdiction to decide that it did state a cause of action.

The most important questions involved in this whole controversy are with respect to the validity of the act under consideration, which plaintiffs in the injunctive proceedings (respondents here) insist is in conflict with the state and Federal Constitutions upon various grounds which are specifically set forth in the petition for injunction; but these questions, while of the gravest and most important character, were passed over as not deserving consideration. The right of the respondents to injunctive relief depends upon the validity of the act, and how this case could be disposed of without passing upon its constitutionality, unless its unconstitutionality be conceded, I am at a loss to know. It is quite true that, if these questions had been passed upon, and decided adversely to respondents, they could have taken the case by appeal or writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States for review, and thereby protracted the litigation, but as they were not passed upon, that court could acquire no jurisdiction of the case, so no appeal will lie; but this, of course, was not the reason for not passing upon these questions. In my humble opinion, the act, whatever may be said in it to the contrary, is a revenue measure, and is invalid because it imposes a tax upon property for general state purposes in excess of the constitutional limitations. Mo. Const. art. 10, § 8. It is also violative of §§ 3, 4, 6, and 7, art. 10, of the Constitution of Missouri, which require uniformity and equality in taxation. But as the constitutional questions are not passed upon in the opinion, I am not disposed to enter into a discussion of them.

If, then, as I contend, the act is void because violative of the Constitution, injunction to restrain the collection of the tax or inspection fees is the proper remedy. In Overall v. Ruenzi, 67 Mo. 203, the court held that injunction was the proper remedy to prevent the collection of a tax levied in excess of the legal limit; saying: "In regard to the propriety of an injunction on the facts stated, various authorities cited on either side have been examined, but we deem it necessary only to state the conclusions we have reached, without any review of the cases. It would be difficult, if not impossible, to reconcile the authorities, either here or elsewhere. But it is quite apparent that of late years, whether by reason of our statute in regard to injunctions, first introduced into the Revised Code of 1865, or upon general grounds of expediency, this court has been disposed to regard with favor proceedings which are preventive in their character, rather than compel the injured party to seek redress after the damage is accomplished. We see no objection, therefore, to the mode adopted in this case to test the validity of the tax." This doctrine was reasserted and applied in Valle v. Ziegler, 84 Mo. 214, where it was held that injunction was the proper remedy to prevent the enforcement of the collection of taxes against personal property which was not subject to taxation. In Arnold v. Hawkins, 95 Mo. 569, 8 S. W. 719, the court followed Overall v. Ruenzi, 67 Mo. 203, in allowing injunction in behalf of taxpayers to prevent the collection of taxes levied in excess of the constitutional limit; the plaintiff having paid all the taxes except those which he claimed were illegal. See also Dennison v. Kansas, 95 Mo. 430, 8 S. W. 429. The principle was also applied in Book v. Earl, 87 Mo. 246, and in St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Apperson, 97 Mo. 301, 10 S. 48 L. R. A.

W. 478, where the court said that injunction is the proper remedy to prevent the enforcement of the collection of taxes levied without authority; the court saying (page 310, 97 Mo., page 482, 10 S. W.): "Numerous decisions of this court attest that the remedy plaintiff asks is the proper one in cases of this sort,"—citing Valle v. Ziegler, 84 Mo. 214, and Book v. Earl, 87 Mo. 246; Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed., and cases cited there. In Michael v. St. Louis, 112 Mo. 610, 20 S. W. 660, while the court decided against the plaintiffs on the merits, it was held that all the owners seeking to be relieved from illegal assessment, to prevent multiplicity of suits, may unite in one proceeding, where there is a uniformity of interest in the question to be decided. And in Damschroeder v. Thias, 51 Mo. 100, the court said that one of the offices of an injunction is to prevent a multiplicity of suits, where the whole question can be decided by one and the same proceeding. In Rubey v. Shain, 54 Mo. 207, it is held that it is not only the right, but the duty, to resort to a court of equity for injunctive relief to prevent the collection of an illegal tax, for the taxpayer would have no right of action against the collector. And again, in Ranney v. Bader, 67 Mo. 476, it is held that, where the assessment of taxes is illegal, the remedy of the taxpayer is by proceeding to arrest the execution of the illegal assessment and the collection of the tax. In passing upon a similar question in Dennison v. Kansas, 95 Mo. 416, 8 S. W. 429, it is said: "In the cases of Ranney v. Bader, 67 Mo. 476, and Newmeyer v. Missouri & M. R. Co. 52 Mo. 81, 14 Am. Rep. 394, it is held that, to prevent the collection of an illegal tax, suit may be brought by any taxpayer for himself and all others similarly situated." It was held that injunction was the proper remedy in that case. So, in Valle v. Ziegler, 84 Mo. 214, it was held that injunction was the proper remedy to prevent the enforcement of the collection of taxes against personal property not subject to taxation: My conclusion is that the circuit court had jurisdiction to pass upon all the questions presented in the petition for injunction, and that the petition showed a prima facie case for relief; and that, if the court erred, an appeal or writ of error furnishes a complete and effective remedy for any error of that court; and, this being the case, the writ of prohibition will not lie, and was, in the first place, improvidently issued. Martin v. Sloan, 98 Mo. 252, 11 S. W. 558. This is but the announcement of a familiar principle of law, which is conceded by all and denied by none. But, even if the question of jurisdiction in the circuit court were doubtful, prohibition is not the proper remedy. 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 271, and authorities cited; Hassinger v. Holt (V. Va.) 34 S. E. 728; High, Extr. Legal Rem. § 780. For these reasons I think the writ should be denied.

NEW HAMPSHIRE SUPREME COURT.

ROSS W. CATE

v.

NATHANIEL E. MARTIN et al.

(.....N. H.....)

A mayor cannot veto the judicial action of the board of aldermen sitting as a court in a matter of which the statutes have made it the exclusive and final judge, as in the determination of the election of its members, under Pub. Stat. chap. 48, § 11, although by chap. 47, § 7, it is provided that "he shall have a negative upon the action of the aldermen in laying out highways, and in all other matters; and no vote can be passed or appointment made by the board of aldermen over his veto, unless by a vote of two thirds at least of all the aldermen elected."

(March 16, 1900.)

RESERVATION by the Merrimack County Court for the opinion of the Supreme Court of a petition for a mandamus to compel the recognition of petitioner as alderman of ward 2 of the city of Concord. Granted.

John W. Sanborn was declared elected as such alderman. Plaintiff contested the election. The aldermen granted a hearing and the majority adopted the following resolution: "Resolved, that Ross W. Cate, having received a plurality of the votes cast for alderman in ward 2 in said city, at an election held on the 8th day of last November, is entitled to a seat in this board, and John W. Sanborn, not having been elected at said election, is not entitled to a seat in this board. Resolved, that the clerk is instructed to strike out of his records the name of John W. Sanborn, as alderman from ward 2, and substitute in place thereof the name of Ross W. Cate, and further to notify said John W. Sanborn and said Ross W. Cate of this resolution at once." The resolution was vetoed. Eight aldermen voted to pass the resolution over the veto, which was less than two thirds of the number elected. Cate was not notified that he was declared elected, nor Sanborn that he was not elected. In vetoing the resolutions the mayor acted in good faith, believing that the ballot showed that Sanborn was elected.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Streeter, Walker, & Hollis, for plaintiff:

No declaration of the result of the vote by the mayor as presiding officer was necessary to its legal efficacy.

Charlton v. Holliday, 60 Iowa, 391, 14 N.

NORM.—As to casting vote by mayor, see Lawrence v. Ingersoll (Tenn.) 6 L. R. A. 308, and note; Magenau v. Fremont (Neb.) 9 L. R. A. 786; State ex rel. Rylands v. Pinkerman (Conn.) 22 L. R. A. 653; Wooster v. Mullins (Conn.) 25 L. R. A. 694; Brown v. Foster (Me.) 31 L. R. A. 116; and State ex rel. Young v. Yates (Mont.) 37 L. R. A. 205.

W. 775; Tennant v. Crocker, 85 Mich. 328, 48 N. W. 577; State ex rel. Duane v. Fagan, 42 Conn. 32; Dingwall v. Detroit, 82 Mich. 568, 46 N. W. 938.

The mayor could not lawfully vote upon the question of adopting the resolutions, and thereby create a tie.

The power to give a "casting vote" in the proceedings of a deliberative body is the power to facilitate, but not to block, that body's action; to vote when the assembly is equally divided, but not to create an equal division; to break, not make, a tie.

Cushing, Law & Pr. of Legislative Assemblies, § 306; Brown v. Foster, 88 Me. 49, 31 L. R. A. 116, 33 Atl. 662; Gostin v. Brooks, 89 Ga. 244, 15 S. E. 361.

The mayor has no power to veto a decision of the board of aldermen with reference to the election of one of its own members.

Erwin v. Jersey City, 60 N. J. L. 141, 37 Atl. 732; State ex rel. Haight v. Love, 39 N. J. L. 14.

The supposition that the veto power was intended to apply to a decision of the board of aldermen concerning the election of one of its members is, at the outset, nearly, if not quite, as improbable as the supposition that it was intended to apply to a vote to adjourn. The action of the board in such a case is judicial.

1 Kent, Com. 235; Halloran v. Carter, 35 N. Y. S. R. 884, 13 N. Y. Supp. 214; Gregg v. Goodrich, 67 N. H. 543, 42 Atl. 240.

"Each branch" of the city councils shall be, not merely the judge of the election and qualification of its own members, but the final judge.

Properly and primarily, the powers and duties of a mayor are executive and administrative.

Martindale v. Palmer, 52 Ind. 411; Jacobs v. San Francisco City & County Supers. 100 Cal. 121, 34 Pac. 630.

He is not a member of a city council, unless expressly made such by law.

Tiedeman. Mun. Corp. § 96; Reynolds v. Baldwin, 1 La. Ann. 162; Mills v. Gleason, 11 Wis. 470, 78 Am. Dec. 721; Atty. Gen. v. Shepard, 62 N. H. 383; Brown v. Foster, 88 Me. 49, 31 L. R. A. 116, 33 Atl. 662; People ex rel. Gaskill v. Ransom, 56 Barb. 514; State ex rel. Laughlin v. Porter, 113 Ind. 70, 14 N. E. 883; Garside v. Cohoes, 34 N. Y. S. R. 234, 12 N. Y. Supp. 192; Hall v. Racine, 81 Wis. 72, 50 N. W. 1094.

If the mayor were a member of the aldermanic branch of the city councils in every sense and for every purpose, the exercise of his veto power would not be an act of membership, but an exercise of an authority which he possesses "as an independent, co-ordinate branch of the city government."

State ex rel. Childs v. Darrow, 65 Minn. 419, 67 N. W. 1012.

The exclusive power to judge of the election and qualifications of its members "has always been lodged in the legislative body by the uniform practice of England and America."

1 Story, Const. § 833; 1 Bl. Com. 163, 178; 1 Kent, Com. 235.

The present case is satisfied by finding that the mayor's veto is inapplicable to a decision by the aldermen of a contested election case.

The veto power of the mayor must be interpreted in the light of its origin.

State, Tims, Prosecutor, v. Newark, 25 N. J. L. 309; People ex rel. Churchyard v. Bufalo, 47 N. Y. S. R. 149, 20 N. Y. Supp. 51; State ex rel. Sullivan v. Longdon, 68 Conn. 519, 37 Atl. 383; Achley's Case, 4 Abb. Pr. 35; North v. Cary, 4 Thomp. & C. 357.

Messrs. Eastman & Hollis and Martin & Howe, for defendants:

It is to be assumed that the words and phrases are used in their technical meaning, if they have acquired one, and in their popular meaning if they have not, and the phrases and sentences are to be construed according to the rules of grammar.

Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, p. 4.

The mayor's powers are clear and well defined. There is nothing in the context to warrant us in concluding that the literal interpretation is not the correct one.

The functions of the mayor are different in both scope and nature from those of either the President or governor; and the veto power is conferred upon the two classes of officials for different purposes.

28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 446.

The veto power, which is vested directly by constitutional authority in the President and governor, is based on the theory of equilibrium between the several branches of government. The veto power which the legislature has conferred upon the mayor of Concord is based upon the theory of checking corrupt and ill-considered legislation.

Blodgett, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The statutory scope of the veto power conferred upon the mayors of cities in this state is found in section 7, chap. 47, Pub. Stat., which provides that "he shall have a negative upon the action of the aldermen in laying out highways, and in all other matters; and no vote can be passed or appointment made by the board of aldermen over his veto, unless by a vote of two thirds at least of all the aldermen elected." While this sweeping language, standing alone and taken by itself, is apparently plain and explicit, its interpretation, nevertheless, does not depend upon any one rule alone; for statutes, like all other written instruments, are to be interpreted by the weight of competent evidence, a part of which may bear more or less strongly in a given direction, and another part in a different direction, thus making the result dependent upon the product of both combined. In other words, the primary object in construing statutes being to ascertain the intention of the legislature in their enactment, resort is to be had to their language, the context, the subject-matter, the effects and consequences, or the spirit and reason of the law. In the light of these rules, and conceding, as the defendants claim, that a municipal council is largely sui generis, and its powers to be construed accordingly, we are of opinion that the defendants' contention that the veto power of a mayor extends to and embraces a decision of the board of aldermen as to the election of one of its members cannot be sustained. Further than this we are not required to go; for whatever the language of the statute giving the mayor a negative "upon the action of the aldermen in laying out highways, and in all other matters," may mean, and whether it would or would not be competent for the legislature to give to the executive of a city a veto upon the action of the legislative branch of the city government sitting as a court in the performance of a judicial duty, it is enough to satisfy the present contention if the decision of a contested election case by the aldermen is not embraced in the phrase "in all other matters," and, in support of the conclusion that it is not, we cannot but regard the evidence as decisive. The mayor of a city is not an alderman or councilman of the city, in any general or proper sense of those terms. He is designated in the statutes as the "principal officer" and the "chief executive" of the city. Pub. Stat. chap. 46, § 3; Id. chap. 47, § 5. And both properly and primarily his duties are executive and administrative. Martindale v. Palmer, 52 Ind. 411, 413; Jacobs v. San Francisco City & County Supers. 100 Cal. 121, 135, 34 Pac. 630. He is not a member of either branch of the city councils, unless expressly made such by law. Tiedeman, Mun. Corp. § 96. And when this is the case it is "to the extent of such powers as are specially committed to him, and no further, that he is a part of the city council." Brown v. Foster, 88 Me. 49, 31 L. R. A. 116, 33 Atl. 622; People ex rel. Gaskill v. Ransom, 56 Barb. 514, 516; Mills v. Gleason, 11 Wis. 470, 476. 78 Am. Dec. 721; State ex rel. Laughlin v. Porter, 113 Ind. 79, 14 N. E. 833. He is not one "of its own members in the sense in which an alderman is." Garside v. Cohoes, 34 N. Y. S. R. 234, 12 N. Y. Supp. 192, 195; Winter v. Thistlewood, 101 Ill. 450, 452. Nor has it been understood that he is to be counted in determining the presence of a quorum. Atty. Gen. v. Shepard, 62 N. H. 383; Somerset v. Smith, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1488, 49 S. W. 456.

Applying the principles of these authorities (and none have been found to the contrary) to the statutory provisions relating to mayor and aldermen cited in behalf of the defendants, the result is indubitably to establish the proposition that, while the mayor is a constituent part of the aldermanic board for some special purposes, he sits and acts in the board, not in the capacity of an alderman, but in the capacity of ex officio presiding officer, and exercises those powers only which have been specially committed to him as the chief executive of the city. However extensive such powers may be in the present case, and regardless of the authorities to which reference has been made, the legislative understanding that the mayor should not be regarded as an alderman in contested election cases, at least, sufficiently appears from the statute enacting that the board of aldermen "shall be the final judge of the election and qualification of its members" (Pub. Stat. chap. 48, § 11), because the authority thus vested in the aldermen does not extend to the election of mayor, of which the city councils in joint convention are made the judges by chapter 47, § 3, and because under section 11, each alderman is not only made a judge of the election of his fellow members, but they are made the judges of his election also. And the same conclusion as to the legislative understanding of the mayor's membership is evidenced by the further provision of section 11, that each branch of the city government, in case of a vacancy therein, "shall call a new election," because special provision for the filling of a vacancy in the office of mayor was made elsewhere, and by another tribunal. Laws 1895, chap. 41. Such, also, would seem to have been the understanding of the defendant mayor himself, for he did not assume to act as an alderman in the election before the board, but solely as mayor. While these citations amply demonstrate that the aldermanic branch of the city councils, within the meaning of section 11, is the board of aldermen, exclusive of the mayor (and, if this be so, his veto power cannot apply, because the judgment of the board would not then be final), they also afford convincing proofs that the mayor's veto power was not intended to extend to a decision by the aldermen of a contested election case. Having made such a decision an imperative finality, it is incredible that the legislature would intentionally stultify itself, and emasculate the statute by making it subordinate to the arbitrary caprice of an executive officer, acting solely in an executive capacity, and subject to no supervising power. If, however, the contrary were true, and the provision giving the mayor "a negative on the action of the aldermen in laying out highways, and in all other matters," were susceptible of the broad construction put upon it by the defendants, it is not perceived upon what ground the provision could be sustained. In a contested election case, as in all other cases, it is the constitutional right of the contestants to have the issue between them settled by judicial action; and of this right they cannot be lawfully deprived by any legislative enactment. The veto power is not, and has never been understood to be, a judicial power. To all intents, and for all purposes, it is a franchise of the executive department alone, and may be exercised by its possessor at his pleasure, and without consent, trial, or notice. The adjudication of legal rights in this manner cannot be tolerated under our system of government, or under any other in which there has not been a total abolition of justice and fundamental legal principles. But there is no solid ground for the defendants' construction of the provision under consideration. It is no less true now than it was in the 48 L. R. A.

time of Lord Coke that the laws consist, not in being read, but in being understood. [Cumberland's Case] 8 Coke, 167. "When the legislature enacts that each branch of a city government shall be the judge of the elections of its members, the inference is that they copied the language from the Constitution, understanding that it would mean in the statute what it means in the Constitution, and intending that municipal legislative bodies created, organized, and working on the model of the state legislature shall have the same powers, as judges of the elections of their members. It is also probable that, for reasons of public convenience in the transaction of the affairs of cities, the legislative intention was to establish a special tribunal for the determination of such cases, which would act expeditiously, and without the delays ordinarily incident to judicial procedure." Atty. Gen. ex rel. Gregg v. Sands, 68 N. H. 54, 57, 44 Atl. 83. See also State, Times, Prosecutor, v. Newark, 25 N. J. L. 399, 415. It has never been supposed that the veto power granted the governor of this state by the Constitution extended to the qualifications or elections of the members of either branch of the legislative department, concerning which the Constitution declares that each branch shall be the judge; and it would be an extraordinary prerogative, indeed, if the legislature has invested the mayors of cities with a more extensive veto power than our Constitution has conferred upon the governor, or the national Constitution upon the President. Nothing but the most decisive evidence would warrant such a conclusion, and this the defendants have failed to supply. In fact, their contention is substantially based upon the proposition that because the mayor is empowered by the statute to interpose his veto upon the judicial act of the aldermen in the laying out of highways, and in all other matters, he may therefore lawfully interpose it upon their judicial action in a contested election case. But this proposition is utterly untenable. Its reasoning is fallacious, and its conclusion unsound. Things which are similar in some respects are not the same. Whether it was competent for the legislature to empower the mayor with a negative upon the laying out of a highway by the aldermen need not now be determined. As has been previously stated, we are required to go at this time only far enough to meet the exigencies of the case before us; and, for this purpose, we think no other answer to the proposition is necessary than to call attention to the pregnant fact that the legislature has not anywhere enacted that the decision of the aldermen in the laying out of highways shall be final, but, on the contrary, it has expressly given to any person aggrieved by the decision of city or town authorities in laying out or altering highways the right of appeal therefrom to this court. Pub. Stat. chap. 68, § 2; Id. chap. 46, §§ 1, 2. These considerations so broadly distinguish the one case from the other as to bring to naught any analogy between them. Other answers to the proposition, however, are not lacking. A sufficient foundation for the petition is furnished by the reported facts in respect of a demand upon the mayor to perform his duty.

Nothing more need be said of the case. Viewed in any permissible light derived from the decisions, the statutes, the nature and purpose of the veto power as heretofore understood, the consequences which would follow the defendants' construction, the analogy of the city system of government to the governmental system of the state and Nation, and the separation and independence of the legislative, executive, and judicial departments enjoined in our bill of rights, the overwhelming weight of evidence leads to the conclusion that the mayor of Concord could not veto the judicial action of the board of aldermen, sitting as a court, in a matter of which the statutes have made it the exclusive and final judge.

Petition granted.

Pike, J., did not sit. The others concurred.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

Andrew ALBRIGHT

v.

Joseph A. CORTRIGHT, Plff. in Err.

(.....N. J.....)

*The plaintiff claimed to own land covered by Swartswood pond, a body of montidial water, and notified the defendant not to fish in it. The defendant, disregarding the notice, fished from a boat, on two different days, in water that covered land claimed by the plaintiff, who thereupon brought his action. The declaration alleged possession and title by deed in the plaintiff, and acts of trespass by the defendant in disregard of notice. The defendant filed pleas in both general and specific denial of the declaration, and a further special plea setting up in bar of the action two independent defenses: First, that the public had been accustomed for sixty years to fish in the pond, and that therefore the defendant, as one of the public, could do so of right; and, secondly, that the pond had been stocked with fish by the fish commissioners of the state of New Jersey for twenty-five years, and that therefore the defendant, as one of the public, could fish there of right. On the trial the plaintiff proved the case laid in his declaration and rested. The defendant offered to prove that the public had continuously fished in the pond for sixty years, which offer was overruled, and exception taken. The defendant also called a witness who testified to the stocking of the pond by public authority. This evidence was then stricken out, whereupon the defendant made a formal offer to prove the allegations of his plea in this particular, which offer was overruled, and exception taken. The trial judge thereupon directed the jury to find a verdict of 6 cents for the plaintiff, to which direction an exception was taken. Error was assigned on these exceptions.

As to the first special defense, it was held:

1. That, since the defendant had no license from the plaintiff, whatever right he could have had in plaintiff's close must have been by way of easement, custom, or prescription.

2. That the right claimed was not an easement, which is a privilege without profit.

3. That the defendant could not claim such right by custom: (a) Because a common-law custom, as distinguished from a usage of trade, must be immemorial, which in New Jersey is impossible; (b) because a custom laid in the public is bad for universality; and (c) because a right to take profit from the land of another cannot be acquired by custom.

4. That the defendant, merely as one of the public, could not claim such right by prescription, because the public cannot prescribe.

As to the second special defense, it was held:

5. That the evidence that was stricken out and excluded, if it had been received, would have proved, in the view most favorable to the defendant, only that the state of New Jersey had placed on private property certain fish that the public might catch if members of the public could lawfully reach them.

6. That the defendant, as one of the public, could not lawfully reach these fish, against the prohibition of the plaintiff, while they remained in his close, unless either the common or the statute law conferred such right.

7. That the common law gave no such right, because there is no general rule authorizing a member of the community, merely as such, to invade private property in order to reach something that is devoted to the public.

8. That the acts concerning fish and game gave no such right, for they do not manifest a legislative intent to legalize what would otherwise be trespasses, in pursuit of private advantage, and, if they did manifest such intent, would be to that extent invalid.

9. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the direction that the jury give him a verdict for nominal damages.

(March 5, 1900.)

*Headnotes by ADAMS, J.

NOTE.—For prescriptive rights of fishery, see Turner v. Hebron (Conn.) 14 L. R. A. 386.

For governmental control over right of fishery, see People v. Truckee Lumber Co. (Cal.) 89 L. R. A. 581, and note; also State v. Theriault (Vt.) 43 L. R. A. 290. 48 L. R. A.

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Sussex County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for alleged unlawful fishing in plaintiff's pond. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Martin Rosenkrans, for plaintiff in error:

The court will take judicial notice of the location, situation, and character of Swartwood lake, on the waters of which the alleged trespass was committed.

2 Wharton, Ev. (1877) § 399; Peyroux v. Howard, 7 Pet. 342, 8 L. ed. 707; Metzger v. Post, 44 N. J. L. 74, 43 Am. Rep. 341.

Swartwood lake is 1½ miles to 2 miles in width and over 3 miles in length.

The plaintiff does not and cannot have any title to the waters of Swartwood lake because its waters are navigable and it comes under the class of waters which in every state are peculiarly protected for the benefit of the public.

Arnold v. Mundy, 6 N. J. L. 1, 10 Am. Dec. 356.

To maintain trespass quare clausum fregit there must be an injury to the possession.

3 Bl. Com. 210; Cortelyou v. Van Brundt, 2 Johns. 357, 3 Am. Dec. 439.

As far as any right of property in fish can exist it is in the public, or is common to all.

Gentile v. State, 29 Ind. 415, 2 Bl. Com. 392.

If fish belong to the public, of what benefit are they to the public unless the public have the right under the laws relating to fish to catch them without molestation.

Organ v. State, 56 Ark. 267, 19 S. W. 840.

Mr. Thomas M. Kays, for defendant in error:

The policy of the common law is to assign to everything capable of ownership a certain and determinate owner, and, for the preservation of peace and the security of society, to mark by certain indicia, not only the boundaries of such separate ownership, but the line of demarcation between rights which are held by the public in common and private rights.

Cobb v. Davenport, 32 N. J. L. 378.

Even the common right of fishing in the tidal waters of the state is subject to the supreme power of the state to convey such lands covered with water to individuals, and thus deprive the public of the common right of fishing.

McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391, 24 L. ed. 248.

The title of the state is proprietary, an attribute of which is the unqualified right of disposition to public or private use, either absolutely, or for a qualified estate, as an estate for years, or by mere license, as in legislative discretion may be deemed most conducive to the public interest.

Wooley v. Campbell, 37 N. J. L. 164; Gough v. Bell, 21 N. J. L. 165, 22 N. J. L. 459; Townsend v. Brown, 24 N. J. L. 40; Stevens v. Paterson & N. R. Co. 34 N. J. L. 532, 3 Am. Rep. 269; Trenton Water Power Co. v. Raff, 36 N. J. L. 342; Foulke v. Bond, 41 N. J. L. 545; Carlisle v. Cooper, 21 N. J. Eq. 596; Atty. Gen. v. Delaware & B. B. R. Co. 27 N. J. Eq. 639; Nixon v. Walter, 41 N. J. Eq. 112, 3 Atl. 385; Newark Aqueduct Board v. Passaic, 45 N. J. Eq. 398, 18 Atl. 106; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Thompson, 45 48 L. R. A.

N. J. Eq. 871, 19 Atl. 622; Brookhaven v. Strong, 60 N. Y. 60; Ackerman v. Shelp, 8 N. J. L. 125.

The title to the bed of the Delaware river above tide water on the New Jersey side to the center thereof is in the riparian or shore owners.

Arnold v. Mundy, 6 N. J. L. 1, 10 Am. Dec. 356; Rundle v. Delaware & R. Canal, 1 Wall. Jr. 275, Fed. Cas. No. 12,139; Atty. Gen. v. Delaware & B. B. R. Co. 27 N. J. Eq. 1, Affirmed in 27 N. J. Eq. 631; 2 Bl. Com. p. 18; Hooker v. Cummings, 20 Johns. 90, 11 Am. Dec. 249; Adams v. Pease, 2 Conn. 481; People v. Platt, 17 Johns. 195, 8 Am. Dec. 382.

Adams, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The declaration is in tort, and seeks damages from the defendant for breaking and entering the close of the plaintiff (being a tract of land, covered with water, in Stillwater township, in Sussex county, known as "Swartwood pond"), and for fishing and catching fish therein, in disregard of a notice by the plaintiff not to trespass on his land, and especially not to fish in said pond. The gist of the defense is found in the following extract from the fifth plea, upon which issue has been joined: "That the said Swartwood pond has been stocked with fish by the fish commissioners of the state of New Jersey for twenty-five years, and that the fish therein belong to the public, and that the public for sixty years last past have entered the said close, and openly, adversely, continuously, uninterruptedly, and without restriction, used the said close and waters of said Swartwood pond for the purpose of fishing for fish therein, and catching and taking fish therefrom, and that the defendant, as one of the public, has a right by prescription in and to the said close and the said Swartwood pond, and had at the time mentioned in the plaintiff's declaration a prescriptive right of profit in the said lands covered with water, and said Swartwood pond (being the same described in the plaintiff's declaration), and to fish into the said waters of said Swartwood pond, and to take, catch, and carry fish therefrom, without any hindrance or molestation of the said plaintiff." At the trial the plaintiff proved both possession and title by deed in himself before and at the time of the acts complained of, and that the defendant had fished in said pond, though notified by the plaintiff not to do so. The defendant then offered to prove that the pond had been stocked by the state of New Jersey about twenty-five years before, and that the public had continuously fished there for sixty years, which offers were denied, and a verdict for 6 cents was directed and rendered for the plaintiff. The questions presented by the exceptions are whether one who fishes in nontidal water that covers land of another, though forbidden to do so by the owner of such land, can justify either by the long-continued usage of the public, or because the water has been stocked by the state of New Jersey. These defenses, though blended in the special plea, are logically distinct.

Leaving out of view certain relations that are plainly foreign to this case, it may be said that whatever right, provable by user, the defendant could have had in the plaintiff's land, must have been by way of easement, custom, or prescription. The right that the defendant asserted was not an easement, which is a privilege without profit. Nor could he, as one of the public, acquire this profitable right by custom. In the first place, a common-law custom, as distinguished from a usage of trade, must be immemorial; and this, in New Jersey, is impossible. Ackerman v. Shelp, 8 N. J. L. 125; Allen v. Stevens, 29 N. J. L. 513; Ocean Beach Asso. v. Brinley, 34 N. J. Eq. 438. In the next place, the right claimed is too comprehensive to be good by way of custom. "Custom is unwritten law, established by common consent and uniform practice from time immemorial, and it is local, having respect to the inhabitants of a particular place or district." 2 Greenl. Ev. § 248. This custom is laid in the whole public. A custom so general would be indistinguishable from the law itself, so that the question in such case really is, not whether the usage is customary, but whether it is lawful. Fitch v. Rawling, 2 H. Bl. 303. Finally, a profitable right in land of another cannot be gained by custom, but only by prescription. Cobb v. Davenport, 32 N. J. L. 369, 33 N. J. L. 223, 97 Am. Dec. 718. In view, no doubt, of these considerations, the special plea alleges "a prescriptive right" in the defendant, to which he is entitled "as one of the public." This proposition is unsound, because it conflicts with the rule that the public cannot prescribe. A right that a man claims merely as one of the public does not lie in grant, and therefore not in prescription, which presupposes a lost grant, and so can embrace only things that are grantable. A prescription, says Lord Coke, "always is alleged in the person." Gateward's Case, 6 Coke, 60b. "Prescription," says Sir William Blackstone, "is merely a personal usage, as that Sempronius and his ancestors, or those whose estate he hath, have used time out of mind to have such an advantage or privilege." 2 Bl. Com. p. 262. Mr. Greenleaf says: "Prescription is a personal right belonging to one or a few persons by particular designation, as, for example, the owner of a certain parcel of land." 2 Greenl. Ev. § 248. To use a technical phrase, the claimant in such a case must prescribe in a que estate; that is, under or in the right of some other person or persons, whose estate has come to him.

That a right to take profit from another's land cannot arise by custom was decided as early as Gateward's Case, 6 Coke, 60. Lord Kenyon, in Grimstead v. Marlowe, 4 T. R. 718, said that the law had been so settled ever since the time of Gateward's Case. This is still the law of England. In Goodman v. Saltash, L. R. 7 App. Cas. 648, Lord Cairns says: "I think it to be clear law that while you may by custom claim an easement to be enjoyed over the land of another, you cannot by custom claim a profit à prendre in alieno" 48 L. R. A.

solo. I think it also to be clear law that you cannot claim by prescription anything which could not have a lawful beginning. And I think it also clear that a fluctuating and uncertain body cannot claim a profit à prendre in alieno solo, and, indeed, cannot be the grantee either of a several fishery or of any other kind of real property." Two recent cases are Blount v. Layard, reported in a note to [1891] 2 Ch., at page 681, and Smith v. Andrews [1891] 2 Ch. 678. In the case first mentioned, Lord Justice Bowen, speaking of a part of the Thames that is above the reach of the tide, said: "Although the public have been in the habit as long as we can recollect, and as long as our fathers can recollect, of fishing in the Thames, the public have no right to fish there. I mean they have no right, as members of the public, to fish there. That is certain law. Of course, they may fish by the license of the lord or the owner of a particular part of the bed of the river, or they may fish by the indulgence or owing to the carelessness or good nature of the person who is entitled to the soil; but right to fish themselves, as the public, they have none." The following extract is from the opinion by North, J., in Smith v. Andrews: "The idea is sometimes entertained that the right to pass along a public, navigable river carries with it the right to fish in it; but, so far as regards nontidal rivers, this is not so. No lawyer could take that view. Persons using a navigable highway no more acquire thereby a right to fish there than persons passing along a public highway on land acquire a right to shoot upon it. Some few passages may be found in the books in which judges are reported to have said that subjects have a right to fish in navigable rivers, just as in the sea; but on investigation it always will be found that they are referring to navigable rivers where the tide ebbs and flows, and nothing else. . . . But, even if the public had in fact fished this water with less interference or interruption than was actually the case, it would not supply any defense to the defendant in the present action. Any acquisition of right arising from long-continued use must be founded upon either custom, prescription, or lost grant. It is well settled that the public cannot have any right to fish, founded upon custom, however long the practice has continued. Upon this point it is not necessary to refer to various well-known and often cited authorities. . . . Then can any such right be acquired by prescription? It is clear, settled law that it cannot. . . . Lastly, as to any presumption of a lost grant, the observations of Byles, J., in Atty. Gen. v. Mathias, 4 Kay & J. 579, are conclusive. There can be no presumption of a lost grant with respect to matter which cannot be the subject of prescription." To the same effect is Constable v. Nicholson, 32 L. J. C. P. N. S. 240, reported, also, with full notes, in 8 English Ruling Cases, 337. There are many American cases declaring the law to be as it is above stated; among which are Waters v. Lilley, 4 Pick. 145, 18 Am. Dec. 333; Pearsall v. Post, 20 Wend. 111, 124, 125; and Perley v. Langley, 7 N. H. 233. The English law allows to the public no greater privileges in fresh-water ponds and lakes than in fresh-water rivers. This is evident from the cases collected in Gould, Waters, §§ 79-81.

The leading case in this state is Cobb v. Davenport, decided by the supreme court on facts much like these now before us, and reported in 32 N. J. L. 369. The plaintiff claimed to own a natural, nontidal lake in Morris county, called "Green pond." The action was trespass for breaking his close and fishing in water that covered his land. The defendant pleaded the general issue, denying that the plaintiff had an exclusive right to fish in said pond; set up the statute of limitations, and license from the plaintiff; and also alleged a prescriptive right to fish, by virtue of certain grants to persons under whom the defendant claimed. A verdict was rendered for the defendant, which was set aside on rule to show cause. The supreme court held that the plaintiff had proved his title, and that the defenses by way of limitation, license, and prescription were not sustained. Among the legal conclusions to be drawn from this case are these: That the soil under a fresh-water pond in New Jersey is not in the state, but is in private ownership; that the exclusive right of fishing therein is prima facie in the owner of the soil, but may be acquired separate from the ownership of the soil; that the right of the public to fish in private waters cannot be claimed by custom, or established by proof of customary right; and that such right can be acquired only by grant or prescription, and must be prescribed for in a que estate. The following extract from the opinion will show both how strong was the proof of user in that case, and how closely the facts resemble those now in view: "The evidence in this case shows that the public in general, for a period of forty years and upwards, were accustomed to fish in the pond in question without hindrance or molestation, and that permission to do so was neither asked nor granted; that the fishery was never used by its owners, either before or since the plaintiff acquired title, as a source of pecuniary profit, but that everyone, without regard to residence or tenure of lands, was permitted to fish in all parts of the pond at will, and whenever his inclination prompted him to do so; and that this privilege was exercised under prevalent impression that the fishery, in the language of one of the witnesses, was a free fishery. And it is a noticeable fact in the case that, although the witnesses who fished in the pond testify that they did so under a conviction of their right, yet no one claimed a right personal to himself, or other than such as it was thought belonged to the public in general. This evidence tends merely to establish a customary right in all the inhabitants and frequenters in that locality to fish in these waters, if a right to fish could be established by proof of custom. But the right of fishing, being a profit à prendre in another's soil, as distinguished from an easement, cannot be claimed by custom, but must be prescribed for in a que estate. . . . The defendant cannot justify under a custom, nor will proof of a custom sustain a plea of prescriptive right, because the two rights, though they may coexist in the same land, are of a completely different nature." The defendant subsequently applied for leave to file an additional plea justifying the alleged trespass on the ground that the fishery had become public by dedication. Leave was granted, in order that the question might appear on the record, and the plea was then, after argument, struck out. The opinion is reported in 33 N. J. L. 223. The conclusions expressed by the court are that the right to fish and take fish in alieno solo is not an easement, but is a profit à prendre, and can be acquired only by grant or prescription, which must be pleaded; that such a right, so universal and unqualified as to subsist in the entire public, cannot be gained by custom or prescription; and that the doctrine of dedication to public uses does not embrace a claim of this character. The pleadings in the case now under consideration do not present the defense of dedication. The case of Cobb v. Davenport has been cited with approval by this court in Atty. Gen. v. Delaware & B. B. R. Co. 27 N. J. Eq. 631, at page 639, and in Grey v. Paterson (decided at the present term) 42 Atl. 749, the exact point of the citation being, in each case, the tidal distinction between public and private waters. It is plain from an examination of the authorities above referred to, and of many others that might be mentioned if it were worth while to multiply citations, that the supreme court, in Cobb v. Davenport, declared and enforced the ancient and established law. There is nothing in our local conditions, which closely resemble those of England, or in the requirements of modern life, that calls for the adoption of a different rule. It may be true that there is here, as there seems to be in England, a common misapprehension on this subject, and that a good deal of fishing that is thought to be of right is only permissive. But it is not desirable to change an important rule of law merely because it is sometimes misunderstood. In country life a multitude of acts are habitually committed that are technically trespasses. Persons walk, catch fish, pick berries, and gather nuts in alieno solo without strict right. Good-natured owners tolerate these practices until they become annoying or injurious, and then put a stop to them. Little practical inconvenience results from this state of things, which the courts may well leave to regulate itself. Our conclusion on this branch of the case is that the trial judge did not err in excluding proof that the public had habitually fished in Swartswood pond.

The other ground of defense is that the state some twenty-five years ago stocked this pond with landlocked salmon, and that therefore the defendant, as one of the public, might fish in it. Inasmuch as evidence on this point was struck out, and the subsequent offer was not full, the facts relied on by the defendant do not appear as fully as they otherwise might do. The waters of Swartswood pond, of course, escape and find their way to the ocean. It is not clear whether fish, also, may escape, or can enter from without, or even that salmon are now in the pond, or whether other kinds of fish are there. It is not distinctly shown that the defendant desired to catch salmon. He fished on two days, and seems to have caught nothing. It is fair to assume, in favor of the defendant, that there were salmon in the pond, either placed there originally by the state of New Jersey or the successors of such; that they were desirable; and that the defendant would have been glad to catch them, and was at least attempting to do so. The fish thus introduced into this body of water must have been at the dates of the alleged trespasses the property of the plaintiff, or of the state, or of the public; meaning by the latter phrase that the public were at liberty to catch them where they lawfully might. If these fish were the property of the plaintiff, the second defense fails. The plaintiff in error sometimes calls them the property of the state, and sometimes the property of the public. If they were the property of the state, this defense fails, and the plaintiff could no more take them than if they were still in the hatchery. The third alternative is that they were for the public, and this is probably what is meant when they are called the property of the state. The question then is whether, on this branch of the case, the defendant can justify his acts by force either of common or statute law. He cannot do so by common law; for it is not true that a member of the community, merely as such, may enter the land of another in order to get something that is devoted to the public. For example, highways and parks are devoted to the public, but one may not therefore cross another man's farm in order to reach them. Nor can the defendant prevail by virtue of the acts concerning fish and game; for the legislature cannot confer upon the public a general license to commit trespasses, and, if it could do so, no such intent will be implied, and the statutes do not express it. The declared policy of the state of New Jersey is to promote and protect certain forms of animal life, in the interest of sport, and to increase the supply of food. To these ends nontidal waters have been stocked with fish, and woods and fields may be hereafter stocked with game. It may happen that gunners will then claim that they can cross lands against the protest of the owners, and will allege as their justification, in close analogy to this defense, that the birds which they seek were originally impressed by state authority with a special public character. No theory can be sound that would warrant such an invasion of private property in pursuit of private advantage. The trial judge did not err in overruling the second defense. The plaintiff was entitled to the direction that the jury find a verdict in his favor for nominal damages.

The judgment is affirmed.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

J. J. WALLACE, Plff. in Err.,
v.

Town of NORMAN.

(.....Okla.....)

*A municipal corporation is bound by the acts of its officers only when within the charter or scope of their powers. Acts outside of powers of the corporation, or of the officers appointed to act for it, are void as respects the corporation, and such corporation is not liable therefor.

(February 7, 1900.)

ERROR to the District Court for Cleveland County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover

*Headnote by IRWIN, J.

NOTE.—As to liability for property destroyed by mob, see note to Glanfortone v. New Orleans (C. C. E. D. La.) 24 L. R. A. 592.

For liability of city for act of mob causing death of human being, see that case and also New Orleans v. Abagnatto (C. C. App. 5th C.) 26 L. R. A. 329.

As to liability of a county for the lynching of a person by a mob, see Brown v. Orangeburg County (S. C.) 44 L. R. A. 734.

damages for injuries to plaintiff by reason of an alleged conspiracy to drive all colored persons from the defendant town. Affirmed.

Statement by Irwin, J.:

On November 2, 1898, J. J. Wallace, plaintiff in error, filed a petition in the district court of Cleveland county, in words and figures as follows: "Territory of Oklahoma, Cleveland County, in the District Court. J. J. Wallace, Plaintiff, v. The Town of Norman, Defendant. Case No. 2,266. Amended Petition. Comes now the plaintiff, with leave of court, and for his amended petition alleges: The plaintiff is, and at all times herein mentioned was, a citizen of the United States of America, and of the territory of Oklahoma, and a tinner and roofer by trade and occupation, having his residence in Oklahoma county, and a store and place of business in Oklahoma city, said territory. (2) The defendant is, and for many years last past was, a municipal corporation, and duly organized as a town, under the laws of Oklahoma territory. (3) Among the first inhabitants of the lands embraced within the limits of the said town were, and from that time until the present constantly have been, a large number of lawless and seditious persons, the number and the names of whom are unknown to the plaintiff, except as herein-after stated, who, soon after the first settlement of said lands, on April 22, 1889, entered into a conspiracy, which has ever since openly and notoriously existed, and is now existing, for the purpose of preventing, by means of threats and physical violence, the laboring, living, or lodging, within the corporate limits of the defendant town, of law-abiding colored citizens of the United States.

(4) In pursuance of said conspiracy, the said conspirators, within the past three years, the specific times being unknown to the plaintiff, and plaintiff being unable to more particularly give the details thereof, have openly and notoriously threatened, assaulted, beaten, and driven from said town certain law-abiding colored citizens of the United States, named Frank Rogan, Robert Green, David Branham, Robert Ely, Morey Lee, and others whose names are unknown to plaintiff, who have endeavored during said time to labor, live, and lodge in said town, and, by reason of said unlawful acts, at no time since the inception of said conspiracy, as aforesaid, has any colored person ever labored, lived, or lodged in said town, or been permitted to do so, although many such persons, including those above named, and others whose names are unknown to plaintiff, have gone to such town for such purposes. The said conspiracy still openly and notoriously exists, and by reason thereof no colored person whomsoever now labors, lives, or lodges in said town, although many such persons, including those above named, and many others whose names are to the plaintiff unknown, who are law-abiding citizens of the United States, are desirous of going to said town, and of laboring, living, and lodging therein. (5) The plaintiff, on or about July 10, 1898, went to the defendant town to perform certain work and labor in the line of his said trade, and took with him, as an assistant in his employ, a law-abiding colored citizen of the United States named George Rogan; and at said time, while engaged in said work in said town, and because of the presence and assistance of said colored person, and for no other reason, the plaintiff was unlawfully and maliciously set upon, threatened, assaulted, and beaten on and about the head, eyes, and body by said conspirators, to the number of twenty-five or thereabout, each and every one being then unknown to the plaintiff, and whose names the plaintiff has been unable since to ascertain, by the exercise of due diligence, except as hereinafter stated, but which are well known to the defendant town, and all of the officers and agents thereof, including its president, trustees, and marshal. (6) The plaintiff, by said unlawful and malicious acts, at the time, place, and manner aforesaid, was seriously and permanently injured in body and mind, in this, to wit: That he was knocked senseless; sustained a fracture of the skull; permanently lost the sight of his left eye; was under the care of a physician and nurse for sixty days, during which time he was unable to perform any labor;

his nervous system was permanently shattered; he was permanently incapacitated for performing the labor necessary to a successful following of his said trade; and he was otherwise permanently injured, both mentally and physically,—to the great damage of plaintiff, as follows, to wit: That plaintiff has paid, and become liable to pay, because of said injuries, doctor's bills amounting to $100; nursing and medicine, $100; other bills incidental to his said sickness, about $50; the income from personal labor at his said trade, aside from the store business, $5 per day, since July 10, 1898; and he will be compelled to pay similar bills in future, because of said injuries, to an amount reasonably estimated at $2,000. That plaintiff has lost, because of said injuries, the business of his store in Oklahoma City for sixty days, having been compelled to close up the same, because of his said injuries, for that length of time, $500; the good will of his said business, reasonably estimated at $1,000; the income from personal labor at his said trade in future, reasonably estimated at $5,000. That the loss of the sight of his left eye, as aforesaid, has damaged plaintiff in the sum of $5,000. That the skull fracture sustained by plaintiff, as aforesaid, has damaged plaintiff in the sum of $2,500. That the injury to plaintiff's nervous system, as aforesaid, has damaged plaintiff in the sum of $2,500. That the plaintiff has been otherwise damaged, and is entitled to claim punitive damages in the sum of $5,000,—all to the damage of the plaintiff in the sum total of at least $25,000. (7) The defendant town, and all of its officers and agents, including its president, trustees, and marshal, at all of the times herein mentioned, since the inception of said conspiracy as aforesaid, have had full notice and knowledge of the existence of said conspiracy, and of the names of said conspirators, and of the said unlawful objects and purposes thereof, and of the said unlawful acts of violence done to the plaintiff, and of the said unlawful acts of violence committed by said conspirators, pursuant to said conspiracy, within the three years last past, and it has at all times been the duty of said town, and its officers and agents, to protect the plaintiff and said other persons against such injuries and wrongs, and to suppress said conspiracy, and punish said conspirators, and to leave the plaintiff free to exercise his said trade in said town with such assistance as he may desire to employ, colored or otherwise; but notwithstanding said duty, and instead of performing the same, the defendant town, and all of its officers and agents, including its president, trustees, and marshal, have become, and at all of the times herein mentioned were, parties to said conspiracy, aiding and abetting the said wrongs and injuries by acquiescing therein, and refusing to suppress said conspiracy, although said conspiracy could have been suppressed and abated by the exercise of ordinary care on the part of said town, or its said officers and agents; and particularly did the said town, and all of its officers and agents, including sense that it is not within the power or authority of the corporation to act in reference to it, under any circumstances. If the act complained of lies wholly outside of the general or special powers of the corporation, as conferred in its charter or by statute, the corporation can in no event be liable, whether it directly commanded the performance of the act, or whether it be done by its officers without its express command." Again, the same distinguished author, at page 879 of the same volume, makes use of this language: "The principle that a municipal corporation is bound by the acts of its officers, only when within the charter or scope of their powers, and that acts outside of the powers of the corporation, or of the officers appointed to act for it, are void as respects the corporation, is vital, and the opposite doctrine has no support in reason, and very little, if any, in the judgments of the courts." In 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 2d ed. p. 868, the doctrine is laid down: "Public or municipal corporations are under no common-law liability to pay for the property of individuals destroyed by mobs or riotous assemblages, but in such case the legislature may constitutionally give a remedy, and regulate the mode of assessing the damages." In the case of Western College of Homeopathic Medicine v. Cleveland, 12 Ohio St. 375, it was held that a provision inter alia in the constituent act of the city, that it shall be the duty of the council to regulate the police of the city, preserve the peace, prevent riots, disturbances, and disorderly assemblages, had reference to the passage of ordinances to be enforced by officers appointed for the purpose, and did not make the city responsible for the riotous destruction of property, or the neglect of the officers of the city in not preventing such destruction.

We are clearly of the opinion that, in the absence of any legislative provision, making the city liable, they cannot be held liable for the acts of a mob, in the destruction of life or property. It is alleged in said petition that certain city officers, naming them, were present, aiding and abetting said riot and said mob, but it cannot be claimed, it seems to me, that when such officers were present, aiding or assisting or abetting, such mob, they were then acting within the scope of their authority as officers of the defendant city, as a corporation, but that their acts at that time were in no way authorized by the city; but it seems to us that, before the city could be held liable in this case, it must be shown by the petition that there has been some overt act done by the city, or some omission on the part of the city of some duty enjoined on it by law. It seems to us that, taking the allegations of the petition as true, the only thing the city government could have done, by way of preventing the said mob from committing the acts complained of, would have been to have passed ordinances on the subject, prohibiting the acts and prescribing the penalty therefor; and such petition does not allege that such ordinances were not passed by the city, and as the passage of such ordinances would have been the proper exercise of the authority delegated in the premises to the city, we think it proper to indulge in the presumption that the city authorities have done their duty in this particular, and that said ordinances were passed and in force. It is alleged in the petition that various persons have been, in consequence of this conspiracy, assaulted, beaten, and misused; but it seems to us these facts would not, of themselves, make the city liable. It certainly could not be contended that the city is liable for every injury that may result to a person in consequence of a violation of an ordinance because that ordinance has been repeatedly violated. This petition states nothing more than that the plaintiff has been injured and damaged by a mob, or the unlawful act of a number of malicious persons, within the corporate limits of the city of Norman, and that the names of the persons so committing such acts were known to the defendant. But we fail to see anywhere in the petition any allegation which would make the city of Norman liable as a municipal corporation. If unlawful acts have been done by individuals, whether such persons were holding municipal offices in said city of Norman or not, whereby the plaintiff has been damaged and has sustained injury, then such persons in their individual capacity are liable, and an action may be brought against them; but it seems to us there is nothing in this petition, when measured by the well-known and recognized principles of the law, that would make the city of Norman, as a city, liable. City authorities make rules to regulate the conduct of people within the limits of the city, but no city can, by law regulate or control the thoughts, feelings, or prejudices of the people. If the city can be held responsible for the likes and dislikes of its people, then, with equal propriety, could it be said they are responsible for the health, religion, or politics of the community. The secret thoughts, feelings, likes, and dislikes of the people are beyond legislative control. It is only the outward manifestations, as exemplified in conduct, that can be regulated and controlled by law. It might be beneficial to the human family if, by legislation, good health, and not disease, could be made contagious, but under the present system of jurisprudence this cannot be done. Hence we think the demurrer to said petition was properly sustained.

Finding no error in the record, the decision of the District Court is affirmed.

All of the Justices concur.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, FOURTH CIRCUIT.

BRUNSWICK TERMINAL COMPANY et al.,
App'ts.,
v.
NATIONAL BANK OF BALTIMORE.

(99 Fed. Rep. 635.)

1. The construction given by the highest court of a state to a statute of limitations of that state will be followed by the Federal courts.
2. A special statute of limitations applicable to liabilities arising under statutes, acts of incorporation, or by operation of the law, such as Ga. Code 1882, § 2916 (Code 1895, § 3768), is to be considered as forming a part of, and as read into, a subsequent act of incorporation as much as if it were formally incorporated therein; and therefore it will govern in an action in another state to enforce the liability of a stockholder in such corporation.

(Brawley, District Judge, dissents.)

(February 6, 1900.)

APPPEAL by complainants from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Maryland in favor of defendant in a suit to enforce defendant's liability as stockholder in the Brunswick State Bank of Georgia. Reversed.

Before Goff, Circuit Judge, and Brawley and Waddill, District Judges.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—When statute of limitations will govern action in another state or country.

- I. General rule.
- II. Exceptions.
- III. Where there is no statutory provision in forum as to effect of bar of other state.
 - a. Contracts.
 1. In general.
 2. Cases in which the doctrine that the law of the forum governs, questioned or denied.
 3. When right of action extinguished, as well as the remedy affected.
 - b. Judgments.
 1. In general.
 2. Where right of action extinguished as well as the remedy affected.
 - c. Decedents' estates.
 - d. Adverse possession.
 - e. Usury.
 - f. Liability of stockholders.
 - g. Personal injuries.
 - h. Death.
 - i. Miscellaneous cases.
- IV. Where statutes of forum provide as to effect of bar of other state.
 - I. General rule.

The general rule is that the law of the forum, rather than the law of the place where the cause of action accrued, will govern. This rule is maintained to such an extent that many of the courts state that it is almost axiomatic.

II. Exceptions.

Some decisions make a distinction between those cases where the cause of action is fully barred in the state where the cause of action arose and those where the bar was not complete before defendant's removal from the state. See, on this point, infra, III. a, 2. The mass of cases, however, as will be seen, do not make any such distinction.

Another exception is where the statute of the state where the cause of action accrued extinguishes the right of action, as well as affects the remedy. For cases on this point, see infra, III. a, 3, b, 2, g.

Another exception very closely connected with the preceding, is where the statute of another state, giving a right of action, requires suit to be brought thereon within a specified time. Hudson v. Bishop, 32 Fed. Rep. 519, which was an action against the surety on a guardian's bond, is a case of this kind, and holds that the provision of Wis. Stat. chap. 170, § 3968, that no action shall be maintained against the surety unless suit is commenced within four years from the guardian's discharge, is a substantial right forming part of the surety's contract, and is a bar to a suit, wherever brought, after such period has elapsed. Brewer, J., on a rehearing in 35 Fed. Rep. 820, takes substantially the same view.

For cases involving the time within which to bring suit to enforce the liability of a stockholder in a corporation of another state, see infra, III. f.

For cases involving the time within which to bring suit for negligently causing the death of another in another state, see infra, III. h.

For cases involving the time to bring an action for illegal interest paid in another state, see infra, III. e.

The principal case of BRUNSWICK TERMINAL CO. V. NATIONAL BANK OF BALTIMORE goes even further, and holds that a special statute applicable to statutory liabilities or liabilities arising under acts of incorporation should be considered as forming part of the act of incorporation, and that its provisions should govern in an action in another state to enforce the liability of a stockholder.

Another exception is where the possession of property is held in one state until a good title is acquired by adverse possession under the statute of limitations of such state. For cases on this point, see infra, III. d. This, also, is closely connected with the second exception given.

Among the exceptions may also be placed those cases where the state in which the suit is brought has provided by statute as to what the effect of the statute of limitations of another state will be. A large number of the states have now made provision in this regard. On this point, see infra, IV.

III. Where there is no statutory provision in forum as to effect of bar of other state.

a. Contracts.

1. In general.

The general rule is that the law of the forum, rather than the law of the state in which the cause of action arose or the parties

Messrs. Goodyear & Kay and Williams & Williams, for appellants:

A right of action not existing in common law, but entirely the creation of statute, is controlled, even as to the remedy for its enforcement, by the statute of the state creating it, although, of course, in the absence of any such controlling statute, such remedy will be controlled by the law of the forum.

The statutes of Georgia have conferred upon the appellants a right not known to common law, and have also declared that such right shall continue to exist for a period of twenty years from the time it accrued; the appellee therefore, when it became a stockholder in the Brunswick State Bank, subjected itself to such right of action subject only to such statutory limitation; and such is the law for all jurisdictions.

The Harrisburg, 119 U. S. 199, sub nom.

resided, will govern. Medbury v. Hopkins, 3 Conn. 472; State ex rel. Trimble v. Swope, 7 Ind. 91; Putnam v. Dike, 13 Gray, 535; Bigelow v. Ames, 18 Minn. 527, Gil. 471; Brown v. Bicknell, 1 Pinney, 226, 39 Am. Dec. 299.

So held in actions on promissory notes. Star Wagon Co. v. Matthlessen, 8 Dak. 233, 14 N. W. 107; Hoggett v. Emerson, 8 Kan. 262; Bennett v. Devlin, 17 B. Mon. 853; Union Cotton Manufactory v. Lobdell, 7 Mart. N. S. 108; Bacon v. Dahlgreen, 7 La. Ann. 599; Erwin v. Lowry, 2 La. Ann. 314, 46 Am. Dec. 545; Thibodeau v. Levassuer, 36 Me. 362; Wright v. Mordant (Miss.), 27 So. 640; Carrigan v. Semple, 72 Tex. 306, 12 S. W. 178; Johnson v. Anderson, 76 Va. 766; Farmers' & T. Nat. Bank v. Lovell, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 261, 1 S. W. 426; Stirling v. Winter, 80 Mo. 141; Carpentier v. Minturn, 6 Lans. 56; Jones v. Hays, 4 McLean, 521, Fed. Cas. No. 7,467; Walsh v. Mayer, 111 U. S. 31, 28 L. ed. 338, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 260.

And on a bill of exchange. Atwater v. Townsend, 4 Conn. 47, 10 Am. Dec. 97.

And on a bond. Crawford v. Childress, 1 Ala. 482; Graves v. Graves, 2 Bibb, 207, 4 Am. Dec. 697; King v. Lane, 7 Mo. 241, 37 Am. Dec. 187.

And for goods sold and delivered. Slisson v. Miles, 64 Vt. 449, 24 Atl. 992; Toulondou v. Lachenmeyer, 37 How. Pr. 145, 6 Abb. Pr. N. S. 215, 1 Sweeney, 45; Levy v. Boas, 2 Bail. L. 217, 23 Am. Dec. 134.

In the absence of statute the bar of the state where contract was executed is not a bar in the state in which suit is brought. Sloan v. Waugh, 18 Iowa, 224; Swickard v. Bailey, 8 Kan. 507.

And in Gautier v. Franklin, 1 Tex. 732, it is held that an action on promissory notes executed in another state will be governed by the law of the forum in the absence of statutory provision in regard thereto.

And in Clark v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 94 N. Y. 217, it is admitted by both parties that, in the absence of a statutory provision relating thereto, the statute of limitations of the state where the cause of action arose would constitute no defense.

In Brigham v. Bigelow, 12 Met. 268, the statement is made, though not necessary to a decision of the case, that the statute of limitations of each state is to govern in an action brought therein.

In Bacon v. Rives, 106 U. S. 99, 27 L. ed. 69, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 3, the question is raised whether the lex fori shall govern in an action on a contract made and to be performed in another state, but the point is not decided, as it 48 L. R. A.

The Harrisburg v. Rickards, 30 L. ed. 358, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140.

As a rule the statute of limitation is held to go only to the remedy, and therefore the law of the forum is applied, but the recognized exception to this is in the case of statutory rights, as to which the creating state has seen fit by statutes relating thereto to fix the period of limitations.

Flash v. Conn., 109 U. S. 371, 27 L. ed. 966, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 263; Fourth Nat. Bank v. Franklyn, 120 U. S. 747, 30 L. ed. 825, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 757; Leighton v. Young, 10 U. S. App. 298, 52 Fed. Rep. 449, 3 C. C. A. 176, 18 L. R. A. 266; Andrews v. Bacon, 33 Fed. Rep. 777.

Messrs. D. K. Este Fisher, Allan McLane, William A. Fisher, and James L. McLane for appellee.

is held that the cause of action was not barred by limitation as prescribed in either state.

In Way v. Colyer, 54 Minn. 14, 55 N. W. 744, it was held that the statute of limitations of the state in which the notes in suit were made, and in which the maker resided, was not available, as it was not pleaded or proved, no other intimation being given as to whether defendant could have relied thereon if it had been properly pleaded and proved.

In Ridge v. Cowley, 6 Lea, 166, the court states that the general rule is that the law of the state in which the suit is instituted regulates the prescription without regard to the place where the cause of action originated, although no claim appears to have been made that the statute of limitations of the state in which the note in suit was executed would govern.

In Pike v. Greene, 1 Yerg. 465, the court states that the bar to the note in suit forced by the law of Kentucky where it was executed could not be pleaded in the courts of Tennessee, and it does not appear that there was any contention by defendant that he was entitled to the benefit of the Kentucky statute.

In Valz v. First Nat. Bank, 96 Ky. 543, 29 S. W. 320, it is held that the statute of limitations of Kentucky, in an action on account for an overdraft in Alabama, would control, as the Alabama statute of limitations was not sufficiently pleaded, the implication from the opinion seeming to be that if the Alabama statute had been properly pleaded the right to recover would have been governed thereby.

In Hanger v. Abbott, 6 Wall. 532, 18 L. ed. 939, in which the question at issue was whether or not the time during which the courts of the southern states were closed during the Rebellion should be considered in determining whether the statute of limitations had run the statement was made that proceedings in courts of justice, including the statutes of limitations, are usually determined by the lex fori instead of the lex loci contractus.

In Paine v. Drew, 44 N. H. 306, an action on a bill of exchange and an account annexed. It was stated that no claim was made that the statute of limitations of the state where the cause of action arose had any force or could be pleaded in bar of an action in the New Hampshire courts; that such statutes had no force outside the territorial limits of the state enacting them, and ordinarily do not in any way affect the contract sued on, but affect and limit the remedy only, and belong purely to the lex fori.

In Campbell v. Stein, 6 Dow, P. C. 116, it is Waddill, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from the decree of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Maryland dismissing the bill in equity filed in that court by the appellants against the appellee. 88 Fed. 607. The bill was filed by the appellants, creditors of the Brunswick State Bank of Georgia, on their own behalf and on behalf of such other creditors as might intervene against the appellee, the National Bank of Baltimore, alleged to be liable as a stockholder in the Brunswick State Bank. The Brunswick State Bank was incorporated by an act of the Georgia legislature of October 24, 1881, and discontinued business, being insolvent, on the 25th of May, 1893. By its charter (Laws 1889, § 9, p. 522) it is provided: "That said corporation shall be responsible to its creditors to the extent of its property and assets, and the stockholders, in addition thereto, shall be individually liable, equally and ratably, and not one for the other, as sureties to the creditors of such corporation, for all contracts and debts of the said corporation, to the extent of the amount of their stock therein, at the par value thereof, respectively, at the time the debt was created, in addition to the amount invested in such shares."

Ga. Code 1882, § 1496, further provides: "When a stockholder in any bank or other corporation is individually liable under its charter, and shall transfer his stock, he shall be exempt from such a liability unless he receives a written notice from a creditor, within six months after such transfer, of his intention to hold him liable: provided, he shall give notice for once a month, for six held that in an action in Scotland by a solicitor in London for costs of suit incurred in England the statute of limitations of Scotland, where the debtor resided, would govern.

In Fergusson v. Fyffe, 8 Clark & F. 121, which is an action in Scotland on an account in a bank in Calcutta, it is held that the question as to the time within which suit must be brought is governed by the law of Scotland.

In Townsend v. Jemison, 9 How. 407, 13 L. ed. 194, it was held that, although the right of action on a contract is barred in the state in which it is made, such bar does not defeat a recovery in an action in another state, as in all cases the lex fori. Instead of the lex loci contractus, must govern as to the statute of limitations, which is held to affect the remedy only.

An action in Minnesota on a note executed in Massachusetts between residents of that state is barred where the defendant has lived within the state of Minnesota more than six years, which is the period fixed by its statute for bringing an action on a note, as the time of bringing suit pertains to the remedy, and is in all cases governed by the lex fori. Fletcher v. Spaulding, 9 Minn. 64, Gil. 54.

The bar of the statute of limitations in New York on a note executed therein, all the parties to which are citizens of that state, is not available in an action in Massachusetts, as the lex fori prevails as to the remedy. Byrne v. Crowninshield, 17 Mass. 55.

The statute of limitations of the state of New York is not available in an action in Massachusetts by residents of the former state against residents of the latter on a note executed in New York. Pearson v. Dwight, 2 Mass. 84, 3 Am. Dec. 35.

The statute of limitation is no bar to an action in Maine on a note executed in another state, where the defendant has never resided in Maine. Brown v. Nourse, 55 Me. 230, 92 Am. Dec. 583.

The law of the forum governs as to prescription in an action in Louisiana against a succession, on a note executed by a resident of that state, whose property is in the state, and whose succession was opened therein, although the note was dated and payable in another state. Young v. Crossgrove, 4 La. Ann. 233.

In Ware v. Curry, 67 Ala. 274, it is said that if the statute of the state in which suit is brought does not operate as a bar to an action on contract, the statute of the state in which the contract was made, under which the action is barred, is not available.

In Decouche v. Savetier, 8 Johns. Ch. 190, 48 L. R. A.

8 Am. Dec. 478, it is held that the statute of limitations will govern as to the rights of the surviving wife in the personal estate of her husband who died in New York, under a marriage contract executed in France, where the parties then resided.

In New York L. Ins. Co. v. Aitkin, 125 N. Y. 674, 26 N. E. 732, it is held that the New York statute of limitations will govern an action commenced in New York on a covenant by the grantee of real estate in New Jersey assuming payment of a mortgage thereon.

An action to enforce, in the District of Columbia, an agreement by the purchaser of land to pay an existing mortgage thereon, although such land is situated in the state of New York where the agreement is to be performed, is governed as to limitations by the laws of the District of Columbia. Willard v. Wood, 164 U. S. 502, 41 L. ed. 531, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 176.

In Carter v. Adamson, 21 Ark. 287, it was held that in an action in Maryland on an Arkansas contract the Maryland statute of limitations would control, and that the judgment rendered in the Maryland court could not be attacked on the ground that the cause of action was barred by the Arkansas statute.

In Graves v. Weeks, 19 Vt. 178, it is held that the fact that the account sued on accrued in New York, and was barred by the statute of limitations of that state, was not available as a bar in an action in Vermont.

The statute of limitations of a state in which a note is executed by a citizen thereof is not available in an action in another state to which he subsequently removes. Way v. Sperry, 6 Cush. 238, 52 Am. Dec. 779.

In Power v. Hathaway, 43 Barb. 214, which was an action by legatees to recover the amount of legacies collected for them by a decedent from the executors in Michigan where all the parties resided, it was held that the statute of limitations of New York would govern, although the claim would be utterly barred by the Michigan statute of limitations if suit were brought in that state.

In Hoag v. Dessan, 1 Pittsb. 390, it is held that the lex fori governs in an action on a contract executed in another state, although by the law of the latter state the right of action was barred before either party left the state.

The bar of the statute of limitations of the state in which a note is made and payable, arising while the parties resided therein, is not a bar to an action in Maine. Thompson v. Reed, 75 Me. 404.

The statute of limitations of a country in months, of such transfer, immediately thereafter, in two newspapers in and nearest the places where said institution shall keep its principal office."

The appellee was at one time a stockholder of the Brunswick State Bank of Georgia, and, upon transfer of its stock, failed to comply with the statutory provisions last set forth, and appellants claim that it has incurred the stockholders' liability provided for in the charter hereinbefore recited, and is liable to them in this suit.

In the lower court the appellee appeared, and filed its answer, setting up, among other defenses, that of the statute of limitations, and insisted that the case was governed by the Maryland statute of limitations, applicable to actions of assumpsit or actions of debt on simple contracts (Md. Code [Pub. Gen. Laws] art. 57, § 1), which requires the suit in such cases to be commenced within three years from the time the right of action accrues. The appellants, complainants in the lower court, demurred to the plea of the statute of limitations thus set up, and elected to stand upon the demurrer, and the case turned upon that question solely, the court overruling the demurrer to said plea, and dismissing the bill.

The single question to be determined in this case is whether the statute of limitations of the state of Maryland or of the state of Georgia applies to the claim sued on. The merits of the case were not touched upon by the decision of the lower court, and it is not the purpose of this court to express any opinion thereon. It is a general rule, too well settled to admit of serious controversy at this late day, that the remedies, as distinguished from the rights of the parties.

which a note is executed between parties residing therein, and who remain there until the bar of the statute is complete, is not available in an action on a note brought in Massachusetts after the payee's removal to that state. Bulger v. Roche, 11 Pick. 36, 22 Am. Dec. 359.

That an action on contract is barred by limitation in the state in which it is made, and in which the person sought to be held resided until the bar was complete, is not available in an action in another state to which he subsequently removes. Jones v. Jones, 18 Ala. 248.

In Urton v. Hunter, 2 W. Va. 83, it is held that the bar of the statute of Maryland, where the note in suit was given by a resident of that state to a citizen of Virginia, could not be set up in bar in an action in West Virginia, where the defendant left the state of Maryland before the bar of that state was complete.

In Adams v. Kelly, 2 Wash. Terr. 263, 5 Pac. 601, it is held that defendant, sued on a note executed in California while all the parties resided there, could not set up the California statute of limitations, where he left that state before the bar of the statute was complete, and did not thereafter return, § 351 of the California Code of Civil Procedure providing that if after the cause of action accrues the debtor leaves the state, the time of his absence is no part of the time limited for commencing the action.

The statute of limitations of the forum is available to a resident of the state, although the plaintiffs are nonresidents, and the note in suit was executed in another state. Bruce v. Greene, 4 G. Greene, 43.

In Barbour v. Erwin, 14 Lea, 716, the general rule is held that if a foreigner brings an action for a debt in a state by whose laws it is barred he is bound by the law of the forum, and cannot recover, although the debt would not be barred in the state of his residence.

In Beardsley v. Southmayd, 15 N. J. L. 171, it is stated that no attempt was made to set up the statute of limitations of the state in which the cause of action accrued; and then it is further said that the plaintiff has voluntarily come into the New Jersey court and invoked its aid, and has thereby adopted the lex fori as the rule by which his case is to be governed, and that the defendants claimed the protection of that law, which must control the court.

In Nash v. Tupper, 1 Cal. 402, 2 Am. Dec. 197, it is held, Livingston, J., dissenting, that the law of the forum would govern in an action on a note executed in Connecticut, rather than the longer statute of limitations of the latter 48 L. R. A.

state, the court citing, on p. 412, an action between Page and Cable on a promissory note executed in Connecticut in which the court also held that plaintiff, having elected to prosecute his suit in New York, must pursue his remedy agreeably to its laws, and that its courts could not dispense with an adherence to the requisites of time in commencing and prosecuting a suit because the cause of action arose in another state.

An action in Louisiana on a note payable in Mississippi, executed by a resident of Arkansas, is governed as to prescription by the laws of Louisiana, and no recovery can be had if the action is barred in that state. Brown v. Stone, 4 La. Ann. 235.

In Howard v. Coon, 93 Mich. 442, 53 N. W. 531, it was held that no recovery could be had in Michigan on a note executed in California, where an action on the note was barred by the Michigan statute, the question as to whether or not the statute of limitations of California should govern not being considered in the opinion.

An action on a bond executed between parties residing in New Jersey cannot be maintained in Michigan, to which state the obligor subsequently removed, after it is barred by the limitation of that state, even though the obligee did not know of his removal thereto, as the Michigan statute contains no provision relieving a foreign plaintiff from the force of the statute because of his ignorance that the defendant had removed to that state. Home L. Ins. Co. v. Elwell, 111 Mich. 689, 70 N. W. 334.

In Pinney v. Cummings, 26 Ohio St. 46, it was held that actions on causes of action accruing outside of the state, and not limited by the law of the place where they accrued, or limited thereby to longer periods than those specified in the Ohio statute, are governed as to limitation by the Ohio statute.

In British Linen Co. v. Drummond, 10 Bar. & C. 903, 9 L. J. K. B. 213, it is held that where an action on a bond executed in Scotland, where the parties resided, is brought in England, the plaintiff must be governed by the statute of limitations of England, and cannot recover if the action is barred there, although the cause of action was not barred in Scotland.

An action in Scotland on a bill of exchange drawn, accepted, and payable in France, the acceptor returning to Scotland before the maturity of the bill and there remaining until his death, is governed by the statute of limitations of Scotland, and when barred there no recovery can be had, although a judgment against are determined by the law of the forum, and that the statutes of limitations are part of the remedy, and not of the laws affecting rights. M'Elmoyle v. Cohen, 13 Pet. 312, 327, 10 L. ed. 177, 184; Michigan Insurance Bank v. Eldred, 130 U. S. 693, 696, 32 L. ed. 1080, 1081, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 690; Great Western Teleg. Co. v. Purdy, 162 U. S. 329, 339, 40 L. ed. 986, 991, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 810; Willard v. Wood, 164 U. S. 502, 520, 41 L. ed. 531, 538, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 176; Townsend v. Jenison, 9 How. 407, 13 L. ed. 194; Union P. R. Co. v. Wyler, 158 U. S. 285, 289, 39 L. ed. 983, 987, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 877. There are, however, exceptions to this rule; one being where a statutory liability is sought to be enforced, and the statute prescribes the period of limitation. In this case the general rule, adopting the statutes of limitations of the forum, is departed from, and the limitation prescribed by the act fixing the liability is applicable. Indeed, this principle was recognized by the learned judge in the court below in his opinion, but he proceeded upon the theory that there was no statute of the state of Georgia fixing the limitation in actions to enforce stockholders' liability. This, it seems, was a mistake, and that there existed such a statute. Ga. Code 1882, § 2916 (Code 1895, § 3766), is as follows: "All suits for the enforcement of rights accruing to individuals under statutes, acts of incorporation, or by operation of law, shall be brought within twenty years after the right of action accrues."

This statute, in our opinion, governs in this case, and not the Maryland statute. It is exceedingly broad in its terms, and is expressly made applicable to suits for the the acceptor had previously been obtained in France. Don v. Lippmann, 5 Clark & F. 1, 5 English Ruling Cases, 930.

An action in England to recover a debt contracted in India is governed by the statute of limitations of England, and the bar of the Indian statute of limitations is unavailable. Finch v. Finch, 45 L. J. Ch. N. S. 816, 35 L. T. N. S. 235.

In Ruggles v. Keeler, 8 Johns. 263, 3 Am. Dec. 482, it is held, in an action on a note executed in Connecticut between citizens thereof, that the bar of the Connecticut statute to a demand in favor of the defendant against the plaintiff was not available, whether interposed against the demand of the plaintiff or the set-off of the defendant.

An action in Kansas to foreclose a mortgage on land in that state to secure notes executed by a resident of Iowa, and payable in that state, is governed by the statute of limitations of the latter state, where the mortgagor had not been in Kansas the length of time required by its statutes to constitute a bar. Crooker v. Pearson, 41 Kan. 410, 21 Pac. 270.

The Louisiana statute of limitations applicable to non-negotiable instruments will be applied in an action in Louisiana on a note executed in another state, where it is not negotiable in Louisiana, although it is negotiable in the other state. Lacoste v. Benton, 3 La. Ann. 220.

An action cannot be maintained in New York on an attested promissory note made in Massachusetts, where it would be barred by the statute of the former state, although the Massachusetts statutes provide that the statute of limitations shall not extend to any attested note. Nicola v. Rodgers, 2 Palme, 437, Fed. Cas. No. 10,260.

In Watson v. Brewster, 1 Pa. St. 381, which was an action on promissory notes with scrawl seals, executed and made payable in New York, it was held that the statute of Pennsylvania, by which such notes were regarded as specialties on which the statute of limitations does not run, would govern instead of the laws of New York by which such notes are regarded as promissory notes and as such bound by the statute of limitations.

In an action in Virginia on a note executed in Kentucky, the statute of limitation of the former state will govern, and the statute applicable to instruments which are not specialties will apply if the note is not a specialty under the Virginia laws, although it is held to be under the Kentucky statute. Bank of United States v. Donnally, 8 Pet. 361, 8 L. ed. 974.

An action in England on a bond executed in India is governed as to limitations by the English law fixing a longer period for limitation on bonds than on instruments which are not specialties, although by the laws of limitation of India, which make no difference between specialty debts, and simple contracts, the statute of limitations would have run. Alliance Bank v. Carey, 29 Week. Rep. 306, 44 J. P. 735, 49 L. J. C. P. N. S. 781, L. R. 5 C. P. Div. 429.

The statute of Georgia providing that a partial payment on a note to stop the running of the statute of limitations must be entered on the note by the debtor or subscribed by him, or by someone for him, governs in an action in that state on a note executed elsewhere. Obear v. First Nat. Bank, 97 Ga. 587, 33 L. R. A. 384, 25 S. E. 335.

In Tilliard v. Hall, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 381, 32 S. W. 863, which was an action in Texas to recover a balance due on a mortgage on real estate in England, it is held that the Texas statute of limitations, under which a partial payment will not stop the running of the statute, would govern; the court stating that the English laws as to foreclosure of mortgages do not affect the right to sue on the maturity of the demand, but only the right to foreclose the mortgage security.

A party must rely on the statute of limitations of one state or the other, and cannot join the time in the two states together. Petchell v. Hopkins, 19 Iowa, 531.

The provision of Vt. Rev. Laws, § 970, as to absence of defendant from, and want of property within, the state, applies to the absence from, and want of property within, Vermont, and not within the state in which the cause of action accrued. Slason v. Niles, 64 Vt. 449, 24 Atl. 992.

2. Cases in which the doctrine that the law of the forum governs, questioned or denied.

In Le Roy v. Crowninshield, 2 Mason, 151, Fed. Cas. No. 8,269, it was held that the bar of the state of New York to an action on a contract entered into within that state was not available in an action thereon in Massachusetts. Story, J., who delivered the opinion, stating that the law on that subject had been settled by authorities which, the court was bound to respect, but that if the question were new the inclination of his own mind would lead him to hold that where all remedies were barred or discharged by the lex loci contractus, enforcement of rights accruing to individuals under statutes and acts of incorporation. This statute has been construed by the supreme court of the state of Georgia, and by it held applicable to causes of action arising under acts of incorporation in that state. Georgia Masonic Ins. Co. v. Davis, 63 Ga. 471. This case turned upon the question of whether the liability arising under the act of the Georgia legislature incorporating the Georgia Masonic Mutual Life Insurance Company was subject to the period of limitation prescribed by the law of that state applicable to simple contracts, or by the act now under consideration, and the court decided that the liability was a statutory one, lasting for twenty years, and that this act applied. A further presentation of the general doctrine of a stockholder's statutory liability by the supreme court of the state of Georgia will be found in Banks v. Darden, 18 Ga. 318, 341. This court will follow the construction given by the supreme court of the state of Georgia to a statute of limitations of that state. No rule is, perhaps, more thoroughly established, and we know of no reason for disregarding it in the present case. Bauserman v. Blunt, 147 U. S. 647, 37 L. ed. 316, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 466; Balkam v. Woodstock Iron Co. 154 U. S. 177, 188, 38 L. ed. 953, 957, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1010.

In Balkam v. Woodstock Iron Co. 154 U. S. 187, 188, 38 L. ed. 957, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1014, Mr. Justice White, speaking for the court, said: "No laws of the several states have been more steadfastly or more often recognized by this court, from the beginning, as rules of decision in the courts of the United States, than statutes of limitations and have operated on the case, the bar might be pleaded by the debtor in a foreign tribunal to repel any suit brought to enforce the debt; that where all remedies were barred by the lex loci contractus there was a virtual extinction of the "right" in that place, which ought to be recognized in every other tribunal; but that, if the prescription of the lex loci contractus was longer than that of the lex fori, the latter might be pleaded in bar of a foreign contract if it applied to such contracts.

In Townsend v. Jemison, 9 How. 407, 13 L. ed. 194, the court considers the above decision, and states that Judge Story afterward receded from such position, and in his work on the Conflict of Laws expressed the view, from his own conviction as well as on authority, that the lex fori would govern in such case.

In Towns v. Bardwell, 1 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 86, it is said that if the statute of limitations had run against the note in suit before the defendant had left the state in which it was made, the court would be strongly inclined to hold that it would bar a recovery in Alabama.

And Goodman v. Munks, 8 Port. (Ala.) 84, holds that the maker of a note which had become barred by limitation in the state of its execution before the maker's removal therefrom may set up such bar in another state to which he removes, although, by the law of the latter state, limitation has not yet run. This case was, however, overruled in Jones v. Jones, 18 Ala. 248, as being in opposition to every well-considered case in England and America, and not sustainable on principle.

Glavin v. Plummer, 2 Cranch, C. C. 54, Fed. Cas. No. 5,451, an action in the United States circuit court of the District of Columbia on a bond executed in Maryland between parties residing in that state, holds that the bar of the Maryland statute of limitations, providing that no bond shall be good and pleadable after the debt or thing in action is above twelve years standing, was a good defense, where both parties had continued to reside in Maryland for more than twelve years after the bond was executed.

And Rathbone v. Coe, 6 Dak. 91, 50 N. W. 620, holds that the bar of limitations of the state in which the contract was made, is, when complete, available in another state to which the debtor subsequently removes.

In Hudley v. Kimball, 17 N. H. 498, the court states that it is well settled that "courts do not take notice of any foreign statute of limitation unless the party has absolutely lost all right of action in the foreign court by having omitted, during the period prescribed by that 48 L. R. A.

statute, to assert his right there, he having had full opportunity to do so." In this case no foreign statute had been pleaded, so that in reality no question arose as to the force of such a statute.

In Carpenter v. Wells, 21 Barb. 593, it is stated that no pretense was made that defendants could avail themselves of the statute of limitations of Massachusetts where the note in suit was made; but the court admits that a very serious objection to the doctrine that the lex fori does not apply to the time of the remedy is that antiquated demands may be revived and enforced when the party happens to be found in some state where the statute of limitations is not available; but the consideration of such objection is held to belong to the legislature, rather than to the courts.

And Wilcox v. Williams, 5 Nev. 206, holds that the law of the forum always governs the remedy, and that the statute of limitations applies only to a remedy, and not to a right or obligation, the court stating that it was doubted at one time whether such rule would apply when the statutory bar had fully run against the contract where made, but that the better opinion now is that such fact makes no difference and that the rule is unchanged except when such statute by its terms and conditions extinguishes and modifies the claim itself.

Gibbons v. Ewell, 1 Handy (Ohio) 561, is an apparent exception to the general rule that the law of the forum will govern as to limitations, the court treating the case throughout as though the statute of limitations of Maryland, in which state the note in suit was made and delivered, governed, but as there was a statute in Ohio that actions on contract executed by nonresidents, when barred in the state or country where made would be barred when sued in Ohio, it is very probable that the court had such statute in mind when writing the opinion.

3. Where right of action extinguished, as well as the remedy affected.

In Le Roy v. Crownshield, 2 Mason, 151, Fed. Cas. No. 8,269, Story, J., brings out the distinction between statutes of limitations which purport on their face to extinguish all right of action on contracts made in a country without reference to any particular court in which the action may be brought and statutes which merely prohibit a court from taking cognizance of an action unless within a limited period after the right has accrued, and says that he can per-of actions, real and personal, as enacted by the legislature of a state, and as construed by its highest court."

And in support of this position the unbroken decisions of the supreme court, commencing as early as 4 Cranch, and running down to the time of its delivery, were cited by the learned justice. In Flash v. Conn., 109 U. S. 371, 381, 27 L. ed. 966, 970, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 263, on an appeal from the circuit court of the United States for the district of Florida, it was held that the decision of the New York court of appeals, holding a certain statutory stockholder's liability not to be a penalty, but in the nature of a contract, and therefore not barred by the three years' limitation, as in the case of a penalty, but by the six years' limitation prescribed as to contracts, was binding in all jurisdictions. The court (Mr. Justice Woods) says: "We think this is a case where the construction of the state court is entitled to great, if not conclusive, weight with us. It is the settled construction of a law of the state, upon which the rights and liabilities of a large number of its citizens must depend. If the liability of a stockholder under § 10 arises upon contract, the six years' limitation applies to it; if the liability is in the nature of a penalty, the three years' limitation applies. It is clear that confusion and uncertainty would result should the state and Federal courts place different constructions on the section. Such a result ought, if possible, to be avoided. . . . If this were a case arising in the state of New York, we should, therefore, follow the construction put upon the statute by the courts of that state. The circumstance that the case comes here from the state of Florida should celve no reason why the right to use the defense that all right of action has been extinguished in the state in which the parties reside, given by its laws, should not go with the debtor into any other country.

In Crocker v. Arey, 3 R. I. 178, it is held that the statute of limitations of another state in which the note in suit was executed would not govern, as such statute did not extinguish the right, but merely affected the remedy.

In Scharff v. Lisseo, 63 Miss. 213, it is held that the fact that the statute of limitations of the state in which the cause of action arose has run in defendant's favor is not available to him unless such statute of limitations bars the right as well as the remedy.

In Perkins v. Guy, 55 Miss. 158, 30 Am. Rep. 510, it is held that the lex fori will govern as to limitations in an action on contract executed in another state in which both of the parties resided until the cause of action was barred therein, unless the statute of such state absolutely extinguished the debt instead of merely affecting the remedy. The statement is made, however, that it might perhaps be worthy of the serious consideration of the legislature, whether it would not be wise to alter the general rule that the lex fori prevails where both parties resided in another state whose statute had barred the remedy.

In Lincoln v. Battelle, 6 Wend. 475, it is held that a law of a foreign country, requiring creditors to present their demands by a certain day or be precluded thereafter from asserting the same, even though its effect was to extinguish the debt, was a mere statute of limitations, and would not govern in an action in New York.

And in Gans v. Frank, 36 Barb. 320, it is held that the statute of limitations of Pennsylvania, in which state the goods were sold for which suit was brought, was not available as a bar, as the Pennsylvania statute only prohibits the bringing of an action after the time limited in such state, the court saying that if the provisions of the law rendered the contract void or terminated it in any way a different rule might be applicable.

Haws v. Cragle, 49 N. C. (4 Jones, L.) 394, holds that the presumption of payment, arising from the lapse of time, of a bond executed in another state, is that allowed by the lex fori, as it affects the remedy instead of the rights and merits of the action. The court stated in this case that there was a marked difference between the effect of a statute which merely bars a remedy and one which gives a right, and that it may be the duty of every state, on the 43 L. R. A.

principle of comity, to protect a right or title, no matter how acquired, under the laws of another state.

In Taberner v. Brentnall, 18 N. J. L. 262, an action on a note executed in England, which country the defendant left before an action thereon was barred by its laws, it is stated that the statute of limitations of England affects the remedy and does not interfere with the obligation of the contract, and that the lex fori will therefore govern the case.

An action in England for services as attorney and solicitor in India, where both parties resided at the time, may be maintained, although the statute of limitations has run in India where defendant continues to reside, the plaintiff having left that country before the bar was complete. Williams v. Jones, 13 East, 439. The court, however, stated that if there had been an extinguishment of the right itself, instead of a mere extinction of the remedy, the decision might have been different.

A judgment for defendant in the Ile of Man, in an action for services as attorney rendered in a suit in that island, on the ground that under the statute of limitations for three years of such island the cause of action was barred, does not bar a subsequent action in England to recover for the same services brought within the period limited by the laws of that country for maintaining such an action. In this case the court states that the law of the Ile of Man extinguished the right as well as the remedy, and had such been the issue determined by the Manx court the defense of the statute of limitations would have been a good one. Harris v. Quina, L. R. 4 Q. B. 653, 38 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 381.

Sawyer v. Macaulay, 18 S. C. 543, holds that the bar of the statute of the state in which the notes in suit were executed was not available in an action in South Carolina, the court saying that if the statute paid or destroyed the debt, then, when once barred in any state, it would be gone forever and in all places, but that it does not destroy the debt but only suspends the remedy.

Hays v. Cage, 2 Tex. 501, holds that, in the absence of a statutory provision in regard thereto, the statute of limitations of the forum will govern, unless in those cases where the law of limitation of the foreign country not only extinguish the right of action but the claim of title itself ipso facto, and declare it a nullity after the lapse of the prescribed period.

In Carson v. Hunter, 46 Mo. 467, 2 Am. Rep. 529, an action on a note executed in Arkansas, it was held that the lex fori would govern as enforcement of rights accruing to individuals under statutes and acts of incorporation. This statute has been construed by the supreme court of the state of Georgia, and by it held applicable to causes of action arising under acts of incorporation in that state. Georgia Masonic Ins. Co. v. Davis, 63 Ga. 471. This case turned upon the question of whether the liability arising under the act of the Georgia legislature incorporating the Georgia Masonic Mutual Life Insurance Company was subject to the period of limitation prescribed by the law of that state applicable to simple contracts, or by the act now under consideration, and the court decided that the liability was a statutory one, lasting for twenty years, and that this act applied. A further presentation of the general doctrine of a stockholder's statutory liability by the supreme court of the state of Georgia will be found in Banks v. Darden, 18 Ga. 318, 341. This court will follow the construction given by the supreme court of the state of Georgia to a statute of limitations of that state. No rule is, perhaps, more thoroughly established, and we know of no reason for disregarding it in the present case. Bauserman v. Blunt, 147 U. S. 647, 37 L. ed. 316, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 466; Balkam v. Woodstock Iron Co. 154 U. S. 177, 188, 38 L. ed. 953, 957, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1010.

In Balkam v. Woodstock Iron Co. 154 U. S. 187, 188, 38 L. ed. 957, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1014, Mr. Justice White, speaking for the court, said: "No laws of the several states have been more steadfastly or more often recognized by this court, from the beginning, as rules of decision in the courts of the United States, than statutes of limitations and have operated on the case, the bar might be pleaded by the debtor in a foreign tribunal to repel any suit brought to enforce the debt; that where all remedies were barred by the lex loci contractus there was a virtual extinction of the "right" in that place, which ought to be recognized in every other tribunal; but that, if the prescription of the lex loci contractus was longer than that of the lex fori, the latter might be pleaded in bar of a foreign contract if it applied to such contracts.

In Townsend v. Jemison, 9 How. 407, 13 L. ed. 184, the court considers the above decision, and states that Judge Story afterward receded from such position, and in his work on the Conflict of Laws expressed the view, from his own conviction as well as on authority, that the lex fori would govern in such case.

In Towns v. Bardwell, 1 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 36, it is said that if the statute of limitations had run against the note in suit before the defendant had left the state in which it was made, the court would be strongly inclined to hold that it would bar a recovery in Alabama.

And Goodman v. Munks, 8 Port. (Ala.) 84, holds that the maker of a note which had become barred by limitation in the state of its execution before the maker's removal therefrom may set up such bar in another state to which he removes, although, by the law of the latter state, limitation has not yet run. This case was, however, overruled in Jones v. Jones, 18 Ala. 248, as being in opposition to every well-considered case in England and America, and not sustainable on principle.

Gilpin v. Plummer, 2 Cranch, C. C. 54, Fed. Cas. No. 5,451, an action in the United States circuit court of the District of Columbia on a bond executed in Maryland between parties residing in that state, holds that the bar of the Maryland statute of limitations, providing that no bond shall be good and pleadable after the debt or thing in action is above twelve years standing, was a good defense, where both parties had continued to reside in Maryland for more than twelve years after the bond was executed.

And Rathbone v. Coe, 6 Dak. 91, 50 N. W. 620, holds that the bar of limitations of the state in which the contract was made, is, when complete, available in another state to which the debtor subsequently removes.

In Dudley v. Kimball, 17 N. H. 498, the court states that it is well settled that "courts do not take notice of any foreign statute of limitation unless the party has absolutely lost all right of action in the foreign court by having omitted, during the period prescribed by that 48 L. R. A.

statute, to assert his right there, he having had full opportunity to do so." In this case no foreign statute had been pleaded, so that in reality no question arose as to the force of such a statute.

In Carpenter v. Wells, 21 Barb. 593, it is stated that no pretense was made that defendants could avail themselves of the statute of limitations of Massachusetts where the note in suit was made: but the court admits that a very serious objection to the doctrine that the lex fori does not apply to the time of the remedy is that antiquated demands may be revived and enforced when the party happens to be found in some state where the statute of limitations is not available; but the consideration of such objection is held to belong to the legislature, rather than to the courts.

And Wilcox v. Williams, 5 Nev. 206, holds that the law of the forum always governs the remedy, and that the statute of limitations applies only to a remedy, and not to a right or obligation, the court stating that it was doubted at one time whether such rule would apply when the statutory bar had fully run against the contract where made, but that the better opinion now is that such fact makes no difference and that the rule is unchanged except when such statute by its terms and conditions extinguishes and modifies the claim itself.

Gibbons v. Ewell, 1 Handy (Ohio) 561, is an apparent exception to the general rule that the law of the forum will govern as to limitations, the court treating the case throughout as though the statute of limitations of Maryland, in which state the note in suit was made and delivered, governed, but as there was a statute in Ohio that actions on contract executed by nonresidents, when barred in the state or country where made would be barred when sued in Ohio, it is very probable that the court had such statute in mind when writing the opinion.

8. Where right of action extinguished, as well as the remedy affected.

In Le Roy v. Crownshield, 2 Mason, 151, Fed. Cas. No. 8,269, Story, J., brings out the distinction between statutes of limitations which purport on their face to extinguish all right of action on contracts made in a country without reference to any particular court in which the action may be brought and statutes which merely prohibit a court from taking cognizance of an action unless within a limited period after the right has accrued, and says that he can per-of actions, real and personal, as enacted by the legislature of a state, and as construed by its highest court."

And in support of this position the unbroken decisions of the supreme court, commencing as early as 4 Cranch, and running down to the time of its delivery, were cited by the learned justice. In Flash v. Conn, 109 U. S. 371, 381, 27 L. ed. 966, 970, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 263, on an appeal from the circuit court of the United States for the district of Florida, it was held that the decision of the New York court of appeals, holding a certain statutory stockholder's liability not to be a penalty, but in the nature of a contract, and therefore not barred by the three years' limitation, as in the case of a penalty, but by the six years' limitation prescribed as to contracts, was binding in all jurisdictions. The court (Mr. Justice Woods) says: "We think this is a case where the construction of the state court is entitled to great, if not conclusive, weight with us. It is the settled construction of a law of the state, upon which the rights and liabilities of a large number of its citizens must depend. If the liability of a stockholder under § 10 arises upon contract, the six years' limitation applies to it; if the liability is in the nature of a penalty, the three years' limitation applies. It is clear that confusion and uncertainty would result should the state and Federal courts place different constructions on the section. Such a result ought, if possible, to be avoided. . . . If this were a case arising in the state of New York, we should, therefore, follow the construction put upon the statute by the courts of that state. The circumstance that the case comes here from the state of Florida should ceive no reason why the right to use the defense that all right of action has been extinguished in the state in which the parties reside, given by its laws, should not go with the debtor into any other country.

In Crocker v. Arey, 3 R. I. 178, it is held that the statute of limitations of another state in which the note in suit was executed would not govern, as such statute did not extinguish the right, but merely affected the remedy.

In Scharff v. Lisso, 63 Miss. 213, it is held that the fact that the statute of limitations of the state in which the cause of action arose has run in defendant's favor is not available to him unless such statute of limitations bars the right as well as the remedy.

In Perkins v. Guy, 55 Miss. 153, 30 Am. Rep. 510, it is held that the lex fori will govern as to limitations in an action on contract executed in another state in which both of the parties resided until the cause of action was barred therein, unless the statute of such state absolutely extinguished the debt instead of merely affecting the remedy. The statement is made, however, that it might perhaps be worthy of the serious consideration of the legislature, whether it would not be wise to alter the general rule that the lex fori prevails where both parties resided in another state whose statute had barred the remedy.

In Lincoln v. Battelle, 6 Wend. 475, it is held that a law of a foreign country, requiring creditors to present their demands by a certain day or be precluded thereafter from asserting the same, even though its effect was to extinguish the debt, was a mere statute of limitations, and would not govern in an action in New York.

And in Gans v. Frank, 36 Barb. 320, it is held that the statute of limitations of Pennsylvania, in which state the goods were sold for which suit was brought, was not available as a bar, as the Pennsylvania statute only prohibits the bringing of an action after the time limited in such state, the court saying that if the provisions of the law rendered the contract void or terminated it in any way a different rule might be applicable.

Haws v. Cragie, 49 N. C. (4 Jones, L.) 394, holds that the presumption of payment, arising from the lapse of time, of a bond executed in another state, is that allowed by the lex fori, as it affects the remedy instead of the rights and merits of the action. The court stated in this case that there was a marked difference between the effect of a statute which merely bars a remedy and one which gives a right, and that it may be the duty of every state, on the 43 L. R. A.

principle of comity, to protect a right or title, no matter how acquired, under the laws of another state.

In Taberner v. Brentnall, 18 N. J. L. 262, an action on a note executed in England, which country the defendant left before an action thereon was barred by its laws, it is stated that the statute of limitations of England affects the remedy and does not interfere with the obligation of the contract, and that the lex fori will therefore govern the case.

An action in England for services as attorney and solicitor in India, where both parties resided at the time, may be maintained, although the statute of limitations has run in India where defendant continues to reside, the plaintiff having left that country before the bar was complete. Williams v. Jones, 13 East, 439. The court, however, stated that if there had been an extinguishment of the right itself, instead of a mere extinction of the remedy, the decision might have been different.

A judgment for defendant in the Isle of Man, in an action for services as attorney rendered in a suit in that island, on the ground that under the statute of limitations for three years of such island the cause of action was barred, does not bar a subsequent action in England to recover for the same services brought within the period limited by the laws of that country for maintaining such an action. In this case the court states that the law of the Isle of Man extinguished the right as well as the remedy, and had such been the issue determined by the Manx court the defense of the statute of limitations would have been a good one. Harris v. Quina, L. R. 4 Q. B. 653, 38 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 331.

Sawyer v. Macaulay, 18 S. C. 543, holds that the bar of the statute of the state in which the notes in suit were executed was not available in an action in South Carolina, the court saying that if the statute paid or destroyed the debt, then, when once barred in any state, it would be gone forever and in all places, but that it does not destroy the debt but only suspends the remedy.

Hays v. Cage, 2 Tex. 501, holds that, in the absence of a statutory provision in regard thereto, the statute of limitations of the forum will govern, unless in those cases where the law of limitation of the foreign country not only extinguish the right of action but the claim of title itself ipso facto, and declare it a nullity after the lapse of the prescribed period.

In Carson v. Hunter, 46 Mo. 467, 2 Am. Rep. 520, an action on a note executed in Arkansas, it was held that the lex fori would govern as not leave the statute open to a different construction. It would be an anomaly for this court to put one interpretation on the statute in a case arising in New York, and a different interpretation in a case arising in Florida. Our conclusion, therefore, is that this action was not brought to enforce a liability in the nature of a penalty."

The rule recognizing the statute of limitations of the state passing the act under which the liability sought to be enforced arises, in cases of statutory liability, where there is a period of limitation prescribed, has been frequently followed by the Federal and state courts. Flash v. Conn., 109 U. S. 371, 381, 27 L. ed. 966, 970, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 263; The Harrisburg, 119 U. S. 199, 214, sub nom. The Harrisburg v. Rickards, 30 L. ed. 358, 362, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140; Fourth Nat. Bank v. Franklyn, 120 U. S. 756, 30

L. ed. 829, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 757; Boyd v. Clark, 8 Fed. Rep. 49; Andrews v. Bacon, 38 Fed. Rep. 777; Muñoz v. Southern P. Co. 2 U. S. App. 222, 51 Fed. Rep. 188, 2 C. C. A. 163; Theroux v. Northern P. R. Co. 27 U. S. App. 508, 64 Fed. Rep. 84, 12 C. C. A. 52; Eastwood v. Kennedy, 44 Md. 563; Pittsburg, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hine, 25 Ohio St. 629; O'Shields v. Georgia P. R. Co. 83 Ga. 621, 6 L. R. A. 152, 10 S. E. 268. The reason upon which this line of decisions is based is that in the enforcement of a liability not existing at common law, and arising by virtue of a statute, the right, as well as the mere remedy, is involved, and that to the statute in question alone, as construed by the courts of the state of its passage, can resort be had, either in the matter of the ascertainment of rights arising thereunder, or remedies provided thereby. The statute it-to limitations unless the statute of the state where the note was made expressly discharged the debt instead of going to the remedy merely, and that the fact that the term fixed by the Arkansas statute had expired before the defendant left that state would not prevent the application of a longer statute of Missouri where the Arkansas statute affected the remedy only.

Sterling v. Hunt, 10 Mo. App. 598, holds that the Louisiana prescription does not extinguish the debt, and that suit on a note executed in Louisiana may be brought against the maker in Missouri at any time within the limitation fixed by the statute of the latter state.

In McMerty v. Morrison, 62 Mo. 140, it is held that the Louisiana statute prescribing an action on a note in five years was not available in Missouri, in which state the period of limitation was ten years, the court holding that the Louisiana statutes, providing that obligations are extinguished by prescription, that prescription is a manner of acquiring property or discharging debts by effect of time, and that the prescription which operates a release from debts discharges the debtor by the mere silence of the creditors during the time fixed by law from all actions which may be brought against him, do not, as interpreted by the Louisiana courts, operate as a complete extinguishment of the debt, but are to be regarded as mere statutes of limitation.

And Lyman v. Campbell, 34 Mo. App. 213, holds that an answer setting up the Kentucky statute of limitations as a bar to a suit in Missouri on a note executed in Kentucky where the maker resided, was insufficient to make the bar of the statute available, where it alleged that by the laws of Kentucky the maker was fully discharged from liability by the running of the period of five years under the statute of limitations of that state, the court holding that an allegation that the Kentucky statute operated to extinguish the debt itself, and not merely to bar the remedy, was necessary.

The statute of limitations of Wisconsin, by which, as interpreted by its courts, the debt is extinguished, is a bar to an action in another state on a note executed in Wisconsin, and the collection of a judgment rendered in such other state will be enjoined in Wisconsin on the ground that the debt or claim had been cut off and destroyed before the judgment was rendered, and that the courts of the other state must have so held if the question had been there presented. Brown v. Parker, 28 Wis. 21.

The French statute providing that all actions on notes prescribe themselves by five years from the day of protest if there has been 48 L. R. A.

no judgment, or if the debt has not been acknowledged by any separate act, but that the pretended debtors shall be held, if required, to affirm on oath that they no longer owe the money, extinguishes the remedy only, and not the right or contract, and the bar of the French statutes to notes executed in France between subjects thereof is not available in an action in England. Huber v. Steiner, 2 Scott, 304, 2 Bing. N. C. 202, 1 Hodges, 206.

The act of the Provincial Parliament of Lower Canada, passed in 1793, providing that all notes on which no suit is brought within five years after their maturity shall be taken and considered to be "paid or discharged if the debtor will make oath if required that such note is paid or discharged, is a mere statute of limitations affecting the remedy, and is not available in a suit in Vermont. Cartier v. Page, 8 Vt. 146.

In Seagrove Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Stockton, 148 Pa. 146, 23 Atl. 1063, an action on a bond secured by a mortgage of real estate in New Jersey, it is held that the New Jersey act of March 23, 1881, providing that in all cases where a bond and mortgage are given for the same debt, all proceedings to collect the debt shall be first to foreclose the mortgage, and in case of deficiency all suits on the bond shall be commenced within six months from the sale of the mortgaged premises, was an incident of the contract affecting, not merely the remedy, but the rights of the parties to the contract, and that no action could be maintained on the bond in Pennsylvania after the lapse of more than six months from the foreclosure sale.

Hudson v. Bishop, 82 Fed. Rep. 519, holds. Shiras, J., delivering the opinion, that a provision in Wis. Rev. Stat. chap. 170, § 3065, giving a right of action on a guardian's bond, that no action shall be maintained against the surety unless suit is commenced within four years from the guardian's discharge, prevents an action against the surety in another state after the lapse of such time, as such condition is not a mere matter of form, but a substantial right forming part of the surety's contract. This decision was sustained on rehearing before Brewer, J., in 35 Fed. Rep. 820, on substantially the same grounds.

b. Judgments.

1. In general.

The general rule in an action on a judgment of another state is that the law of the forum, rather than that of the place where the judgself prescribes just what right it gives, and it can likewise provide the remedy for its enforcement, and the time within which it shall be operative. The Harrisburg, 119 U. S. 199, 214, sub nom. The Harrisburg v. Rickards, 30 L. ed. 358, 362, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140, was an admiralty proceeding in the United States district court for the state of Pennsylvania, in which the liability sought to be enforced was one arising under the statutes of the state of Massachusetts, occasioned by the wrongful death of the libellant; and the Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Chief Justice Waite, said: "The statutes create a new legal liability, with the right to a suit for its enforcement, provided the suit is brought within twelve months, and not otherwise. The time within which the suit must be brought operates as a limitation of the liability itself as created, and not of the remedy alone. It is a condition attached to the right to sue at all. No one will pretend that the suit in Pennsylvania or the indictment in Massachusetts could be maintained if brought or found after the expiration of the year; and it would seem to be clear that, if the admiralty adopts the statute as a rule of right to be administered within its own jurisdiction, it must take the right subject to the limitations which have been made part of its existence. It matters not that no rights of innocent parties have attached during the delay. Time has been made of the essence of the right, and the right is lost if the time is disregarded. The liability and the remedy are created by the same statutes, and the limitations of the remedy are, therefore, to be treated as limitations of the right."

The Harrisburg was a case seeking to en-ment was rendered, will govern. Fanton v. Middlebrook, 50 Conn. 44; Rice v. Moore, 48 Kan. 590, 16 L. R. A. 198, 80 Pac. 10; McArthur v. Goddin, 12 Bush, 274; Taylor v. Joor, 7 La Ann. 272; Lucas's Succession, 11 La Ann. 296; Walworth v. Routh, 14 La Ann. 201; Miller v. Brenham, 68 N. Y. 83, Affirming 7 Hun, 330; Jones v. Hook, 2 Band. (Va.) 303, 14 Am. Dec. 783; Waddill v. Cabell, 21 D. C. 597; Egberts v. Dibble, 8 McLean, 86, Fed. Cas. No. 4,307.

In Summerside Bank v. Ramsey, 55 N. J. L. 383, 26 Atl. 837, it is held that the lex fori will govern in an action on a judgment rendered in Canada.

The limitation of an action on a justice's judgment rendered in another state is determined by the statute of limitations of the state in which the action is brought. Mowry v. Cheesman, 6 Gray, 515.

Miller v. Smith, 16 Wend. 425, which is an action on a domestic judgment rendered about thirty years before, states that it has been solemnly adjudged in several states and repeatedly decided in New York, that foreign statutes of limitation are in no case available in the state where suit is brought, the statutes of such state being applicable to all actions prosecuted in its courts.

Loveland v. Davidson, 3 Clark (Pa.) 377, holds in an action on a judgment before a justice of the peace of the state of New York that the bar of the latter state is not available, as the lex fori must govern.

The statute of limitations of the forum is available to a resident of the state, although the plaintiffs are nonresidents, and the judgment sued on was rendered in another state. Bruce v. Luck, 4 G. Greene, 143.

In Randolph v. King, 2 Bond, 104, Fed. Cas. No. 11,560, an action in Ohio on a New York judgment, it was not controverted but that the statute of limitations of the forum applied, and it was held that the Ohio statute of limitations as to specialties would apply if such a judgment was held to be a specialty by the statutes and decisions of the highest courts of that state.

An action on a judgment of another state is within the Illinois limitation act of July 1, 1872, § 15, fixing the period of limitation of all civil actions not otherwise provided for, barred by the lapse of five years, even though a longer period is fixed by the laws of the other state. Ambler v. Whipple, 139 Ill. 311, 28 N. E. 841.

An action cannot be maintained in Kansas on a Missouri judgment more than five years after its rendition if the defendant was present in Kansas during all that time. Bauserman v. Charlott, 40 Kan. 480, 26 Pac. 1051.

The law of another state, limiting the time within which payment of a judgment may be compelled, cannot be set up in Kentucky by a resident of such other state who removed therefrom Kentucky before the judgment was obtained. Cobb v. Thompson, 1 A. K. Marsh, 507.

Evans v. Cleary, 125 Pa. 204, 17 Atl. 440, an action on a judgment of a justice of the peace of the state of Illinois, holds that no statute of Illinois has been brought to its attention putting such a judgment on the same footing with ordinary simple contract debts as to the statute of limitations, and in the absence of proof on the subject the law of Illinois will be presumed to be the same as that of Pennsylvania. There is nothing in the case to indicate whether the point was raised that the Illinois statute of limitations must govern, but it seems to have been assumed that the statute of that state would govern for the purpose of determining whether such judgment would be treated for the purpose of limitation as a simple contract debt.

An Ohio judgment cannot be revived in Iowa, if barred by the statutes of that state, although it is not barred by the laws of Ohio. Meek v. Meek, 45 Iowa, 204.

St. Louis Type Foundry Co. v. Jackson, 128 Mo. 119, 30 S. W. 521, holds that an action cannot be maintained in Missouri on a judgment obtained in Kansas more than five years after its rendition, where it had not been kept alive by the issuance of execution, under 2 Kan. Gen. Stat. 1889, chap. 80, § 445, providing that if execution is not sued out within five years from the date of any judgment, it shall become dormant and cease to operate as a lien on the judgment debtor's estate, as such statute is held to extinguish the right instead of merely affecting the remedy.

A state has full power to fix the time within which a suit on a foreign judgment must be brought within the state. Bacon v. Howard, 20 How. 22, 15 L. ed. 811.

A state may pass a law declaring that all judgments rendered in any other state prior to its passage shall be barred unless suit is brought thereon within two years, and in such case an action in that state on such a judgment more than two years after the act is passed will be barred, although the suit is commenced on the very day that the judgment debtor becomes a citizen of such state, as the constitutional provision that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the judicial proceedings of force a liability arising under the statute for wrongful death, and most of the cases last above cited are of the same character, though not all of them; notably Flash v. Conn. Fourth Nat. Bank v. Francklyn, and Andrews v. Bacon,—the latter case being almost a counterpart of the present one. But we perceive no good reason why the same general doctrine applicable to cases of liability arising under a statute should not apply to cases like the one now under consideration, where it is sought to impose upon stockholders in a corporation a personal liability. Such a liability is unknown to the common law, and exists only by virtue of the statute, and the limitation of the right imposed by the statute controls in the matter of its enforcement. In Pollard v. Bailey, 20 Wall. 526, 527, 22 L. ed. 378, Mr. Chief Justice Waite, in discussing the doctrine of the individual liability of the stockholders in a corporation for the payment of its debts, thus states it: "The individual liability of stockholders in a corporation for the payment of its debts is always a creature of statute. At common law it does not exist. The statute which creates it may also declare the purposes of its creation, and provide for the manner of its enforcement. . . . The liability and the remedy were created by the same statute. This being so, the remedy provided is exclusive of all others. A general liability created by statute, without a remedy, may be enforced by an appropriate common-law action. But, where the provision for the liability is coupled with a provision for a special remedy, that remedy, and that alone, must be employed."

And in the more recent case of Fourth Nat. Bank v. Francklyn, 120 U. S. 756, 30 L.

Conn. 554, 12 Atl. 240, which was an action to foreclose a judgment lien against a foreign corporation which had never resided within the state, holds that the bar of the statute of limitations in the state where it was incorporated, and where the cause of action arose, and the parties resided, could not be set up in the action in Connecticut.

every other state and the legislation of Congress thereof do not prevent a state from passing acts of limitations to bar suits on judgments rendered in another state. Bank of Alabama v. Dalton, 9 How. 522, 13 L. ed. 242. McElmoyle v. Cohen, 13 Pet. 312, 10 L. ed. 177, holds that the statute of limitations, in an action on a judgment rendered in another state, affects the remedy only, and that the law of the forum will accordingly govern, as the constitutional provision that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the judicial proceedings of every other state was intended only to give them conclusiveness on the merits, and not fix a time within which suit must be brought thereon.

Robinson v. Peyton, 4 Tex. 276, holds that the statute of limitations of the forum will govern in an action on a judgment, and that a statute requiring an action on a foreign judgment to be brought within a shorter period than an action on a domestic judgment is not repugnant to the provisions of the Federal Constitution or the act of Congress that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the judicial proceedings of every other state.

Estes v. Kyle, Meigs, 34, holds that the law of the forum governs in an action on a foreign judgment, the court stating that such holding does not violate the provision of the Federal Constitution, art. 4, that full faith and credit shall be given to the judicial proceedings of every other state, and the act of Congress providing that judicial proceedings shall have such faith and credit given them in every court within the United States as they have in the courts of the state from which such records shall be taken.

Christmas v. Russell, 5 Wall. 290, 18 L. ed. 475, holds that the Mississippi statute providing that no action shall be maintained on any judgment or decree of any court without the state against any person who, at the commencement of the action in which the judgment is rendered was or shall be a resident of Mississippi in any case where the cause of such action would have been barred by limitation therein if such suit had been brought there, is void as an unlawful attempt to give operation to the Mississippi statute of limitations in all other states by denying the efficacy of any judgment recovered in another state against a citizen of Mississippi on a cause of action barred by its statutes, and as violating the provision of the Federal Constitution that full faith and credit shall be given to the judicial proceedings of every other state.

Waterman v. A. & W. Sprague Mfg. Co. 55 48 L. R. A.

Conn. 554, 12 Atl. 240, which was an action to foreclose a judgment lien against a foreign corporation which had never resided within the state, holds that the bar of the statute of limitations in the state where it was incorporated, and where the cause of action arose, and the parties resided, could not be set up in the action in Connecticut.

2. Where right of action extinguished as well as the remedy affected.

The law of the forum governs as to prescription in an action to enforce in Louisiana a judgment of Mississippi. Ducker's Succession, 10 La. Ann. 758, Voorhies and Buchanan, JJ., dissented on the ground that under the Mississippi statute no action of debt shall be instituted on a judgment after the expiration of seven years from its date, and that accordingly when an action on a Mississippi judgment is barred in that state it should not be enforced in Louisiana.

Baker v. Stonebraker, 36 Mo. 338, holds that an action on a Maryland judgment cannot be maintained in Missouri after the lapse of twelve years from its rendition, although the judgment defendant removed from the state soon after judgment was recovered under the Maryland statute of limitations, providing that no judgment of above twelve years' standing shall be "good and pleadable or admitted in evidence" except in favor of persons under specified disabilities or "beyond the sea" under certain disabilities which did not exist in this case, the court holding that such statute operated upon the judgment and declared the debt conclusively barred, paid, and extinguished after the lapse of twelve years, and there being no provision that the absence of the defendant would prevent the running of the statute.

A statute providing that every judgment of any court shall be "presumed to be paid and satisfied" at the expiration of a specified time, whether considered as a statute of limitations or not, relates to the remedy, and will not govern in an action brought in another state. Hendricks v. Comstock, 12 Ind. 258, 74 Am. Dec. 205.

c. Decedents' estates.

McDonald v. Underhill, 10 Bush, 584, holds that the laws of the forum will govern as to limitations in determining the right to recover the amount of a note from the estate of a decedent.

Fitzsimmons v. Johnson, 90 Tenn. 436, 17 S. W. 100, an action by legatees against execu-

ed. 829, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 757, Mr. Justice Gray, in referring to the principles as above settled, said:

"Pursuant to these principles, this court has repeatedly held, not only that suits either at law or in equity, in the circuit court, by creditors of a corporation, to enforce the liability of stockholders under a state statute, are governed by the statute of limitations of the state (Terry v. Tubman, 92 U. S. 156, 23 L. ed. 537; Carrol v. Green, 92 U. S. 509, 23 L. ed. 738; Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 628, 24 L. ed. 365), but also that the question whether the remedy in the Federal courts should be by action at law or by suit in equity depends upon the nature of the remedy given by the statutes of the state (Mills v. Scott, 99 U. S. 25, 25 L. ed. 294; Terry v. Little, 101 U. S. 216, 25 L. ed. 864; Patterson v. Lynde, 106 U. S. 519, 27 L. ed.

205, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 432; Flash v. Oonn, 109 U. S. 371, 27 L. ed. 966, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 203). See also Blair v. Gray, 104 U. S. 760, 26 L. ed. 922; Chase v. Curtis, 113 U. S. 452, 460, 28 L. ed. 138, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 554."

Counsel for appellee insists that the Georgia act of limitation, above quoted, does not apply, and should not control, in this case, because it is not a part of the act of incorporation of the Brunswick Bank of Georgia, under which the liability sought to be enforced arises, and that, inasmuch as this act contains no specific clause of limitation, the general acts of limitation of the state of Maryland, and not those of Georgia, apply. We cannot accede to this proposition in this case. While there is force in the contention, and in some cases it would be doubtless correct, it is not, in our opinion, true here. The statute of limitations of the state of Tennessee of a will executed by a citizen of Ohio, to recover their legacies, holds that the lex fori governs as to the time within which the action must be brought, including the effect of the statute on a married woman, and the right to recover from the executors of a deceased executor.

In Woodbridge v. Austin, 2 Tyler (Vt.) 364, 4 Am. Dec. 740, an action in which defendant pleaded as a set-off to a note executed in Canada and indorsed to him, but which the plaintiffs claimed was barred by failure to make proof of the claim on settlement of the maker's estate, the court stated its opinion that when a demand is barred by the existing laws of a foreign country where the contract was made, it cannot be revived by transferring it to an inhabitant of Vermont.

That a cause of action against the estate of a deceased citizen of one state is barred in that state does not give a right to interpose such bar in an action in another state against property therein, so as to authorize the courts of the former state to enjoin the action. Thorndike v. Thorndike, 142 Ill. 450, 21 L. R. A. 71, 32 N. E. 510.

But Hoskins v. Sheddon, 70 Ga. 528, holds that the statute of limitations of Tennessee, fixing the time within which suit must be brought against personal representatives of a decedent, extinguished the right, and would govern in an action in Georgia to collect a note given in Tennessee out of the assets of the deceased administrator of the maker, who was appointed and resided in Tennessee.

d. Adverse possession.

Personal property.

Brown v. Brown, 5 Ala. 508, 13 Ala. 208, 48 Am. Dec. 52, holds, following Goodman v. Munks, 8 Port. (Ala.) 84, that adverse possession of personal property in one state until the right of recovery was barred in that state would prevent a recovery in another state having a longer period of prescription, into which the possessor might remove.

Doyle v. Boulter, 7 Ala. 246, as digested in Brickell's (Ala.) Digest, vol. 2, Limitation of Actions, ¶ 5, holds that if personal property is held adversely in one state for the period prescribed by the laws of that state, beyond which an action for its recovery cannot be maintained, and the possessor removes with such property to another state, effect will be given to his possession under the statute of the former state.

One who remains in possession of a slave 48 L. R. A.

mortgaged to him until the statute of limitations bars a recovery in the state of his residence may set up such bar in an action to recover from him in another state to which he afterwards removes. Freeman v. Baldwin, 18 Ala. 246.

The purchaser in good faith of a slave taken by fraud, force, or felony from another state, who retains possession of him in his own state until the statute of limitations has run against the right to take him away, acquires a title which may be relied on by the purchaser in a state having a longer period of limitation, to which the original owner removes him after covertly obtaining possession of him. Howell v. Hair, 15 Ala. 194.

The South Carolina statute of limitations and prescription applies in a suit in Louisiana, to recover a slave, held in possession in South Carolina until a valid title by prescription and possession under its laws is obtained, although the original owner never lived in South Carolina, where he voluntarily allowed the slave to go into that state. Broh v. Jenkins, 9 Mart. (La.) 526, 13 Am. Dec. 320.

The title to slaves acquired by adverse possession by the laws of the state in which the possession is held will not be disturbed on their removal into Louisiana. Frierson v. Irwin, 5 La. Ann. 530.

The possession of a slave in Virginia until a good title is acquired under the statute of limitations of that state is available in a suit to recover the slave, brought in Tennessee, to which state the slave was afterwards removed. Shelby v. Guy, 11 Wheat. 361, 6 L. ed. 495.

Waters v. Barton, 1 Coldw. 450, holds that adverse possession of a slave for the statutory period in Texas, by the statute of limitations of which as construed by the Texas courts the title vested in the possessor, was a bar to the recovery of the slave in Tennessee, even though the original owner did not at any time reside in Texas.

Hamilton v. Cooper, Walk. (Miss.) 542, 12 Am. Dec. 588, holds that, although the courts of that state must confine themselves to the limitations provided by its statutes, and not regard those of any other state, yet, where the title to slaves has been acquired in another state by possession for the length of time required by its statute of limitations, the title thus acquired may be relied on as a bar to recovery in an action in Mississippi.

Fears v. Sykes, 35 Miss. 633, holds that, although, as a general rule, the statute of limitations of another state cannot be relied on as a defense, yet, where title to a slave has been ac-

Georgia sought to be applied was not, in its broader sense, the general statute of limitation of the state, as distinguished from a statute contained in the particular enactment; but it was the special statute of limitations of that state, applicable to statutory liabilities, or liabilities arising under acts of incorporation, or by operation of law, in existence at the time and for years previous to the passage of the act of incorporation of the Brunswick Bank, and therefore must be considered as forming a part of, as read into, the act incorporating the bank, as much so as if it had been formally incorporated therein, and the stockholders and all persons dealing with this bank are presumed to know of its existence, and are bound by its terms.

For these reasons the decree of the Circuit Court dismissing the bill of the complainant is reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to said court to reinstate the same, and proceed therein to a final decree.

Brawley, District Judge, dissents.

Petition for certiorari to remove case to Supreme Court of United States denied.

quired under the laws of another state by reason of possession for such length of time as renders unimpeachable in that state the title of the one in possession such title may be relied on in an action in Mississippi to recover possession of the slave.

In Moseby v. Williams, 5 How. (Miss.) 520, the rule was recognized, seemingly without question, that five years' adverse possession of a slave in Tennessee would give title which could be relied on in Mississippi by a creditor of the person in possession as against the original owner, but it was held that in the case in suit title had not passed because the possession had not been adverse.

The purchaser in good faith in one state, of slaves removed from another state, who retains possession in the state of his purchase until the statute of limitations of that state bars a recovery, may set up such bar in another state as against one having a lien by execution in such other state from which the slaves were removed to the former state, even though the execution creditor has executions regularly issued from term to term until the slaves are returned into such other state. Newcombe v. Leavitt, 22 Ala. 631.

The purchaser of a slave from one who has had possession of him until the statute of limitations of the state in which he resides is a bar may set up such bar in the courts of a state to which he removes with the slave, provided the limitation act of the former state bars the title or claim as well as the right of action, and the situation of the parties is such that the statute has fully and actively operated on the case. Wynn v. Lee, 5 Ga. 217.

In Cargile v. Harrison, 9 B. Mon. 518, it was said that the court would not be understood as deciding that if the possession of slaves be held in another state, until the adverse holding grows into a good title under its laws, thereby divesting the claimant of all rights, a mere change of possession to another state where a longer time is required to constitute a bar, will revive the claimant's right, and reinvest him with title. The question was not decided, however, as the statute of neither state could be relied on as a bar.

But in Crane v. Allen, 11 La. Ann. 493, the court, while assuming that property in slaves acquired by possession under the Mississippi statute would be protected in Louisiana, although the period of limitation was much longer, stated that the point was at least doubtful, and held that the possession in this case had not been adverse as required by the Mississippi statute.

And in Mansell v. Israel, 3 Bibb, 510, an action in Kentucky by a resident of Maryland to recover slaves from one who obtained possession in Maryland and removed to Kentucky, no question was made but that the Kentucky statute of limitations would govern, the decision being that it was not available to the defendant 48 L. R. A.

because of the provision therein preventing the limitation from running against a person without "the country," which is held to mean the state.

And Stanley v. Earl, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 281, 15 Am. Dec. 60, holds that the statute of limitations of Kentucky, vesting title to personal property by five years' adverse possession, and containing no saving of the right to maintain an action because the thing possessed or person possessing is without the state, governs in an action in Kentucky to recover slaves held in adverse possession by a person without the state. In this case the court states without qualification that the statute of limitations of the forum will govern.

And in Coleson v. Blanton, 3 Hayw. (Tenn.) 152, which is an action in trover for a slave, the court says that though the plaintiff be barred by the act of limitations in one state he may recover in another where the time is longer and has not yet elapsed, and that, as the time in which an action is barred by the act of another state respects the remedy, and not the right, it cannot be resorted to in the courts of the state where the action is brought, as it would be if a lapse of time vested in the possessor the property in the thing sued for.

And Blackburn v. Morton, 18 Ark. 384, holds, in an action to recover a slave, that the statute of limitations of Arkansas where the action is brought will govern, and that its provision, making five years' peaceable possession give title to the possessor, will apply, although the possession was without the state, and that the parties, by subsequently coming within the state, and one of them applying for redress to its courts, thereby submitted to all its laws to the same extent as if they had continuously been citizens of the state.

And Richards v. Towles, 3 Hill, L. 346, holds that the possession of a slave in Georgia for the time prescribed by the statutes of that state for maintaining an action to recover possession was not available in South Carolina as against an execution in the latter state to which the slave was subject before his removal to, and possession in, Georgia.

And Gassaway v. Hopkins, 1 Head, 553, holds that the law of the forum will govern as to the time for bringing an action to recover a slave allotted as dower to a widow in Kentucky, by the law of which state she had a life estate in the slave, and who was sold and removed by the purchaser into Tennessee, but that the court would look to the laws of Kentucky as construed by its courts to determine when the statute of limitations began to run.

And Alexander v. Burnet, 5 Rich. L. 189, holds that possession of a slave in Alabama was not available in an action in South Carolina, because the defendant did not show that such possession would give title to the slave under the Alabama statute, no evidence as to such statute being given on the trial. O'Neal,

J., dissented on the ground that the Alabama statute of limitations to which he had access gave title to the slave.

And Goodwin v. Morris, 9 Or. 322, held that the statute of limitations of the forum would govern, and that in consequence one purchasing a horse in Oregon from one who had held possession in that state for the period prescribed by the Oregon statute, within which an action to recover its possession must be commenced, was justified in surrendering possession without suit, on the original owner claiming it on its removal to Washington territory, and could thereupon recover damages in Oregon for breach of warranty of title, the court holding that under the Oregon statute no title could be acquired by adverse possession for the prescribed period.

The period of prescription of one state which has partly run cannot be united with the period in another state in which suit is brought, unless the statute of the former state goes directly to the extinguishment of the debt, claim, or right, instead of merely professing to bar the remedy. Perry v. Lewis, 6 Fla. 555. This was an action in trover to recover value of a slave.

Real property.

Possession of real property in Jamaica, whose possessory law converts a possession for seven years under a deed real or other conveyance into a positive absolute title against all the world, gives title which may be set up in bar in an action in England, although the one against whom possession is held has never been in Jamaica, the statute of limitations of that island containing no exception in her favor on that ground. Beckford v. Wade, 17 Ves. Jr. 57.

Pitt v. Dacre, L. R. 3 Ch. Div. 295, holds that the statute of limitations of England, where the suit was brought, would not apply to the right of an annuitant to recover the annuity charged on real estate in Jamaica, where there is no statute of limitations applicable.

Re Peat, L. R. 7 Eq. 302, holds that, in an action in England to set aside a family settlement of real property situated in India and a division of the rents therefrom on the ground of a mistake as to the proportionate amounts the parties were entitled to, the statute of limitations of India would govern, and that, the bar of that country having operated, the action could not be maintained in England.

But Stillman v. White Rock Mfg. Co. 3 Woodb. & M. 538, Fed. Cas. No. 13,446, an action in Rhode Island by citizens of Connecticut to enjoin a Rhode Island corporation from diverting water in Connecticut, holds that the law of the forum will govern as to the length of time required to obtain title by adverse possession.

And the law of the forum governs as to the time when an infant attains her majority for the purpose of determining whether the cause of action is barred by limitation. Burgett v. Williford, 56 Ark. 187, 19 S. W. 750. This was an action to recover possession of land.

And in Hawkins v. Barney, 5 Pet. 457, 8 L. ed. 190, the claim was made that under the treaty between Virginia and Kentucky the latter state had agreed that the limitation act of the former should be perpetual and unreplicable in Kentucky, and the claim was made that the statute of Virginia should apply in an action in Kentucky to recover land, but the court held that the laws limiting the time of bringing suit constituted a part of the lex fori, and that Kentucky, which passed a statute of limitations of its own, had not bound itself by 38 L. R. A.

such treaty to forever retain the laws of Virginia on that subject.

The right to redeem land from a mortgage or absolute deed given as security depends upon the law of the state where the land is situated, and where the law of such state provides that there can be no redemption in such state after the right to recover the debt is barred, there can be no redemption therein after the right to recover the debt is barred in the state in which the parties reside and the contract was made, although by the laws of that state an action to redeem could be maintained. Allen v. Allen, 95 Cal. 184, 16 L. R. A. 646, 30 Pac. 213.

e. Usury.

The right to recover in Maryland for illegal interest paid in the District of Columbia under a contract entered into therein is governed as to the time for bringing the action by the act of Congress applicable to such District giving the right to recover and prescribing the time for bringing the action. Eastwood v. Kennedy, 44 Md. 563.

The provision of the Louisiana statute, allowing forfeited interest to be applied in reduction of the principal by requiring an action to recover the same to be commenced within a year, will govern in an action in Mississippi, and prevent the application of the illegal interest on the principal after the lapse of that time, as the proviso that suits shall be commenced within a year is a condition qualifying a right of action, and not a mere limitation on the remedy. Walsh v. Mayer, 111 U. S. 81, 28 L. ed. 338, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 260.

f. Liability of stockholders.

An action in New York to enforce the liability of a stockholder in a Kansas corporation is governed by the lex fori as to limitations, as the liability is contractual and transitory. Schiffer v. Columbia College, 87 Fed. Rep. 166.

In Hutchings v. Lamson, 96 Fed. Rep. 720, 37 C. C. A. 564, it is held that an action in Illinois to enforce the liability of stockholders of a Kansas corporation cannot be maintained after the time when the action has been barred by the Illinois statute.

And an action in the Federal court to enforce in Massachusetts the liability of a stockholder in a New Jersey corporation is governed by the New Jersey statute of limitations. Andrews v. Bacon, 38 Fed. Rep. 777. This case was criticised in Brunswick Terminal Co. v. National Bank, 88 Fed. Rep. 607, Dexter v. Edmonds, 89 Fed. Rep. 467.

And in Glenn v. Liggett, 135 U. S. 533, 34 L. ed. 264, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 867, an action to enforce in Missouri the liability of stockholders in a Virginia corporation, it is held that the laws of Virginia fixing the liability of stockholders, rather than the laws of Missouri, will govern in determining when the statute of limitations begins to run.

In Crofoot v. Thatcher, 19 Utah, 212, 57 Pac. 171, which is an action by the receiver of a Nebraska corporation on a note given for subscription for stock, it is conceded that the statute of limitations fell within the remedy, and that the law of the forum governed in so far as the remedy was concerned as applied to an existing and enforceable cause of action; but it was held that the law of Nebraska controlled as to the time when the statute of limitations began to run.

And in Great Western Teleg. Co. v. Purdy, 162 U. S. 329, 40 L. ed. 986, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 810, an action in Iowa to recover an assessment against a stockholder in an Illinois corporation ordered paid by the courts of that state, it was held that the provision of the Iowa statute that the cause of action accrued when the contract of subscription was entered into, rather than the provision of the Illinois statutes that the cause of action accrued at the time the order for an assessment was made, would govern in determining whether the statute of limitations had run.

The time within which an action may be maintained in another state to enforce the statutory liability of a stockholder of a Kansas corporation is determined by the law of the forum, where the only statute of limitation of Kansas is a general one limiting actions on contracts not in writing. Dexter v. Edmands, 89 Fed. Rep. 467.

In Broadway Nat. Bank v. Baker (Mass.) 57 N. E. 803, which is an action to enforce the statutory liability of stockholders of a Kansas corporation against persons residing in Massachusetts, it is held that under the Kansas statutes of limitations, which provide that if a person is out of the state when the cause of action against him accrues the period limited for the commencement of the action does not begin to run until he comes within the state, which had been construed by the Kansas courts to apply to nonresidents, the cause of action was not barred, as the statute on which the right to hold the stockholder liable rested did not contain any requirement that the right be enforced within a specified time. This case seems to admit that the statute of limitations of the state which created the liability, rather than that of the forum, would govern.

An action to enforce the liability of a stockholder in a New York corporation imposed by N. Y. Stat. 1848, chap. 40, § 24, providing that no stockholder shall be liable unless suit for collection of the debt is brought against the corporation within a year after the debt becomes due, cannot be maintained in Massachusetts, where suit was not commenced against the corporation within the time so fixed. Halsey v. McLean, 12 Allen, 438, 90 Am. Dec. 157.

And the principal case of BRUNSWICK TERMINAL CO. v. NATIONAL BANK OF BALTIMORE holds that an action in Maryland to enforce the statutory liability of a stockholder in a Georgia corporation is governed by Ga. Code 1882, § 2916, providing that all suits for the enforcement of rights accruing to individuals under statutes, acts of incorporation, or by operation of the law, shall be brought within twenty years after the right of action accrues. In this case the court holds that the fact that such statute is not a part of the act of incorporation does not change the rule that statutes creating a liability, which require suit to be brought thereon within a specified time, will govern in an action in another state, as it is a special statute applicable to statutory liabilities, or liabilities arising under acts of incorporation, and must therefore be considered as forming a part of the act of incorporation.

g. Personal injuries.

In Hurley v. Missouri P. R. Co. 57 Mo. App. 675, the general rule that the lex fori must govern is held.

In Union P. R. Co. v. Wyler, 158 U. S. 285, 39 L. ed. 983, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 877, an action in Missouri for personal injuries received in Kansas, the question was raised whether the shorter statute of limitation in Kansas was not applicable, the claim being made that the circumstances of the case took it out of the general rule that the lex fori governs as to limitations, but no decision on the point was 48 L. R. A.

made, as it was held that the cause of action was barred by the Missouri statute as well.

The lex fori governs in an action for personal injuries founded on the common law. Johnston v. Canadian P. R. Co. 50 Fed. Rep. 886.

The statute of limitations of the forum governs in an action for personal injuries inflicted in another state, where the right of action existed at common law instead of by the statute of the state in which the injury occurred. Krogg v. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. 77 Ga. 202.

An action for personal injuries, for which a right exists at common law, received in one state by a citizen of another, who soon after returns to the latter state, where he commences a suit before the right of action is barred by its laws, can be maintained, although it would be barred by the laws of the state in which the injury was received, as the lex fori applies to such a case as fully as to one on contract. Nonce v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 33 Fed. Rep. 429.

In Morgan v. Camden & A. R. Co. 18 W. N. C. 128, it is held that the New Jersey statute of limitations, requiring all actions for personal injuries to be commenced within two years after the cause of action accrues and not afterwards, is not a bar to an action in Pennsylvania for personal injuries received in New Jersey, although more than two years have elapsed, as the general rule that the law of the forum will govern as to limitations applies to actions on torts as well as in other cases.

The statute of limitations of the forum governs in an action for personal injuries inflicted in another state, where the statute of such other state which confers the right does not limit the duration of such right to a prescribed time. O'Shields v. Georgia P. R. Co. 83 Ga. 621, 6 L. R. A. 152, 10 S. E. 268.

An action in Vermont by a resident of that state for personal injuries received in Canada is not barred by the one year's statute of limitations therein, even if such statute is one of extinguishment instead of merely barring the remedy, when, before the expiration of the year, the plaintiff returned to and remained in Vermont. Canadian P. R. Co. v. Johnston, 61 Fed. Rep. 738, 9 C. C. A. 587, 26 U. S. App. 85, 25 L. R. A. 470.

The provision of the New Jersey statute that all actions accruing for injury to persons from neglect of any railroad company shall be commenced within two years after the cause of action accrues is an ordinary statute of limitations, and does not undertake to deal with or extinguish the right of the party injured; and the lapse of more than two years after a cause of action for injuries in that state arises does not bar an action to recover therefor in Pennsylvania within the time fixed by its laws. Dickerson v. Central R. Co. 7 Pa. Dist. R. 104.

A right of action at common law for personal injuries received in Kansas by a resident of Missouri, who immediately returns and remains in the latter state, is not affected by the Kansas statute of limitations requiring such an action to be brought within two years, notwithstanding the further provision that when the right of action is barred it is not available for any purpose, and such provision extinguishes the liability, as the person injured was not subject to the operation of such statute after his removal from the state. Finnell v. Southern Kansas R. Co. 33 Fed. Rep. 427.

In Williams v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 123 Mo. 573, 27 S. W. 387, and Morgan v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 51 Mo. App. 523, it is held that an action may be brought in Missouri at any time within the statute of limitations of that state for personal injuries received in Kansas, although the action therefor is barred in that state, as the provision of Kan. Comp. Laws 1879, § 3546, that when a right of action is barred by the provisions of any statute it shall be unavailable either as a cause of action or ground of defense, and § 3539, providing that civil actions for injury to the rights of another, not arising out of a contract, can only be brought within two years after the injury occurs and not afterwards, are only ordinary statutes of limitations which affect the remedy only, and do not extinguish the right. It is further held in Williams v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., that, even if such statutes were construed as extinguishing the right, the action might still be maintained, as it did not appear that either of the parties were residents of Kansas for two years after the cause of action accrued.

h. Death.

Where the statute of a state in which one is negligently killed gives a right of action for killing another which did not exist at common law, and limits the time for recovery to one year, an action to enforce such liability cannot be maintained in another state after the lapse of a year. Selma R. & D. R. Co. v. Lacey, 49 Ga. 106.

And in Dalley v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. 28 Misc. 539, 57 N. Y. Supp. 485, it is held that the provision of the Pennsylvania statute, giving a right of action for negligently causing the death of another, that suit therefor must be brought within one year after the death and not thereafter, will bar an action in New York after the lapse of such time, as the period of one year so limited for bringing the action relates to and qualifies the right itself, instead of affecting the remedy.

And where a statute of the province of Ontario gives a right of action for negligently causing the death of another, and provides that the action must be commenced within a specified time, an action cannot be maintained in the United States for a death in Ontario, after such period has elapsed. Boyd v. Clark, 8 Fed. Rep. 849.

And an action cannot be maintained in admiralty for death of a human being in waters navigable from the sea, under a statute of the state in which the injury was inflicted, or of the state where the vessel belonged, after the time fixed by such statute for bringing the action therefor. The Harrisburg, 119 U. S. 199, sub nom. The Harrisburg v. Rickards, 30 L. ed. 358, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140.

And an action for negligently causing the death of plaintiff's husband in Missouri, by the laws of which the widow has a right of action for six months, after which the right vests in the minor children, cannot be maintained in Kansas after the lapse of six months. Hamilton v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 39 Kan. 56, 18 Pac. 57.

And an action for death by wrongful act in a state whose statutes create a right of action and allow three years within which to bring the suit may be maintained in another state after the lapse of time allowed in that state for maintaining similar actions, as the time given by the former statute operates as a limitation of the liability, and not merely of the remedy. Theroux v. Northern P. R. Co. 27 U. S. App. 508, 64 Fed. Rep. 84, 12 C. C. A. 52.

But the statute of limitations of the forum governs, in an action for wrongful death, the right to maintain which is given by the laws of the territory in which the injury occurs, where no other limitation than the general one is given by the laws of such territory. Munos v. Southern P. Co. 2 U. S. App. 222, 51 Fed. Rep. 188, 2 C. C. A. 163.

48 L. R. A.

1. Miscellaneous cases.

The statute of limitations of the state in which an action for wrongful attachment is brought, rather than of the state in which the attachment is issued or the plaintiff resides, will govern. Dougherty v. Cummings, 9 Ohio C. C. 718.

In Hale v. Lawrence, 21 N. J. L. 714, 57 Am. Dec. 190, an action for destruction of goods by defendant while mayor of New York city, the question at issue was whether a foreign creditor was entitled to the provision of the New Jersey statute, that the time which the defendant was not a resident of the state should not be computed as part of the time limited for bringing an action, where the cause of action arose without the state, and the defendant was at that time a nonresident. The court held that the fact that both plaintiff and defendant resided in the same state, but not that in which the suit was brought, could make no difference unless the court was to regard the statute of limitations of such state, which it could not do.

The statute of limitations is the law of the forum, and operates on all who submit themselves to its jurisdiction. McCluney v. Stillman, 8 Pet. 270, 7 L. ed. 676. This was an action against the register of the United States Land Office for refusal to enter in the books of his office an application for certain land in his district.

In an action for conversion, by an agent, of money intrusted to him for the particular purpose of loaning the same on real estate, the general rule that the law of the forum will govern was maintained. Peebles v. Green, 6 Lea, 475.

In an action in the supreme court of India for conversion of personal property, it is held that the English statute of limitations has been adopted in India, and that it is applicable in an action between Hindoos, although the Hindoo statute of limitations might be different, the court stating that it is almost an axiom of jurisprudence that the law of prescription or limitation is a law relating to procedure, having reference only to the lex fori, and that courts respectively proceed according to the prescription of the country in which they exercise their jurisdiction. Ruckmaboye v. Mottichund, 8 Moore, P. C. C. 4, 5 Moore, Indian App. 234.

A stipulation that a telegraph company will not be liable on claims unless presented within sixty days will not, although enforceable in the state from which the message was sent, be enforced in Texas under Tex. Rev. Stat. 1895, art. 3379, providing that a limitation of the right to sue, however fixed, to ninety days, shall be void, as the lex fori will govern as to matters of limitation. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Lovely (Tex. Civ. App.) 52 S. W. 563.

IV. Where statutes of forum provide as to effect of bar of other state.

Alabama.

The defense that a contract sued on is barred in Alabama, if barred by the laws of another state in which the contract was made and where the defendant resided, given by Ala. Code 1876, § 3237, is not available if the contract was not made in such other state. Miniece v. Jeter, 65 Ala. 222.

Nor where the contract was made in Alabama, although the party resided in such other state. Wright v. Strauss, 73 Ala. 227.

California.

An action may be maintained by residents of California on a judgment obtained in another er state, although an action thereon would be barred in that state under Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 361, which, while providing that the bar of another state may be set up in California, makes an exception in favor of residents of that state. Stewart v. Spaulding, 72 Cal. 264, 13 Pac. 661.

Colorado.

A state may pass an act that an action on a contract made in another state shall be barred unless the action is commenced within a specified time, and such statute will control as to the time for commencing action. Hawse v. Burgmire, 4 Colo. 813.

Illinois.

A cause of action which is barred by the laws of the state in which the party sought to be held resides, even though the court does not approve the laws of such other state, will be held to be barred in Illinois, under the Illinois limitation act 1872, § 20, providing that where a cause of action has arisen in another state by the laws of which an action cannot be maintained thereon from lapse of time, an action cannot be maintained in Illinois. Great Western Teleg. Co. v. Stubbs, 53 Ill. App. 210.

In Hyman v. McVeagh, 10 Legal News, 157, cited in Story v. Thompson, 36 Ill. App. 370, which was an action on a note executed between parties residing in another state and continuing to do so until the bar of limitations therein was established, the court stated, in construing § 20, that the words "when a cause of action has arisen" should be "construed as meaning when jurisdiction exists in the courts of a state to adjudicate between the parties upon a particular cause of action, if properly invoked, or, in other words, when the plaintiff has the right to sue the defendant in the courts of the state upon the particular cause of action without regard to the place where the cause of action had its origin."

And such section is held in Hyman v. Bayne, 83 Ill. 256, to apply to any action brought after its passage, where neither party resided in Illinois until after the bar was established in the other state.

On the authority of the two preceding cases it was held in Humphrey v. Cole, 14 Ill. App. 56, that, where one executes a note in Illinois, and afterwards removes to another state, a cause of action on the note will be barred in Illinois under § 20, of the statute where he might have been sued in such other state, and has resided there such a length of time that an action on the note is barred therein.

The preceding case of Humphrey v. Cole was overruled in Story v. Thompson, 36 Ill. App. 370, on the ground that under § 18 of the Illinois limitation act of 1872, providing that if, after the cause of action accrues the debtor departs from, and resides out of the state, the time of his absence is no part of the time limited for commencing an action, the fact that an action would be barred in the state in which the debtor resided when the debt became due does not operate as a bar in Illinois if the creditor resides within that state, although under § 20 the bar would operate if neither party resided in Illinois until the bar in the other state was established.

And Wooley v. Yarnell, 46 Ill. App. 112, holds that under §§ 18 and 20, where one executes a note in Illinois, and then removes from the state before an action will be barred, he cannot set up the lapse of the statutory time in the state to which he removes, as § 20 applies only to causes of action which "arise" in the other state.

The earlier action of the same name in 39 Ill. App. 595, admitted that under Hyman v. 48 L. R. A.

Bayne, 83 Ill. 256, supra, and Hyman v. McVeagh, 10 Legal News, 157, supra, it would seem that an action on the note would be barred under § 20; but the point in that case was whether an action could be maintained to foreclose a mortgage securing the note.

But Osgood v. Artt, 11 Blss. 160, 10 Fed. Rep. 385, holds that an action on a note executed in Illinois by a resident thereof who removes after its maturity to another state, where he remains until the cause of action is fully barred therein, cannot, under § 18, be maintained in Illinois, as the provision of § 18, that the period of absence from the state after the cause of action accrues is no part of the time limited, does not apply when the full period of limitation has elapsed in the other state.

In Collins v. Manville, 170 Ill. 614, 48 N. E. 914, affirming 69 Ill. App. 504, it is held that under § 20 an action might be maintained in Illinois on a note executed in New York by a citizen of that state, if the action was commenced within the meaning of the Illinois statute, before the cause of action was barred in New York, although from delay in serving the summons the action was not commenced according to the laws of New York until after the bar was established.

Although an action on a note secured by mortgage on land in Illinois executed by a resident of that state may, under § 20, be barred in Illinois by the lapse of the period fixed by the statute of another state to which the mortgagor removed, an action may be maintained in Illinois for the foreclosure of the mortgage, as no right to maintain a foreclosure suit existed in such other state. Wooley v. Yarnell, 39 Ill. App. 595.

In Parks v. Cadwallader, 53 Ill. App. 236, it is held that an action to foreclose a mortgage in Illinois could not be maintained by one who subsequently removed from the state under § 20, on the ground that when construed with § 18 the provision of § 20 did not apply, as the cause of action did not "arise" in the other state.

In Bemis v. Stanley, 93 Ill. 230, it is held that under the Illinois limitation act of July 1, 1872, § 15, an action on a judgment of another state must be commenced within five years, unless it would be barred in a shorter time by the statute of such other state, in which case, under § 20, no action can be maintained in Illinois, even though five years have not elapsed.

Under the Illinois statute a claim against a decedent who was domiciled in another state is barred in Illinois if barred in such other state. Wernse v. Hall, 101 Ill. 423.

Indiana.

A cause of action which is fully barred by the laws of the place where the party resided, is barred in Indiana whether he resides in the latter state when the action is brought or is still a nonresident, under the Indiana statute of limitations. 2 Gavin & H. 161, § 216, providing that "when a cause of action has been fully barred by the laws of the place where the defendant resided [or has resided], such bar shall be the same defense here as though it had arisen within this state." Van Dorn v. Bodley, 38 Ind. 402. This case was followed in Harris v. Harris, 38 Ind. 423.

And an action on a note executed in Indiana by a resident of that state who subsequently removed to another place, by the laws of which the action was barred, was held in Wright v. Johnson, 42 Ind. 28, to be barred in Indiana by the same statute.

It is stated in Mechanics' Bldg. Assn. v. Whitacre, 92 Ind. 547, that the section was afterward amended by adding a proviso that it should apply only to causes of action arising without the state. Wright v. Johnson, 42 Ind. 29.

An action cannot be maintained in Indiana on an administrator's bond executed in Maryland under the Maryland statute of limitations, limiting suits on such bonds to twelve years after their approval, although the party sought to be bound left the state of Maryland before the twelve years had elapsed, as the Maryland statute does not make any provision suspending the operation of the statutes as to non-residents and absentees, and the Indiana statute of 1852 provides that where the cause of action is fully barred by the laws of the place where the defendant "resided," such bar shall be the same defense here as though it had arisen within the state. Maryland ex rel. Partridge v. Todd, 1 Biss. 60, Fed. Cas. No. 9,220. Iowa.

A cause of action fully barred in the state where it arose, and in which defendant resided before the latter left the state, is barred in Iowa, although defendant had previously resided therein, under Iowa Rev. Stat. § 2748, providing that when a cause of action has been fully barred by the laws of any country where the defendant has previously resided, such bar shall be the same defense here. Lloyd v. Perry, 32 Iowa, 144.

One relying on such section must show that the cause of action is fully barred in such other state, and cannot unite the incomplete period in the former state with that elapsing in the latter. Sloan v. Waugh, 18 Iowa, 224.

One leaving another state before the lapse of time required by its laws to establish a bar cannot rely on such provision. Petchell v. Hopkins, 19 Iowa, 531; Sloan v. Waugh, 18 Iowa, 224.

That a cause of action on notes secured by mortgage is barred by the laws of a state in which the makers resided, does not bar a foreclosure action in Iowa where the land is situated, unless the right to foreclose is also barred in such other state, under such provision. Gillett v. Hill, 32 Iowa, 220.

Such provision cannot be relied on if the cause of action arose in Iowa, unless the bar was established before the passage of the Amendment of 1870, chap. 167, making such section inapplicable where the cause of action arose within the state. Goodnow v. Stryker, 62 Iowa, 221, 14 N. W. 845, 17 N. W. 506.

This case was followed in Bradley v. Cole, 67 Iowa, 650, 25 N. W. 849, which was an action between nonresidents to recover taxes paid, in which the court held that the bar of the statute of defendant's residence was not available in Iowa as the cause of action arose therein.

A cause of action arising in Iowa, fully barred by the laws of another state in which defendant resided, was barred in Iowa, under Iowa Rev. § 2748, and such bar was not removed by the subsequent Amendment of 1870, chap. 167, making such section inapplicable where the cause of the action arose in the state. Thompson v. Read, 41 Iowa, 48.

A cause of action arising in Iowa for services rendered, which is barred by the statutes of the state where the defendant has all the time resided, is barred in Iowa, under Iowa Rev. § 2748, providing that when a cause of action has been fully barred by the laws of any country where the defendant has previously resided such bar shall be available in Iowa. Davis v. Harper, 48 Iowa, 518.

The court in rendering this decision apparently did not consider the Amendment of 1870, 48 L. R. A.

p. 167, although the cause of action would have in fact been barred in such other state before the amendment was passed. Kansas.

In Swickard v. Bailey, 8 Kan. 507, the statement is made that an action cannot be maintained in Kansas on a claim barred by the laws of another state wherein it arose, but that this was so because the 29th section of the Code so provided.

The limitations prescribed by the Kansas statutes of limitations may, under Kan. Code Civ. Proc. § 22, be reduced in some cases by the limitation laws of the state in which the cause of action arose, but there is no provision for enlarging their limitation. Hoggett v. Emerson, 8 Kan. 262.

Kentucky.

In Templeton v. Sharp, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 499, 9 S. W. 507, which is an action on a note executed in California between residents of that state, it was held that because the defendant had removed to Kentucky before the maturity of the note the California statute of limitations was not available under Ky. Gen. Stat. chap. 74, art. 4, § 19, providing that where a cause of action at law arose in another state between residents thereof, or between them and residents of another state, and by the laws of the state where the cause of action accrued an action cannot be maintained thereon from lapse of time, no action can be maintained in Kentucky.

Such section does not apply to a cause of action arising in another state between a resident of it and Kentucky sought to be enforced in Kentucky. Labatt v. Smith, 83 Ky. 599.

This case overrules Allen v. Hill, 78 Ky. 119, an action against a resident of Kentucky, to the extent that it assumes rather than decides that under such section the Texas statute would be applicable.

First Nat. Bank v. Thomas (Ky.) 3 S. W. 12, holds that where the foreclosure of a mortgage is sought in Kentucky, and the party sought to be held liable pleads the statute of limitations of Kentucky, the party seeking the foreclosure, who claims that the cause of action accrued in another state, where both parties resided, and that the statute of limitations of that state does not prevent relief, has the burden of showing such facts. No reference is made in the decision to § 19, but it is evident that the court had such statute in mind when rendering the decision.

In Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Lowry, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 600, 20 S. W. 607, the court, after quoting § 19, holds that if the action on a life insurance policy in suit issued by a Wisconsin corporation to a resident of Alabama was not barred by the Alabama statute of limitations, there was no statute barring it in Kentucky, even though there existed a statutory bar in Wisconsin.

And in John Shillito Co. v. Richardson, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1020, 42 S. W. 847, it is held that under such section the Kentucky statute of limitation was no bar to an action accruing in Ohio between residents thereof, where the defendant soon after the cause of action accrued removed to New York state, so that under the laws of Ohio the claim was not barred.

In the preceding cases the court seems to have extended the provision of this section so as to make the statute of limitations of the state in which the cause of action arose applicable as well to those cases where the bar of such state had not run, as to those in which it had.

The provision of Ky. Gen. Stat. chap. 71, art. 4, § 18, that no action can be maintained in Kentucky on a judgment barred by the laws of the state where it was rendered, does not prevent the statute of Kentucky from being a defense in an action therein, where the bar was not complete in the state where the judgment was rendered. McArthur v. Goddin, 12 Bush, 274.

Louisiana.

Under the Louisiana statute of March 15, 1885, p. 224, providing that whenever any judgment has been rendered between persons who reside out of the state to be paid out of the state, and the judgment "is barred" by the statute of limitations of the place where the judgment was rendered, it shall be considered as barred by prescription in Louisiana, upon the debtor, who is thus discharged, subsequently coming into the state, it is held that a partial bar of a judgment by the laws of another state, in which it was rendered, was not available in Louisiana, and that the remedy of scire facias, still available in such other state, was sufficient to prevent the debtor from setting up the bar in Louisiana. Morton v. Valentine, 15 La. Ann. 150.

And the foreign statute governs in such case only where the judgment was rendered between persons residing out of the state, to be paid out of the state, and the judgment is barred in the state where rendered before the debtor removed therefrom to Louisiana. Walworth v. Bouth, 14 La. Ann. 201.

In Mandeville v. Huston, 15 La. Ann. 281, it is held that under the act of May 27, 1846, p. 161, providing that no bank or other corporation of any other state, nor any creditor under assignment or otherwise, shall, in seeking to enforce the collection of debts due by the citizens of Louisiana, exercise any right which such bank or creditor could not exercise by virtue of the laws of the state in which the bank is situated, no recovery could be had in Louisiana by the trustees of a Mississippi bank on a judgment obtained by the bank in Mississippi, where no recovery thereon could be had in Mississippi because of the statute of limitations of that state.

Maine.

An action on a note executed in Massachusetts in which the holder resided, the maker residing in Maine, is not barred by limitation in Maine under the amendment to the limitation act passed in 1885, chap. 376, providing that no action shall be brought by any person whose cause of action has been barred by the laws of any other state "while all the parties have resided therein." This is true, although under the limitation laws of Massachusetts the action would be barred. Frye v. Parker, 84 Me. 251, 24 Atl. 844.

Such act does not apply to a note held by a citizen of Maine at the time of its passage, so as to allow the maker to set up the bar arising in another country. MacNichol v. Spence, 83 Me. 87, 21 Atl. 748.

Massachusetts.

An action on a note executed in Maine, in which state the parties resided, and in which the payee has continued to reside, the maker removing to New York before an action is barred in Maine, may be maintained in Massachusetts, although an action thereon would be barred in New York, under Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 197, § 11, providing that no action shall be brought by any person whose cause of action has been barred by the laws of any state, territory, or country "while he has resided there." McCann v. Randall, 147 Mass. 81, 17 N. E. 75.

Minnesota.

In Hoyt v. McNeil, 13 Minn. 390, Gil. 362, it is held that, although the defendant may, 48 L. R. A.

under Minn. Gen. Stat. chap. 66, §§ 2, 15, 16, take advantage under some circumstances, where the cause of action arose in another state, of the statute of limitations of either state, the defense of the statute of limitations of the state in which the cause of action arose was not available on a demurrer to the complaint, where such complaint did not show that there was any statute of such state limiting the time within which an action could be brought therein on the cause of action sued on. Mississippi.

The provision of Miss. Code, § 2754, that when a cause of action has accrued in some other state, by the laws of which an action thereon cannot be maintained from lapse of time, an action thereon cannot be maintained in Mississippi, is not available in an action in Mississippi for animals killed in Alabama by a railroad company, operating its line in both states, as such section has in view the case of a nonresident protected by the bar of limitation of the state in which he resides who afterwards moves into Mississippi. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pool, 72 Miss. 487, 16 So. 753.

Montana.

Where a judgment is rendered in Canada, and the judgment debtor thereafter removes to Nevada, where he remains until the judgment is barred by the statute of limitations of that state, such bar is not available in an action on the judgment in Montana, under Mont. Code Civ. Proc. § 55, p. 50, providing that: when a cause of action has arisen in any other state or territory, or in any foreign country, and by the "laws thereof" an action cannot be maintained against a person because of the lapse of time, no action thereon shall be commenced against him in Montana. Chevrier v. Robert, 6 Mont. 319, 12 Pac. 702.

Nebraska.

The bar of the statute of limitations of the state of Kansas, to which the maker of a note in Indiana removed after its execution, is available to him in an action thereon in Nebraska, under Neb. Civ. Code, § 18, providing that all causes of action which are barred by the laws of any state or territory shall be deemed barred under the laws of Nebraska. Howe v. Aultman, 27 Neb. 251, 42 N. W. 1039.

An action on a note executed in Nebraska by a resident thereof is barred in that state, where he subsequently removed to another state, remaining there for the full period of limitations of such other state, under Neb. Code Proc. § 21, providing that when a cause of action has been fully barred by the laws of any state where the defendant has previously resided, such bar shall be a defense in Nebraska. Webster v. Davies, 44 Neb. 301, 62 N. W. 484.

Nevada.

In an action in Nevada on a note executed in California but payable in Nevada the statute of limitations of the latter state governs, as Nev. Gen. Stat. § 3662, providing that when the cause of action has arisen in any other state or territory, by the laws of which no action can be maintained thereon from lapse of time, no action can be maintained in Nevada, does not apply. Drake v. Found Treasury Min. Co. 53 Fed. Rep. 474.

New York.

Under the express provision of N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 890, an action by a nonresident, on a cause of action accruing against a nonresident, is governed as to limitation by the laws of the state of defendant's residence. So held in Fearing v. Glenn, 38 U. S. App. 424, 73 Fed. Rep. 116, 19 C. C. A. 388, an action to recover assessments in New York from a stockholder in Rhode Island.

In Clark v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 94 N. Y. 217, it is held that the provision of N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 390, making the bar of the statute of limitations of the state where defendant resided and the cause of action arose available to him in certain cases when sued in New York, does not apply, as the suit was brought before the Code of Civil Procedure took effect, and § 414 provides that the chapter in which § 390 occurs should not apply in certain cases, one of which is a case in which a person is entitled when the act takes effect to commence an action, where he commences it within two years after the Code takes effect, in which case the "provisions of law" applicable thereto immediately before the act took effect were to continue to be so applicable, notwithstanding the "repeal" thereof, the court holding that a doctrine established by judicial decision was a "provision of law" within the latter section.

Beer v. Simpson, 65 Hun, 17, 19 N. Y. Supp. 578, holds that the statute of limitations of Colorado was not available as a defense in an action in New York on a Colorado judgment, where the defendant is a resident of New York, and it does not appear when he became such, nor that plaintiff is a resident, as § 390 did not apply so as to remove the case out of the general rule that the lex fori governs. Ohio.

In Worth v. Wilson, Wright (Ohio) 162, it is held that the Ohio act of 1830, 28 O. L. 34, containing the first legal provision allowing defendants in Ohio to plead the statute of limitations of another state, did not authorize the pleading of the statute of limitations of another state in a suit brought before its passage, and that the statute of the other state was therefore not available to the defendant.

In Gordon v. Preston, Wright (Ohio) 341, in which the defendant, relying on the above provision pleaded the statute of limitations of New Hampshire where the note in suit was executed, the court held that such plea was not good because it did not sufficiently set out the New Hampshire statute of limitations relied on.

In State use of Shipley v. Shipley, 7 Ohio, pt. 1, p. 246, the court states that in the absence of a statute the lex fori would govern in an action on a bond executed in Maryland between parties residing there, but that the bar of the Maryland statute was available to defendant in Ohio, under the Ohio statute providing that all actions founded on contract, made between persons residing without the state at the time such contract was made, and which are, or hereafter may be, barred by the laws of the state where made, shall be and continue barred when brought in any court of Ohio.

In Horton v. Horner, 14 Ohio, 437, 16 Ohio, 145, the headnote states that a contract made in New York state for the payment of money in that state, the maker residing there at the time of its execution, is controlled by the laws and affected by the statute of limitations of that state, but in the opinion the reason therefor is shown to be that the Ohio statute provides that all actions founded on a contract made between parties resident without the state at the time such contract was made, and which are barred by the laws of such state, shall be barred when brought in Ohio.

Clark v. Eddy, 22 Ohio L. J. 63, holds, in an action on a covenant of warranty and against encumbrances on the land sold, that Ohio Rev. Stat. § 4990, providing that if by the laws of the state or country where the cause of action arose the action is barred, it is also barred in Ohio, would enable the defendant to interpose the bar of the Illinois statute of limitations, although both parties resided in Ohio when the covenant was entered into, and continued so to reside.

While Gibbons v. Ewell, 1 Handy (Ohio) 561, which throughout the case seems to assume that the statute of limitations of Maryland where the note in suit was executed would govern, does not refer to the Ohio statute relative to the effect of the bar of limitations of another state, it is very probable that the court had such statute in mind when writing the opinion.

Pennsylvania.

The provision of the Pennsylvania act of June 20, 1895, P. L. 375, that when a cause of action has been fully barred by the laws of the state or country in which it arose, such bar shall be a complete defense to an action thereon in Pennsylvania, is not retroactive so as to make the bar of the statute of the state where the injury sued for accrued available in an action commenced before its passage. Dickerson v. Central R. Co. 7 Pa. Dist. R. 104.

Nor does it apply to a cause of action on contract existing at the time of its passage, although the action was not commenced until afterwards. Shinn v. Healy, 23 Pa. Co. Ct. 123.

Tennessee.

An action in Tennessee on a note executed and payable in Missouri where the parties resided is governed as to limitation by the Missouri statute under Tenn. Code, § 3480, providing that where the statute of limitations of another state has created a bar to an action on a cause accruing therein while the party to be charged was a resident in such state, the bar is equally effectual in Tennessee, and in the absence of evidence as to the Missouri statute of limitations it will be presumed to be the same as that of Tennessee. Bagwell v. McTighe, 85 Tenn. 616, 4 S. W. 46.

But in Kempe v. Bader, 86 Tenn. 189, 6 S. W. 126, it is held that an action might be maintained in Tennessee on notes executed in Missouri in which state both parties then resided, where the defendant removed from the state before the cause of action was barred by the Missouri statute, as the above provision applied only where the cause of action was fully barred before the defendant's removal.

Texas.

In Gautier v. Franklin, 1 Tex. 732, it is held that the Texas statute of limitations of 1841, § 13, providing that no action shall be brought against any emigrant of the republic to recover a claim barred by the law of limitation of the state from which he emigrated, does not apply so as to make the bar of such other state available, unless the right of action was fully barred in such other state before emigration.

And a similar ruling was made in Smith v. Crosby, 2 Tex. 414.

A provision in the statute of limitation in the state where a cause of action on a note accrued, that where the statute has commenced to run it will continue to run notwithstanding intervention of any impediment which would have prevented the operation of the statute if it had existed when the cause of action accrued, has no extraterritorial force so as to make the bar of such state, which was incomplete at the time of defendant's removal, available in Texas under § 13. Hays v. Cagle, 2 Tex. 501.

In Thompson v. Berry, 26 Tex. 263, which was an action to recover slaves claimed by defendant on the prescription growing out of twenty years' possession in Louisiana, an instruction that the demand in question was not barred by the law of limitation of Louisiana was held to be proper under § 18.

The law of the state in which the note in suit was executed as construed by its courts will govern in an action in Texas in determining whether the claim has been taken out of the bar of the statute of limitations by a subsequent promise under such provision. Bryan v. Bouton, 10 Tex. 62.

Wyoming.

Notwithstanding the provision of the Wyoming statute that a cause of action on a judgment barred by the statute of the state in which it arose is also barred in Wyoming, the statute of such other state is not available where it appears that defendant has been absent from such other state for such a period of time that under its laws the bar of the statute is not complete, even though his absence was due to employment in the military service. Bonnifield v. Price, 1 Wyo. 223. J. H. H.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Andrew BELL, Plff. in Err.,

v.

Village of WAYNE.

(.....Mich.....)

The lack of barriers on the side of approaches to a bridge will not make a municipality liable for injuries caused by a team going off the bank, when the roadway was wide enough for two teams to pass without difficulty, and the proximate cause of the accident was the fact that the horse became frightened and so unmanageable that the driver could not keep him within the limits of the road.

(Montgomery and Moore, JJ., dissent.)

(March 27, 1900.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wayne County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligently permitting a highway to remain unsafe. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. Selling & Hatch, for plaintiff in error:

The question of the duty upon the defendant to have barriers along the side of the road was for the jury, and should have been submitted to them under proper instructions.

Malloy v. Walker Twp. 77 Mich. 448, 6 L. R. A. 695, 43 N. W. 1012; Gage v. Pontiac, O. & N. R. Co. 105 Mich. 340, 63 N. W. 318; Shaw v. Saline Twp. 113 Mich. 342, 71 N. W. 642.

3 How. Stat. 1365, 1366, provides that when any public highway which passes along the bank of any watercourse shall be reduced to less than 50 feet it shall be the duty of the highway commissioner to restore it to that width.

It was a question for the jury to say whether this was such a watercourse as to bring this case within the statute.

Earl v. De Hart, 12 N. J. Eq. 280, 72 Am. Dec. 395; Carver v. Detroit & S. Pl. Road

NOTE.—As to liability of municipal corporation for failure to provide railings or barriers at dangerous places along a public highway, see Malloy v. Walker Twp. (Mich.) 6 L. R. A. 695, and note. 48 L. R. A.

Co. 61 Mich. 584, 28 N. W. 721, Affirming 69 Mich. 616, 25 N. W. 183.

When an accident happens from a negligent defect in a highway the fact that the horse was at the time uncontrollable or running away furnishes no defense to an action for the injury.

Ring v. Ochoes, 77 N. Y. 83, 33 Am. Rep. 574; Ehrgott v. New York, 96 N. Y. 283, 48 Am. Rep. 622; Ivory v. Deepark, 116 N. Y. 486, 22 N. E. 1080; Kennedy v. New York, 73 N. Y. 365, 29 Am. Rep. 160; Allen v. Hancock, 16 Vt. 230; Hunt v. Pownal, 9 Vt. 411; Winship v. Enfield, 42 N. H. 197; Stark v. Lancaster, 57 N. H. 92; Clark v. Barrington, 41 N. H. 48; Bartlett v. Hooksett, 48 N. H. 18; Baldwin v. Greenwood Turnpk. Co. 40 Conn. 238, 16 Am. Rep. 33; Hull v. Kansas, 54 Mo. 601, 14 Am. Rep. 487; Bassett v. St. Joseph, 53 Mo. 295, 14 Am. Rep. 440; Pittsburgh City v. Grier, 22 Pa. 54, 60 Am. Dec. 65; Hey v. Philadelphia, 81 Pa. 44, 22 Am. Rep. 733; Kitchen v. Union Twp. 171 Pa. 145, 33 Atl. 76; Burrell Twp. v. Uncaupher, 117 Pa. 353, 11 Atl. 619; Yoders v. Amwell Twp. 172 Pa. 447, 33 Atl. 1017; Kennedy v. Cecil County Comrs. 69 Md. 65, 14 Atl. 524; Baltimore & H. Turnpk. Co. v. Bateman, 68 Md. 399, 13 Atl. 54; Joliet v. Shufeldt, 144 Ill. 410, 18 L. R. A. 750, 32 N. E. 969; Carterville v. Cook, 129 Ill. 152, 4 L. R. A. 721, 22 N. E. 14; Lacon v. Page, 48 Ill. 500; Tallahassee v. Fortune, 3 Fla. 26, 52 Am. Dec. 358; Atlanta v. Wilson, 59 Ga. 544, 27 Am. Rep. 396; Martin v. Algona, 40 Iowa, 393; Byerly v. Anamosa, 79 Iowa, 208, 44 N. W. 359; Fowler v. Strawberry Hill, 74 Iowa, 646, 38 N. W. 521; Miller v. Boone County, 95 Iowa, 5, 43 N. W. 352; Gould v. Schermer, 101 Iowa, 582, 70 N. W. 697; Crawfordsville v. Smith, 79 Ind. 309, 41 Am. Rep. 612; Boone County Comrs. v. Mutchler, 137 Ind. 140, 36 N. E. 534; Parke County Comrs. v. Sappenfeld, 6 Ind. App. 577, 33 N. E. 1012.

The weight of authority is certainly with the New York rule, and it seems the fairer. It has been approved, and the cases holding its doctrine have been cited with approval, in—

Ross v. Ionia Twp. 104 Mich. 320, 62 N. W. 401; Gage v. Pontiac, O. & N. R. Co. 105 Mich. 335, 63 N. W. 318; Simons v. Casco Twp. 105 Mich. 588, 63 N. W. 500; Shaw v. Saline Twp. 113 Mich. 342, 71 N. W. 642.

Even under the strictest of the decisions this case should have gone to the jury.

Ross v. Ionia Twp. 104 Mich. 324, 62 N. W. 401; Langworthy v. Green Twp. 95 Mich. 93, 54 N. W. 697.

It was for the jury to say, upon the testimony, whether plaintiff's horse was running away, or so far uncontrollable as to make the negligence of defendant a remote cause of plaintiff's injury.

St. Clair Mineral Springs Co. v. St. Clair, 90 Mich. 467, 56 N. W. 18; Bleil v. Detroit Street R. Co. 98 Mich. 228, 57 N. W. 117; Ross v. Ionia Twp. 104 Mich. 324, 62 N. W. 401; Gage v. Pontiac, O. & N. R. Co. 105 Mich. 337, 63 N. W. 318; Lambeek v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 106 Mich. 512, 64 N. W. 479; White v. Riley Twp. 113 Mich. 295, 71 N. W. 502; Shaw v. Saline Twp. 113 Mich. 342, 71 N. W. 642; Babson v. Rockport, 101 Mass. 93; Britton v. Cummington, 107 Mass. 347; Wright v. Templeton, 132 Mass. 49; Hinckley v. Somerset, 145 Mass. 326, 14 N. E. 166; Harris v. Great Barrington, 169 Mass. 271, 47 N. E. 881; Aldrich v. Gorham, 77 Me. 287; Spaulding v. Winslow, 74 Me. 534; Houfe v. Fulton, 29 Wis. 296, 9 Am. Rep. 568; Olson v. Chippewa Falls, 71 Wis. 558, 37 N. W. 575; Yoders v. Amwell Twp. 172 Pa. 453, 33 Atl. 1017.

From the point where the ends of the bridge proper touch the road there is nothing artificial to distinguish the place of the accident from any other part of the same highway.

Traversy v. Gloucester, 15 Ont. Rep. 217; Newcomb v. Montgomery County, 79 Iowa, 490, 44 N. W. 715; Tolland v. Willington, 26 Conn. 578; Moreland v. Mitchell County, 40 Iowa, 394; Nims v. Boone County, 66 Iowa, 272, 23 N. W. 663; Tinkham v. Stockbridge, 64 Vt. 480, 24 Atl. 761.

Messrs. Cutchson & Stellwagen, for defendant in error:

It ought not to be left for a jury to say when barriers should or should not be provided along highways.

This court has allowed the jury to determine whether a barrier was necessary or not in cases where, if a horse was frightened, he was frightened:

1. By the condition of the highway itself. Simons v. Casco Twp. 105 Mich. 588, 63 N. W. 500.

2. Where something naturally calculated to frighten horses existed in or near the highway for a long time.

Ross v. Ionia Twp. 104 Mich. 320, 62 N. W. 401.

3. Also, in cases where the accident occurred without fright, through the condition of the highway itself, without any intervening cause.

Malloy v. Walker Twp. 77 Mich. 448, 6 L. R. A. 695, 43 N. W. 1012.

If the case at bar is to be ruled by Shaw v. Saline Twp. 113 Mich. 342, 71 N. W. 642, then the township of Nankin, not the village of Wayne, is charged with the duty of keeping the approach to the bridge in repair.

The statutes in Massachusetts and Maine 48 L. R. A.

expressly make the municipality liable for the want of railings.

Maine Stat. 1883, § 80, p. 256.

Under the decisions in this state neither the so-called Massachusetts rule, nor the New York rule, applies to the case at bar.

Agnew v. Corunna, 55 Mich. 428, 54 Am. Rep. 338, 21 N. W. 873; Beall v. Athens Twp. 81 Mich. 536, 45 N. W. 1014; St. Clair Mineral Springs Co. v. St. Clair, 96 Mich. 463, 56 N. W. 18; Kingsley v. Bloomingdale Twp. 100 Mich. 340, 67 N. W. 333.

Where there is proximate cause for which the municipality is not liable, there can be no recovery.

White v. Riley Twp. 113 Mich. 295, 71 N. W. 502; Moulton v. Sanford, 51 Me. 127; Perkins v. Fayette, 68 Me. 152; Hubbell v. Yonkers, 104 N. Y. 434, 58 Am. Rep. 522, 10 N. E. 858; Patchen v. Walton, 17 App. Div. 158, 45 N. Y. Supp. 145; Glazier v. Hebron, 131 N. Y. 447, 30 N. E. 239, 82 Hun, 311, 31 N. Y. Supp. 236; Lane v. Hancock, 142 N. Y. 510, 37 N. E. 473; Smith v. Kanawha County Ct. 33 W. Va. 713, 8 L. R. A. 82, 11 S. E. 1; Worrlow v. Upper Chichester Twp. 149 Pa. 40, 24 Atl. 85; Kieffer v. Hummelstown, 151 Pa. 304, 17 L. R. A. 217, 24 Atl. 1060; Herr v. Lebanon, 149 Pa. 222, 10 L. R. A. 106, 24 Atl. 207.

Grant, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The distinction, now contended for in cases of this character, was not lost sight of by the writer of the opinion in Doak v. Saginaw Twp. 119 Mich. 680, 78 N. W. 883. The differences between that case and this are these: In this case the banks were higher and steeper, at least on one side. In the Doak Case the frightened horse backed into the ditch. In the present case the backing horse was struck by the plaintiff, started forward, crossed the road, and went down the embankment. The roadbed in this case was wider than that. Here the roadbed was 17 feet wide, and in good condition. In both cases the horses were frightened, and not by anything for which the township was at fault. In the Doak Case it was uncertain what frightened the horse and caused him to back. In the present case it was two boys in a tree: The plaintiff lost control of his horse, so that he was unable to keep him within the traveled way, 17 feet wide. He testified that there would have been no trouble if the horse had not seen the boys in the tree. Whether this is a case where barriers should have been erected I do not deem it necessary to determine. In Massachusetts the statute expressly makes townships liable for the failure to erect barriers. What the decisions would be if their statute were like ours is at least doubtful. In Hinckley v. Somerset, 145 Mass. 326, 14 N. E. 166, the stone wall which formed the barrier was 2 feet high. On the outside of the wall was water 10 feet deep, the surface of which was about 8 feet below the top of the wall. The horse became frightened at some oyster boats, ran into or upon the wall, and got astride of it with his hind legs. That case is in direct conflict with Beall v. Athens Twp. 81 Mich. 536, 45 N. W. 1014. It is impossible to reconcile them. In Harris v. Great Barrington, 169 Mass. 271, 47 N. E. 881, it was held that the roadbed, 17 feet wide, was not defective by reason of narrowness, but that there was evidence that the highway was defective for want of a sufficient railing. If, as my Brother Montgomery says, the rule has not been made entirely clear by the decisions, it undoubtedly results from the difficulty in determining when the driver has, and when he has not, lost control of his frightened horse. In the Doak Case the horse had become so unmanageable that the driver could not prevent his backing: Doak's counsel said in their brief: "The driver did his utmost to prevent the backing." In the present case the frightened horse was backing, was struck by the driver, and had become so unmanageable that he could not keep him within the limits of the traveled road, wide enough for two teams to pass with perfect safety. Plaintiff did his utmost to keep the horse in the road, but failed to do so. We held in St. Clair Mineral Springs Co. v. St. Clair, 96 Mich. 463, 56 N. W. 18, that where a horse stopped, backed over the apron of a bridge against an insufficient railing, fell into the water, and was drowned, the township was not liable. In that case there was no fright. The horse started up the bank, and backed because of too great a load. Under the contention of the plaintiff in this case, if the horse, instead of backing from an overload, had backed from fright, and the jury could find that the driver had lost only temporary control, the township would have been liable. In neither case was the township responsible for the proximate cause of the accident. What difference, in principle, between the two cases? Is it logical to say that, where the horse backs from other cause than fright, the township is not liable, but where he backs from fright it is liable, provided the jury are able to find that the driver had not lost complete control of him? There certainly is no difference in the liability between backing and shying or running down an embankment or into a ditch. In Beall v. Athens Twp. the horse became frightened at a log upon the side of the highway. The driver struck his horse, which jumped forward, and upset the buggy. In this case the horse became frightened, was struck, could not be kept within the highway, and went down the embankment. Where is the difference in principle or in the facts between that case and the present? Both horses went over the side of the road because their drivers were unable to keep them within the traveled way. In Lambeek v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 106 Mich. 512, 64 N. W. 479, plaintiff's horse had run for a block, and ran into the end of a car standing in the highway. Plaintiff was unable to keep him from running the carriage against it. It was held that the horse was beyond control. In Agnew v. Corunna, 55 Mich. 428, 54 Am. Rep. 338, 21 N. W. 873, it was claimed that the horse was frightened at a large stone standing in the highway between the roadbed and the gutter, turned up a side street, and upset the buggy. It was there said: "If the stone had anything to do with the action of the horse and damage to the buggy, it was by frightening the animal, and not by hurting or impeding him." If the horse in that case had shied or run into the gutter, or, running down the side of the roadbed, had caused the buggy to sway and upset, would not the rule of law have been the same? In Bleil v. Detroit Street R. Co. 98 Mich. 229, 57 N. W. 117, the horse was hitched, broke away, and ran into iron rails piled upon the street. If the driver had been in the buggy when the window fell, and the horse had started and run upon the rails, causing the same injury, would this court have said that the rails, and not the falling of the window, were the proximate cause of the injury, if the jury were enabled to find that the horse was not beyond control? What is the principle or rule upon which these decisions are based? It is that the primary cause of the accident is the fright of the horse, not the defect in the highway. Why should a jury be left to speculate upon the question whether the driver could have controlled his horse but for the defect in the highway? In Langworthy v. Green Twp. 95 Mich. 93, 54 N. W. 697, the wagon struck a log, which was from 4 to 18 inches above the roadbed, and near the center thereof. The horse had not left the traveled road, but had, for some reason which did not appear, shied a little to one side. It did not appear that the horse was running, or was going at an unsafe speed for a properly constructed roadbed. By referring to the same case in 88 Mich. 207, 50 N. W. 130, it will be seen that the plaintiff was driving at a slow trot when the log was struck.

*8 L. R. A.

We are not concerned with the rule in other courts, if this court has established a rule and followed it. In the cases above cited I think we have established and recognized the rule to be that a township is not liable, under our statute, for the failure to maintain barriers, where the horse leaves a traveled highway, which is in good condition and wide enough to drive upon with safety, through any cause for which the township is not responsible. When a horse has become so frightened that, under proper management, he cannot be kept within a good roadbed 17 feet wide, he is beyond control, under our decisions, and the fright, not the absence of barriers, is the cause of the accident. Upon no other rule can these decisions, in my opinion, be sustained.

I think the learned circuit judge was correct in directing a verdict for the defendant. Its reversal would, in my judgment, result in overruling the cases above cited, and approved in Doak v. Saginaw Twp.

The judgment should be affirmed.

Long, J., concurred.

Hooker, J., concurring:

The doctrine that a township is not liable for an injury, where, though negligent, such negligence is not the proximate cause of the injury, has been asserted and reiterated many times by this court. Like other rules, it is invoked in many cases where its application is of doubtful propriety, and doubtless in some to which it should not be applied. It is not unnatural that minds should differ in close cases, and there is always danger that a misapplication shall make it more difficult to adhere to the rule, and easy to extend it. There is but one proper way to deal with such questions, and that is to adhere to the underlying principle, and not put too great emphasis upon similar, but not necessarily analogous, decisions. If this is done in this case, I am of the opinion that its proper solution need not be difficult. It has been several times held that where a horse, while running away, strikes an obstruction, the resulting injury is due to the running away, and not to the obstruction, because the former, and not the latter, is the proximate or moving cause of the injury. The law requires highways to be kept in condition for the ordinary uses, and it expects the driver to be in control of his horse, and does not assume to compensate those who are injured through a failure to maintain such control. The decisions do not refuse relief upon the ground that the horse was running away, but upon the ground that the uncontrolled impulse of the horse was the moving, i. e., proximate, cause. Where the loss of control is due to the negligence of the town, it has been held that the township is liable, but where it is due to other causes the contrary has been usually held. We are cited to cases which hold that the mere shying of a horse is not sufficient to exonerate a township, the reason being given that shying is to be expected of a horse, and that control cannot be said to be lost if the horse is so far under the control of the driver as to be immediately stopped or brought back to the traveled way. It makes little difference whether we say that the horse was under control of the driver when he shied, or that the want of control was but momentary, and to be expected at times with any horse, from his common and known habit, and therefore an exception to the rule. In neither is ground for breaking down the rule. The case can, at most, be treated as an exception, and, though a precedent governing cases where a horse shies suddenly a little out of the beaten track, it does not follow that the exception should cover all cases, where the want of control is of short duration, or where caused from some vice or habit which cannot be said to be found in horses in general. A horse which, through fright at an object on one side of the road, leaves the traveled way, and, notwithstanding the utmost efforts of the driver, cannot be made to return to it, and ultimately crosses the highway ditch, or goes to the verge of an embankment, which slides down with him, has done something more than to merely shy. To "shy" is defined as "to start suddenly aside as if a little frightened." So, if the horse should rear, and fall against the carriage, throwing all down an embankment, or if he should refuse to obey the driver to go forward, and back up instead, overturning the buggy against a tree in the highway, or going down an embankment, the horse is beyond control, as much as though running away, and, to my mind, much more than when merely or momentarily starting and shying. If these instances are enlargements of the adjudicated instances of shying, they are not within the exception, and, if one after another they are included within the exception, the rule will soon give way under the evolution of the exception. It is as much the duty of the citizen to drive reasonably tractable horses as it is of the community to maintain reasonably safe highways, and as much the duty of courts to hold the former to the consequences of a failure of the performance of his duty as the latter, and it is, to say the least, fairly debatable whether the doctrine of proximate cause is not a reasonable and just one. It is not yet the law that the highways must be so level and smooth that a horse cannot capsize a carriage, and provided with barriers so strong that a team cannot break them down, to the injury of the driver. Barriers may be required in some cases, as where the highway and its surroundings are of such a character as of themselves to create the danger of fright, but we may take judicial notice that barriers are usually limited to such places, and are not common along our highway ditches or causeways. The Case of Doak was correctly decided, in my opinion. The present case is substantially on all fours with Buell v. Athens Twp. The other cases are not cited, because referred to in the opinions of my brethren. I think the judgment should be affirmed.

Montgomery, J., dissenting:

This is an action for personal injuries claimed by the plaintiff for have been caused by the negligence of the defendant. The injuries were sustained by the plaintiff, May 17, 1892, upon a highway within the corporation limits of defendant. The highway in question crosses the River Rouge a few rods north of the place where plaintiff was injured, and the approach to the bridge crossing the river is elevated at the point where the accident happened 8 feet 10 inches on the west side, the descent being absolutely perpendicular, and 8 feet 6 inches on the east side, the descent being a slope above the surrounding country. The approach to the bridge is the same width as the bridge where they join, but a few yards north of the bridge, and at the point where the plaintiff was injured, it is but 17 feet in width. There was no barrier on either side of the approach, to prevent travelers from going off the road down the embankment on either side. There was a plum tree a little west of the roadbed, at a point where the approach to the bridge ended, and a few rods south of the place of the accident, towards the main part of the village. Upon the morning in question, Andrew Bell, the plaintiff, was driving along the said road towards the main part of the village, on his way to the home of his sister-in-law, Susan Bell, who lived on the other side of the village. He was driving his horse, which he described as gentle, and not given to shying, attached to his buckboard. He had crossed the bridge, and was upon the southern approach to the same, at a point nearly abreast of the piling, when the horse caught sight of some boys in the plum tree picking blossoms, and thereupon started to back. The buckboard wheels were cramped, so that, if the horse continued to back, Bell would have been thrown out backwards, down the abrupt descent upon the west side, there being no barrier to arrest the progress of the vehicle. To save himself from this danger, he struck the horse one blow with the whip, and in obedience to the blow the horse started forward at a slow pace (about half as fast as a man can walk). The loosely-packed earth on the east side of the approach gave way, the horse slipped down the east side of the approach, and plaintiff was thrown out, and sustained the injuries complained of. The evidence shows that the horse was not running away; that, at the most, he took but three or four steps back, and that plaintiff did not lose control of the horse; and that the horse had his own way but momentarily, at the most.

The foregoing is the statement of facts, taken in the main from plaintiff's brief, and we find that there is testimony tending to support the statement in every particular. As the circuit judge directed a verdict for the defendant, the inquiry is whether, assuming this state of facts, the plaintiff was entitled, under any theory, to take the judgment of the jury as to the question of defendant's liability. The learned circuit judge, while stating that he was unable to reconcile all that this court has said in various cases, regarded it as stare decisis that the presence of those boys in the plum tree and the consequent fright of the horse was the proximate cause of the injury to plaintiff, and directed a verdict for defendant. We think it must be conceded that this court has not made the rule in this class of cases entirely clear. It is equally true that other courts, in dealing with the broad question of proximate cause, as well as in dealing with the more restricted one as to what is to be deemed an intervening cause, such as relieves a municipality from responsibility from defective highways, have encountered difficulties at every turn, and have not always dealt with the question logically. See this illustrated in cases commented on by Judge Cooley (Cooley, Torts, pp. 76, 77, and also at pages 622 et seq.). At page 70, Judge Cooley states one of the rules relating to the subject as follows: "If the original act was wrongful, and would naturally, according to the ordinary course of events, prove injurious to some other person or persons, and does actually result in injury though the intervention of other causes, which are not wrongful, the injury shall be referred to the wrongful cause, passing by those which were innocent. But, if the original wrong only becomes injurious in 48 L. R. A. consequence of the intervention of some distinct wrongful act or omission by another, the injury shall be imputed to the last wrong as the proximate cause." In a very able discussion of the causal connection, by Mr. Wharton, at section 104 of his work on Negligence, he reaches the conclusion that where a township is negligent in failing to keep its highway in repair, and an injury results from a frightened horse striking against a defect in the way from which, if he had not been frightened he could have been safely guided by his driver, the municipality is not liable to an action, for reasons fully stated by him. He adds, however: "This mode of reasoning is inapplicable if the evidence is that the horse, being driven with due care, simply shies to an extent common and probable among horses, and that when shying he deflects a few feet from the beaten track, and then strikes against a defect and is hurt. In this case, as the shying is part of the natural and probable habits of horses, and does not, when only producing a slight change of course, make the horse unfit for use in a public road, the road-making authorities are liable for the consequences." See also Wharton, Neg. § 983. There are many cases which, as pointed out in Langworthy v. Green Twp. 95 Mich. 93. 54 N. W. 697, hold to a still stricter rule of liability, and maintain that the fact that the horse is frightened, and at the time uncontrollable, does not relieve the municipality of liability. We think the better rule is that quoted from the text of Wharton on Negligence, and this rule we find abundantly supported in those jurisdictions in which the stricter rule, above adverted to, does not prevail. The case of Wright v. Templeton, 132 Mass. 49, is very similar in its facts to the present. The plaintiff's horse was frightened by the lantern of some boys fishing. The horse backed up, cramped the wagon, and carried it against the railing, which gave way. Defendants preferred a request that, if the horse backed a distance of 20 or 30 feet, the plaintiff could not recover. The court held that this request was properly refused. It was held, in effect, in Rinckley v. Somerset, 145 Mass. 326, 14 N. E. 106, that the township might be liable if the driver did not lose control of the horse, or lost control for a moment only, and either regained control, or would have regained it but for a defect in the way. See also Harris v. Great Barrington, 169 Mass. 271, 47 N. E. 881. The case of Olson v. Chippewa Falls, 71 Wis. 558, 37 N. W. 575, is quite similar in its facts to the present. It was said: "The team instantly and suddenly became frightened by some suddenly appearing object, . . . and as instantly and suddenly backs the wagon over the embankment. . . . Such a movement of any team would not be at all uncommon under such circumstances, and so the city might have anticipated when it left the steep bank of the creek so unguarded in such a place." The distinction contended for in the present case was again noted by this court in Gage v. Pontiac, O. & N. R. Co. 105 Mich.

335, 63 N. W. 318, and recognized in Simons v. Casco Twp. 105 Mich. 588, 63 N. W. 500, but was clearly lost sight of in Doak v. Saginaw Twp. 119 Mich. 680, 78 N. W. 883. In the last case a motion for a rehearing should be granted. We think the plaintiff was entitled to go to the jury.

It is contended in this court that the highway at this point was a part of the bridge. It does not appear that the point was made on the trial, and, as the facts are not as fully developed as they may be on another trial, we do not discuss it. The judgment should be reversed, and a new trial ordered.

Moore, J., concurred.

Rehearing denied.

Anton RIBICH

v.

LAKE SUPERIOR SMELTING COMPANY,
Plff. in Err.

(.....Mich.....)

1. A charge that a master should instruct his employee as to the nature, force, and probable effect of an explosion of a pot of molten metal taken by the employee from a blast furnace, in case it comes in contact with water, and that it is not sufficient merely to instruct that an explosion is likely to follow such contact, is not erroneous as requiring more than a warning that an explosion would be likely to cause injury.
2. Fifteen thousand dollars is excessive to award an employee as damages for injuries resulting in severe pain for several months and in the loss of an eye, where he is not wholly incapacitated for labor and the interest on the amount at 4 per cent would produce an income greater than his earning capacity before the injury.

(Grant, Ch. J., dissents.)

(March 27, 1900.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Houghton County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for negligence which resulted in injury to plaintiff. Affirmed upon condition.

Statement by Grant, Ch. J.:

The defendant, in connection with its business of refining, smelting, and manufacturing copper, operated cupolas in which mineral copper was smelted. From these cupolas molten copper, mixed with slag, was run into cone-shaped pots at a temperature of about 2,500°. The pots are about 2 feet in diameter at the top, and taper to about 6 inches at the bottom; are made of cast iron, about an inch thick all round; are put on two wheels, one on each side. The axle is built onto the rim of the pot on each side of the wheel. The pot is swung in the middle, with a handle about 4 feet long riveted to the axle, so that the whole can be pushed or pulled by the handle. The pots are dumped by throwing the handle up and over, when the cone slides out upon the ground. The fall of the cone is only the thickness of the rim. About fifteen or sixteen pots are used in each cupola. Two men are employed in wheeling them away and dumping them. When the molten matter is ready to be drawn, each man takes a pot, wheels it to the spout, and, when it is filled to the required height, wheels it outside the building, leaves it, takes an empty pot, and returns. The second man does likewise. The pots are arranged in a semicircle. It takes from two to five minutes to fill a pot. Plaintiff testified that it took about five minutes. Fourteen or fifteen pots were used on the day of the accident. The time required for the slag to "set" so as to be safe to dump was fixed by the experienced witnesses at from eight to thirty minutes. The one wheeling out the next to the last pot would set it at the outer end of the line, take the pot at the other end, which had been cooling, dump it, and take it back to be filled. The one taking out the last pot would wheel it to the first place made vacant by the removal of the first pot taken. He would then take the next pot, dump it, and return to the cupola to refill it. Thus the process would continue until the cupola was empty. They commenced to fill the pots about 7 o'clock A. M., and commenced to dump them about 8 o'clock. The accident occurred about 9 o'clock, according to plaintiff's testimony. The snow had been cleared away from a space where the pots were to be dumped. There was some ice, which was, to some extent, melted by the hot cones. When plaintiff dumped the fifth or sixth pot, it exploded, and the molten matter flew into his eyes and upon his person. The only serious injury was to his eyes. He claims, as the result of the accident, that the sight of one eye was entirely destroyed, and the other seriously injured. He was an Austrian, about twenty-three years old; had been in this country about five years; began work for the defendant in December, 1896, and was injured on the 11th day of January following. He had been engaged in wheeling slag from the furnaces before, but this was his first run of emptying copper and slag mixed. The negligence charged is the failure to instruct him as to the dangerous nature of the work, and the liability of such molten copper and slag to explode on coming in contact with water, and "as to the danger that might result from an explosion." Plaintiff testified that he had no warnings or instructions, but that he simply did as his coemployee who had been engaged at this work for a long time, did. Several witnesses on the part of the defendant testified to informing him of the danger, and to instructing him how to do the work. Defendant also gave evidence to show that he dumped the wrong pot, contrary to instructions. Plaintiff recovered verdict and judgment for $15,000.

Mr. A. B. Gray for appellant.

Mr. A. T. Streeter for appellee.

NOTE.—For duty of master as to warning servants of dangers, see James v. Rapides Lumber Co. (La.) 44 L. R. A. 83, and note.
48 L. R. A.

Montgomery, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

I am not able to agree with my Brother Grant that there was error in the instruction given. In Smith v. Peninsular Car Works, 60 Mich. 501, 27 N. W. 662, it was said that where extraordinary risks are or may be encountered, if known by the master, or should be known by him, the servant should be warned of them, their character and extent, so far as possible. I do not think the instruction which imposed upon the defendant the duty of explaining to plaintiff "the nature, purpose, and probable effect" of such an explosion as would be likely to occur from the contact of water with mixed copper and slag, fairly construed, goes beyond the doctrine of the Smith Case. It is a reflection upon the intelligence of the jury to assume that they would construe this language as imposing upon the defendant the duty of foretelling the precise result of any possible explosion. What the language fairly imports is that it was the duty of the defendant to warn the plaintiff that the explosion would be of such a nature and such force as would be likely to cause injury, and, so construed, the instruction is within the rule of the Smith Case. I agree with my Brother Grant that we should not evade the responsibility of ordering a new trial where a substantial injustice is clearly shown.

In my judgment, the verdict in this case is excessive, and a new trial should be awarded unless the plaintiff will remit from the verdict all in excess of $10,000.

The other Justices concurred with Montgomery, J.

Grant, Ch. J., dissenting:

1. The court instructed the jury as follows: "And I charge you, on that subject, whenever there is any hidden, unusual, or latent danger connected with any work, the law imposes a duty on the master or employer, of informing the workmen or employee of the danger. It is not enough to tell him that the work is dangerous, but the particular danger must be pointed out and explained. In this case, if you find from the evidence that there was danger of an explosion from the contact of water with the mixed copper and slag, then I charge you that that was a danger that was known, or that should have been known, to the smelting company, and that it was its duty to warn Ribich, the plaintiff, of that danger, and to explain to him the nature, force, and probable effect of such an explosion." The objection urged against this instruction is that it was not the duty of the defendant to explain to plaintiff the "nature, force, and probable effect" of such an explosion. It is insisted that the defendant's duty was fully performed when it had instructed him how to do his work, had informed him that it was dangerous to dump the pots before they were sufficiently set, and that an explosion would likely result. The question is one of great practical importance in the law of negligence. The only authorities cited in the briefs of either counsel are Smith v. Peninsular Car Works, 60 Mich. 501, 27 N. W. 662, and Fox v. Peninsular White Lead & Color Works, 84 Mich. 676, 48 N. W. 203. I must assume that counsel have made a careful examination of the authorities, and are unable to cite any which afford much light upon the question. After as careful an examination as I have been able to make, I do not find the question now presented discussed to any extent, or any authoritative declaration of law applicable to this case. In the Smith Case the plaintiff was engaged in carrying a ladle of molten iron from one building to another, whereby it became necessary to walk over ground covered with ice and water. The occurrence was an unusual one, made necessary by the fact that the fires had gone out in one room. No instructions or information were given as to the danger of an explosion if the molten iron came in contact with the water. The court below had directed a verdict for the defendant, evidently upon the ground that the plaintiff had assumed the risk. The language of the majority opinion does not go to the extent of the instructions now complained of. It is as follows: "Where extraordinary risks are or may be encountered, if known to the master, or should be known by him, the servant should be warned of these, their character and extent, so far as possible." It was further said that it was the duty of the defendant to inform the plaintiff "somewhat of its dangerous character." This language falls far short of holding that it was the duty of the defendant in that case, in addition to instructing him how to do the work, and notifying him that there was danger of an explosion if the molten iron was spilled upon the ice, to also inform him of the "nature, force, and probable effect" of the explosion. The Fox Case simply holds that it was the duty of the defendant to notify his employee, the plaintiff, of the danger and effect of inhaling Paris green, and the precautions necessary to prevent the injurious effect. Neither of these cases supports the soundness of the instruction now under consideration. The evidence from several witnesses on the part of the defendant was very strong that plaintiff was fully instructed how to do the work, the reason for thus doing it, and the danger of an explosion if the pots were dumped before the contents were sufficiently "set." Under this instruction, the jury may have found that this was true, and have based their exceedingly large verdict upon the failure of the defendant to further notify the plaintiff of the "nature, force, and probable effect" of the explosion. It is not quite clear to me what a jury would understand by the "nature" of an explosion, or why its nature, whatever it is, should have been explained to the plaintiff. If, by the information conveyed, he knew that there was danger of an explosion, what more notice did he require for his own protection? Should he have been told that it might kill him, it might burn him, it might put out his eyes, or it might blow off a limb? All these things, and others, might be the effect of the explosion. This would depend upon its ac-verity, which might be different on different occasions. If a fireman employed about an engine is informed of the liability to explosion if the boiler is not kept sufficiently supplied with water, and is told what to do, in watching the water gauges, etc., is the employer bound to inform him further of the "nature, force, and probable effect" of an explosion? Must he inform him that pieces of the engine may strike him and hurt him or kill him, and that steam will scald him? Where one employed to use kerosene or naphtha in lighting lamps or running engines is instructed how to do the work, and warned that an explosion may occur if the work is not done as directed, is it the duty of the employer to further inform him of the "nature, force, and probable effect" of an explosion, and that it will burn or injure him in other ways? It may safely be granted, and is undoubtedly true, that even an educated man would not be aware of the danger of an explosion from dumping this hot slag upon water or ice. But when he is notified that, if it is dumped there under those conditions, an explosion will follow, would not the average man understand that he was liable to be injured? Is it not a matter of common knowledge that explosions are liable to cause injury? In dumping this slag, plaintiff was obliged to stand close to, and almost over, the cone as it went upon the ice. Did he need to be told that if there was an explosion the hot metal would fly, and he was liable to be injured? There could not be an explosion without something flying. The only thing there was to fly was the molten slag, or the outside that had become somewhat hardened. The authorities are uniform, and hundreds of cases could be cited, holding that the law is that "if there are latent defects or hazards incident to an occupation, of which the master knows, or ought to know, and which the servant, from ignorance or inexperience, is not capable of understanding and appreciating, it is the master's duty to warn or inform the servant of them." Consolidated Coal Co. v. Haenni, 146 Ill. 620, 35 N. E. 102; Beach, Neg. § 359; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 203, note 5; Wharton, Neg. § 206. Reasonable notice, in order that the employee may, by the exercise of due care, avoid the danger, is all that the law requires. Is not the law satisfied when the party has been fully instructed how to do the work, and is told that there is danger of explosion, and his work requires him to be in close proximity to the explosion if it occurs? I think it is. If the employee desires any further information before assuming the risk, he should be held to make further inquiries. The question of instruction and warning has arisen more frequently in the employment of infants, where the employer is held to more explicit instructions and warnings than in the case of adults. 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 46. The authorities are meager in determining what is a sufficient warning. Much must depend upon the circumstances of each case, in applying the rule. In Powers v. Calcasieu Sugar Co. 48 La. Ann. 483, 19 So. 455, plaintiff accidentally stepped into a ditch of hot water in the evening, and was severely scalded. Defendant's manager testified that he told the plaintiff "to be careful, there was a ditch along side, and the floor was uneven." It was held that the admonition was insufficient. The court said, "If an admonition of danger is relied on, it must be timely and explicit," and held that the defendant should have informed him that the water in the ditch was hot. Where the negligence alleged was in permitting plaintiff to pick up sodium and potassium and put them into water, without warning him of their dangerous and explosive nature when placed in contact with water, it was held that proof of knowledge of facts which would naturally suggest it was all that the law required. Hill v. Meyer Bros. Drug Co. 140 Mo. 433, 41 S. W. 909. The ordinary man knows the effect of dangerous elements. It is the common education of all. He knows that hot water and steam will scald; that fire will burn; that water will drown; that explosions of powder, dynamite, oil, naphtha, and molten matter will injure. When he is instructed how to handle these elements in order to avoid explosion, and is informed that there is danger of explosion if he does not handle them as instructed, he has received from his employer all the warning that the law requires. I think that the instructions were erroneous.

2. It is earnestly urged by counsel for defendant that the court should have directed a verdict for it, because the evidence conclusively shows that if plaintiff, as he testified he did, took the pot in its order and dumped it, no explosion could possibly have occurred. This would require us to find that it took a half hour or more to fill the pots, while there is testimony that it took less time. It would also require us to leave out of consideration an important piece of testimony from Mr. Franz, plaintiff's coemployee and a witness for defendant, that he told plaintiff just before the explosion: "You had better leave them set a little while. They are too hot." The court explicitly instructed the jury that, if this witness so informed plaintiff, he could not recover. The contention upon this point cannot prevail.

3. Plaintiff alone testifies that no instructions or warning were given him. Several witnesses testify that they were given. Counsel strenuously urged that the preponderance of evidence is so great in favor of defendant that this court should grant a new trial, under a statute now authorizing this court to review motions for a new trial. Inasmuch as, in my judgment, the case should be reversed on other grounds, we need not consider this question.

4. Complaint is made that the verdict is excessive, and that for this reason the court should have granted a new trial. The statute above referred to imposes the duty upon us to review this question, and, however unpleasant this duty may be, we have no right to escape it. Plaintiff lost the sight of one eye. His left eye had been seriously injured by another accident. His own physician testified that he had 30 per cent of normal sight of his left eye. He was in a hospital four weeks because his physician told him that he did not want to attend the case or be responsible unless he was removed to some place where he could get better care and nursing than he could get in his boarding house. He testified that he was better at the trial than when he came out of the hospital. "I was suffering from pain then nearly as bad as at the time I got burned. I could not tell the pain I suffered, but it was about two months after that. I was suffering about two months after that very bad. I have had pain since the two months." He is not deprived of all ability to labor. Soon after leaving the hospital he worked for defendant several months, helping teamsters, and earned from $15 to $20 a month. Before he was hurt he earned $1.60 per day. At 4 per cent the $15,000 would yield an annual income of $600,—$100 more than he could earn before he was injured. At 3 per cent it would yield $450, which is within $50 of what he could earn if he labored every working day in the year, including holidays. Counsel cite Retan v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 94 Mich. 146, 53 N. W. 1094, where a verdict for $30,000 was sustained. That case was decided before the statute above mentioned was passed. Besides, there is no parallel between that case and this. In that case by the loss of both feet the plaintiff was a helpless cripple for life, and was deprived entirely of the power of locomotion. I cannot avoid the conclusion that the verdict is excessive. As the verdict should be set aside upon other grounds, and as the testimony upon another trial may be different, it is unnecessary to determine upon this record by how much we think the verdict should be reduced, or a new trial ordered. On the question of excessive verdicts, see Standard Oil Co. v. Tierney (Ky.) 14 L. R. A. 677, note.

Judgment should be reversed, and new trial ordered.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Mississippi ex rel. Monroe MCCLURG, Attorney General, Appt.,
v.

Robert POWELL.

(.....Miss.....)

1. The question whether a proposed constitutional amendment is in conformity with the constitutional requirements in constituting but a single amendment, and also the question whether the proposition has received such a majority as the Constitution prescribes for its adoption, are judicial questions for the courts to decide, notwithstanding the fact that the legislature has declared that the amendment is adopted and that it is a part of the Constitution of the state.
2. A proposed constitutional amendment providing in one proposition for the election of all judges, and fixing their terms of office, as well as for the division of the state into circuit and chancery court districts, with party nominations by districts, while it proposes to repeal Const. §§ 145, 149, 151-153, one of which provides for the appointment of supreme court judges, another fixes their term of office, another provides for appointments to fill vacancies, another for the division of the state into circuit and chancery court districts, while the other provides for the appointment of circuit and chancery court judges,—is void for lack of conformity to Const. 1890, § 273, requiring amendments, if more than one shall be submitted at one time, to be submitted in such manner and form that the people may vote for or against each amendment separately.
3. A majority of all the electors voting at the election for any purpose, and not simply all who vote on the adoption or rejection of the constitutional amendment submitted at a general election, is necessary for the adoption of a constitutional amendment, under Const. 1890, § 273, requiring "a majority of the qualified electors voting."

(1900.)

A PPEAL by relator from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Lincoln County in favor of defendant upon an information against him for unlawfully exercising the functions of a civil public officer. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Monroe McClurg, Attorney General, for appellant:

The rules prescribed by the Constitution are all for the guidance of the legislature, and from the very nature of the thing the legislature must be exclusive judge of all questions to be measured or determined by those rules.

The governor and the courts have no authority to speak at any stage of this proceeding between the sovereign and the legislature, and when the matter is thus concluded it is closed, and the judiciary is as powerless to interfere as the executive.

Green v. Weller, 32 Miss. 650, 33 Miss. 735, Appx.; Ex parte Wren, 63 Miss. 512. 56 Am. Rep. 825.

Those who do not vote thereby agree to abide the majority of those who do. This applies to those who voted for candidates in this election, and did not vote on this question, just as it applies to those who did not vote at all.

Hawkins v. Carroll County Supers. 50

NOTE.—As to the sufficiency of majority to carry an election, see also note to Lawrence v. Ingersoll (Tenn.) 6 L. R. A. 310; People ex rel. Wells v. Berkeley (Cal.) 23 L. R. A. 838; State ex rel. Little v. Langile (N. D.) 32 L. R. A. 48 L. R. A.

A. 728; Belknap v. Louisville (Ky.) 34 L. R. A. 256; State ex rel. Douglas County v. Cornell (Neb.) 39 L. R. A. 513; and Montgomery County Fiscal Court v. Trimble (Ky.) 42 L. R. A. 738.

Miss. 735; Constitutional Prohibitory Amendment, 24 Kan. 700; Green v. State Bd. of Canvassers (Idaho) 47 Pac. 259.

There is but one proposition stated to the electors,—to agree by ballot to the election of all judges, or to signify an unwillingness to agree, by voting against it.

One amendment means one subject, and that subject here is an elective judiciary; all else is detail and necessarily follows the change on the general subject; or, if it does not necessarily follow, may properly follow as an incident to such subject and for the purpose of carrying the subject into full effect.

State ex rel. Hudd v. Timme, 54 Wis. 318, 11 N. W. 785; State ex rel. Morris v. Mason, 43 La. Ann. 660, 9 So. 776; State ex rel. Adams v. Herried, 10 S. D. 109, 72 N. W. 93.

Mr. E. F. Noel, also for appellant:

Every word employed in the Constitution is to be expounded in its plain, obvious, and common-sense application, unless the context furnishes some ground to control, qualify, or enlarge it.

1 Story, Const. 451; Black, Interpretation of Laws, 28.

It is not required that a proposed constitutional amendment be limited to a single subject, as is required of statutes, nor that the subject be expressed in its title. Indeed, no title is necessary to a proposed amendment, and if one is inserted it may be disregarded.

6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 906.

The insertion of amendments in the Constitution is confided to the legislature according as it "shall appear" to themselves. The decision of no question of mixed law and fact, such as this, has ever been revised or annulled by any judicial department. On the contrary, the judiciary of every state of the United States have uniformly declared that such judgment of the other co-ordinate department to which the Constitution had intrusted the question was conclusive, and its revision not within the judiciary province.

Ex parte Wren, 63 Miss. 512, 56 Am. Rep. 825; Hunt v. Wright, 70 Miss. 298, 11 So. 608; Green v. Weller, 32 Miss. 650, 33 Miss. 735, Appx.; Vicksburg & M. R. Co. v. Lowry, 61 Miss. 102, 48 Am. Rep. 76; Luther v. Borden, 7 How. 1, 12 L. ed. 581; Hawkins v. The Governor, 1 Ark. 570, 33 Am. Dec. 351; People ex rel. Sutherland v. The Governor, 29 Mich. 320, 18 Am. Rep. 92; Dennett, Petitioner, 32 Me. 508, 54 Am. Dec. 603; Miles v. Bradford, 22 Md. 184, 85 Am. Dec. 643; Miller v. Johnson, 92 Ky. 595, 15 L. R. A. 528, 18 S. W. 522; Taylor v. Beckham, 178 U. S. 548, 44 L. ed. —, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390, 1009.

There is nothing in common acceptation, the dictionaries, or the law, that gives any technical meaning to "amendment."

All that was intended to be guarded against was a submission of a series of amendments together, on different and unrelated matters, for in that way the whole Constitution would be revised, in all its departments, by one vote for or against, and 43 L. R. A.

constitutional conventions be forever dispensed with.

The different subject-matters dealt with in one amendment need not be interdependent or indivisible; and it is largely within legislative discretion; and the legislature is "not compelled to submit, as separate amendments, the separate proposition necessary to accomplish a single purpose."

State ex rel. Hudd v. Timme, 54 Wis. 318, 11 N. W. 785; State ex rel. Morris v. Mason, 43 La. Ann. 590, 9 So. 776; State ex rel. Adams v. Herried, 10 S. D. 110, 72 N. W. 93.

Mr. A. J. McLaurin, also for appellant:

Section 273 is mandatory, and should be strictly construed.

The mandate of the sovereign was directed to the legislature alone, and it alone was answerable to the sovereign as to whether the mandate had been faithfully executed.

Koehler v. Hill, 60 Iowa, 543, 14 N. W. 738, 15 N. W. 609; Green v. Weller, 32 Miss. 650, 33 Miss. 735, Appx.; Ex parte Wren, 63 Miss. 537, 56 Am. Rep. 825; Vicksburg & M. R. Co. v. Lowry, 61 Miss. 102, 48 Am. Rep. 76.

The judiciary had no power to decide whether the legislature had properly performed any duty or executed any power conferred by the Constitution. Every controversy must be determined somewhere, and when one department was designated another could not interfere.

Worman v. Hagan, 78 Md. 152, 21 L. R. A. 720, 27 Atl. 616; Collier v. Frierson, 24 Ala. 110; People ex rel. Sutherland v. The Governor, 29 Mich. 329, 18 Am. Rep. 89.

"If it shall appear" means to the legislature.

State v. Swift, 69 Ind. 513; State, Bentley, Prosecutor, v. Sippel, 25 N. J. L. 530;

Mr. R. H. Thompson, for appellee:

Section 273 of the Constitution, providing the mode and manner of its amendment, was mandatory, and no change of the fundamental law is valid which is not passed in strict compliance with its terms. The question whether an amendment has been passed is necessarily a judicial one; it is judicial in its nature.

State v. McBride, 4 Mo. 303, 29 Am. Dec. 636; State v. Swift, 69 Ind. 505; Collier v. Frierson, 24 Ala. 108; Westinghausen v. People, 44 Mich. 265, 6 N. W. 641; University of North Carolina v. McIver, 72 N. C. 76; State ex rel. Hudd v. Timme, 54 Wis. 318, 11 N. W. 785; Koehler v. Hill, 60 Iowa, 543, 14 N. W. 738, 15 N. W. 609; State, Bott, Prosecutor, v. Wurts (N. J.) 45 L. R. A. 251, 43 Atl. 744, 881.

The amendments were improperly submitted. In the face of the Constitution they submit five separate amendments to be voted on as if but one: One, the election of supreme court judges; two, the change of the terms of the supreme court judges; three, the election of circuit judges; four, the election of chancellors; five, the nomination of circuit judges and chancellors by districts.

State ex rel. Hudd v. Timme, 54 Wis. 319, 11 N. W. 785; State ex rel. Morris v. Mason, 43 La. Ann. 590, 9 So. 776; State ex rel. Adams v. Herried, 10 S. D. 109, 72 N. W. 93.

Mr. Frank Johnston, also for appellee:

The amendment proposed is not in the form proposed by § 273 of the Constitution, being submitted as one amendment, while it should have been submitted in the form of several amendments, so that the different changes proposed could have been voted on separately by the people at the election.

Section 273 of the Constitution requires that when more than one amendment is proposed to be adopted, each must receive a majority of all the votes cast at the election, and not merely a majority of the votes of the electors who voted on the question of the amendment.

The construction and application of § 273 of the Constitution is not one that has been confided exclusively to the legislature. This is a judicial question, for the ultimate decision of the courts. It is for the courts to finally determine the question whether a constitutional amendment has been adopted in accordance with the requirements of the Constitution.

Spangler v. Jacoby, 14 Ill. 297, 58 Am. Dec. 571; Miller v. Goodwin, 70 Ill. 600; Miller v. State, 3 Ohio St. 475; State ex rel. Loomis v. Moffitt, 5 Ohio, 358; People ex rel. Drake v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 481; Southwark Bank v. Com. 26 Pa. 446; McCulloch v. State, 11 Ind. 430; Berry v. Baltimore & D. Point R. Co. 41 Md. 446, 20 Am. Rep. 69; People ex rel. Scott v. Chenango Supers. 8 N. Y. 317; Fordyce v. Goodman, 20 N. S. 1; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Platt, 2 S. C. N. S. 150, 16 Am. Rep. 647; Jones v. Hutchinson, 43 Ala. 721; Moody v. State, 43 Ala. 115, 17 Am. Rep. 28; Opinion of the Justices, 35 N. H. 579; Oshurn v. Staley, 5 W. Va. 85, 13 Am. Rep. 640; Smith v. Garth, 33 Ark. 17; Fowler v. Peirce, 2 Cal. 105.

Mr. J. A. P. Campbell, also for appellee:

The question is a judicial one, and the court is not concluded by the action of the legislature.

Green v. Weller, 32 Miss. 650; Sproule v. Fredericks, 69 Miss. 898, 11 So. 472; Collier v. Frierson, 24 Ala. 100; Livermore v. Waite, 102 Cal. 113, 25 L. R. A. 312, 36 Pac. 424; Koehler v. Hill, 60 Iowa, 543, 14 N. W. 733, 15 N. W. 609; State v. Swift, 69 Ind. 505; Miller v. Johnson, 92 Ky. 589, 15 L. R. A. 524, 18 S. W. 522; State. Bott, Prosecutor, v. Wurts (N. J.) 45 L. R. A. 251, 43 Atl. 744, 881; Westinghausen v. People, 44 Mich. 265, 6 N. W. 641; Secombe v. Kittelson, 29 Minn. 555, 12 N. W. 519; State v. McBride, 4 Mo. 305, 29 Am. Dec. 636; University of North Carolina v. McIver, 72 N. C. 76; United States v. Ballin, 144 U. S. 1, 36 L. ed. 321, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 507; Green v. Brown, 146 Ind. 1, 44 N. E. 805.

The amendments are plural and were submitted as one, when they should have been separated.

State ex rel. Morris v. Mason, 43 La. Ann. 590, 9 So. 776; State ex rel. Hudd v. Timme, 54 Wis. 318, 11 N. W. 785; State ex rel. Adams v. Herried, 10 S. D. 109, 72 N. W. 93. 48 L. R. A.

Whitfield, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Three questions are presented for solution: First. Is the question whether the proposition submitted to the voters for adoption as part of the Constitution be one amendment or more than one amendment a judicial question; and, likewise, is the question whether such proposition received the majority prescribed by the Constitution as essential to its valid adoption a judicial question? Second. If these questions are judicial questions, was the proposition one amendment, or two or more amendments; and, as necessarily involved herein, was the proposition submitted in the way the Constitution imperatively requires it to be submitted? Third. Was the proposition adopted by the majority of qualified electors prescribed by the Constitution as essential to the adoption of an amendment thereto?

As to the first proposition, we are clear that both questions are judicial questions. This is placed beyond cavil, as the settled doctrine of this state, by Green v. Weller, 32 Miss. 650, and Sproule v. Fredericks, 69 Miss. 898, 11 So. 472. The same response is given by an overwhelming weight of authority from other states. In the 6th volume of the American and English Encyclopedia of Law, at page 908, 2d edition, it is said: "The courts have full power to declare that an Amendment to the Constitution has not been properly adopted, even though it has been so declared by the political department of the state." And for this statement the following authorities are cited: Collier v. Frierson, 24 Ala. 100; State v. Swift, 69 Ind. 505; Koehler v. Hill, 60 Iowa, 543, 14 N. W. 733, 15 N. W. 609; State ex rel. Hahn v. Young, 29 Minn. 474, 9 N. W. 737; Secombe v. Kittelson, 29 Minn. 555, 12 N. W. 519; State v. McBride, 4 Mo. 303, 29 Am. Dec. 636; State ex rel. Hudd v. Timme, 54 Wis. 318, 11 N. W. 785; James on Constitutional Convention, 4th ed. 617. We have carefully examined each of these authorities, and they clearly and fully support the statement of the text; the case from Missouri being especially emphatic, as is also the case from Alabama. In this last case the court says: "We entertain no doubt that, to change the Constitution in any other mode than by a convention, every requisition which is demanded by the instrument itself must be observed, and the omission of any one is fatal to the amendment. . . . The Constitution is the supreme and paramount law. The mode by which amendments are to be made under it is clearly defined. It has been said that certain acts are to be done, certain requisitions are to be observed, before a change can be effected. But to what purpose are these acts required, or these requisitions enjoined, if the legislature or any other department of the government can dispense with them. To do so would be to violate the instrument which they are sworn to support; and every principle of public law and sound constitutional policy requires the court to pronounce against every amendment which is shown not to have been made in accordance with the rules prescribed by the fundamental law." The learned editors of Lawyers' Reports Annotated, in the note to Miller v. Johnson (Ky.) 15 L. R. A. 524 expressly say that the question of lawful adoption of an amendment to the Constitution is a judicial question. Judge Handy and Chief Justice Smith clearly treat the question as a judicial question, in Green v. Weller, and language could hardly be clearer or stronger in support of this view than is that of Chief Justice Smith in that case. All that is said in Ex parte Wren, 63 Miss. 512, 56 Am. Rep. 825, on this subject, is pure dictum, the question not being before the court. The true view is that the Constitution, the organic law of the land, is paramount and supreme over governor, legislature, and courts. When it prescribes the exact method in which an amendment shall be submitted, and defines positively the majority necessary to its adoption, these are constitutional directions mandatory upon all departments of the government, and without strict compliance with which no amendment can be validly adopted. Whether an amendment has been validly submitted or validly adopted depends upon the fact of compliance or non-compliance with the constitutional directions as to how such amendments shall be submitted and adopted, and whether such compliance has in fact been had must, in the nature of the case, be a judicial question. It may be that where the Constitution creates a special tribunal, and confides to that tribunal the exclusive power to canvass the votes and declare the result, and make the amendment part of the Constitution, as a result of such declaration, by a proclamation, or otherwise prescribed method fixed for such tribunal by the Constitution, then the action of such special tribunal would be final and conclusive, whether its action be judicial or not. This is so because it was competent for the sovereign people, speaking through their Constitution, so to provide. Such provision was made in Maryland and Maine, and the three cases cited from those states rest expressly upon the fact that the Constitutions did so establish such special constitutional tribunal, clothed with exclusive power in the premises. In Dennett's Case, 32 Me. 508, 54 Am. Dec. 602, it was made the exclusive duty of the governor and council to open and compare votes returned, and the effort was (the governor and council declining to do so) to compel them, by mandamus, so to do. So, in Miles v. Bradford, 22 Md. 170, 85 Am. Dec. 643, it appears, at page 183, Am. Dec. page 644, that the 8th section of the act under review (Acts 1864, chap. 5) required the returns of the votes on the adoption or rejection of a Constitution to be made to the governor, and it was made his duty to count the vote and ascertain the result, and, by his proclamation to the people of the state, finally declare the fact whether the Constitution had been adopted or not. In this case, also, the effort was made, by mandamus, to control the discretion of the executive, as is seen from the 48 L. R. A.

opinion in chief, at page 185, Am. Dec. page 645, and from the concurring opinion of Bartol, J., at page 186, Am. Dec. page 646. In both of these cases the court, of course, held that it was not competent for the court, by mandamus, to compel the executive to act, or to direct him in what mode his discretion should be exercised in the matter intrusted exclusively to him. It is to be noted that Bartol, J., in the last case cited, thought the action of the governor under that particular statute, even, was subject to review. So, in Worman v. Hagan, 78 Md. at page 164, 21 L. R. A. 716, 27 Atl. 616, it is shown that it was made the duty of the governor to make publication of the bills which propose amendments to the Constitution, and the votes cast for and against the amendments were to be returned to him; and it was then provided that, if it should appear to him (the governor) that a majority had voted in favor of the amendment, he should, by his proclamation, declare that the amendment had been adopted by the people, and it was expressly provided that thenceforth it should become a part of the Constitution. It is perfectly obvious that the provisions of the Maine and Maryland Constitutions are wholly unlike § 273 of the Constitution of 1890. Those Constitutions did create the governor and council in one, and the governor in the other, a special tribunal to count the vote, canvass the returns, declare the result, and, upon its appearing to such tribunal that a majority did vote for the amendment, so to declare by proclamation to the people. Another case referred to is State ex rel. Larabee v. Barnes, 3 N. D. 323, 55 N. W. 883. But it is manifest from reading pages 323, 324 (bottom of one and top of the other) 3 N. D. and page 883, 55 N. W. that § 8 of the enabling act there required a separate vote on the Amendments to the Constitution, and that the facts as to that vote should be shown to the President of the United States, with a statement of the votes for and against the Constitution, and each specific proposition so separately submitted, and that the President, from these data, was required to determine whether or not the Constitution was republican in form, and whether or not the requirements of the enabling act had been complied with, and, if so, he was further required to issue his proclamation admitting the state, as a state, into the Union. Here, again, the matter was confided to the President, the act conferring upon him exclusive power in the premises. Counsel mistakes the case of State v. Swift, 69 Ind. 505, as can be seen from page 513 of the report. He says that the court did not go into the question, but held that, the governor having issued his proclamation, the matter was res judicata. What the court said was res judicata, at page 513, was the action of the governor and secretary of state under an act of the general assembly of 1873,—not the matter then before the court, into which last matter the court did examine, treating it as a judicial question, manifestly. Our constitutional provisions create no special provision to determine whether amendments have been validly submitted or validly adopted. It is not said that "if it shall appear" to the legislature, upon which erroneous assumption is builded the argument counter to our view. Plainly and manifestly, the language "if it shall appear" means simply if it should be made manifest or evident; if it should be the fact that, etc. But whether it is a fact is a judicial question, determinable by the courts. The case of Luther v. Borden, 7 How. 1, 12 L. ed. 581, so much relied upon by counsel, was a case of two opposing governments, each claiming to be lawful; and it was said in that case that, if a state court should come to the conclusion that the government under which it acted had been put aside and is placed by an opposing government, it would cease to be a court, and be incapable of pronouncing a judicial decision upon the question. Here there is no question of opposing governments, or as to whether this court exists, so as to be able to pronounce a judgment, and the case of Luther v. Borden is of no aid in the solution of this case on its facts. See note, page 524, 15 L. R. A.

The Constitution can be amended in but two ways,—by the people assembled in a constitutional convention, or by observing the constitutional method marked out in § 273 of the Constitution of 1890. When the latter mode of amending the Constitution is sought to be followed, the conditions upon which alone the amendment can become a part of the Constitution are precisely prescribed in said § 273. It is the mandate of the Constitution itself, the paramount and supreme law of the land, that such amendment cannot become part of the Constitution unless two facts exist: First, unless such amendment or amendments should be submitted in the mode pointed out; second, unless such amendment or amendments should be adopted by the majority prescribed. These two conditions are facts which must exist in truth and in reality, and not simply be declared to exist by the legislature whether they do exist or not. The legislature is not given the power, as a special tribunal, to count the votes, canvass the returns, declare the result, and make the amendment part of the Constitution by proclamation. All that it does, all that it can do, is, in the first instance, to propose the amendment or amendments to the people for their vote in the way the Constitution directs. It is for the people, and the people alone, to say, by the majority prescribed in the Constitution, whether they adopt or reject the proposed amendment or amendments. Amendments which are adopted owe their vitality to the action of the people, primarily; that action to be had in accordance with the method prescribed in § 273. The legislature simply proposes an amendment in the first instance, and that is absolutely all that that legislature has to do with the matter. The people then act, and the next succeeding legislature, not the next session of the legislature proposing the amendment, is authorized to insert the amendment as a part of the Constitution, if the former legislature shall have validly submitted it, and the people shall have validly adopted it.

The legislature, in what it has to do, acts ministerially, as the agent of the people, through the provisions of § 273, in first proposing and afterwards inserting the amendment; but the people cannot vote effectually upon an amendment unless it shall have been submitted in the mode pointed out, and the vital things are the existence of the facts named, submission in conformity with § 273, and adoption by the majority therein prescribed, upon which facts or conditions the vitality of the amendment itself—its right legally to be written and inserted into the Constitution—depends. The best-considered case we have seen on this subject is State, Bott, Prosecutor, v. Wurts (N. J.) 45 L. R. A. 251, 43 Atl. 744, 881. Speaking of the proposition that the question here is not a judicial question, the court says: "That such a proposition is not true seems to be indicated by the whole history of jurisprudence in this country." The court then reviews numerous decisions, all of which have been cited in the argument here, properly distinguishing Worman v. Hagan, 78 Md. 152, 21 L. R. A. 716, 27 Atl. 616. The court says, with great force: "If a legislative enactment which may be repealed in a year, or an executive act which affects only a single individual, cannot be allowed to stand if it contravenes the Constitution, a fortiori a change in the fundamental law, which is much more permanent, and affects the whole community, should not be permitted to take place in violation of constitutional mandates." Chief Justice Beasley put the pith of the whole matter in one sentence, saying in State ex rel. Werts v. Rogers, 56 N. J. L. 430, 616, 23 L. R. A. 354, 28 Atl. 726, and 29 Atl. 173: "When the inquiry is whether the legislature, or any other body or officer, has violated the regulations of the Constitution, it is entirely plain that, the decision of that subject must rest exclusively with the judicial department of the government." That is the whole of it, resulting from the supremacy of the Constitution as the paramount law of the land,—supreme over all departments of the government.

As to the second proposition, we are satisfied that the proposition submitted to the voters contained at least four separate amendments. The sections proposed to be repealed, to wit, §§ 145, 149, 151–153, relate to separate matters. Section 145 deals alone with the supreme court, as does said § 149. Section 153 deals with the judges of the circuit courts and of the chancery courts. Section 151 deals with the method of filling vacancies in the supreme court. Section 152 deals with circuit and chancery court districts. It will thus be seen that the sections of the Constitution of 1890 sought to be repealed treat separately of the supreme court and supreme court judges, and of the judges of the circuit and chancery courts. Section 177, relating to vacancies in the offices of circuit judges or chancellors, and the method of filling them, where the vacancy occurs during the recess of the senate, was wholly overlooked by the proposed amendments. It might well be that many voters might have been willing to vote for the election of circuit judges and chancellors who would be unwilling to vote for the election of supreme judges, and that many voters might have been willing to vote for the election of all judges, and yet wholly unwilling to vote for party nominations, by districts, of judges to be voted for over the whole state. Whether an amendment is one or many clearly must depend upon the nature of the subject-matter covered by the amendment. If the propositions are separate, one in no manner dependent upon the other, so that a voter may intelligently vote for one and against the other,—one being able to stand alone, disconnected wholly from the others,—then such amendments are many, and not one; are severable, and not a unit; are complete each in itself, and not each a part of an interdependent scheme; and such, manifestly, are the amendments in this case. A voter might have chosen to vote for the election of circuit judges, and not for the election of chancellors; and one might have chosen to vote for the election of both circuit judges and chancellors, and yet not for the election of supreme judges; one might have been willing to vote for the election of all judges, and yet not willing to sanction by his vote a scheme for party nomination, by districts, for judges to be voted for by electors of the entire state, such as proposed against one or more; and one amendment as in these amendments. And an elector might have exercised his choice between these four amendments, voting for one or more and to the election of circuit judges or chancellors or supreme judges might have been adopted and the others rejected, and our constitutional scheme remain perfectly symmetrical and harmonious. And so the people could have adopted the amendments providing for the election of all the judges, and rejected the scheme propounded for party nominations by districts, and such action would have been perfectly intelligent; and these three amendments could have been written into the Constitution without the other, which is not essential to any one of the three amendments. The argument is wholly fallacious which seeks to save this method of submission by saying that all of the amendments relate to the judicial department of the government. If that argument were correct, then the mere fact that amendments, no matter how many, and no matter how absolutely independent each of the other, relate to the legislative department, will permit all to be submitted as one, and so as to the judicial department, and so as to the executive department. Whether amendments are one or many must be solved by their inherent nature,—by the consideration whether they are separate and independent each of the other, so as that each can stand alone without the other, leaving the constitutional scheme symmetrical, harmonious, and independent on that subject, and not upon the mere blanketing of a name, such as “amendments relating to the judicial department,” or “amendments relating to the executive department” or to “the legislative department.” Nothing could save these amendments, unless the fact that they relate to the same general broad subject of the judicial department could save them, and this is utterly in the face of reason and principle.

Three cases are cited by counsel as showing the oneness of this alleged amendment: State ex rel. Hudd v. Timme, 54 Wis. 318, 11 N. W. 785; State ex rel. Adams v. Herried, 10 S. D. 120, 72 N. W. 93; State ex rel. Morris v. Mason, 43 La. Ann. 590, 9 So. 776. In the Wisconsin case, at page, 336, 54 Wis., and page 791, 11 N. W., the court says: “In order to constitute more than one amendment, the propositions submitted must relate to more than one subject, and have at least two distinct and separate purposes, not dependent upon or connected with each other. Tested by this rule, the propositions submitted to the electors contained but one amendment.” The purpose there, as stated, was to change from annual to biennial sessions of the legislature; and incidental and dependent upon this was the proposition to change the tenure of office of members of the assembly from one to two years, and to change the compensation of the members. The court said: “If they must be submitted separately, why must they? Certainly they should either both be defeated or both adopted. Why, then, should the people be permitted or compelled to vote upon each separately?” This conclusion shows that that court itself would have held, where the amendments were not such that all would have to be defeated or all adopted, that they were separate amendments; but it is further to be noticed in that case that great stress was laid upon the fact that all the departments of government had for a long period of time construed the question of the adoption of such amendments as the court construed it in that case. Here there has been no such uniform action of the departments of government. In the South Dakota case it is perfectly manifest that the proposed amendment was but one amendment. It abolished certain trustees of the university, and established one board of control for all educational institutions of the state supported by state taxation. It was clearly a single proposition, which stood or fell as an entirety. And yet even in that case the supreme court hesitated before declaring it one amendment. In the Louisiana case the proposition was to charter a lottery, upon its paying, as a consideration for its being chartered, to various charitable institutions, named sums of money. There were a great many incidental provisions and regulations auxiliary to the great, controlling scheme, to wit, the establishment of a lottery, all of which were manifestly only auxiliary to, and adjutory of, the proposition for the establishment of a lottery. The decision is manifestly correct. The whole scheme stood or fell together, and was manifestly one in design and purpose. These authorities therefore are of no value in the determination of the question whether the proposition here submitted to our voters embraced one amendment or more than one amendment. The question whether, there being several amendments, they were submitted so that the voters could vote separately on each, was fundamentally vital. Says the supreme court of California (Oakland Paving Co. v. Hilton, 69 Cal. 489, 11 Pac. 8): "When a mode is thus established and ordained, it must be followed. The people of a state may impose a limit upon their own power, and when this is done by the Constitution it must be regarded as much a portion of the paramount law, and as obligatory on the whole people, as any other portion of the Constitution. If we do not so hold, we would sanction revolution and violence, and place lawlessness on a level with law. The majority of the people, according to law, having adopted the Constitution, with a mode of amendment in it, we must regard it as a solemn declaration to the minority in the state, as binding as a compact with such minority, that the majority, however large or overwhelming, will never exercise its irresistible power, its vis major, to change the law of its organization as a government in any other way. We hold it to be sound law that a Constitution adopted as was the present Constitution of the state of California is not lawfully changed by the votes of every elector in the state, unless in the mode provided in it. . . . The majority in favor of the change may be so irresistible in its physical power as to command the forced acquiescence or unwilling consent of an inconsiderable minority, but nevertheless a change of the Constitution so brought about, contrary to its provisions, would be lawless, revolutionary, and unconstitutional, and it would be the duty of this court, in obedience to the oath which its members have taken, so to declare it, in favor of any litigant who should invoke its judgment in the course of regular procedure, though the sole litigant invoking its aid and power should constitute the nonconsenting minority. If it did not so declare, the organic law would not afford that protection and refuge which it was intended to afford." See also what is said in this case at pages 502, 503, 60 Cal. and page 14, 11 Pac. The necessity for greater deliberation and strictness of procedure in respect to the adoption of constitutional amendments than that which applies as to the passage of acts of the legislature is pointed out with great clearness in State v. Foraker, 46 Ohio St. 692, 693, 6 L. R. A. 422, 23 Atl. 491. See also what is said by Justice Brewer in the Prohibitory Amendment Cases, 24 Kan., at page 712. Judge Brewer very strongly says in 24 Kan., at pages 711, 712, sneaking of the part that the legislature plays when the constitutional requirements have not been obeyed: "It lacks the sanction of law, is a disregard of constitutional methods and limitations, and should be taken as a request for a change, rather than as a change itself. But notwithstanding this, legislative action is simply a determination to submit the question to popular decision. It is in no sense final. No number of legislatures and no amount of legislative action can change the fundamental law. This was made by the people, who alone can change it. The action of the legislature in respect to constitutional changes is something like the action of a committee of the legislature in respect to the legislative disposition of a bill. It presents, it recommends, but it does not decide. . . . It is the legislative action which is considered in determining whether the law has been constitutionally passed, and it is the popular action which is principally to be considered in determining whether a constitutional amendment has been adopted."

We therefore hold, and so declare, that there were at least four amendments submitted to the people in this proposition, and that for that reason the amendments were not submitted in accordance with § 278 of the Constitution, and, notwithstanding the action of the legislature in inserting them in the Constitution, are null and void and form no part of said Constitution.

On the third proposition, we are satisfied that the majority required by § 273 of the Constitution of 1890 for the adoption of a constitutional amendment must be a majority of all the electors voting at the election.—not simply all voting on the adoption or rejection of the constitutional amendment submitted. A consideration of the history of § 273 in our Constitution demonstrates this beyond all controversy. In the Constitution of 1817, found in Hutchinson's Code, p. 35, this provision reads, as to this point: "If it shall appear that a majority of the citizens of the state voting for representatives have voted for a convention," etc. In the Constitution of 1832 (Hutchinson's Code, p. 51) as to this point, the section reads: "Public notice thereof shall then be given by the secretary of state, at least six months preceding the next general election, at which the qualified electors shall vote directly for or against such change, alteration, or amendment; and if it shall appear that a majority of the qualified electors voting for members of the legislature shall have voted for the proposed change, alteration, or amendment, then it shall be inserted by the next succeeding legislature as a part of this Constitution, and not otherwise." Note the language "and not otherwise." The Constitution of 1869 (Code 1871, p. 667, art. 13) as to this point reads: "If it shall appear that a majority of the qualified electors voting for members of the legislature shall have voted for the proposed amendments," etc. The Constitution of 1890, § 273, reads: "Whenever two thirds of each house of the legislature shall deem any change, alteration, or amendment necessary to this Constitution, such proposed change, alteration, or amendment shall be read and passed by a two-thirds vote of each house, respectively, on each day, for three successive days. Public notice shall then be given by the secretary of state, at least three months preceding an election, at which the qualified electors shall vote directly for or against such change, alteration, or amendment; and if more than one amendment shall be submitted at one time, they shall be submitted in such manner and form that the people may vote for or against each amendment separately; and if it shall appear that a majority of the qualified electors voting shall have voted for the proposed change, alteration, or amendment, then it shall be inserted by the next succeeding legislature as part of this Constitution, and not otherwise." It will be noticed that the Constitution of 1890 omits, after the word "voting," the words "for members of the legislature;" and the enrolled section of the Constitution, in the secretary of state's office, shows that there should be a comma after the word "voting" in § 273, as it now stands. The significant fact thus stands out, like a mountain in the landscape, that for the whole period of time from 1817 to 1890, the Constitution of the state having been four times changed during such period (a period of seventy-three years of state history), the people of this state, speaking through their sovereign instrument, the Constitution, had uniformly declared that no majority of electors less than a majority of those voting for members of the legislature (which election would bring out, it was presumed, the largest number of electors) should avail to change the organic law of the land. That law reaches with its protection everyone in the state. Unlike an act of the legislature, which may or may not be general, its effectiveness is universal. Its potency reaches in its power the territorial limits of the whole state, and protects all rights of life, liberty, and property thereunder. This charter of our liberties, this ark of the covenant, the people for seventy-three years had said should not be lightly touched or carelessly changed. That law expressly provided that such change could be effected only by a vote of a majority of all votes for members of the legislature. How did this clause, "for members of the legislature," come to be dropped? It was dropped, simply and only, because sessions of the legislature were then, and were thereafter to be, quadrennial. In view of this fact the framers of the Constitution wisely foresaw that if one legislature had to propose an amendment, and the succeeding legislature had to insert it, if a constitutional amendment could only be submitted when members of the legislature were to be voted for there would result a positive inhibition of an election on the question of adopting a constitutional amendment, except at intervals of at least every four years, and it might very likely occur that a period of eight years might intervene between the submission of an amendment and its insertion in the Constitution. That so long a period of time should be allowed to stand in the way of a demand for a change in the Constitution made exigent by some great public necessity was wholly unreasonable. It might be that a constitutional amendment ought to be submitted at a special election held for that purpose only. The public necessity might be such that, not waiting for a special election, such amendment should be submitted at some regular election for state officers, or at a congressional election. The time for holding an election on the question of adopting a constitutional amendment was not vital. The majority by which the public policy of the state had always declared such amendments could alone be adopted was vital. Time could be fixed to suit the convenience of the voters. The great fundamental condition—the requisite majority—was to remain essentially unaltered. It would be imputing to the wise framers of the Constitution of 1890 the greatest folly to suppose that they meant to reverse the policy of this state for seventy odd years as to the majority necessary to adopt a constitutional amendment, when the real purpose of the omission of the words "for members of the legislature" lies on the very surface of the investigation, and was manifestly, as stated, the result alone of the fact that sessions of the legislature were then quadrennial. If an election should be held to determine alone whether the Constitution should be amended or not, a majority of the electors voting would in such case necessarily be a majority of those voting for or against the adoption of the amendment. Clearly, therefore, this consideration in no wise affects the soundness of our holding that whether or not the vote on a constitutional amendment occurs on a day when state officers are also voted for, there must be a majority of all the electors voting that day for anything, to make valid the adoption of the amendment, as is expressly held in Stebbins v. Grand Rapids Super. Ct. Judge, 108 Mich. 698, 66 N. W. 594. The court said: "We see nothing absurd, however, in the legislature providing that at a special election a majority of the votes should control, while at a general election a majority of all the votes cast at the election should control. There might have been in the legislative mind the very best of reasons for such provisions."

Nothing is gained by referring to the words, "an election at which the qualified electors shall vote directly for or against such amendment." The very same words ("directly for or against such amendment") occur in the same provisions in the Constitutions of 1869 and of 1832. Nor do the words "an election" mean, as alleged, a special election. If that construction were correct, then every constitutional amendment would necessarily have to be submitted at some special election called for that purpose alone: yet for seventy-odd years the policy of the state had been exactly the reverse. That policy of the state was never to submit a constitutional amendment except at an election for members of the legislature, for the reason that at such elections for members of the legislature the fullest possible vote would be polled. The Constitution framers of 1817, 1832, and 1869 correctly thought that the best way to secure a full vote was not by submitting an abstract proposition for a change in the organic law at a special election, but at an election when friends or others in whom voters might be interested as candidates for the legislature should be chosen. This was an eminently wise and common-sense view, founded on good reason. "An election" simply means any election, whether it be a special election, or a regular election for state officers, or a congressional election. Electors voted directly for or against an amendment under the Constitutions of 1832 and 1869. Also, the dropping of the words "the next general" before the word "election," from § 273 of the Constitution, and the substituting for these words "an election," were made necessary solely because of the fact that sessions of the legislature were quadrennial. Prior to the Constitution of 1890 the electors would vote at an election directly for or against, and it then required a majority of the qualified electors voting for members of the legislature at that general election to adopt the amendment. Now qualified voters at an election special or general, at which they vote, vote directly for or against such amendment; but it requires a majority of all the qualified electors voting at that election, whether special or general, no matter for what officers or for what things or propositions they may vote. The number to be ascertained, so as to find what a majority of that number was, is the number of all the qualified electors who vote at the election,—who vote at that election, no matter for what they vote,—keeping up the uniform policy of this provision of the Constitution. This Constitution provides that not simply a majority of the qualified electors voting for members of the legislature should be required, but that a majority of all the qualified electors voting that day at that election, special or general, should be required. This might require a larger number of voters to adopt a constitutional amendment than would constitute a majority of the electors voting for members of the legislature. It cannot require less than such a majority. So that it is perfectly obvious that the policy of this state through all the days of statehood was, under the Constitution of 1890, not only maintained, but absolutely strengthened. It is not enough now that a majority of electors voting for legislators shall vote for the amendment. The adoption of such an amendment requires a majority of all the qualified electors voting for any purpose whatever. This construction conserves the policy the state manifested by these provisions in three Constitutions and by universal usage before and since the war, and conserves the great principle which imperatively demands that the great organic law of the state, its Constitution, supreme and paramount over every interest, shall never be altered or changed except upon the maturest judgment, and by a majority sufficient to warrant the conviction that the change has met the approval of intelligent freemen. Such is the view deduced from a history of this section, the public policy of the state as declared by this section in its various forms in the different Constitutions from 1817 to 1890, and from the construction of the several clauses of § 273 itself. It may be added 48 L. R. A.

that this would be entirely sufficient to dispose of the case, since it is admitted that these amendments did not receive a majority of all the qualified electors voting at the election.

Little aid can be gathered from the decisions of other states construing their particular clauses in their constitutions providing for amendments to their constitutions,—little aid, that is, of direct authority,—since a decision from another state would only be a persuasive authority, even where it was rendered in construction of a clause or clauses in its Constitution identical with like clause or clauses of our Constitution. But the overwhelming weight of authority adopts our view on this proposition also. In the Case of Prohibitory Amendments, 24 Kan. 707, the clause is, "if a majority of electors voting on said amendments," etc. Of course, there was no room for doubt on that sort of a clause,—that only a majority of the electors voting on said amendments was required. There are many cases of propositions to remove courthouses and change county sites, to get franchises, and to vote bonds, etc., as to which there have been many conflicting decisions. Such decisions are of very little value in the solution of this question. State ex rel. Little v. Langlie, 5 N. D. 594, 32 L. R. A. 723, 67 N. W. 958, was a county-site case. State ex rel. Durkheimer v. Grace, 20 Or. 161, 25 Pac. 382, was another county-site case. It is to be remarked that both of the cases quote Gillespie v. Palmer, 20 Wis. 544,—a case thoroughly repudiated by many courts, and of no authority. See, specially, the criticism of this case in Stebbins's Case, 108 Mich. 695, 66 N. W. 594, in which it is shown that it has been overruled in Wisconsin (Bound v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. 45 Wis. 579); Chief Justice Ryan characterizing it as "a reproach to the court as judgments proceeding upon policy rather than upon principle." The case of State ex rel. Larabee v. Barnes, 3 N. D. 319, 55 N. W. 883, goes upon the fact that the vote upon the constitutional amendment was, by the provision of law therein controlling, made a wholly separate and special election, though occurring on the same day with an election for officers. Being made a special election, of course a majority of electors voting on the question of adopting the constitution would control. The case of Marion County Comrs. v. Winkley, 29 Kan. 40, is a purely local case, about a hedge bounty submitted to the people of a county. The distinction between a local election and this sort of a state election on the adoption of a constitution is too obvious for comment. Our view as to the majority required for the valid adoption of a constitutional amendment is directly and clearly supported by the following cases: State v. Foraker, 46 Ohio St. 692, 6 L. R. A. 422, 23 N. E. 491; State ex rel. Litson v. McGowan, 138 Mo. 193, 39 S. W. 771; State v. Swift, 69 Ind. 503; Tecumseh Nat. Bank v. Saunders, 51 Neb. 801, 71 N. W. 779; Bayard v. Klinge, 16 Minn. 252, Gil. 221; Stebbins's Case, 108 Mich. 693, 66 N. W. 594,—and many others in briefs of counsel. In the Nebraska case it was held that it required a majority of the highest aggregate number of votes cast, whether for an officer or for an amendment. In State v. Swift, 69 Ind. 520, the distinction was pointed out between the reasons for requiring a different majority to elect an officer and to adopt a constitutional amendment,—a distinction which the framers of the Constitution of 1890 evidently had in mind when they provided, as they have done, that the majority now required to amend the Constitution must be a majority of all the qualified electors voting, whether such majority be equal to or larger than a majority of all the qualified electors voting for members of the legislature. All the statements to be found in different decisions touching the doctrine that electors absenting themselves from an election, and those present and not voting for some candidate for every office, or on every proposition submitted, are held to assent to the action of those who do vote, are not applicable to a case like this, which is governed by a constitutional standard, as to the necessary majority, expressly defined in the constitution itself; that being, as stated, that the requisite majority shall be a majority of all the qualified electors voting at the election for any purpose or for any officer, as held in Stebbins's Case, 108 Mich. 699, 66 N. W. 594. Manifestly, when the Constitution itself, in § 273, expressly declares that no amendment shall be adopted except where it shall be a fact that it received at the election a majority of all qualified electors voting, we have a positive rule prescribed and a fixed standard set up, and nothing short of strict compliance with the rule, or of a majority measuring up to that standard, will avail to change the organic law.

There is one other most important consideration, and that is that the members of the constitutional convention of 1890 used language with the greatest precision when talking about the majority required to accomplish different ends. In § 259 it is provided: "No county seat shall be removed, unless such removal be authorized by two thirds of the electors of the county voting therefor; but when the proposed removal shall be towards the center of the county it may be made when a majority of the electors participating in the election shall vote therefor." Section 260 provides: "No new county shall be formed unless a majority of the qualified electors voting in each part of the county." etc. Section 101 provides: "The seat of government of the state shall be at the city of Jackson, and shall not be removed or relocated without the assent of a majority of the electors of the state." It is perfectly idle to contend, in the face of all these different provisions of §§ 259, 260, 101, and 273, that the members of the constitutional convention of 1890 (very many of them the ablest lawyers in this or any other state) did not carefully use, with exact precision, words apt to convey the different and distinct meanings they had in view in the adoption of these different provisions. See the 48 L. R. A.

